

THE READER'S
ENCYCLOPEDIA

THE READER'S ENCYCLOPEDIA

An Encyclopedia of World Literature and the Arts

Edited by WILLIAM ROSE BENÉT

GEORGE G. HARRAP & CO. LTD.
LONDON TORONTO BOMBAY SYDNEY

Copyright 1948 by Thomas Y. Crowell Company

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced in any form, except by a reviewer, without the permission of the publisher.

SECOND PRINTING, JANUARY 1950

Manufactured in the United States of America by the Vail-Ballou Press, Binghamton, New York

Preface

At the end of the nineteenth century there died an English schoolmaster and clergyman whose life had spanned most of it. He was born in 1810. Two books in my father's library made me familiar, at an early age, with the Englishman's name. They were Brewer's A Dictionary of Phrase and Fable and Brewer's The Reader's Handbook. His full name was Ebenezer Cobham Brewer. Years later, when I was asked to edit a Reader's Encyclopedia, using Crowell's Handbook for Readers and Writers as nucleus, I discovered that according to the preface of the first editor of that volume, it had originally owed much to the fascinating books of Dr. Brewer. (I always imagined him with a delightful beard—something like Edward Lear's—in which nested all the oddities of learning. Alas, I can boast no such receptaculum!) However, the Handbook for Readers and Writers had given his material extremely detailed revision, to say nothing of supplying a great deal that was new, relating to the Victorian era and to subsequent years, with especial attention to American literature and allusion. Since that time, of course, almost as many changes in taste, viewpoint, and interest have occurred as the handbook's editor found to have taken place between 1897 (when Dr. Brewer died) and 1925 (when the Crowell Handbook appeared). Twenty or more recent years have shown as many alterations as the previous thirty. And now, in the midst of the new Atomic Age, there are changes that even a modern editor could not have anticipated several years ago!

I wish immediately to acknowledge my indebtedness, not only to the editor of Crowell's Handbook for Readers and Writers, Miss Henrietta Gerwig, but also to an intermediate reviser, Miss Irene Hendry, whose knowledge of modern literature has proved indispensable to the present volume. Miss Gerwig's handbook was designed as "a dictionary of famous characters and plots in legend, fiction, drama, opera, and poetry, together with dates and principal works of important authors, literary and journalistic terms and familiar allusions." Miss Hendry's work, never before appearing in print, is incorporated here. But the original handbook is only one of several ancestors of the present work. Since the handbook's publication, so many people have contributed ideas and suggestions that the present volume has, in a sense, been composed for you by inquiring readers from all parts of the country. It is no mere revision, but veritably a new book.

Original entries on established authors of the past have been enlarged, with modern treatment. Full advantage has been taken of all the most modern reference books. (A complete list of all books consulted will be found below.) More attention has been given to obscure works and figures in literature both of the distant and recent past. And, in line with the methodological advance in literary criticism of the past fifteen years or so, "whereby an author is interpreted not only in terms of the literal content of his works and the facts of his biography, but also in terms of the general intellectual forces of his time," entries have been chosen of significant figures, movements, and terms in aesthetics, science, philosophy, economics, and politics. Freud, Jung, Karl Marx, Lenin, The New Deal, the stream-of-consciousness tendency in fiction, and even futurism and surrealism have received due consideration. The fields of art and music are now extensively covered, incorporating important twentieth-century additions.

Such is the nature of an encyclopedia of this kind that one could go on almost indefinitely adding new information to that already accumulated. The limitations of such a volume are hard to establish. What is it that intelligent readers and writers do not wish to know? One simply has to set a term, and mark boundaries. Therefore, for this new book, much more grist has actually been gathered than has come through the mill. At that, it deserves to be called a one-volume literary encyclopedia.

I have endeavored carefully to check over what was already amassed, to expand, to fill up gaps, to carry on what was unfinished; to add biographical, historical, and other data that unfolding world events made obligatory; to comb for word, phrase, and allusion, such reference works as had been searched either superficially or not at all; to discard the obsolete; to bring to light the overlooked; and to play, in general, the role of Argus-eyed modernizer. I am bound to have made errors both of omission and commission. But, with the able assistance of Dr. Alexander Gode and the invaluable final rechecking of that brilliant literary detective, Earle F. Walbridge, I believe that this encyclopedia will now prove one of the most complete and practicable in existence. It will be found to cover an unusual range of information, to provide a reference to most allusions occurring in your reading, to give all the important myths and legends and a great many of the most important themes and characters in fiction old and new, to include references that constantly crop up in the critical writing of yesterday and today, to furnish information as to literary schools, trends, and movements past and present and biographical data on most "people of importance." Likewise it will prove a real aid to the vocabulary and allusiveness of writers, as well as providing them with a genuine source book of ideas. As for cross-word puzzlers, they will, of course, discover it to be a necessity!

The curious mind inevitably stores up what it has sometimes characterized as "much useless information." Yet, in literature, it is often these peculiar bits of learning that serve most to adorn and give flavor to a style. I have, however, endeavored to rid the book of all that is merely archaic. I have tried to maintain balance and proportion between the modern world and the world of antiquity. People used to speak of "dead languages." Yet, in English derivations, the dead languages still live. In the same way, the mythology of the past constantly reappears in the poetry of the present; and the classics may furnish groundwork for the most modern fiction. (One has only to think of Ulysses.) All of this such a book as the one before you must comprehend. It must also show itself thoroughly familiar with modern literature and thought of all kinds, with modern invention and science, with new art media, with the continuity of history.

Either my memory is at fault or there is one essay that neither Charles Lamb, William Hazlitt, or Christopher Morley ever wrote: one on Reference Books. The phrase for them, now cliché, has been “mines of information.” But a mine, at best, is a rather dark and dreary excavation—not to say dank, at times. I prefer to think of the book before you as a cave like the famous one stumbled upon by Aladdin. I might go on from there to describe its revelation of treasure of so many varieties and kinds, yet each in its own particular bin. For the office of a reference book is, after all, to bring some sort of order out of chaos. But it is also to present to you a well-organized supplementary memory, in one volume. The delights of such a memory may be inexhaustible; the safaris of research it can initiate, endless; the urge to literary creation which it can supply, present on every page. And remember, that to enter this domain of learning and imagination you have not even to use that mysterious phrase, “Open Sesame!”

WILLIAM ROSE BENÉT

Of the many books consulted from time to time in the compilation of this encyclopedia, special acknowledgment is due to the following: Baker's Biographical Dictionary of Musicians; Thomas Bulfinch, Mythology (Dictionary and Index); The Cambridge History of American Literature; The Cambridge History of English Literature; Lewis Copeland, The Handy Encyclopedia of Useful Information; John Colin Dunlop, History of Prose Fiction; Bessie Graham, The Bookman's Manual; Heroes and Heroines of Fiction; Albert M. Hyamson, A Dictionary of English Phrases; Helen L. Kaufmann, The Stories of One Hundred Great Composers, Helen Rex Keller, The Reader's Digest of Books; Stanley J. Kunitz and Howard Haycraft, American Authors: 1600–1900; Stanley J. Kunitz and Howard Haycraft, British Authors of the Nineteenth Century; Stanley J. Kunitz and Howard Haycraft, Twentieth Century Authors; George G. Loane, A Short Handbook of Literary Terms; J. Walker McSpadden, Opera Synopses; J. Walker McSpadden, Shakespearean Synopses, The New Modern Encyclopedia; The Oxford Companion to American Literature; The Oxford Companion to English Literature; H. A. Reason, The Road to Modern Science; Bertrand Russell, The History of Western Philosophy; Joseph T. Shipley, Dictionary of World Literature; Benjamin H. Smith, The Century Cyclopaedia of Names; Bernard Sobel, The Theatre Handbook and Digest of Plays; Carl Van Doren, The American Novel; Carl Van Doren, Contemporary American Novelists; William S. Walsh, Modern Prose and Poetry; Webster's New International Dictionary; Webster's Biographical Dictionary; William A. Wheeler, A Dictionary of the Noted Names in Fiction; The World at War; Who's Who in America; World Almanac; and many others.

Note to the User: All the abbreviations used in this book are self-explanatory. Words or phrases printed in SMALL CAPITALS refer to special entries elsewhere in the book. So do references of the type, “See THE MARRIAGE OF WILLIAM ASHE.” A reference of the type, “Cf. the novel, The Marriage of William Ashe, by Mrs. Humphry Ward,” however, would not refer to a special entry but to the work itself. Definite and indefinite articles are disregarded for purposes of alphabetization.

THE READER'S
ENCYCLOPEDIA

A

A, as a brand or mark, was used as the initial letter of Adulterer or Adulteress. Cf. The Scarlet Letter by Nathaniel Hawthorne, in which Hester Prynne wore a "rag of scarlet cloth" on the breast of her gown that "assumed the shape of a letter. It was the capital letter A."

A1 means first-rate—the very best. In Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping, the character of the ship's hull is designated by letters, and that of the anchors, cables, and stores by figures. A1 means hull first-rate, and also anchors, cables, and stores: A2, hull first-rate, but fittings second-rate. Vessels of an inferior character are classified under the letters AE, E and 1.

Aagesen, Svend (ca. 1185). First historian of Denmark, author of Compendiosa Historia Regum Daniae (300 to 1185 A. D.).

Aani. In Egyptian mythology, the dog-headed ape sacred to the god Thoth.

Aaron. In the Old Testament, brother of Moses with whom he was associated in the calling down of the Ten Plagues and the leading of the Children of Israel out of Egypt (ca. 1200 B. C.). As high priest Aaron was responsible for the making of the Golden Calf which the Israelites worshiped in the wilderness while Moses was receiving the Ten Commandments from Jehovah.

Aaron's Beard. The popular name of many wild plants, including Great St. John's Wort (Rose of Sharon), the Ivy-leaved Toadflax, Meadowsweet, Saxifrage Sarmentosa, etc.

Aaron's Rod. The name given (with reference to Num. xvii. 8 where a rod is mentioned which blossomed miraculously and bore almonds) to various flowering plants, including Golden Rod, Great Mullein, and others. It is also the title of a novel by D. H. Lawrence.

Aaron's Serpent. (1) Something so powerful as to eliminate minor powers. The allusion is to Exod. vii. 10-12.

(2) A Moor, beloved by Tamora, queen of the Goths, in the tragedy of Titus Andronicus, published amongst the plays of Shakespeare.

Aaru. In Egyptian mythology, the fields of Aaru are the abode of the blessed dead and of the gods and goddesses.

Aasen, Ivar Andreas (1813-1896) Norwegian philologist, who made from various dialects a Norwegian literary language called New Norwegian or Landsmaal in contrast to the Dano-Norwegian Rigsmaal.

Abaddon. The angel of the bottomless pit (Rev. ix. 11), from Hebrew abad, "he perished." Milton uses the name for the bottomless pit itself.

abalone. A univalve mollusk concerning which the California poet George STERLING composed a famous song that is now a part of American folklore. When pounded, shredded, and cooked, it makes a gourmet's dish. The first stanza of Sterling's song goes,

In Carmel Bay, the people say,
We feed the Lazzaroni
On caramels and cockleshells
And hunks of abalone.

Sinclair Lewis added several stanzas to the original song, one of which runs,

He wanders free beside the sea
Where every crab's a crony.
He flaps his wings and madly sings,
The plaintive abalone.

Abaris. A mythical Greek sage of the 6th century B. C. (surnamed "the Hyperborean") mentioned by Herodotus, Pindar, etc. Apollo gave him a magic arrow which rendered him invisible, cured diseases, gave oracles, and on which he could ride through the air. Abaris gave it to Pythagoras, who, in return, taught him philosophy. Hence the dart of Abaris.

Abbadona. One of the most interesting figures in Klopstock's epic poem, THE MESSIAH (Ger. Der Messias, 1748-1773), an angel who is drawn into the rebellion of Satan half unwillingly. In hell he constantly bewails his fall and reproves Satan for his pride and blasphemy, and during the crucifixion he lingers about the cross with repentance, hope and fear. His ultimate fate we are not told, but his redemption is implied.

Abbassides. A dynasty of thirty-seven caliphs who reigned over the Mohammedan Empire from 750 to 1258. They were descended from Abbas, uncle of Mahomet. Haroun al Raschid (b. 765, reigned 786-808), of the ARABIAN NIGHTS, was one of their number.

Abbey, Edwin Austin (1852-1911). American painter. His illustrations for Old Songs (1889) caused Joseph Pennell to call him "the greatest living illustrator." He also illustrated Selections from the Poetry of Robert Herrick and executed panels illustrating the Quest of the Holy Grail for the Boston Public Library (1890-1902).

Abbé Constantin, L. A novel by Ludovic Halévy (Fr. 1834-1908), in which the kindly old village priest who bears the title rôle plays something of the matchmaker.

Abbot, The. A novel (1820) by Sir Walter Scott. The Abbot, Father AMBROSE, plays a subordinate part. The hero is Roland Graeme, a foundling brought up by Lady Avenel as a kind of page. He later becomes page to Mary Queen of Scots, who plays a prominent rôle in the novel.

Abbot of Misrule, see KING OF MISRULE.

Abbot of Unreason, see KING OF MISRULE.

Abbotsford. The name given by Sir Walter Scott to Clarty Hole, on the south bank of the Tweed, after it became his residence in 1812.

Abbott, George (1889-). American playwright, producer, and director. Co-author of Three Men on a Horse; Coquette; The Boys from Syracuse; etc.

Abbott, Jacob (1803-1879). American clergyman. Author of the Rollo books, histories, biographies for the young, etc.

Abbott, Lyman (1835-1922). Congregational minister, author and editor. Retired (1899) to devote himself to editorship of the famous weekly The Outlook. Wrote a life of Henry Ward Beecher and other books.

A.B.C. An abbreviation having a number of meanings that can be decided only by the context. Thus, "So-and-so doesn't know his A B C" means that he is intensely ignorant; "he doesn't understand the A B C of engineering" means that he has not mastered its rudiments. So, an A B C Book or Absey Book, is a primer which used to be used as a child's first lesson book and contained merely the alphabet and a few rudimentary lessons often set in catechism form, as is evident from Shakespeare's lines:

That is question now;
And then comes answer like an Absey book.
King John, i, 1.

A. B. C. Nations. Argentina, Brazil and Chile; or recently by extension of the term, all Latin America.

Abdaldar. A magician in Southey's THALABA THE DESTROYER.

Abdera, Abderitan. Abdera was a maritime city of Thrace whose inhabitants were proverbial in ancient times for their stupidity.

Abderitan laughter. Scoffing laughter, incessant laughter. So called because Abdera was the birthplace of Democritus, the laughing philosopher.

Abdiel (Arab., "the servant of God"). In Milton's Paradise Lost (v. 805, 896, etc.) the faithful seraph who withstands Satan when he urges the angels to revolt.

Abdul-Baha. The title of Abbas Effendi (1892-1921), head of the Bahai movement. See BAHAIISM.

Abdulla. A powerful Malay trader who appears in Conrad's OUTCAST OF THE ISLANDS and ALMAYER'S FOLLY.

Abdullah, Achmed. Pseudonym A. A. Nair (1881-1945). British novelist and playwright, specializing in romance and adventure. He was born at Yalta in the Crimea of mixed Russian and Afghan ancestry, and educated at Eton and Oxford.

Abdul the Bul Bul Ameer. Also Abdul the Bulbul Ameer; Abdul Abulbul Amir; etc. A character in a famous comic song of that title, vastly popular in American colleges and extant in many variants. Cf., e.g., Carl Sandburg's American Songbag. The subject of the song is an epic contest between Abdul and one variously called Ivan Petrosky Skivar, Ivan Skavinsky Skivah, etc.

The song may have been suggested by the Crimean War. It begins in this fashion:

The sons of the Prophet are hardy and bold,
And quite unaccustomed to fear,
But of all the most reckless of life or of limb
Was Abdul the Bul Bul Ameer . . .

abecedarian. One who is learning the alphabet; hence, a tyro. An abecedarian poem is a poem having verses beginning with the successive letters of the alphabet, as the 119th Psalm in Hebrew.

Abednego, see SHADRACH.

Abel. In the Old Testament, the son of Adam and Eve, murdered by his brother Cain because his sacrifice was more acceptable to Jehovah than Cain's (Gen. IV). For his rôle in Mohammedan legend and in Byron's Cain, a Mystery (1821), see Cain.

Abel, Mr. The hero and narrator of W. H. Hudson's GREEN MANSIONS.

Abélard, Pierre (1079-1142). Medieval Christian theologian and philosopher, a brilliant and popular lecturer at the cathedral school of Notre Dame in Paris, whose pupils included many men later famous in their own right. In the controversy between Realism and Nominalism he took a middle stand, based on Aristotle's teaching, maintaining that universals are concepts of the mind and thus are real without being material. He was attacked as a heretic by St. BERNARD and condemned by a church council, and was also involved in a tragic love affair with the celebrated Héloïse.

Abe Lincoln in Illinois. A play by Robert E. SHERWOOD, produced in 1938 and awarded the Pulitzer prize in 1939. It deals with the life of Lincoln up to his election to the presidency, and the dialogue contains selections from a number of Lincoln's own writings and speeches.

Abencerrages. A family of Moors in Granada in the fifteenth century, famous in romance for their feud with the family of the Zegrís.

Abercrombie, Lascelles (1881-1938). English poet and critic, author of Interludes and Poems (1908); Emblems of Love (1912); Thomas Hardy: A Critical Study (1912), and other books of poetry and prose. He is associated with those English poets before World War I who are known as the "Georgians."

Abide With Me. A hymn (1847) by Henry F. Lyte.

Abie's Irish Rose. A popular American comedy by Anne Nichols, produced in 1924, which had one of the longest records of performance (2,327) in the history of the theater. Surpassed by Tobacco Road and Life With Father. See CALDWELL, ERSKINE, and DAY, CLARENCE.

Abigail. A lady's maid. Abigail, wife of Nabal and afterwards of David, is a well-known Scripture heroine (1 Sam. xxv. 3). Marlowe called the daughter of Barabas, his Jew of Malta, by this name, and it was given by Beaumont and Fletcher to the "waiting gentlewoman" in The Scornful Lady. Swift, Fielding, and other novelists of the period employ it in their novels, and it was further popularized by the notoriety of Abigail Hill, better known as Mrs. Masham, the waiting-woman to Queen Anne.

Abigor. In medieval demonology, the Grand Duke of Hell.

Abington, Fanny. English character actress with David Garrick at the Drury Lane (1764-1782). She created the part of Lady Teazle (1777).

Able McLaughlins, The. A novel by Margaret Wilson (Am., 1923), the story of a family of hardy Scotch settlers in Iowa. The book was awarded the Pulitzer prize as the best novel of the year.

Abnaki. An Indian of the confederacy of thirteen Algonquian tribes occupying Maine and parts of New Brunswick and Quebec. The Abnaki were allies of the French.

abolitionists. Those who advocated the abolition of slavery, especially members of the American Anti-Slavery Society, organized in 1833. William Lloyd GARRISON and John BROWN were among the most active abolitionists.

Abomination of Desolation, The. Mentioned in Dan. (chs. ix, xi, and xii), and in Matt. xxiv. 15, probably refers to some statue set up in the Temple by either the heathen or the Romans. The phrase is used for anything very hateful or destructive.

Abou Ben Adhem. A short poem by Leigh HUNT. Because Abou begged to be written as "one who loves his fellowmen" his angel visitor

... showed the names whom love of God had blest
And lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest.

Abou Hassan. Young merchant of Bagdad, hero of the tale called The Sleeper Awakened in the Arabian Nights' Entertainments. While Abou Hassan is asleep he is conveyed to the palace of Haroun al Raschid, and the attendants are ordered to do everything they can to make him fancy himself the Caliph. He subsequently becomes the Caliph's favorite. See also SLY, CHRISTOPHER.

Abra. A favorite concubine of Solomon. In his poem Solomon on the Vanity of the World (1718), Matthew Prior describes her devotion in the celebrated lines:

Abra was ready ere I called her name,
And though I called another, Abra came.

abracadabra. A cabalistic charm, said to be made up from the initials of the Hebrew words Ab (Father), Ben (Son) and Ruach ACadsch (Holy Spirit) and formerly used as a powerful antidote against ague, flux, toothache, etc. Hence a charm; also any meaningless jargon. The word was written on parchment, and suspended from the neck by a linen thread, in the following form:

A B R A C A D A B R A
A B R A C A D A B R
A B R A C A D A B
A B R A C A D A
A B R A C A D
A B R A C A
A B R A C
A B R A
A B R
A B
A

Abraham. The founder of the Hebrew nation and its first patriarch. With his wife Sarai and his nephew Lot he migrated from Ur ~~in~~ Chaldea into the Land of Canaan, where he settled and prospered. To test his faith Jehovah commanded him to offer up his son Isaac as a burnt offering, but when he was about to draw the knife, a ram was provided instead. The story of Abraham is told in Gen. xii-xiii and in various Mohammedan legends, which relate that at the age of fifteen months Abraham was equal in size to a lad of fifteen, and was so wise that his father introduced him to the court of King Nimrod; that Abraham and his son "Ismail" rebuilt for the fourth time the Kaaba over the sacred stone at Mecca; and that Abraham destroyed the idols manufactured and worshiped by his father, Terah. See also Sarai, Hagar, Isaac, Sodom and Gomorrah.

Abraham's bosom. The repose of the happy in death (Luke xvi. 22).

Abrahamic covenant. (1) The covenant made by God with Abraham, that Messiah should spring from his seed. This promise was given to Abraham, because he left his country and father's house to live in a strange land, as God told him. (2) The rite of circumcision.

sham Abraham. See ABRAHAM-MAN.

Abraham Lincoln. A biography of the American president by Carl SANDBURG. The first part, entitled Abraham Lincoln: The Prairie Years, was published in two volumes in 1926, and the second part, Abraham Lincoln: The War Years, was published in four volumes in 1939. It is Sandburg's chief work, research and its preparation having occupied many years of the poet's life.

Abraham-man or Abraham cove. A pretended maniac who, in Tudor and early Stuart times, wandered about the country as a begging impostor; a TOM O' BEDLAM; hence the phrase, to sham Abraham, meaning to pretend illness or distress, in order to get off work.

Inmates of BEDLAM who were not dangerously mad were kept in the "Abraham Ward," were allowed out from time to time in a distinctive dress, and were permitted to supplement their scanty rations by begging. This gave an opportunity to impostors, and large numbers availed themselves of it. Says The Canting Academy (Richd. Head, 1674), they used to array themselves with party-coloured ribbons, tape in their hats, a fox-tail hanging down, a long stick with streamers, and beg alms; but for all their seeming madness, they had wit enough to steal as they went along.

There is a good picture of them in King Lear ii. 3; and cf. also Beaumont and Fletcher's Beggars Bush, ii. i.

Come, princes of the ragged regiment
And these, what name or title e'er they bear,
Jarkman or Pat'rico, Cranke or Clapper-duddeon, Frater or Abram-man, I speak to all
That stand in fair election for the title Of King of Beggars.

Abraham Newland. A bank-note, so called from the name of the chief cashier at the Bank of England from 1782 to 1807, without whose signature no Bank of England notes were genuine.

abraxas. A cabalistic word used by the Gnostics to denote the Supreme Being, the source of 365 emanations, the sum of the numbers represented by the Greek letters of the word totaling 365. It was frequently engraved on gems (hence known as abraxas stones) that were used as amulets or talismans. By some authorities the name is given as that of one of the horses of Aurora.

Absalom. In the Old Testament (2 Sam. xviii), the handsome but rebellious son of David who "stole the hearts of the men of Israel" and plotted to become king in his father's stead. In the battle in which the issue was decided, Absalom, who rode on a mule, was caught by his head in an oak tree; and one of David's army, finding him so suspended, killed him in spite of the previous commands of the King. David's lament, "O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee," has become a classic expression of paternal grief.

Absalom, Absalom. See FAULKNER, WILLIAM.

Absalom and Achitophel. A famous political satire in verse published in 1681, the first part by Dryden and the second by Nahum Tate and revised by Dryden. The general scheme is to show the rebellious character of the Puritans, who insisted on the exclusion of the Duke of York from the succession, on account of his being a pronounced Catholic, and the determination of the King to resist this interference with his royal prerogative, even at the cost of a civil war. Of the principal characters, David stands for Charles II; Absalom for his natural son James, Duke of Monmouth (handsome and rebellious); Achitophel for Lord Shaftesbury; Zimri for the Duke of Buckingham; and Abdael for Monk. The accommodation of the biblical narrative to contemporary history is so skilfully made that the story of David seems to repeat itself. Of Absalom, Dryden says (Part i):

Whate'er he did was done with so much ease.
In him alone 'twas natural to please;
His motions all accompanied with grace,
And paradise was opened in his face.

Absent-minded Beggar. The title of one of Kipling's poems (1900), hence applied to an English private, a TOMMY ATKINS.

Absentee, The. A novel by Maria Edgeworth (1812). The "Absentee," Lord Clonbrony, allows his foolish wife to persuade him to leave his estate in Ireland and try to force a way into fashionable London society.

absey book. See A. B. C.

Absolon. A priggish parish clerk in The Miller's Tale in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales. His hair is curled, his shoes slashed, his hose red. He can let blood, cut hair, and shave, can dance, and play either on the ribble or the gittern. This gay spark pays his addresses to Mistress ALISON, the young wife of John, a wealthy aged carpenter.

Absolute, Sir Anthony. One of the most popular characters in all English comedy, a testy, but warm-hearted old gentleman in Sheridan's Rivals, who imagines that he possesses a most angelic temper and when he quarrels with his son, the captain, fancies it is the son who is out of sorts, and not himself.

Captain Absolute. The clever and gallant son of Sir Anthony, in love with Lydia Languish, the heiress, to whom he is known only as Ensign Beverley. Bob Acres, his neighbor, is his rival, and sends a challenge to the unknown ensign; but when he finds that Ensign Beverley is Captain Absolute, he declines to fight, and resigns all further claim to the lady's hand.

Absyrtus. In Greek mythology, the young brother of MEDEA. She cut his body to pieces and scattered it (membra disjecta) along her way to delay her father, Aeëtes, in his pursuit of her when she escaped from Colchis with JASON.

Abt Vogler. A dramatic monologue by Robert Browning in his volume Dramatis Personae (1864). The speaker is Abt Vogler, "after he has been extemporizing upon the musical instrument of his invention."

Abydos. In the legend of HERO and LEANDER, a city on the Hellespont. See also SESTOS; BRIDE OF ABYDOS.

Abyla. A promontory in Morocco, near Ceuta, now called Jebel Musa or Ape's Hill, forming the northwestern extremity of the African coast opposite Gibraltar. It is one of the PILLARS OF HERCULES, the other being the promontory of Calpe. Also referred to as Abyla Mons and Abyla Columna.

academe. A place of study and instruction; specifically, Academe, the Academy of Plato.

See there the olive grove of Academe . . .
Milton, Paradise Regained.

Academus. A Greek hero who told Castor and Pollux where Theseus had hidden Helen.

Academy. The Greek school of philosophy founded by Plato, so called from a garden planted by Academus where Plato taught his followers.

French Academy (Académie française) was formally established in 1635 by Cardinal Richelieu, its principal function being:

To labor with all the care and diligence possible, to give exact rules to our language, to render it capable of treating the arts and sciences.

Its forty members, "the Forty Immortals," are supposed to be the most distinguished living men of letters.

Académie Goncourt. A French literary society founded in 1900, consisting of ten members. It awards the Prix Goncourt.

The English Royal Academy of Arts was founded in 1768 by George III for the establishment of an art school and the holding of annual exhibitions of works by living artists.

The Royal Spanish Academy was founded at Madrid in 1713 for purposes similar to those of the French Academy.

The American Academy of Arts and Letters was founded in 1904 with a like purpose. Its membership is limited to fifty. They are chosen from the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

There is also a Royal Academy of Science at Berlin (founded 1700), at Stockholm (the Royal Swedish Academy, founded 1739), and at Copenhagen (founded 1742).

The Imperial Academy of Sciences at Petrograd was established by Catherine I in 1725.

Academy figures. Drawings in black and white chalk, on tinted paper, usually about half life-size and from the nude.

Academy headache. A headache as a result of attending art exhibitions. The phrase was popularized in 1885 with reference to the Royal Academy Exhibit.

Acadia. The old name for Nova Scotia, so called by the French from the river Shubenacadie. In 1621 Acadia was given to the Scotchman, Sir William Alexander, and its name changed; and in 1755 the old French settlers were driven into exile by George II. Longfellow has made this the subject of a poem in hexameter verse, called EVANGELINE.

Accoramboni, Vittoria (1557?-1585). Her husband was murdered so that she might marry the Duke of Bracciano. After Bracciano's death in 1585 she was murdered by assassins hired by a relative of his. John WEBSTER used her story in his play The White Devil or Vittoria Corombona (ca. 1610).

aceldama. A battlefield, a place where much blood has been shed. So called from the field purchased by the priests with the blood-money thrown down by Judas, and appropriated as a cemetery for strangers (Matt. xxvii. 8; Acts i. 19).

Acestes. In a trial of skill described in Virgil's Aeneid, Acestes, the Sicilian, discharged his arrow with such force that it took fire from the friction of the air. He was the son of a river god and a Trojan woman.

Achates. In Virgil's Aeneid, the chosen and ubiquitous companion of the hero in adventures of all kinds. Hence a fidus Achates, a faithful companion, a bosom friend.

Acheloüs. In Greek mythology, the god of rivers. Represented as a bull with a human head. Also the name of the largest river in Greece.

Acheron. A Greek word meaning "the River of Sorrows"; the river of the infernal regions into which Phlegethon and Cocytus flow: also, the lower world (Hades) itself. See STYX.

They pass the bitter waves of Acheron
Where many souls sit wailing woefully.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, I. v. 33.

food for Acheron. A dead body.

Achilles. In Greek legend, the son of Peleus and the Nereid Thetis, and king of the Myrmidons, a Thessalian tribe. He is the hero of Homer's ILIAD and became the prototype of the Greeks' conception of manly valor and beauty. He took part in the Trojan War on the side of the Greeks as their most illustrious warrior, and slew the Trojan hero HECTOR. Achilles had been dipped in the Styx by his mother, which rendered him invulnerable except in the heel by which she held him and where he was fatally wounded by an arrow shot by Paris, Hector's younger brother, or, according to another version of the story, by the god Apollo who had assumed Paris' shape. heel of Achilles. The vulnerable or weak point in a man's character or in a nation.

Achilles' spear, see PELIAN SPEAR.

Achilles of England. (1) John Talbot, first Earl of Shrewsbury (1373-1453); (2) the Duke of Wellington (1769-1852).

Achilles of Germany. Albert, elector of Brandenburg (1414-1486).

Achilles of Lombardy. Brother of Sforza and Palamedes in Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered. This was not a complimentary title, but a proper name.

Achilles of Rome. Lucius Sicinius Dentatus, the Roman tribune; also called the Second Achilles. Put to death 450 B. C.

Achilles of the West. Roland the Paladin.

Achitophel. In the Old Testament, David's traitorous counsellor, who deserted to Absalom. (2 Sam. xv.) The Achitophel of Dryden's satire (see ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL) was the Earl of Shaftesbury.

Of these the rebel the false Achitophel was first;
A name to all succeeding ages curst;
For close designs and crooked counsels fit;
Sagacious, bold, and turbulent of wit;
Restless, unfix'd in principles and place;
In power unpleased, impatient in disgrace.

I. 150.

Acis. In Greek legend, a handsome Sicilian youth, son of Faunus and the naiad Symæthis, lover of Galatea, who was killed by his rival, the Cyclops Polyphemus. The blood flowing forth from Acis' body changed into water and formed the river Acis.

Acrasia. In Book II of Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE, Intemperance personified. Spenser says she is an enchantress living in the "Bower of Bliss," in "Wandering Island." She had the power of transforming her lovers into monstrous shapes; but Sir Guyon (Temperance), having caught her in a net and bound her, broke down her bower and burnt it to ashes.

acre. O. E. acer, is akin to the Lat. ager and Ger. acker (a field). God's Acre, a cemetery or churchyard. Longfellow calls this an "ancient Saxon phrase," but as a matter of fact it is a modern borrowing from Germany.

three acres and a cow. A small plot for gardening or farming; a phrase used by British radicals in the political campaign of 1885.

Acre, St. Jean d'. Seaport on the Palestine coast, captured by the forces of the Third Crusade, among whom RICHARD CŒUR DE LION was prominent, in 1191. The last stronghold of the Christians on the mainland, it fell to the Moslems again in 1291.

Acres, Bob. In Sheridan's comedy THE RIVALS, a country gentleman, the rival of Esign Beverley, alias Captain Absolute, for the hand and heart of Lydia Languish, the heiress. He tries to ape the man of fashion, gets himself up as a loud swell, and uses "sentimental oaths," i.e. oaths bearing on the subject. Thus if duels are spoken of he says, ods triggers and flints; if ladies, ods blushes and blooms. Bob Acres is a great blusterer, but when put to the push "his courage always oozed out of his fingers' ends." Hence a "regular Bob Acres" is a coward.

Acrisius. In Greek mythology, the father of Danaë. An oracle declared that Danaë would give birth to a son who would kill him, so Acrisius kept his daughter shut up in a brazen tower. Here she became the mother of Perseus, by Zeus in the form of a shower of gold. The King of Argos now ordered his daughter and her infant to be put into a chest, and cast adrift on the sea, but they were rescued by Dictys, a fisherman. When grown to manhood, Perseus accidentally struck the foot of Acrisius with a quoit, and the blow caused his death, thus fulfilling the oracle. This tale is told by William Morris in The Earthly Paradise: April.

acrostic. A composition, often inverse, where one or more sets of letters, initial, middle, or final, form a word or a sentence when taken in order.

across lots. By a short cut. The threat of the Mormon leader, Brigham Young, "We'll send them [the Gentiles] across lots" gave the phrase a new and obvious significance.

Actæon. In Grecian mythology a huntsman who, having surprised Diana bathing, was changed by her into a stag and torn to pieces by his own hounds. A stag being a horned animal, he became a representative of men whose wives are unfaithful.

Actian games. The games celebrated at Actium in honor of Apollo. They were reinstituted by Augustus to celebrate his naval victory over Antony, 31 B. C., and were held every five years.

Action at Aquila. See ALLEN, WILLIAM HERVEY.

Act of Settlement. An act passed during the reign of William III in 1701 in England, limiting the crown after Anne's succession to members of the House of Hanover, provided they were Protestant. This began the reign of the Four Georges.

Actors' Equity. A voluntary association for the protection of actors' rights, organized in New York City (March 26, 1913). An annual performance is given for the benefit of the association.

Acts and Monuments. A history of religious persecution and Christian Reformers, especially in England, by John Foxe, better known as The Book of Martyrs, published in 1563 by John DAY.

Acunha, Teresa d'. The Spanish maid of the Countess of Glenallan in Scott's novel THE ANTIQUARY, of whom it is said, "If ever there was a fiend on earth in human form, that woman was one."

Adah. In Byron's CAIN, A MYSTERY, the wife of Cain. After Cain has been conducted by Lucifer through the realms of space, he is restored to the home of his wife and child, where all is gentleness and love. Adah is also the name of Cain's wife in Rabbinical tradition.

Adam. In Shakespeare's As You Like It, a faithful retainer in the family of Sir Rowland de Boys. At the age of four score, he voluntarily accompanies his young master Orlando into exile, and offers to give him his little savings. He has given rise to the phrase "a faithful Adam" with reference to a manservant.

Adam and Eve. In the Old Testament, the first man and woman. The familiar story of their creation, sin and expulsion from the Garden of Eden is told in the first chapters of Genesis and forms the basis for Milton's Paradise Lost.

Mohammedan legends add to the Bible story the tradition that—

God sent Gabriel, Michael, and Israfil one after the other to fetch seven handfuls of earth from different depths and of different colors for the creation of Adam (thereby accounting for the varying colors of mankind) but they returned empty-handed because Earth foresaw that the creature to be made from her would rebel against God and draw down his curse on her, whereupon Azrael was sent. He executed the commission, and for that reason was appointed to separate the souls from the bodies and hence became the Angel of Death. The earth he had taken was carried into Arabia to a place between Mecca and Tayef, where it was kneaded by the angels, fashioned into human form by God, and left to dry for either forty days or forty years. It is also said that while the clay was being endowed with life and a soul, when the breath breathed by God into the nostrils had reached as far as the navel, the only half-living Adam tried to rise up and got an ugly fall for his pains.

old as Adam. Generally used as a reproof for stating as news something well known. "That's as old as Adam," it was known as far back as the days of Adam.

the old Adam. The offending Adam, etc.

Consideration, like an angel, came
And whipped the offending Adam out of him.
Shakespeare, Henry V, I, 1

Adam, as the head of unredeemed man, stands for "original sin," or "man without regenerating grace."

the second Adam. The new Adam, etc. Jesus Christ is so called.

Adam's ale. Water; because the first man had nothing else to drink. In Scotland sometimes called Adam's Wine.

Adam's apple. The protuberance in the forepart of the throat, the anterior extremity of the thyroid cartilage of the larynx; so called from the superstition that a piece of the forbidden fruit stuck in Adam's throat.

Adam's Diary. A humorous book by Mark Twain; also Eve's Diary.

Adam's needle. Gen. iii 7, tells us that Adam and Eve "sewed fig leaves together"; needles were (presumably) not then obtainable, but certain plants furnish needle-like spines, and to some of these the name has been given. The chief is the Yucca, a native of Mexico and Central America.

Adam's Peak. A mountain in Ceylon where, according to Mohammedan legend, Adam bewailed his expulsion from Paradise, standing on one foot for two hundred years to expiate his crime; Gabriel then took him to Mount Arafath, where he found Eve.

Adam's profession. Gardening or agriculture is sometimes so called—for obvious reasons.

Adam, Juliette, née Lamber. Pen names Juliette Lamber; La Messine; and Comte Paul Vasili (1836–1936). French writer; founded (1879) and edited La Nouvelle Revue. (Note her life span!)

Adamastor. (1) The spirit of the stormy Cape (Good Hope), described by Camoëns in the Lusiad as a hideous phantom that appears to Vasco da Gama and prophesies disaster to all seeking to make the voyage to India.

(2) Title of a book of poems by Roy Campbell (1930).

Adam Bede. A novel by George Eliot (1859). It tells of a young carpenter, Adam Bede; his love for the pretty and superficial Hetty Sorrel who murders her illegitimate child by Arthur Donnithorne, a young country squire, and is sentenced to life transportation in punishment; and his eventual marriage to Dinah Morris, a Methodist preacher. The character of the hero was drawn from George Eliot's father, Robert Evans.

Adam Bell. Hero of a ballad of that name included in Percy's Reliques (I. ii. 1), a wild, north-country outlaw, noted, like Robin Hood, for his skill in archery.

Adam Blair, a Story of Scottish Life. A novel by J. G. Lockhart (1822).

Adamic, Louis (1899–). Author, born in Yugoslavia, who wrote of life in his native country and in the U.S. His best-known books are Dynamite: The Story of Class Violence in America (1931); The Native's Return (1934); Cradle of Life (1936); My America (1938); From Many Lands (1940); and Two-Way Passage (1941).

Adamites. The name given to various heretical sects who supposed themselves to attain to primitive innocence by rejecting marriage and clothing. There was such a sect in North Africa in the 2nd century; the Abelites were similar; the heresy reappeared in Savoy in the 14th century, and spread over Bohemia and Moravia in the 15th and 16th. One Picard, of Bohemia, was leader in 1400, and styled himself "Adam, son of God." There are references to the sect in James Shirley's comedy Hyde Park (1632), and in The Guardian, No. 134 (1713).

Adams, Alice, see ALICE ADAMS.

Adams, Charles Francis (1807-1886). American lawyer, diplomat, and author. Minister to Great Britain through the Civil War, he helped settle the ALABAMA CLAIMS. He edited the Memoirs of John Quincy Adams (his father) in 12 volumes. His son, Charles Francis Adams (1835-1915), was a lawyer, railroad expert, and historian. He was president of the Union Pacific (1884) and was forced out by Jay GOULD. He exposed the looting of the Erie Railroad by Gould in Chapters of Erie (1871); wrote a life of his father, a biography of Richard Henry Dana, and Railroads: Their Origins and Problems (1878).

Adams, Franklin Pierce. Signs his work F. P. A. (1881-). Popular American newspaper columnist and author, best known for his humorous column, "The Conning Tower." He was associated with a number of newspapers, including the Chicago Journal, New York Evening Mail, New York World, New York Herald-Tribune, and New York Post. In 1938 he became a member of the cast of INFORMATION PLEASE, a popular radio "quiz" program.

Adams, Hannah (1755-1831). The first professional woman writer in the U.S., author of books on history and religion, including A Summary History of New England (1799), used as a textbook in the schools.

Adams, Henry Brooks (1838-1918). American man of letters, historian, scholar, and critic of his age, a member of the famous Adams family of American statesmen. Most of his life was spent in a quest for order and integration in a world which he considered to be in the process of disintegration. His best known works are History of the United States during the Administrations of Jefferson and Madison, 1801-1817 (1889-1891); MONT-SAINT-MICHEL AND CHARTRES (1904); Life of George Cabot Lodge (1911); THE EDUCATION OF HENRY ADAMS (1906, awarded the Pulitzer prize in 1919); THE DEGRADATION OF THE DEMOCRATIC DOGMA (1919).

Adams, James Truslow (1878-1949). American historian, author of The Founding of New England (1921), awarded the Pulitzer prize in 1922; Revolutionary New England (1923); New England in the Republic (1926);

The Epic of America (1931); The March of Democracy (1932-1933); Building the British Empire (1938); Empire on the Seven Seas (1940); and other works.

Adams, John (1735-1826). Second president of the U.S. Joined Jay and Franklin in Paris (1782) to negotiate treaty of peace with Great Britain. Envoy to Great Britain. Elected vice-president (1788; 1792) and president (1796); defeated for presidency by Jefferson (1800). He was also a signer of the Declaration of Independence. He wrote Thoughts on Government (1776), Defence of the Constitutions of the United States of America against the Attack of Mr. Turgot (1787), and Discourses on Davila (1791) but the letters to Abigail, his wife, and the correspondence with Jefferson are famous.

Adams, John Quincy (1767-1848). Sixth president of the U.S. One of the negotiators of peace after the War of 1812. Minister to Great Britain, secretary of state; elected president (1825-29); defeated by Jackson for second term. Representative in Congress (1831-1848). Writer: Dermot MacMorrough (1832); Poems (1848); Poems of Religion and Society (1859), and voluminous Diaries.

Adams, Léonie Fuller (1899-). American poet whose work is marked by symbols chosen from nature to express an intense personal emotion. Many of her lyrics are considered akin to those of William Butler YEATS. Published volumes of her verse are Those Not Elect (1925); High Falcon (1929); This Measure (1933).

Adams, Maude (1872-). American actress, known for her performances in plays by Sir James M. BARRIE, notably PETER PAN, THE LITTLE MINISTER, QUALITY STREET, WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS, and A Kiss for Cinderella. Her real name was Maude Kiskadden, and she adopted her mother's maiden name, Adams, as her stage name. She was also notable in Rostand's L'Aiglon and Chantecler. Teacher of dramatics at Stephens College, Columbia, Mo. (since 1937).

Adams, Parson. A leading character in Fielding's Joseph Andrews (1742), often taken as the type of the simple-minded, hard-working, and learned country curate who is totally ignorant of "the ways of the world." He was drawn from Fielding's friend, the Rev. William Young, who edited Ainsworth's Latin Dictionary (1752).

Adams, Samuel (1722-1803). American pamphleteer and political writer, active in arousing public opinion against England in the early days of the American Revolution. He was a member of the Continental Congress from 1774 to 1782 and was the author of many state papers. Wrote with Joseph Warren Rights of the Colonies.

Adams, Samuel Hopkins (1871-). American novelist and journalist. Revelry (a novel about the Harding administration; 1926); The Flagrant Years (1929); The Gorgeous Hussy (1934); the motion picture It Happened One Night (1934); Maiden Effort (1937); The Incredible Era (1939); another motion picture, The Harvey Girls (1942); etc. He also wrote a biography of Alexander WOOLLCOTT (1945).

Adams, Will (1575?-1620). Japanese title, Anjin Sama, i.e., "Mr. Pilot." The first Englishman to visit Japan (1600). His life was spared, and because of his knowledge of ships, ship-building, navigation, etc., he was held by the Shoguns as adviser for twenty years. He married a Japanese woman and was given an estate.

Adams, William T. Pseudonym Oliver Optic (1822-1897). Author of various series of books for boys. Editor of the journal Our Boys and Girls, founded in 1867 as a weekly, subsequently a monthly.

Addams, Jane (1860-1935). American leader in social work and the peace and woman suffrage movements. She is best known for her settlement work at Hull House, Chicago, which she founded in 1889. In 1931 she shared the Nobel peace prize with Nicholas Murray BUTLER. She wrote a number of books and articles on sociology and world peace, including Twenty Years at Hull House (1910); Peace and Bread in Time of War (1922); and The Second Twenty Years at Hull House (1931).

Adding Machine, The. A play by Elmer RICE, produced in 1923. It is written in an expressionistic vein (see EXPRESSIONISM), satirically depicting the enslavement of man by the machine.

Addison, Joseph (1672-1719). English essayist, famous for his contributions to the TATLER and SPECTATOR, which established and perfected the essay as a literary type, and laid the foundations of the novel. Addison produced a tragedy, Cato (1713) an enormously popular play which portrayed the last of the Roman republicans making a last stand for liberty.

Addison of the North. A sobriquet of Henry Mackenzie (1745-1831), author of The Man of Feeling.

Addisonian Termination. The name given by Bishop HARD to the construction which closes a sentence with a preposition, such as—"which the prophet took a distinct view of." Named, of course, from Joseph Addison, who frequently employed it.

Addled Parliament. See PARLIAMENTS.

Ade, George (1866-1944). American humorist and playwright, best known for ARTIE (1896); Fables in Slang (1899); and The College Widow (1904).

Adelphi (Gr. adelphoi, "brothers"). A quarter of London, built in the 18th century by the brothers Adam, with literary and historical associations. Also, a theater on the Strand, London, noted in the 19th century for its melodramas.

Adler, Alfred (1870-1937). Austrian psychoanalyst, disciple of Sigmund FREUD, who later rebelled against his master's teachings and held to a system of "individual psychology." In this he maintained that psychological differences among individuals—in behavior, attitude, etc.—were due to the differences in their means of attaining a feeling of superiority in their relations with society. See COMPLEX; INFERIORITY. Cf. biography by Phyllis BOTTOME.

Adler, Felix (1851-1933). American philosopher. Founder of the Ethical Culture movement. In 1908, Theodore Roosevelt appointed him exchange professor at the University of Berlin.

Adler, Mortimer Jerome (1902-). American college professor and author, writing chiefly on Thomistic philosophy (see ST. THOMAS AQUINAS) and aesthetics. In 1940 his How to Read a Book became a best seller.

Admetus. In Greek mythology, a king of Thessaly, husband of ALCESTIS, who consented to die in his stead. Apollo, being condemned by Jupiter to serve a mortal for twelve months for slaying a Cyclops, once entered the service of Admetus. James Russell LOWELL has a poem on the subject, called The Shepherd of King Admetus.

Admirable, the. Abraham ben Meir ben Ezra, a celebrated Spanish Jew (about 1090-1168) was so called. He was noted as a mathematician, philologist, poet, astronomer, and commentator on the Bible. Browning has a poem entitled RABBI BEN EZRA.

the Admirable Crichton. James Crichton (1560-1585?), Scottish traveler, scholar, and swordsman. So called by Sir Thomas Urquhart. (See also next item for Barrie's play by this name.)

Admirable Doctor. See under DOCTOR.

Admirable Crichton, The. A dramatic fantasy by J. M. Barrie (1902). The Earl of Loam, his family and one or two friends are wrecked on a desert island, where the butler, the "Admirable Crichton" proves himself a man of infinite resource and power, far superior to the rest of the party. Barrie took the name of his play but nothing else from the original Admirable Crichton.

Admiral. English admirals used to be of three classes, according to the color of their flag. Admiral of the Red used to hold the center in an engagement, Admiral of the White, the van, Admiral of the Blue, the rear. The distinction was abolished in 1864; now all admirals carry the white flag. It has, however, given rise to a number of humorous allusions.

Admiral of the Blue. (1) A butcher who dresses in blue to conceal blood-stains; (2) A tapster from his blue apron.

Admiral of the Red. A punning term applied to a wine-bibber whose face and nose are very red.

Admiral of the Red, White and Blue. A beadle; hall-porter; etc. From their gorgeous uniforms.

Admiral of the White. (1) A coward. (2) A fainting person.

Admission Day. A legal holiday commemorating the day of the admission of a state into the United States of America.

Adonai. Hebrew name for God, translated in the Old Testament as "Lord." See ELOHIM.

Adonais. The poetical name given by Shelley to Keats in his elegy on the death of the latter (1821), probably in allusion to the mourning for Adonis. Adonais is considered one of the greatest elegies in the English language.

Adonbeck al Hakim. A doctor in Scott's Talisman who is really Saladin in disguise.

Adonic verse. A verse consisting of a dactyl and a spondee or trochee, probably so called after the Adonia, the festival of Adonis.

Adonis. In Greek mythology, a beautiful youth, beloved by Venus and Proserpina, who quarreled about the possession of him. Jupiter, to settle the dispute, decided that the boy should spend six months with Venus in the upper world, and six with Proserpina in the lower. Adonis was gored to death by a wild boar in a hunt.

Shakespeare has a long poem called Venus and Adonis. Shelley calls his elegy on the poet Keats Adonais, under the idea that the untimely death of Keats resembled that of Adonis. The word Adonis is used, often ironically, for any beautiful young man. In one famous instance Leigh Hunt was sent to prison for libeling George IV when Regent, and calling him "a corpulent Adonis of 50."

Adonis' Garden. A worthless toy; a very perishable good. The allusion is to the baskets or pots of earth used at the annual festival of Adonis, in which quick-growing plants were sown, tended for eight days, allowed to wither, and then thrown into the sea or river with images of the dead Adonis.

Adosinda. In Southey's epic poem Roderick, the Last of the Goths (1814), the daughter of the Gothic governor of Auria in Spain.

Adramelech. One of the fallen angels. Milton has him overthrown by Uriel and Raphael (Paradise Lost, vi. 365). Klopstock introduces him into The Messiah, and represents him as surpassing Satan in malice and guile, ambition and mischief. He is made to hate every one, even Satan, of whose rank he is jealous.

Adraste. The hero of Molière's comedy Le Sicilien ou l'amour peintre (1667), a French gentleman who enveigles a Greek slave named Isidore from her master Don Pedre. He is introduced as a portrait-painter, and thus imparts to Isidore his love.

Adrastea. In Greek mythology, the goddess of inevitable fate; later NEMESIS.

Adrastus. (1) A mythical Greek king of Argos, leader of the expedition of the "Seven Against Thebes." See under THEBES.

(2) In Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED, an Indian prince who aids the King of Egypt against the Crusaders. He is slain by Rinaldo.

Adrian IV. Also Hadrian. Real name Nicholas Breakspear. Pope (1154-1159). The only English pope; born near St. Albans. Gaye Ireland to Henry II of England (1154). In conflict with Emperor Frederick I through his adherence to the policies of GREGORY VII.

Adrian, Dr. Adrian Van Welche in Couperus' SMALL SOULS and its sequels.

Adriana. In Shakespeare's COMEDY OF ERRORS, a wealthy Ephesian lady, who marries Antipholus, twin-brother of Antipholus of Syracuse.

Adriano de Armado, Don. See under ARMADO.

Adriatic, Marriage of the. See BRIDE OF THE SEA.

Adullam. A cave in which David took refuge when he fled from King Saul; and thither resorted to him "every one that was in distress, and every one that was in debt, and every one that was discontented" (1 Sam. xxii. 1, 2).

Adulterous Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

ad usum Delphini (Lat.). For the use of the dauphin. See Grand Dauphin under DAUPHIN. The phrase now often signifies "arranged—i.e., expurgated, etc.—for the use of children or young people."

ad valorem (Lat.). According to the price charged. A commercial term used in imposing customs duties according to the value of the goods imported. Thus, if teas pay duty ad valorem, the high priced tea will pay more duty per pound than the lower priced tea.

Advancement of Learning, The. A treatise on philosophy by Francis Bacon, published in 1605 in English. It contains a criticism of the traditional methods of increasing knowledge, characteristic of the change in thought taking place in the 17th century under the influence of new scientific discoveries. Later, it formed the first part of his Instauratio Magna.

Advent (Lat. adventus, the coming to). The four weeks immediately preceding Christmas, commemorating the first and second coming of Christ; the first to redeem, and the second to judge the world. The season begins on St. Andrew's Day (Nov. 30th), or the Sunday nearest to it.

Adventists. Christian religious sects believing that the Second Coming of Christ and the End of the World are near at hand.

Adventures. For novels beginning with this word, as The Adventures of Tom Sawyer, The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes, The Adventures of Philip, etc., see under Tom Sawyer, Sherlock Holmes, Philip and other proper names of heroes or heroines.

Adversary, the. A name frequently given in English literature to the Devil (from 1 Pet. v. 8).

Advice to the Privileged Orders. A prose tract by Joel Barlow, published in 1792 and pleading for justice, political equality, and democratic rights. It aroused a great deal of discussion and unfavorable criticism in England and was the subject of debate in the House of Commons.

adytum. The innermost sanctuary in ancient temples, open only to the priests.

Æ or A. E. Pseudonym of George William Russell (1867-1935). Irish poet, known for his mystic verse. Among his works are DEIRDRE (1902), a drama; The Divine Vision (1904); By Still Waters (1906); The Renewal of Youth (1911); Imaginations and Reveries (1915); The Candle of Vision (1919); The Interpreters (1922); Midsummer Eve (1928); Enchantment, and Other Poems (1930); and The Living Torch (1937), a posthumous collection of table-talk.

Æacus. In classic legend, King of Oenopia, a man of such integrity and piety that he was made at death one of the three judges of Hades. The other two were Minos and Rhadamanthus. He was the ruler of the Myrmidons whom Zeus had created for him out of ants to people his island after it had been stricken by the plague. His son Peleus became the father of ACHILLES.

A. E. F. The American Expeditionary Force which was sent overseas for service in World War I.

Ægeon. (1) In classic legend, a huge monster with 100 arms and 50 heads, who with his brothers, Cottus and Gyges, conquered the Titans by hurling at them 300 rocks at once. Some authorities say he inhabited the Aegean Sea; others make him one of the gods who stormed Olympus.

(2) A merchant of Syracuse in Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

Ægeus. A fabulous king of Athens who gave the name to the Aegean Sea. His son, Theseus, went to Crete to deliver Athens from the tribute exacted by Minos. Theseus said, if he succeeded he would hoist a white sail on his home-voyage, as a signal of his safety. This he neglected to do, and Ægeus, who watched the ship from a rock, thinking his son had perished, threw himself into the sea.

Ægipan. The god Pan, whose horns, ears and legs were goatlike. Literally, goat Pan.

Ægis. The shield of Jupiter made by Vulcan was so called, and symbolized divine protection. The shield of Minerva was called an ægis also.

I throw my ægis over you. I give you my protection.

Ægisthus. In Greek legend the seducer of Clytemnestra, wife of AGAMEMNON.

Ægle (Gr. "radiance"). The mother of the Graces.

Ægyptus. In classic myth the father of fifty sons who were married to the fifty daughters of his twin brother Danaus and all except one of whom were murdered by their brides on the wedding night. See DANAIDES.

A.E.I.O.U. The device adopted by Frederick V, archduke of Austria, on becoming the Emperor Frederick III in 1440. It had been used by his predecessor, Albert II, and then stood for—Albertus Electus Imperator Optimus Vivat.

The meaning that Frederick gave them was—Archidux Electus Imperator Optime Vivat.

Many other versions are known, including—

Austriæ Est Imperare Orbi Universo.

Alles Erdreich Ist Oesterreich Unterthan.

Austria's Empire Is Overall Universal.

To which wags added after the war of 1866—

Austria's Emperor Is Ousted Utterly.

Frederick the Great is said to have translated the motto thus:

Austria Erit In Orbe Ultima (Austria will be lowest in the world).

Aelfric (955?-?1025). Anglo-Saxon teacher and churchman, educated at the famous monastery at Winchester. He wrote numerous homilies, treatises, and commentaries. In prose style, he followed classical Latin literature as a model.

Aelia Laelia. An insoluble riddle. From the title of a Latin inscription discovered at Bologna.

Aemilia. In Shakespeare's COMEDY OF ERRORS, the wife of Aegeon the Syracusan merchant, the mother of the twins called Antipholus.

Aemilius. A Roman noble in Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

Aeneas. The hero of Virgil's epic, the AENEID, son of Anchises, king of Dardanus, and Aphrodite. According to Homer, he fought against the Greeks in the Trojan War and after the sack of Troy reigned in the Troad. Later legends tell how he carried his father Anchises on his shoulders from the flames of Troy, and after roaming about for many years, came to Italy, where he founded a colony which the Romans claim as their origin. The epithet applied to him is pius, meaning "dutiful." He is revered as the ancestral hero of the Romans.

Aeneas Silvius. Italian Enea Silvio Piccolomini (1405-1464). Humanist, Pope (under the title of Pius II, 1458-1464), patron of letters, historian, and long an agitator for a crusade against the Turks. He was the author of Eurialus and Lucretia, which has been described as a novel in the style of Boccaccio, as well as Latin pastoral poetry, some of which was translated by Alexander BARCLAY in 1548.

Aeneid. The epic poem of Virgil, in twelve books. When Troy is taken by the Greeks and set on fire, Aeneas with his father, son and wife, takes flight, with the intention of going to Italy, the original birthplace of the family. The wife is lost, and the old father dies on the way; but after numerous perils by sea and land, Aeneas and his son Ascanius reach Italy. Here Latinus, the reigning king, receives the exiles hospitably, and promises his daughter Lavinia in marriage to Aeneas; but she has been already betrothed by her mother to Prince Turnus, son of Daunus, king of the Rutuli, and Turnus will not forego his claim. Latinus, in this dilemma, says the rivals must settle the dispute by an appeal to arms. Turnus is slain, Aeneas marries Lavinia, and soon succeeds his father-in-law on the throne.

Book I. The escape from Troy; Aeneas and his son, driven by a tempest on the shores of Carthage, are hospitably entertained by Queen Dido.

II. Aeneas tells Dido the tale of the wooden horse, the burning of Troy and his flight with his father, wife and son. The wife was lost and died.

III. The narrative continued; he recounts the perils he met with on his way, and the death of his father.

IV. Dido falls in love with Aeneas; but he steals away from Carthage, and Dido, on a funeral pyre, puts an end to her life.

V. Aeneas reaches Sicily, and witnesses there the annual games. This book corresponds to the Iliad xxiii.

VI. Aeneas visits the infernal regions. This book corresponds to Odyssey xi.

VII. Latinus, king of Italy, entertains Aeneas, and promises to him Lavinia (his daughter) in marriage; but Prince Turnus had been already betrothed to her by the mother, and raises an army to resist Aeneas.

VIII. Preparations on both sides for a general war.

IX. Turnus, during the absence of Aeneas, fires the ships and assaults the camp. The episode of NISUS AND EURYALUS.

X. The war between Turnus and Aeneas. Episode of MEZENTIUS AND LAUSUS.

XI. The battle continued.

XII. Turnus challenges Aeneas to single combat, and is killed.

Aeolus. In classic mythology, god of the winds, which he kept imprisoned in a cave in the Aeolian Islands, and let free as he wished or as the over-gods commanded.

the breath of Aeolus. Scandal.

Aeon (Gr. aion). An age of the universe, an immeasurable length of time; hence the personification of an age, a god, any being that is eternal. Basilides reckons there have been 365 such Aeons, or gods, but Valentinus restricts the number to 30.

Aeschylus (525-456 B.C.). The father of the Greek tragic drama. Titles of seventy-two of his plays are known, but only seven are now extant. They are the Suppliants, Persae, Septem, Prometheus, Agamemnon, Choephoroi and Eumenides, the last three comprising the trilogy known as the Oresteia.

Aeschylus of France. Prosper Jolyot de Crébillon (1674-1762).

Aesculapius. The Latin form of the Greek Asklepios, god of medicine and of healing. Now used for "a medical practitioner." The usual offering to him was a cock, hence the phrase "to sacrifice a cock to Aesculapius"—to return thanks (or pay the doctor's bill) after recovery from an illness.

Aesir. The collective name of the celestial gods of Scandinavia, who lived in ASGARD. We are told that there were twelve gods and twenty-six goddesses, but it would be hard to determine who they were, for, like Arthur's knights, the number seems variable. The following may be mentioned: (1) Odin, the chief; (2) Thor (his eldest son, god of thunder); (3) Tiu (another son, god of wisdom); (4) Balder (another son, Scandinavian Apollo); (5) Bragi (god of poetry); (6) Vidar (god of silence); (7) Hoder the blind (slayer of Balder); (8) Hermoder (Odin's son and messenger); (9) Hoenir (a minor god); (10) Odnir (husband of Freya, the Scandinavian Venus); (11) Loki (the god of mischief); (12) Vali (Odin's youngest son).

wives of the Aesir. Odin's wife was Frigga; Thor's wife was Sif (beauty); Balder's wife was Nanna (daring); Bragi's wife was Iduna; Loki's wife was Siguna.

The important deities mentioned above are more fully treated under their several names. See also VANIR.

Aeson. In Greek mythology, the father of Jason. He was restored to youth by Medea, who infused into his veins the juice of certain herbs.

Aesop's Fables, written in Greek prose, are traditionally ascribed to Aesop, a deformed Phrygian slave of the 6th century B. C.; but many of them are far older, some having been discovered on Egyptian papyri of 800 or 1000 years earlier.

Aesop of Arabia. Lokman; and Nasser (5th century).

Aesop of England. John GAY (1688-1732).

Aesop of France. Jean de LAFONTAINE (1621-1695).

Aesop of Germany. Gotthold Ephraim LESSING (1729-1781).

Aesop of India. Bidpay or PILPAY.

aesthetics. The branch of philosophy dealing with art and beauty. The term was first used by the German philosopher Alexander Baumgarten (1714-1762), though the problems of aesthetics were of course studied much earlier. Occidental preoccupation with them goes back to the Greeks of the fourth century B. C.

Action. In Spenser's poem COLIN CLOUT'S COME HOME AGAIN, a "shepherd" thought by many critics to be meant for Shakespeare.

a fortiori (Lat., "by a stronger reason"). An a fortiori argument is one in which the conclusion is considered to be established by the proof of another proposition, analogous to the first or including it, which has seemed more improbable.

Afreet, Afria. In Mohammedan mythology the most powerful but one (Marids) of the five classes of Jinn, or devils. They are of gigantic stature, very malicious, and inspire great dread. Solomon, we are told, once tamed an Afreet, and made it submissive to his will.

Africa, Out of. See BLIXEN.

Africaine, L'. An opera by Meyerbeer (1865) (libretto by Scribe) dealing with the adventures of the Portuguese explorer, Vasco da Gama.

African magician, the. In the Arabian Nights, the pretended uncle of ALADDIN who sent the lad to fetch the "wonderful lamp" from an underground cavern. After sundry adventures Aladdin caused him to be poisoned in a draught of wine.

Afrika Korps. A German military division in World War II, which made history with brilliant tank forays in Africa under Field Marshal Erwin Rommel. Specially equipped for desert fighting. After two years the British 8th Army won the Battle of El Alamein where General Thoma, Commander of the Afrika Korps was captured. The Afrika Korps finally, after a long retreat, established a perimeter defense of Northern Tunisia. Surrendered in May, 1943.

After Many a Summer Dies the Swan. See HUXLEY, ALDOUS.

Afternoon of a Faun, The. See L'APRÈS-MIDI D'UN FAUNE.

After Strange Gods. See ELIOT, THOMAS STEARNS.

After Such Pleasures. See PARKER, DOROTHY.

Agadir incident. An international crisis (1911) brought on by sending the German gunboat Panther to Agadir, South Morocco, to maintain German economic interests in Morocco.

Against the Grain. The title of the English translation of A Rebours, a novel by Joris-Karl HUYSMANS. It concerns the quest of the hero, DES ESSEINTES, for the rare, the unusual, and the perverse in sensation, which he attempts to find in perfume, jewels, music, paintings, foods, the love of circus acrobats, and Latin literature of the Middle Ages. It had an influence on Oscar WILDE and others associated with him in the "aesthetic" group of writers in late Victorian England, and is one of the clearest expressions of the DECADENT movement in literature.

Aga Khan I. Real name Hasan Ali Shah (1800-1881). Head of an important sect of British Indian Mohammedans. For checking fanatic frontier tribes for the British Government in India, he was granted a large pension and the title, "His Highness the Aga Khan."

Agamedes. In classic legend, the brother of Trophonius. Together they built the temple of Apollo at Delphi and a treasury for king Hyrieus. Agamedes was caught stealing part of the king's treasure and killed by his brother who feared being discovered as an accomplice.

Agamemnon. In Greek legend the King of Mycenae, son of Atreus, and leader of the Greeks at the siege of Troy. Homer makes him ruler over all Argos. He was the brother of Menelaus, the theft of whose wife Helen by Paris brought on the Trojan War. Before the expedition against Troy could sail, Agamemnon's daughter Iphigenia was sacrificed to Diana to appease that goddess for a sacred stag Agamemnon had killed. At Troy, Agamemnon's quarrel with ACHILLES cost the Greeks many lives and delayed the end of the war. After the sack of Troy, Agamemnon returned home only to be murdered by his wife Clytemnestra, who was living as the paramour of Aegisthus. For the tragic vengeance which his son Orestes and his daughter Electra took for their father's death, see under those entries. Agamemnon is the principal figure in Aeschylus' trilogy, the Agamemnon, Choephoroi and Eumenides, and is prominent in many plays on the fate of IPHIGENIA.

Aganippe. Fountain of the Muses, at the foot of Mount Helicon, in Boeotia.

Agapemone. A 19th-century Communistic establishment of men and women in England, suspected of free-love practices; hence, any free-love institution.

Agapida, Fray Antonio. The imaginary chronicler of The Conquest of Granada (1829) by Washington IRVING.

Agar, Herbert Sebastian (1897-). American author and editor. Among his books are The People's Choice (1933, winner of the Pulitzer prize in 1934); What is America? (1936); Pursuit of Happiness (1938); Beyond German Victory (1940), with Helen Hill.

Agassiz, Jean Louis Rodolphe (1807-1873). Scientist and educator, trained in Switzerland and Germany, who came to the U.S. and exerted wide influence as a member of the faculty of Harvard University. He made important contributions in the fields of geology and biology.

Agastya. In Hindu mythology a dwarf who drank the sea dry. As he was walking one day with Vishnu, the insolent ocean asked the god who the pigmy was that strutted by his side. Vishnu replied it was the patriarch Agastya, who was going to restore earth to its true balance. Ocean, in contempt, spat its spray in the pigmy's face, and the sage, in revenge of this affront, drank the waters of the ocean, leaving the bed quite dry.

Agate, James Evershed (1877-1947). English dramatic critic. On staff of Manchester GUARDIAN, SATURDAY REVIEW, Sunday TIMES.

Agatha. The daughter of Cuno, and the betrothed of Max, in Weber's opera of DER FREISCHUTZ.

Agatha, St. See under SAINTS.

Agathocles (361-289 B.C.). Tyrant of Sicily (316-304 B.C.). He was the son of a potter, and raised himself from the ranks to become general of the army. There is a story that he always kept an earthen pot at hand in memory of his origin; hence Agathocles' pot signifies a poor relation. When he attacked the Carthaginians, he "carried the war into Africa" and "burned his ships behind him" that his soldiers might feel assured they must either conquer or die. Agathocles died of poison administered by his grandson. He is the hero of an English tragedy by Richard Perington, a French tragedy by Voltaire and a German novel by Caroline Pichler, all called by his name.

agathodaemon. A Greek deity of good fortune in the form of a shepherd.

Agave. In classic mythology daughter of Cadmus and mother of Pentheus whom she tore to pieces in a mad fury under the illusion that he was a wild beast. This episode forms a part of Euripides' drama THE BACCCHAE.

age. A word used of a long but more or less indefinite period of history, human and pre-human, distinguished by certain real or mythical characteristics and usually named from these characteristics or from persons connected with them, as the GOLDEN AGE, the MIDDLE AGES, the DARK AGES, the Age of the Antonines (from Antoninus Pius, 138, to Marcus Aurelius, 180), the Prehistoric Age, etc. Thus, Hallam calls the 9th century the Age of the Bishops, and the 12th, the Age of the Popes.

Varro (Fragments, 1623) recognizes three ages:

From the beginning of mankind to the Deluge, a time wholly unknown.

From the Deluge to the First Olympiad, called the mythical period.

From the First Olympiad to the present time, called the historic period.

Shakespeare's passage on the seven ages of man (As You Like It, ii. 7) is well known; and Titian symbolized the three ages of man thus:

An infant in a cradle.

A shepherd playing a flute.

An old man meditating on two skulls.

According to Lucretius also there are three ages, distinguished by the materials employed in implements (v. 1282), viz.:

The age of stone, when celts or implements of stone were employed.

The age of bronze, when implements were made of copper or brass.

The age of iron, when implements were made of iron, as at present.

Hesiod names five ages, viz.:

The Golden or patriarchal, under the care of Saturn.
The Silver or voluptuous, under the care of Jupiter.
The Bronze or warlike, under the care of Neptune.
The Heroic or renaissance, under the care of Mars.
The Iron or present, under the care of Pluto.

Fichte names five ages also:

The antediluvian, post-diluvian, Christian, satanic and millennial.

Aged or Aged P. In Dickens' novel Great Expectations, WEMMICK's father.

Age of Innocence, The. A novel by Edith WHARTON (1920), depicting the social life of the New York of fifty years previous. The hero, Newland Archer, marries an affectionate, pretty girl of the circumscribed social sphere of the élite to which he is born, and is loyal to her, but is torn by love for his vivid, warm-blooded, unconventional cousin, Ellen Olenska, and impatience at the petty conventions that make up his world. This novel was awarded the Pulitzer prize in 1921. The title is from a famous painting of a child by Sir Joshua Reynolds.

Age of Reason. A controversial treatise by the American pamphleteer, Thomas PAINE (1795) on the subject of revealed religion.

Agib. (1) The Third CALENDER of the Arabian Nights. He was wrecked on the loadstone mountain, lived for a year in the palace of the forty princesses, and lost an eye for his curiosity.

(2) The Prince of Tartary in one of the Bab Ballads by W. S. Gilbert.

Agincourt, Battle of (October 25, 1415). In this battle Henry V of England defeated a French army of cavalry superior in numbers to his own while invading France to claim the throne. Shakespeare's drama Henry V concerns this invasion, and the English poet Michael DRAYTON wrote a poem entitled Agincourt in ballad style.

Aglaia. (1) One of the three Graces of classic mythology.

(2) In Dostoyevski's novel THE IDIOT, the fiancée of Prince Myshkin.

Aglaos. A poor Arcadian peasant called by the Delphic oracle "happier than King Gyges of Lydia," because he was contented.

Aglauros. The wife or daughter of Cecrops, King of Athens. Also, a goddess presiding over agricultural fertility.

Agnes. In Molière's L'École des femmes, the girl on whom Arnolphe tries his pet experiment of education, so as to turn out for himself a "model wife." She has been brought up in a country convent and kept in entire ignorance of the difference of sex, conventional proprieties, the mysteries of marriage, and so on. When removed from the convent, she treats men like school-girls, plays with them and kisses them.

An Agnes is therefore any naïve and innocent young girl. The French have a proverb Elle fait l'Agnes, that is, she pretends to be wholly unsophisticated and ingenuous.

Agni. The Hindu god of fire and of sunlight and lightning. He is one of the more important deities described in the Vedas.

agnostic (Gr. a, "not," gignoskein, "to know"). A term coined by Professor Huxley in 1869 (with allusion to St. Paul's mention of an altar to "the Unknown God") to indicate the mental attitude of those who withhold their assent to whatever is incapable of proof, such as an unseen world, a First Cause, etc. Agnostics neither dogmatically accept nor reject such matters, but simply say agnosco—I do not know—they are not capable of proof.

agony column. A column in a newspaper containing advertisements of missing relatives and friends, or other messages of a confidential nature. The practice originated with the London Times. It is also the title of a novel by Earl Derr Biggers.

Agramant. In ORLANDO INNAMORATO by Boiardo and ORLANDO FURIOSO by Ariosto, the king of Africa who carried the war against Charlemagne into France. In an encounter with Oliver he was seriously wounded.

Agrarians. A group of American writers of Southern origin, including Allen TATE, John Crowe RANSOM, and Robert Penn WARREN, who favor an economic base of agriculture for the South and a return to the aristocratic culture once made possible by such a society. I'll Take My Stand (1932) expresses their views.

Agrawain or Agraivain, Sir. In Arthurian romance, a knight of the Round Table who aided his half-brother Modred to spy upon Launcelot.

Agreement of the People. A proposed constitution submitted by John Lilburne and the LEVELERS in October, 1647, but not accepted by Cromwell.

Agricane. In Carolingian legend, the famous King of Tartary who besieges Angelica in the castle of Albracca and is slain in combat by Orlando. He brought into the field 2,200,000 men, according to the account in Boiardo's ORLANDO INNAMORATO.

Agricola, Johannes. Real name Johannes Sneider (1494?-1566). German reformer of the 16th century, alleged founder of the sect of Antinomians. Cf. Browning's poem, Johannes Agricola.

Agricultural Adjustment Administration (AAA). An agency of the New DEAL (1933) which sought to reduce overproduction in agriculture and equalize the farmer's return with that of the businessman. Its chief feature was payment in compensation for a prescribed annual crop reduction.

Agrippa. In the New Testament, one of the rulers before whom Paul was tried. His comment "Almost thou persuadest me to become a Christian" is often quoted.

Aggravain. One of King Arthur's knights, brother of Sir Gawain, who betrayed Sir Launcelot and the queen to the king. His other brothers were Gahariet and Gareth.

Aguecheek, Sir Andrew. In Shakespeare's TWELFTH NIGHT, a silly old fop with "3000 ducats a year," very fond of the table, but with a shrewd understanding that "beef had done harm to his wit." Sir Andrew thinks himself "old in nothing but in understanding," and boasts that he can "cut a caper, dance the coranto, walk a jig, and take delight in masques," like a young man.

Aguinado, General Emilio (1870?-). Leader of a Filipino insurrection against the Spaniards in 1896 and later (1899) against American forces when the Philippine Islands were taken over by the U.S. after the Spanish-American War. He was finally captured (1901) and took the oath of allegiance to the U.S.

Agur's wish (Prov. xxx. 8). "Give me neither poverty nor riches."

Ahab. A king of Israel whose name has become a byword for wickedness. He is remembered especially for his hostility to the prophet Elijah and his seizure of Naboth's vineyard at the instigation of his wife JEZEBEL. His story is told 1 Kings xvi-xxii.

Ahab, Captain. The whaler who pursues MOBY DICK in Herman Melville's famous American novel of that name. In his passionate soliloquies and the violence of his quest for revenge, this character has been compared with the heroes of Elizabethan tragedy.

Ahasuerus. (1) In the Old Testament, king of the Medes and Persians. His story is related in the book of ESTHER.

(2) In medieval legend, the name of the WANDERING JEW.

Ahi. In Vedic myth, the sky dragon that releases the rain when INDRA's thunderbolt is hurled.

Ahmed, Prince. A character in the Arabian Nights, noted for the tent given him by the fairy Paribanou, which would cover a whole army, but might be carried in one's pocket, and for the apple of Samarkand, which would cure all diseases.

Aholah and Aholibah (Ezek. xxiii). Personifications of prostitution. Used by the prophet to signify religious adultery or running after false faiths. These Hebrew names signify "she in whom are tents," and have reference to the worship at the high places. Swinburne has a poem Aholibah (Poems and Ballads, 1st Series), in which occurs the verse:

God called thy name Aholibah,
His tabernacle being in thee,
A witness through waste Asia:
Thou wert a tent sown cunningly
With gold and colours of the sea.

Aholibamah. In the Bible, the name of one of Esau's wives (Gen. xxvi. 2) and of a "duke" that came of Esau (Gen. xxxvi 41), but in Byron's HEAVEN AND EARTH, daughter of Cain's son, loved by the seraph Samiasa. She is a proud, ambitious, queen-like beauty, a female type of Cain. When the flood came, her angel-lover carried her off to "a brighter world than this."

Ahriman or Ahrimanes. In the dual system of Zoroaster, the spiritual enemy of mankind, also called Angra Mainyu, and Druj (deceit). He has existed since the beginning of the world, and is in eternal conflict with Ahura Mazda or ORMUZD.

Ah Sin. Bret Harte's HEATHEN CHINEE in the poem usually known by that name but first published as Plain Language from Truthful James (1870). In 1880 Bret Harte and Mark Twain made this popular innocent-appearing coolie villain the central figure in a play called Ah Sin.

Ah! Wilderness. See O'NEILL, EUGENE.

Aïda. An opera by VERDI (libretto by Ghislanzoni from the French of Camille du Locle) generally considered his masterpiece (1871). The scene is laid in Egypt in the time of the Pharaohs. The Egyptian general Rhadames is in love with Aïda, a slave who is in reality the daughter of Amonasro, ruler of Ethiopia. She returns his passion, but he is also beloved by Amneris, daughter of the king of Egypt, whose hand is formally bestowed upon him by his sovereign. The exigencies of the war between Egypt and Ethiopia make King Amonasro a captive of the victorious Rhadames, but his true rank is not known. Urged by her father's fiery words, Aïda endeavors to persuade Rhadames to flee with them and give his support to Ethiopia. Rhadames holds back but involuntarily betrays the place of attack planned for the morrow. Amneris and the chief priest interrupt the scene; Amonasro and Aïda flee and Rhadames, who gives himself up, is condemned to be buried alive for treason. While the remorseful Amneris prays in the temple above, Aïda joins him and perishes with him in the crypt.

Aidenn. So Poe calls Eden in THE RAVEN.

Tell this soul, with sorrow laden,
If within the distant Aidenn,
It shall clasp a sainted maiden,
Whom the angels name Lenore.

Aïdes, also Aïdoneus. Hades, the god.

Aiglemont, Julie d'. Titular heroine of Balzac's novel, A Woman of Thirty (La femme de trente ans). After marriage she resists one lover, who dies of pneumonia contracted in the effort to save her from being compromised, but yields to another, the Marquis de Vandenesse. She devotes herself to her daughter Moina, who does not return her affection and whose unkind taunts bring about her death.

Aiglon, L'. A drama by Edmond ROSTAND (1900), based on the tragic career of the son and heir of Napoleon, whom Victor Hugo had called l'Aiglon (the eaglet). The young hero knows little or nothing of his father's story for years. When he learns the truth he escapes from the Austrian court, but his attempt at conspiracy is doomed to utter failure and he dies in Vienna.

Aiken, Conrad Potter (1889-). American poet and novelist, whose work is marked by a strong interest in psychoanalysis. Poetry: The Jig of Forslin (1916); The House of Dust (1920); Priapus and the Pool (1922); The Pilgrimage of Festus (1923); Serlin (1925); Time in the Rock (1936); And in the Human Heart (1940). Fiction: Blue Voyage (1927); Costumes by Eros (short stories, 1928); Great Circle (1933); King Coffin (1935); Conversation (1940).

ailanthus. The tree of heaven or Chinese sumach. Silkworms feed on its leaves. Imported to New York City for an unsuccessful silk industry, and is now a characteristic tree there. The tree in A Tree Grows in Brooklyn.

Aimwell, Viscount Thomas. An impoverished gentleman who succeeds in redressing his fortunes by paying his addresses to Dorinda, daughter of Lady Bountiful. He and Archer are the two beaux of THE BEAUX' STRATAGEM, a comedy by George Farquhar (1705).

Ainsworth, William Harrison (1805-1882). English historical novelist and editor of Bentley's Miscellany and Ainsworth's Magazine. Wrote 39 novels, including Rookwood (1834); Jack Sheppard (1839); Old St. Paul's (1841); Windsor Castle (1843); The Flitch of Bacon (1854); etc.

Ainu. A hairy, primitive member of an indigenous race of Japan, living on Hokkaido and Karafuto.

Airavata. In Hindu myth, the elephant upon which INDRA rides.

Air Raid. See under MACLEISH, ARCHIBALD.

Airways, Inc. See DOS PASSOS, JOHN.

Aïssa. In Conrad's OUTCAST OF THE ISLANDS, the daughter of the one-eyed native Babalatchi, loved by Willems.

Ajax. The most famous hero of the Trojan War after Achilles; King of Salamis, a man of giant stature, daring, and self-confident, son of Telamon. When the armor of Hector was awarded to Ulysses instead of to himself, he turned mad from vexation and stabbed himself. His deeds are narrated by Homer and later poets. Sophocles has a tragedy called Ajax, in which "the madman" scourges a ram he mistakes for Ulysses. His encounter with a flock of sheep, which he fancied in his madness to be the sons of Atreus, has been mentioned at greater or less length by several Greek and Roman poets. This Ajax is introduced by Shakespeare in his drama called Troilus and Cressida.

Ajax the Less. In Greek legend son of Oileus, king of Locris. The night Troy was taken, he offered violence to Cassandra, the prophetic daughter of Priam; in consequence of which his ship was driven on a rock, and he perished at sea.

Akeley, Carl Ethan (1864-1926). American taxidermist, sculptor, naturalist, explorer. Made trips for Field Museum and American Museum of Natural History. Died in Africa.

à Kempis, St. Thomas. See under SAINTS.

Akenside, Mark (1721-1770). English poet and physician to the queen (1761). He is the author of Pleasures of the Imagination (1744), a book of verse.

Akins, Zoë (1886-). American playwright, best known for The Greeks Had a Word for It (1930), a comedy, and The Old Maid (1934), which was adapted from a novella of the same title by Edith WHARTON and received the Pulitzer prize for drama in 1935.

Al. For Al Araf, Al Borak and similar entries of Mohammedan legend, see under ARAF, BORAK, etc.

Alabama Claims, the. A Confederate warship, the Alabama, was built in England for use against Union shipping during the American Civil War. It was the subject of an international diplomatic incident because it had been permitted to sail from a British port, and the Union government was awarded heavy damages in payment for Great Britain's violation of neutrality.

Aladdin. One of the most celebrated characters in the Arabian Nights, the son of Mustafa a poor tailor, of China, "obstinate, disobedient, and mischievous," wholly abandoned "to indolence and licentiousness." One day an African magician accosts him, pretending to be his uncle, and sends him to bring up the "wonderful lamp," at the same time giving him a "ring of safety." Aladdin secures the lamp, but will not hand it to the magician till he is out of the cave; whereupon the magician shuts him up in the cave, and departs for Africa. Aladdin, wringing his hands in despair, happens to rub the magic ring. The genius of the ring appears before him, and asks his commands. Aladdin asks to be delivered from the cave, and he returns home. By means of this lamp, he obtains untold wealth, builds a superb palace, and marries Badroulboudour, the sultan's daughter. After a time, the African magician gets possession of the lamp, and causes the palace, with all its contents, to be transported into Africa. Ultimately Aladdin poisons the magician, regains the lamp, and has his palace retored to its original place in China.

Aladdin's lamp. The source of wealth and good fortune.

Aladdin's ring, given him by the African magician, was a "preservative against every evil."

Aladdin's window. To finish Aladdin's window—i.e., to attempt to complete something begun by a great genius, but left imperfect. The palace built by the genius of the lamp had twenty-four windows, all but one being set in frames of precious stones; the last was left for the sultan to finish; but after exhausting his treasures, the sultan was obliged to abandon the task as hopeless.

Alamo, The. A fort in San Antonio, Texas, formerly a Roman Catholic mission and in 1836 the scene of a siege and the slaughter of its American defenders by a Mexican army. "Remember the Alamo!" was a favorite battle slogan of the Mexican War (1846-1848).

Alan-a-Dale or Alin-a-Dale, see ALLAN-A-DALE.

Alan Breck Stewart. In Stevenson's DAVID BALFOUR.

Alarcón, Pedro Antonio de (1833-1891). Spanish writer, statesman, and radical journalist. Author of short stories and sketches of Spanish rustic life, including El Sombrero de Tres Picos (1874) and El Niño de la Bola (1880).

Alarcón y Mendoza, Juan Ruiz de (1580?-1639). Spanish dramatist, a leading representative of the Golden Age. One of his plays, La Verdad Sospechosa, was imitated by CORNEILLE in Le Menteur. Author of El Semejante de Sí Mismo; Las Paredes Oyen; El Tejedor de Segovia; etc.

A la Recherche du temps perdu, see REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST.

Alaric (370?-410). Gothic king and conqueror. Invaded Greece as king of the Visigoths (395-396) and plundered Rome (410).

Alaric Cottin or Cotin. A nickname which Voltaire gave Frederick the Great, from the Visigoth conqueror Alaric (c. 376-410), and Charles Cotin (1604-1682), a French poet of small merit.

Alasnam, Prince Zeyn. A character in the ARABIAN NIGHTS who possessed eight statues, each a single diamond on a gold pedestal, but had to go in search of a ninth, more valuable than them all. This ninth was a lady, the most beautiful and virtuous of women, "more precious than rubies," who became his wife.

Alasnam's mirror. When Alasnam was in search of his ninth statue, the king of the geni gave him a test-mirror, in which he was to look when he saw a beautiful girl. If the glass remained pure and unsullied, the damsel would be the same, but if not, the damsel would not be wholly pure in body and in mind. This mirror was called "the touchstone of virtue."

Alastor. The evil genius of a house; a Nemesis, which haunts and torments a family.

Alastor or The Spirit of Solitude. A poem in blank verse by Percy Bysshe Shelley (1815). The poet wanders over the world admiring the wonderful works which he cannot help seeing, but finds no solution to satisfy his inquisitive mind, and nothing in sympathy with himself.

Albania, Albany, Albion. A poetical name for Scotland or North Scotland. ALBION is also the oldest name of the island occupied by England, Scotland, and Wales.

In that nook-shotten isle of Albion.
Shakespeare.

Albany regency. The name given to an American political group, with headquarters at Albany, that exerted considerable influence about 1820-1850.

albatross. The largest of web-footed birds, called by sailors the Cape Sheep, from its frequenting the Cape of Good Hope. Many fables are told of the albatross; it is said to sleep in the air, because its flight is a gliding without any apparent motion of its long wings, and sailors say that it is fatal to shoot one. Coleridge's Ancient Mariner is founded on this superstition.

Alberich. In Scandinavian legend, the dwarf who guards the treasure of the Nibelungs, owner of a magic ring. He plays a prominent part in both the Völsunga Saga and the Nibelungenlied. In Wagner's music-drama, Der Ring des Nibelungen, Loki and Wotan steal the ring and treasure, and Alberich's curse follows the ring wherever it goes.

Albert. A character in Goethe's romance THE SORROWS OF WERTHER, drawn from his friend Kestner. He is a young German farmer, who married Charlotte Buff (called "Lotte") in the novel), with whom Goethe was in love. Goethe represents himself as Werther.

Albert of Geierstein, Count. In Scott's ANNE OF GEIERSTEIN.

Albertine. A character in REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, by Marcel Proust, object of the love and intense jealousy of the narrator, Marcel, and concerned in much of his introspective analysis.

Albertus Magnus. Albert the Great (1193-1280). Medieval German scholar, teacher, and churchman, who wrote commentaries on Aristotle and many treatises on natural science. He was an early empiricist in his philosophical attitude, insisting always on testing authority by the lessons of experience. St. Thomas Aquinas (see, under SAINTS) was one of his pupils.

Albigenses. A common name for a number of anti-sacerdotal sects in southern France during the 13th century; so called from the Albigeois, inhabitants of the district which now is the department of the Tarn, the capital of which was Albi, Languedoc.

Albigensian Crusade, The. A military campaign to suppress the heretical ALBIGENSES which began in 1209 under Pope Innocent III and soon became a war of feudal conquest.

Albino (from Lat. albus "white"). A term originally applied by the Portuguese to those Negroes who were mottled with white spots; but now to those who, owing to the congenital absence of coloring pigment, are born with red eyes and white hair and skin. Albinos are found among white people as well as among Negroes. The term is also applied to beasts and plants, and even, occasionally, in a purely figurative way: thus, Oliver Wendell Holmes, in the AUTOCRAT OF THE BREAKFAST TABLE (ch. viii), speaks of Kirke White as one of the "sweet Albino poets," whose "plaintive song" he admires, apparently implying some deficiency of virility, and possibly playing upon the name.

Albion. An ancient and poetical name for Great Britain: thought to have been so called from the white (Lat. albus) cliffs that face Gaul, but possibly from the Celtic alp, alp, a rock, cliff, mountain. It was Napoleon who called England Albion Perfide.

Albracca. In Boiardo's famous epic, ORLANDO INNAMORATO, a castle of Cathay (China), to which Angelica retires in grief when she finds her love for Rinaldo is not reciprocated. Here she is besieged by Agricane, king of Tartary, who is resolved to win her, and here many of the adventurous paladins of Charlemagne's court follow her to join in the fray.

Alcaic verse or ALCAICS. A Greek lyrical metre, so called from Alcoeus, a lyric poet, who is said to have invented it. Alcaic measure is little more than a curiosity in English poetry; probably the best example is Tennyson's:

O migh|ty-mouthed | in|ventor of | harmonies,
O skilled | to sing | of | Time or E|ternity.
God-gift|ed or|gan-voice | of Eng|land,
Milton, a | name to re|sound for | ages

Alcatraz. An American federal penitentiary for particularly dangerous criminals, located on an island in San Francisco Bay, formerly a fort and a military prison.

Alceste. The hero of Molière's comedy Le Misanthrope (1666). Alceste is disgusted with society. Courtesy seems to him the vice of fops, —and the usages of civilized life no better than hypocrisy. He is in love with Célimène, a coquette who produces caustic "portraits" of her friends behind their backs and embodies all the qualities of which he is most impatient.

Alcestis, Alceste, or Alcestes. In Greek legend daughter of Pelias and wife of Admetus. On his wedding day Admetus neglected to offer sacrifice to Diana, but Apollo induced the Fates to spare his life, if he could find a voluntary substitute. His bride consented to die for him, but Hercules brought her back from the world of shadows.

Euripides has a Greek tragedy on the subject (Alcestis); Gluck has an opera (Alceste), libretto by Calzabigi (1765); Phalippi Quinault produced a French tragedy entitled Alceste, in 1674; and Lagrange-Chancel in 1694 produced a French tragedy on the same subject. The story is told by William Morris in his Earthly Paradise (April).

Alchemist, The. The last of the three great comedies of Ben Jonson (1610). The other two are Volpone (1605), and The Silent Woman (1609). The object of The Alchemist is to ridicule the belief in the philosopher's stone and the elixir of life. The alchemist is Subtle, a mere quack: and Sir Epicure Mammon is the chief dupe, who supplies money, etc., for the "transmutation of metal." Abel Drugger, a tobacconist, and Dapper, a lawyer's clerk, are two other dupes. Captain Face, alias Jeremy, the house-servant of Lovewit, and Dol Common^{are} his allies. The whole thing is blown up by the unexpected return of Lovewit.

Alcibiades. A brilliant but traitorous Athenian general (450-404 B. C.). Being banished by the senate, he marched against the city, and the senate, unable to offer resistance, opened the gates to him. This incident is introduced in Timon of Athens. Alcibiades was a favorite pupil of Socrates and pupil and master are depicted in Plato's dialogue Phaedo. He is cari-captured in Aristophanes' comedy THE CLOUDS under the name Pheidippides.

Alcides. HERCULES, son of Alcaeus; hence any strong and valiant hero. But see Alcmene.

Alcina. In the Italian epics dealing with the adventures of ORLANDO, Carnal Pleasure personified. In Boiardo's Orlando Innamorato she is a fairy, who carries off Astolpho. In Ariosto's Orlando Furioso she reappears as a kind of Circe, whose garden is a scene of enchantment. Alcina enjoys her lovers for a season, and then converts them into trees, stones, wild beasts and so on, as her fancy dictates.

Alcinous. In classic legend, ruler of the Phaeacians and father of Nausicaa. The shipwrecked Odysseus was hospitably received and feasted in his palace and responded by unfolding the tale of his adventures on the way home from Troy.

Alciphron. (1) A Greek rhetorician of the 2nd or 3rd century, author of fictitious letters giving details of domestic life and manners of his time.

(2) The hero of T. MOORE's romance The Epicurean.

Alciphron or The Minute Philosopher. The title of a work by Bishop BERKELEY. So called from the name of the chief speaker, a freethinker. The object of this work is to expose the weakness of infidelity.

Alcmaeon. Leader of the sons of the defeated Seven Against Thebes who, thirty years later, conquered and destroyed that city. He was driven mad by the Erinyes for killing his mother Eriphyle.

Alcman. A celebrated Dorian lyric poet of Sparta, first half of 7th century B. C.

Alcmene or Alcmene. In classic legend, wife of AMPHITRYON and mother of Hercules by Jupiter. She is a leading character in the comedies of Plautus, Molière and Dryden (all entitled Amphitryon) founded on the story of Jupiter's deceitful amour.

Alcofribas. The pseudonym assumed by Rabelais in his Gargantua and Pantagruel. Alcofribas Nasier is an anagram of "François Rabelais."

Alcoran. The KORAN.

Alcott, Amos Bronson (1799-1888). American educator, author, mystic, transcendentalist. An early pioneer in educational reform, he was condemned for his experiments, and tried in vain to establish a cooperative community, Fruitlands, near Harvard. Alcott aspired to be an American Plato and had great influence on EMERSON, THOREAU, HAWTHORNE, and CHANNING. He is suggested in the character of the father in LITTLE WOMEN, a popular novel by his daughter, Louisa May ALCOTT.

Alcott, Louisa May (1832-1888). American author and reformer, daughter of Amos Bronson ALCOTT. She took part in the temperance and woman suffrage movements of 19th-century America, and wrote immensely popular fiction for children. The best-known of her books are LITTLE WOMEN (1868); An Old-Fashioned Girl (1870); Little Men (1871); Eight Cousins (1875); and Rose in Bloom (1876).

Alcuin. Sometimes called Albinus (753-804). Christian theologian and teacher, born at York, who spent most of his life as director of Charlemagne's famous Palace School and led in reform of texts and calligraphy.

Alcyone or Halcyone, see HALCYON.

Aldanov, M. A. Pseudonym of Mark A. Landau (1889-). Russian novelist. Author of the extremely controversial novel The Fifth Seal (translated, 1943).

Aldebaran. A red star of the first magnitude, in the eye of Taurus.

For I have seen red Aldeborn.
The star of hate in Taurus' horn.
Belloc.

The brightest star in the "watery Hyades."

Aldegonde, Lord St. In Disraeli's political novel Lothair, the son and heir of a duke, but "a republican of the deepest dye . . . opposed to all privileges and all orders of men except dukes, who were a necessity." He is witty and good-natured, but thoroughly bored with life.

Alden, John. The young man loved by the Puritan maiden, Priscilla, in Longfellow's COURTSHIP OF MILES STANDISH.

Alden, Oliver. Hero of THE LAST PURITAN, novel by George SANTAYANA.

Aldiborontephosphornio. A courtier in Henry Carey's burlesque, Chrononhotonthologos (1734). Sir Walter Scott called his printer and personal friend James Ballantyne by this name.

Aldine editions. Editions of the Greek and Latin classics, published and printed under the superintendence of Aldo Manuzio (Aldus Manutius), his father-in-law Andrea of Asolo, and his son Paolo, from 1490 to 1597. Most of them are in small octavo, and all are noted for their accuracy. The father invented the type called italics, once called Aldine, and first used in printing Virgil, 1501.

Aldingar, Sir. The story of Sir Aldingar is told in Percy's Reliques. He is steward to a Queen Eleanor, wife of King Henry. He impeached her fidelity, and submitted to a combat to substantiate his charge; but an angel, in the shape of a child, established the Queen's innocence. The story is common to the ballad literature of most European countries.

Aldington, Richard (1892-). English novelist and poet, at one time married to the American poet Hilda DOOLITTLE. Member of the group that introduced Imagism. A poetic pioneer. Collected Poems (1928). After World War I, he wrote several striking and bitter novels, including Death of a Hero (1929); All Men Are Enemies (1933); Very Heaven (1937); and Rejected Guest (1939). He compiled the Viking Book of Poetry of the English Speaking World (1941).

Aldrich, Bess Streeter (1881-). American novelist who wrote chiefly of pioneer life in Iowa and Nebraska. Lantern in Her Hand (1928); White Bird Flying (1931); and Song of Years (1939) are her best-known books.

Aldrich, Henry. Small-boy hero of a popular radio "soap opera," The Aldrich Family, written by Clifford Henshaw Goldsmith. The series originated from Mr. Goldsmith's play What a Life (1938)—later made into a moving picture—in which Ezra Stone and Betty Field created the roles of Henry Aldrich and Barbara Pearson.

Aldrich, Thomas Bailey (1836-1907). American man of letters, best known for his Story of a Bad Boy (1868), Marjorie Daw (1873), and his verse. See GENTEEL TRADITION.

Aldrick. The Jesuit confessor of Charlotte, countess of Derby, in Scott's Peveril of the Peak.

Alecto. In classic myth, one of the three FURIES.

Alectryon. A Greek youth changed by Ares into a cock.

Alembert, Jean Le Rond d' (1717?-1783). French mathematician and philosopher. Son of Mme de Tencin. Associate of Diderot in editing the Encyclopédie.

alembic. An apparatus for distilling, hence anything that distills.

The alembic of a great poet's imagination.
Brimley

Alessandro. The American Indian hero of Helen Hunt Jackson's RAMONA.

Alessio. The lover of Liza, in Bellini's opera LA SONNAMBULA.

Alexander. So PARIS, son of Priam, was called by the shepherds who brought him up.

Alexander VI. Real name Rodrigo Lanzol y Borgia (1431?-1503). Famous Borgia Pope, father of Cesare and Lucretia BORGIA. A great patron of the arts. Among his protégés were Bramante, Raphael, and Michelangelo.

Alexander, Sir Harold Rupert Leofric George (1891-). British general in charge of evacuation of British army from Dunkirk in World War II, commander in Middle East, North Africa, and Italy. His Chief of Staff accepted surrender of Germans in Italy, May 2, 1945.

Alexander, John White (1856-1915). American painter celebrated for his portraits of famous contemporaries.

Alexander, Sir William, Earl of Sterling, (ca. 1567-1640). Scotch poet in the retinue of King JAMES I of England. His best-known work is Doomsday (1614), an epic poem in twelve books.

Alexander of Hales (?-1245). English Franciscan theologian and philosopher, surnamed Doctor Irrefragabilis. Author of Summa Theologiae (printed 1475). Initiated the work of correlating the Christian system with the divergent metaphysical views of the newly introduced writings of Aristotle and the Arab commentators.

Alexander's Feast or The Power of Music. A Pindaric ode by DRYDEN (1694), in honor of St. Cecilia's Day. St. Cecilia was a Roman lady who, it is said, suffered martyrdom in 230, and was regarded as the patroness of music. See under SAINTS.

Alexander the Corrector. The self-assumed nickname of Alexander Cruden (1701-1770), compiler of the Concordance to the Bible. After being, on more than one occasion, confined in a lunatic asylum he became a reader for the Press, and later developed a mania for going about constantly with a sponge to wipe out the licentious, coarse, and profane chalk scrawls which met his eye.

Alexander the Great, King of Macedonia (356, 336-323 B.C.), and conqueror of the East. Many medieval romances were built about his career, notably the Romance of Alexander (Fr. Roman d' Alexandre) by Lambert-li-Cort and the Lay of Alexander (Ger. Alexander Lied) by Lambrecht, both written in the 12th century. Alexander's life is the subject of a tragedy by Racine (1665), of Lyly's Alexander and Campaspe (1581) and Alexander the Great or the Rival Queens (see Statira) by Nathaniel Lee (1667). See also Diogenes.

Alexander's beard. A smooth chin, or very small beard. Alexander had no perceptible beard, and hence is said to have had "an Amazonian chin."

the Albanian Alexander. George Castriot (Scanderbeg or Iscander beg, 1404-1467).

the English Alexander. Henry V. (1388, 1413-1422).

Alexander of the North. Charles XII of Sweden (1682-1718).

the Persian Alexander. Sandjar (1117-1158).

Alexandre, Jeanne. The school girl kidnapped by the kindly old scholar, Sylvestre Bonnard, in Anatole France's CRIME OF SYLVESTRE BONNARD.

Alexandrian. Anything from the East was so called by the old chroniclers and romancers, because Alexandria was the depot from which Eastern stores reached Europe.

Alexandrian library. Founded by Ptolemy Soter, in Alexandria, in Egypt. The tale is that it was burnt and partly consumed in 391; but when the city fell into the hands of the caliph Omar, in 642, the Arabs found books sufficient to "heat the baths of the city for six months." It is said that it contained 700,000 volumes, and the reason given by the Mohammedan destroyer for the destruction of the library was that the books were unnecessary in any case, for all knowledge that was necessary to man was contained in the Koran, and any knowledge contained in the library that was not in the Koran must be pernicious.

Alexandrian school. An academy of learning founded about 310 B. C. by Ptolemy Soter, son of Lagus, and Demetrius of Phaleron, especially famous for its grammarians and mathematicians.

Alexandrine. In prosody, an iambic or trochaic line of twelve syllables or six feet with, usually, a caesura (break) at the sixth syllable. So called either from the 12th century French metrical romance, Alexander the Great (commenced by Lambert-li-Cort and continued by Alexandre de Bernay), or from the old Castilian verse chronicle, Poema de Alexandro Magno, both of which are written in this meter. It is the standard line of French poetry, holding much the same place as the iambic pentameter line in English poetry. The final line of the Spenserian stanza is an Alexandrine.

A needless Alexandrine ends the song,
Which, like a wounded snake,—drags its slow length along.

Pope, Essay on Criticism, ii, 356.

Alexandrine Age. From about 323 to 640 A. D., when Alexandria, in Egypt, was the center of science, philosophy, and literature.

Alex D'Urberville. In Thomas Hardy's TESS OF THE D'URBERVILLES.

Alexis, St. See under SAINT.

Alexius Comnenus (1048-1118). First of the Comneni dynasty of Byzantine emperors, whose appeal for help from the West against the Turkish invaders gave impetus to the Crusades.

Alfheim. One of the heavenly mansions in Scandinavian mythology. It is inhabited by Frey and the light elves.

Alfieri, Conte Vittorio (1749-1803). Italian tragic dramatist. Author of nineteen tragedies classical in form, sonnets, odes. His love of freedom revived the national spirit of Italy.

Alfio. Husband of Lola in Mascagni's opera, CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA.

Alfonso XI. In Donizetti's opera, LA FAVORITA, the monarch of Castile, whose "favorite" was Leonora de Guzman.

Alfred's jewel. A gold plaque with a portrait in enamel of Anglo-Saxon workmanship found in 1693 at Athelney, site of a monastery on an island.

Alfred's scholars. When Alfred the Great set about the restoration of letters in England he founded a school and gathered around him learned men from all parts. These became known as "Alfred's scholars"; the chief among them are: Werfrith, Bishop of Worcester; Ethelstan and Werwulf, two Mercian priests; Plegmund (a Mercian), afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury; Asser, a Welshman; Grimbald, a French scholar from St. Omer, and John the Old Saxon.

Alfred the Great (870-901). English king who finally concluded peace with the raiding Danes, united the English people in a spirit of determination which eventually brought defeat to the invaders, and encouraged the intellectual growth of his nation. He translated works by Gregory the Great, Orosius, St. Augustine, Boethius, and the Venerable Bede.

Algarsife. In Chaucer's unfinished Squire's Tale, in the Canterbury Tales (1388), the son of Cambuscan, and brother of Camballo, who "won Theodora to wife."

This noble king, this Tartre Cambuscan,
Had two sones by Elfeta his wife,—
Of which the eldest sone highte Algarsife,
That other was ycleped Camballo.
A doghter had this worthy king also,
That youngest was, and highte Canace.

Alger, Horatio, Jr. (1832-1899). The author of the innumerable Alger Books for boys, most of which are built around the formula of a poor but worthy hero who enters life as a bootblack or newsboy, surmounts impossible obstacles and achieves the heights of success. Struggling Upward and Other Works, was edited with an introduction by Russel Crouse, 1945.

Algerine Captive, The. An early American novel by Royall Tyler (1797) recounting the adventures of the hero, Updike Underhill, in his native New England backwoods, in Philadelphia where he meets Franklin, in London where he sees Tom Paine, and finally as a captive among the Algerines. The book is famed chiefly for its preface, which contained the first significant plea for native American fiction.

Algonquin. A family of American Indian tribes in various eastern and middle states and parts of Canada. Also the name of a hotel in New York City famous for its hospitality to actors and writers.

Alhambra. The citadel and palace built at Granada by the Moorish kings in the 13th century. The word is the Arabic al-hamra, or at full length kal'-at al hamra (the red castle). Washington Irving called one of his best-known volumes of sketches and tales The Alhambra (1812) because it dealt with this famous palace and with legends of the Moors.

Ali. Cousin and son-in-law of Mahomet, the beauty of whose eyes is with the Persians proverbial; inasmuch that the highest term they employ to express beauty is Ayn Hali (eyes of Ali).

Alianora. In James Branch Cabell's FIGURES OF EARTH the Unattainable Princess, who travels in the appearance of a swan. Maquel loves and is loved by her, but she marries the King of England.

Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves. One of the best-known stories in the Arabian Nights. The forty thieves lived in a vast cave, the door of which opened and shut at the words, "Open, Sesame!" "Shut, Sesame!" One day, Ali Baba, a woodmonger, accidentally discovers the secret, and makes himself rich by carrying off gold from the stolen hoards. The captain tries several schemes to discover the thief, but is always outwitted by Morgiana, the wood-cutter's female slave, who, with boiling oil, poured into the jars where they have hidden themselves, kills the whole band, and at length stabs the captain himself with his own dagger.

Alice. (1) The heroine of Bulwer Lytton's novel ERNEST MALTRAVERS and its sequel Alice or the Mysteries.

(2) In Meyerbeer's opera ROBERT LE DIABLE the foster sister of Robert.

(3) The heroine of Tennyson's poem The Miller's Daughter.

See also below.

Alice, sweet. The charming but oversensitive heroine of the song BEN BOLT.

Who wept with delight when you gave her a smile
And trembled with fear at your frown.

Alice Adams. A novel by Booth TARKINGTON (1921). Alice Adams, the engaging young heroine, sees herself always in a romantic role; she sets her cap at the most eligible man in sight and almost deceives herself into believing that the fanciful explanations which she finds for the crudities of her hopelessly shabby middle-class family are true.

Alice-for-Short. A novel by William De Morgan (1907).

Alice in Wonderland. A whimsical story by Lewis Carroll (C. L. Dodgson) (Full title: Alice's Adventures in Wonderland). (1865.) A sequel, Through the Looking-Glass, appeared in 1871. In the former Alice falls down a well into a strange country where she becomes a giantess or a pigmy by partaking of alternate bites of cake and has remarkable adventures with the White Rabbit, the CHESHIRE CAT, the MAD HATTER, the March Hare, the Duchess, the DORMOUSE and other strange characters. In the sequel Alice manages to slip through a mirror into another strange country, Looking-Glass Land, where the inhabitants are chessmen.

Alice of Old Vincennes. A popular historical novel by Maurice Thompson (Am. 1900) dealing with the life of the Northwest in Revolutionary times.

Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire. A comedy by J. M. Barrie (1905).

Alice W——n. The old love conjured up by Charles LAMB in his Dream Children, a Reverie as the mother of his imaginary children. She has been identified as the actress Frances Maria Kelly.

Alien and Sedition Laws. Three Congressional acts passed in 1798, which gave the president power to deport or imprison any alien considered dangerous to the nation, and to punish any person engaging in treasonable acts or issuing writings considered to be seditious. These measures were directed by the Federalists against French revolutionary propagandists and the Republican party in the U.S.

Alifanfaron. Don Quixote in Cervantes' romance of that name, once attacked a flock of sheep, and declared them to be the army of the giant Alifanfaron.

Aliris. Sultan of Lower Bucharra and hero of Moore's LALLA ROOKH.

Alison. In THE MILLER'S TALE, one of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, the young wife of John, a rich old miserly carpenter and in love with a poor scholar named Nicholas, lodging in her husband's house. She had a roguish eye, small eyebrows and was more "pleasant to look on than a flowering pear tree." For the tale see NICHOLAS.

Alison's House. See GLASPELL, SUSAN.

Alkahest or the House of Claës. The English title of Balzac's novel, La Recherche de l'absolu. See CLAËS.

al Kaswa, see KAŠWA AL.

Alla, King, see ELLA.

Allah. The Arabic name of the Supreme Being, from al, the, illah, god. Allah il Allah, the Mohammedan war-cry, and also the first clause of the confession of faith, is a corruption of la illah illa allah, meaning "there is no God but the God."

The Garden of Allah. A popular novel by Robert Hichens (1904), the title of which refers to a region of the Sahara Desert, south of the town of Beni Mora.

Allan-a-Dale, Allin-a-Dale or Allen-a-Dale. A minstrel in the Robin Hood ballads, who appears also in Scott's Ivanhoe. He is assisted by Robin Hood in carrying off his bride when she is on the point of being married against her will to a rich old knight.

allegory. A systematic symbolism, by which abstractions are represented as accurately as possible by concrete characters, plots, and situations, often with identifying tag-names. Spenser's THE FAERIE QUEENE is the best-known literary allegory in English.

Allegro, L', see L'ALLEGRO.

Allen, Barbara. See BARBARA ALLEN.

Allen, Mr. Benjamin. A young surgeon in Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS, the roommate and friend of Bob Sawyer.

Allen, Ethan. (1738-1789). American Revolutionary soldier. A hero of early Vermont. His story is told in Thompson's GREEN MOUNTAIN BOYS.

Allen, Frederick Lewis (1890-). American author, on the editorial staffs successively of The Atlantic Monthly, The Century, and Harper's Monthly. He is best known for his lively social histories, Only Yesterday (1931), an account of the period of the 1920's in the U.S., and Since Yesterday (1940), a similar treatment of the 1930's.

Allen, James Lane (1849-1925). American novelist and short-story writer of Kentucky scenes. His books include The Blue Grass Region of Kentucky (1892); A Kentucky Cardinal (1895); The Last Christmas Tree (1914); and The Landmark (1925).

Allen, Josiah. See JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE.

Allen, Mrs. A character in Jane Austen's NORTHANGER ABBEY.

Allen, Ralph. A celebrated friend of Pope, and benefactor of Fielding. Fielding depicted him in Tom Jones as ALLWORTHY and Pope wrote of him:

Let humble Allen, with an awkward shame,
Do good by stealth, and blush to find it fame.

Allen, William Hervey (1889-1949). American novelist, poet, and biographer, author of Israfel (1926), a biography of Edgar Allan Poe; the novel ANTHONY ADVERSE (1933); Action at Aquila (1938); and other books.

Allenby, Edmund Henry Hynman, 1st Viscount (1861-1936). English field marshal, famous in World War I. His biography was written by Field Marshal Sir Archibald Wavell (1940).

All for Love or A Sinner Well Saved. A poem in nine parts, in the form of a ballad, by Southey (1829).

All for Love or The World Well Lost. A tragedy by Dryden (1678) based on the story of Antony and Cleopatra. See ANTONY.

All God's Chillun Got Wings. A play by Eugene O'NEILL, produced in 1924, a dramatic psychological study of a Negro-white marriage.

All-Hallows' Day. All Saints' Day (Nov. 1st), "hallows" being the Old English halig, a holy (man), hence, a saint. The French call it Toussaint.

All-Hallows' Eve. Many old folklore customs are connected with Halloween or All Hallows' Eve (Oct. 31st), such as bobbing for apples, cracking nuts, finding by various "tests" whether one's lover is true, etc. Burns' Halloween gives a good picture of Scottish customs. There is a tradition in Scotland that those born on All Hallows' Eve have the gift of double sight, and commanding powers over spirits. Mary Avenel, on this supposition, is made to see the White Lady, invisible to less gifted visions.

Christ and the Mother of Christ and all His Hallows.
Masfield.

Allingham, William (1824-1889). Irish poet. Editor, Fraser's Magazine (1874-1879). Famous for the fairy poem beginning:

Up the airy mountain,
Down the rushy glen,
We daren't go a-hunting
For fear of little men. . . .

alliteration. The rhetorical device of commencing adjacent accented syllables with the same letter or sound, as in Quince's ridicule of it in Midsummer Night's Dream (v. 1):

With blade, with bloody blameful blade,
He bravely broached his boiling bloody breast.

Alliteration was almost a sine qua non in Anglo-Saxon and early English poetry, and in modern poetry it is frequently used with great effect, as in Coleridge's:

The fair breeze blew, the white foam flew,
The furrow followed free.
Ancient Mariner.

And Tennyson's:

The moan of doves in immemorial elms,
And murmuring of innumerable bees.
Princess, vii.

Many fantastic examples of excessive alliteration are extant, and a good example from a parody by Swinburne will be found under the heading Amphigouri.

Allmers, Mr. and Mrs. The chief characters in Ibsen's drama, LITTLE EYOLF.

All Quiet on the Western Front. A novel by Erich Maria REMARQUE, published in the U.S. in 1929. It is the best-known of the anti-war literature written during the period 1920-1939, expressing the horror and futility of war as it was recognized by a whole generation of disillusioned youth in Europe and America.

All Saints' Day, or All-Hallows. Between 603 and 610 the Pope (Boniface IV) changed the heathen Pantheon into a Christian church, and dedicated it to the honor of all the martyrs. The festival of All Saints was first held on May 1st, but in the year 834 it was changed to November 1st.

All Sorts and Conditions of Men. A novel by Walter Besant (1882) notable as one of the first to deal with modern social reform.

All Souls' Day. The 2nd of November, so called because Catholics on that day seek by prayer and almsgiving to alleviate the sufferings of souls in purgatory. It was instituted in the monastery of Cluny in 993.

According to tradition, a pilgrim, returning from the Holy Land, was compelled by a storm to land on a rocky island, where he found a hermit, who told him that among the cliffs was an opening into the infernal regions through which huge flames ascended, and where the groans of the tormented were distinctly audible. The pilgrim told Odilo, abbot of Cluny, of this; and the abbot appointed the day following, which was November 2nd, to be set apart for the benefit of souls in purgatory.

All's Well that Ends Well. A comedy by Shakespeare (about 1598). The plot is taken from Boccaccio's Decameron ix. 3. The heroine, Helena, only daughter of a famous physician, cures the king of an illness and in consequence is allowed to choose her own husband. She is married to Bertram, son of the Countess of Rousillon, but he hates her and leaves the country almost immediately, stating in a letter that he will never see her more till she can get the ring from off his finger. Helena goes on a pilgrimage, passes herself off as a young girl of Florence with whom Bertram is in love and by subterfuge gains the ring, so all ends well.

All-the-Talents Ministry. See under TALENTS.

Allworthy, Squire. In Fielding's Tom Jones (1750), a man of sturdy rectitude, modesty, and untiring philanthropy, with an utter disregard of money or fame. Fielding's friend, Ralph ALLEN, was the academy figure of this character.

Bridget Allworthy. In the same novel, the unmarried sister of Squire Allworthy. It develops that she was the mother of Tom Jones.

Ally Sloper. A grotesque character invented by the English humorist W. G. Baxter. Ally Sloper's Holiday is the title of an English comic weekly (founded, 1884).

Alma. In Spenser's Faerie Queene, Queen of "Body Castle," the soul personified, beset by enemies for seven years. The besiegers are a rabble rout of evil desires, foul imaginations, and silly conceits. Matthew Prior has a poem called Alma.

Almack's. Assembly rooms on King Street in London, built 1764 by William Almack. Scene of 19th-century balls. Also, a London Club on St. James Street, formerly famous as a gambling place, founded before 1763 by Almack, renamed the Whig Club, and later Brooks's.

Almagest (Arab. article al, Gr. megistē, "greatest"). Astronomical treatise by the 2nd century Alexandrian scholar PTOLEMY, a work extensively used during the Middle Ages in an Arabic translation.

Almahide. Heroine of Mlle. de Scudéry's historical romance Almahide or the Captive Queen (1660-1663) and of Dryden's drama Almanzor and Almahide, or the Conquest of Granada (1672). Both works deal with the history of Granada.

Alma Mater. A collegian so calls the university of which he is a member. The words are Latin for "fostering mother," and in ancient Rome the title was given to several goddesses, especially Ceres and Cybele.

Almanach de Gotha. A periodical publication in Germany, founded in 1763, giving data on all royal or titled European families.

Almanack, Poor Richard's, see POOR RICHARD'S ALMANACK.

Almanzor and Almahide or The Conquest of Granada. A tragedy by Dryden (1672), dealing with the history of Granada. The bombastic warrior Almanzor, who makes love to Queen Almahide and finally wins her after the death of her royal husband Boabdellin, was caricatured in the DRAWCANSIR of Buckingham's burlesque, The Rehearsal, which was staged the same year.

Almaviva, Count and Countess. Leading characters in Beaumarchais' comedy The Barber of Seville, in The Marriage of Figaro and the operas based upon the two plays. See FIGARO.

Almayer's Folly. A novel by Joseph Conrad (1895).

Almerio. The peasant hero of Sardou's drama GISMONDA and of Fevrier's opera of the same name.

Almesbury. It was in a sanctuary at Almesbury that Queen Guinevere, according to Malory, took refuge, after her adulterous passion for Lancelot was revealed to the king (Arthur). Here she died; but her body was buried at Glastonbury.

almighty dollar. Washington Irving seems to have been the first to use this expression which has become a byword for American materialism.

The almighty dollar, that great object of universal devotion throughout our land.

W. Irving, Wolfert's Roost, Creole Village (1837).

B. E. Woolf was the author of a successful comedy called The Mighty Dollar (Am. 1875), which helped to popularize the expression.

Alnaschar. In the Arabian Nights, the dreamer, the "barber's fifth brother." He invests all his money in a basket of glassware, on which he is to gain so much, and then to invest again and again, till he grows so rich that he can marry the vizier's daughter and live in grandeur; but, being angry with his supposed wife, he gives a kick with his foot and smashes all the ware which has given birth to his dream of wealth. Hence an Alnaschar dream is counting one's chickens before they are hatched.

Aloadin. In Southey's THALABA THE DESTROYER, a sorcerer, who made for himself a palace and garden in Arabia called "The Earthly Paradise." Thalaba slew him with a club, and the scene of enchantment disappeared.

Alonzo the Brave. The name of a famous ballad by M. G. Lewis (1775-1818). The fair Imogen was betrothed to Alonzo, but, during his absence in the wars, became the bride of another. At the wedding feast Alonzo's ghost sat beside the bride, and, after rebuking her for her infidelity, carried her off to the grave.

Alp. The leading character in Byron's Stige of Corinth. He is a renegade who forswore the Christian faith to become a commander in the Turkish army, and was shot during the siege. He loved the daughter of the governor of Corinth, but she died of a broken heart because he was a traitor and apostate.

Alph. In Coleridge's poem Kubla Khan, the sacred river in Xanadu, which ran "through caverns measureless to man." It is probably a shortened form of ALPHEUS.

alpha. "I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last" (Rev. i. 8). "Alpha" is the first, and "omega" the last letter of the Greek alphabet.

Alpheus and Arethusa. The Greek legend is that a youthful hunter named Alpheus was in love with the nymph Arethusa; she fled from him to the island of Ortygia on the Sicilian coast and he was turned into a river of Arcadia in the Peloponnesus. Alpheus pursued her under the sea, and, rising in Ortygia, he and she became one in the fountain hereafter called Arethusa. The myth seems to be designed for the purpose of accounting for the fact that the course of the Alpheus is for some considerable distance underground.

Alquife. A famous enchanter, introduced into the old romances, especially those relating to Amadis of Gaul.

Al Raschid, Haroun. Caliph of Bagdad, adventures basis of ARABIAN NIGHTS.

Alroy, David. A half-mythical Jewish medieval prince, local governor of his people under Moslem rule, with the title "Prince of the Captivity." He is the hero of Disraeli's prose romance The Wondrous Tale of Alroy.

alruna-wife. The Alrunes were the Lares or Penates of the ancient Germans. An alruna wife was the household goddess of a German family.

Alsatia. The Whitefriars district of London, which from early times till the abolition of all privileges in 1697 was a sanctuary for debtors and law-breakers. It was bounded on the north and south by Fleet Street and the Thames, on the east and west by the Fleet River (now New Bridge Street) and the Temple; and was so called from the old Latin name of Alsace, which was for centuries a debatable frontier ground and a refuge of the disaffected. Scott, in his Fortunes of Nigel, described the life and state of this rookery; he borrowed largely from The Squire of Alsatia (1688), a comedy by Shadwell, who had been the first to use the name in literature.

Alsop, Richard (1761-1815). American author, a member of the group known as the HARTFORD WITS.

Altamira. Site near Santander, Spain, of a cave decorated with paleolithic mural paintings discovered in 1879.

Altamont, Colonel Jack (also known as J. Amory and Johnny Armstrong). In Thackeray's Pendennis (1849), the disreputable father of Blanche Amory and first husband of Lady Clavering.

Altar of the Dead, The. A volume of short stories by Henry JAMES, published in 1909. Nearly all have touches of the supernatural, used in special symbolic sense by the author.

Alte Fritz, der. Old Fritz. The nickname given by the Prussians to Frederick the Great.

alter ego. (Lat., "other I, other self"). One's double; one's intimate and thoroughly trusted friend; one who has full powers to act for another.

Althaea's brand. A fatal contingency. Althaea's son, Meleager, was to live as long as a log of wood, then on the fire, remained unconsumed. With her care it lasted for many years, but being angry one day with Meleager, she pushed it into the midst of the fire; it was consumed in a few minutes and Meleager died in great agony at the same time. Cf. Atalanta in Calydon by Algernon Charles Swinburne.

Althea. The divine Althea of Richard Lovelace was Lucy Sacheverell, also called by the poet, "Lucasta."

When Love with unconfin'd wings
Hovers within my gates,
And my divine Althea brings
To whisper at the grates.

Lovelace was thrown into prison by the Long Parliament for his petition in favor of the King; hence the grates referred to.

Altisidora. In Cervantes' Don Quixote, one of the duchess' servants, who pretends to be in love with Don Quixote, and serenades him.

Alton Locke, Tailor and Poet. A novel by the Rev. Charles Kingsley (1850). This novel won for the author the title of "The Chartist Clergyman" because of its picture of Alton Locke and his radical Chartist friends. It was one of the first English novels to present a study of industrial conditions.

Altruria. The imaginary country from which Mr. Homos, the "Traveller from Altruria" in W. D. Howells' story of that title (1894) arrives, to make his embarrassing comments on American life as compared with the ideal conditions of his native land. He is the guest of Mr. Twelvemough, a conservative novelist, at a summer resort hotel.

Altsheler, Joseph Alexander (1862-1919). Writer of immensely popular juvenile stories. One or two are historical romances worth adult reading.

Alva, Duke of (1508?-1583). Ill-famed for his bloody suppression and persecution of the Dutch in Holland when sent there by Philip II of Spain.

Alvan, Dr. Sigismund. The name under which George Meredith portrays Ferdinand Lassalle in the novel THE TRAGIC COMEDIANS of which he is the hero.

Alvarado, Pedro de (1495?-1541). Soldier under Cortez, famed for saving his own life by a famous leap during "la noche triste."

Alvaro, Don. (1) The lover of Leonora in Verdi's opera FORZA DEL DESTINO and the name of the drama by the Duke of Rivas on which the opera is based.

(2) In Le Sage's Gil Blas, the husband of MENCIA OF MOSQUERA.

Alving, Oswald. The principal character in Ibsen's drama Ghosts (1881), a neurotic and dissipated young man who reaps the harvest sown by his worthless father and becomes insane from inherited disease.

Mrs. Alving. In the same drama, Oswald's widowed mother. Embittered by her experience, she is in revolt against a society where such conditions exist.

Alviss. In Norse mythology, especially in the Edda, a dwarf who demands Thor's daughter in marriage. Thor detains him till dawn which is fatal to dwarfs.

Alyosha. In The Brothers Karamazov. See KARAMAZOV, ALEXEY FYODOROVITCH.

Alzire. Titular heroine of a tragedy by Voltaire (1736), the scene of which is laid in Peru. Under the impression that her lover Zamore has been killed, she marries a German conqueror.

A.M. The academic degree, Master of Arts, the same as M.A. In America it is conferred upon the successful completion of one year of postgraduate work or its equivalent. When the Latin form is intended the A comes first, as Artium Magister; but where the English form is meant the M precedes, as Master of Arts.

The abbreviation "A.M." also stands for ante meridiem (Lat. before noon) and anno mundi (Lat., "in the year of the world").

Amadis of Gaul. The hero of a prose romance of the same title, supposed to have been written by the Portuguese, Vasco de Lobeira (d. 1403), with additions by the Spaniard Montalvo, and by many subsequent romancers, who added exploits and adventures of other knights and thus swelled the romance to fourteen books. The romance was referred to as early as 1350; it was first printed in 1508, became immensely popular, and exerted a wide influence on literature far into the 17th century. It is the work responsible for DON QUIXOTE's madness.

Amadis, called the "Lion-knight," from the device on his shield, and "Beltenebros" (darkly beautiful), from his personal appearance, was a love-child of Perion, king of Gaula (which is Wales), and Elizena, princess of Brittany. He was cast away at birth and becomes known as the Child of the Sea, and after many adventures, including wars with the race of Giants, a war for the hand of his lady-love, Oriana, daughter of the king of Greece, the Ordeal of the Forbidden Chamber, etc., he and the heroine, Oriana, are wed. He is represented as a poet and musician, a linguist and a gallant, a knight-errant and a king, the very model of chivalry.

Other names by which Amadis was called were the Lovely Obscure, the Knight of the Green Sword, the Knight of the Dwarf, etc. The name means literally Love of God and is a variant of Amadeus, the name of a great angel.

Amadis of Greece. A Spanish continuation of the seventh book of AMADIS OF GAUL, supposed to be by Feliciano de Silva. It tells the story of Lisuarte of Greece, a grandson of Amadis.

Amaimon. One of the chief devils in medieval demonology; king of the eastern portion of hell. Asmodeus is his chief officer. He might be bound or restrained from doing hurt from the third hour till noon, and from the ninth hour till evening.

Amalthea. (1) In Greek mythology, the nurse of Zeus.

Amalthea's Horn. The cornucopia or "HORN OF PLENTY." The infant Zeus was fed with goats' milk by Amalthea, one of the daughters of Melisseus, king of Crete. Zeus, in gratitude, broke off one of the goat's horns, and gave it to Amalthea, promising that the possessor should always have in abundance everything desired.

(2) In Roman legend Amalthea is the name of the Sibyl who sold the SIBYLLINE BOOKS to Tarquin.

Amanda. The victim of Peregrine Pickle's seduction, in Smollett's novel, Peregrine Pickle (1751).

Amarant. A cruel giant slain in the Holy Land by Guy of Warwick. Cf. Guy and Amarant, in Percy's Reliques.

Amaryllis. A rustic sweetheart. The name is borrowed from a shepherdess in the pastorals of Theocritus and Virgil. In Spenser's Colin Clout's Come Home Again, Amaryllis is intended for Alice Spenser, countess of Derby.

To sport with Amaryllis in the shade.
Milton.

Amasis, ring of. Herodotus tells us (iii. 40) that Polycrates, tyrant of Samos, was so fortunate in everything that Amasis, king of Egypt, fearing such unprecedented luck boded ill, advised him to part with something which he highly prized. Polycrates accordingly threw into the sea a ring of great value. A few days afterwards, a fish was presented to the tyrant, in which the ring was found. Amasis now renounced friendship with Polycrates, as a man doomed by the gods; and not long afterwards, a satrap put the too fortunate despot to death by crucifixion.

Owen Meredith (E. R. Bulwer LYTTON) gave the title The Ring of Amasis to a romance. T. Sturge Moore has a well-known poem on the story in the Oxford Book of English Verse.

Amaterasu. The central deity of Japanese Shinto, ancestress of the imperial house. Cf. The East I Know by Paul Claudel.

amateur. See under DILETTANTE.

Amaurote (Gr., "the shadowy or unknown place"). The chief city of UTOPIA in the political romance of that name by Sir Thomas More. Rabelais, in his Pantagruel, introduces Utopia and "the great city of the Amaurots" (Bk. II, ch. xxiii).

Amazing Marriage, The. A novel by George Meredith (1895).

Amazon. A Greek word meaning without breast, or rather, "deprived of pap." According to Herodotus there was a race of female warriors, or Amazons, living in Scythia, and other Greek stories speak of a nation of women in Africa of a very warlike character. There were no men in the nation; and if a boy was born, it was either killed or sent to its father, who lived in some neighboring state. The girls had their right breasts burnt off, that they might the better draw the bow. The term is now applied to any strong, brawny woman of masculine habits.

PINERO has a play called The Amazons (1893).

Ambassadors, The. A novel by Henry JAMES (1902-1903). The central character, Lambert Strether, goes to Paris at the instigation of Mrs. Newsome, a wealthy widow whom he plans to marry, in order to persuade her son Chad to come home. Chad is very much engaged in an affair with a charming French woman, the Countess de Vionnet, and the novel deals chiefly with Strether's gradual conversion to the idea that life in Paris may hold more of real meaning for Chad than in Woollett, Mass. After the arrival of a second ambassador, Chad's New England sister, Strether decides to return to Woollett, but Chad remains in Paris. Henry James once pointed out Strether's remark, "Live all you can; it's a mistake not to," as the essence of the novel.

Ambersons. The family whose story forms the subject matter of Booth Tarkington's novel, THE MAGNIFICENT AMBERSONS.

Amber Witch, The (Die Bernstein Hexe). A romance by J. W. Meinhold (Ger., 1843), interesting chiefly because it was for years considered as a genuine chronicle of events in Pomerania in the early 17th century.

Ambitious Guest, The. One of the best known sketches in Hawthorne's Twice Told Tales, built around the incident of a mountain slide which buried a cottage at the foot of the mountain.

Ambree, Mary. An English heroine, immortalized by her valor at the siege of Ghent in 1584. See the ballad in Percy's Reliques:

When captains couragious, whom death cold not daunte,
Did march to the siege of the city of Gaunt,
They mustred their souldiers by two and by three,
And the foremost in battle was Mary Ambree.

Her name is proverbial for a woman of heroic spirit. Also cited in Elizabethan literature as a typical virago.

Ambrose. The tavern keeper whose name suggested the title for the celebrated NOCTES AMBROSIANAE, a series of imaginary conversations chiefly by Christopher North (John Wilson) published in Blackwood's Magazine. The blue parlor of Ambrose's Hotel in Edinburgh was in reality a rendezvous for Wilson and his friends, although the Ambrosian Nights were largely imaginary.

Ambrose, Father. "THE ABBOT" in Scott's novel of that title. He is the abbot of Kennaquhair, in reality Edward Glendinning, brother of Sir Halbert Glendinning, the knight of Avenel, but he appears at Kinross disguised as a nobleman's retainer.

Ambrose, St. See under SAINTS.

ambrosia (Gr. a, privative, brotos, "mortal"). The food of the gods, so called because it made them immortal. Anything delicious to the taste or fragrant in perfume is so called from the notion that whatever is used by the celestials must be excellent.

Ambrosio. The hero of M. G. Lewis' once famous novel, THE MONK.

Ameer, Amir. See RULERS, TITLES OF.

Amelia. A model of conjugal affection, in Fielding's novel of that name (1751). It is said that the character is intended for his own wife. Amelia is tried to the utmost by the vagaries of her wilful, profligate husband, Captain Booth, but remains both lovable and loving under the severest tests.

Amelia Sedley. In Thackeray's Vanity Fair. See SEDLEY, AMELIA.

Amen Corner, at the west end of Pater-noster Row, London, is where the monks used to finish the Pater Noster as they went in procession to St. Paul's Cathedral on Corpus Christi Day. They began in Paternoster Row with the Lord's Prayer in Latin, which was continued to the end of the street; then said Amen, at the corner or bottom of the Row; then turning down Ave Maria Lane, commenced chanting the "Hail, Mary!" then crossing Ludgate, they entered Creed Lane chanting the Credo.

Amen-Ra, see AMMON.

America. Designation for both North and South America, although loose usage applies it chiefly to the U.S. Its origin is the name of Amerigo VESPUCCI (1451-1512), a Florentine merchant and traveler who claimed to have made a voyage in 1497 during which he discovered what is now the mainland of South America. His claim, although never proven, was perpetuated in the name given to the new continent in the West.

America. A novel by Franz KAFKA, published in the U.S. in 1941. It describes the humorous and pathetic adventures of a European lad, who is akin to Voltaire's Candide, in a fantastic land called America. This book is less marked by religious symbolism than Kafka's other novels and is lighter in tone.

America: A Prophecy. A poem by William BLAKE, dated 1793, in the poet's apocalyptic vein.

America Comes of Age. See SIEGFRIED, ANDRÉ.

America in Midpassage. See BEARD, CHARLES AUSTIN.

American. For The American Sappho and similar entries, see under SAPPHO, etc.

American, The. A novel by Henry James (1877) which shows a "robust compatriot" of comparatively simple, genuine nature in contact with the subtleties of European civilization. Christopher Newman, "the American" who at the age of thirty-five has made his own fortune, hopes to marry Claire de Cintré, a widowed daughter of the De Bellegardes, but that aristocratic old French family finally succeeds in circumventing him. Newman then plans to take revenge by publishing proof which he has discovered that Claire's mother and brother were the virtual murderers of her father, the Marquis, but decides to give up the plan because revenge is "really not his game."

American Academy of Arts and Letters. A society formed in 1904, modeled on the French Academy and limited to fifty members chosen from its parent organization, the National Institute of Arts and Letters, which has a larger membership.

American Caravan. An annual publication of American poetry and fiction, founded in 1927 by a group of critics including Alfred KREYMBORG and Paul ROSENFELD and issued irregularly thereafter. A number of well-known writers were represented in its pages.

American Crisis, The. An essay written by Thomas PAINE in 1776. It contains a stirring appeal to the American colonists to struggle against the tyranny of Great Britain, and was ordered by Washington to be read to his soldiers on the eve of the battle of Trenton.

American Federation of Labor (A.F. of L.). An organization of American trade unions, founded in 1881 and based on the principle of organization by craft rather than by industry. It was later opposed by the CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS.

American Institute of Public Opinion. A research organization, founded in 1935 under the direction of Dr. George Gallup, devoted to scientifically conducted surveys of public sentiment on questions of current interest. It featured house-to-house interviews in selected areas and came into prominence through its accurate prediction of the outcome of the American presidential election of 1936. The surveys were popularly known as the Gallup Poll.

Americanism. The term seems to have been used for the first time in 1781 by John Witherspoon, President of Princeton University.

American Language, The. A popular study of the language spoken in the U.S. as a distinct and individual national tongue, written by H. L. MENCKEN and first published in 1919. Supplement I was published in 1945; Supplement II in 1948.

American Legion. An organization of former members of the American Expeditionary Force and others in army service in World War I. It was formed in 1919 to "perpetuate a one hundred per cent Americanism" and "promote peace and good will on earth," among other aims.

American Mercury. An iconoclastic magazine founded by H. L. MENCKEN and George JEAN NATHAN in 1924. During the 1920's, many of the best-known American authors served as contributors. Nathan left the staff in 1930. After Mencken resigned his editorship in 1934, the character of the publication underwent a change.

American Notes. A volume of travel sketches by Charles Dickens (1842). The book was well received in England, but gave great offence in America.

American plan. The system of paying a fixed price for room and regular meals at a hotel in contrast to the European Plan of paying for room only with meals optional at additional cost.

American Scene, The. A volume of sketches by Henry James written after revisiting America (1907).

American Scholar, The. An address by Ralph Waldo Emerson (delivered before the Phi Beta Kappa Society at Cambridge, 1837) which has been called "the intellectual declaration of American independence." The title became the name of the Phi Beta Kappa magazine.

American Songbag, The. A collection of native American songs and folk ballads (1927), gathered and edited by Carl SANDBURG.

American Tragedy, An. A novel by Theodore DREISER, published in 1925. It recounts the story of a young man who tries to escape the poverty and emptiness of his Midwestern family background, only to be swept off his feet by contact with unaccustomed wealth and glitter. He commits murder and is sentenced to death. This novel aroused much public controversy because of the nature of its theme. A dramatization by Patrick Kearney was produced in New York, Oct. 11, 1926.

America's Coming of Age. See BROOKS, VAN WYCK.

America the Beautiful. The popular title of a national song by Katharine Lee Bates, set to music by Horatio Parker, and sung also to the tune Materna. It begins, "O beautiful for spacious skies . . ."

Amerigo Vespucci. Lat. Americus Vesputius. See VESPUCCI.

Amethyst Ring, The. A novel by Anatole FRANCE. See under BERGERET.

Amfortas. In medieval legend, keeper of the Holy Grail, the grandson of Tituril from whom he received his sacred charge. For his neglect he was wounded by the lance of Longinus and could be cured only by a guileless fool who should ask the cause of his pain. He is one of the leading characters in Wagner's opera PARSIFAL, which tells of his cure. See also TITUREL.

Amgiad and Assad. One of the stories of the Arabian Nights, a tale of two half-brothers who were forced to leave home and wandered about encountering many strange adventures.

Amhara. The kingdom in northern Abyssinia in which was located the famous HAPPY VALLEY described in Samuel Johnson's Rasselas (1759).

Amiel, Henri Frederic. A Swiss professor (1821-1881) whose Journal has become one of the classic autobiographies. It was translated by Mrs. Humphry Ward (1899).

Amina. Heroine of Bellini's opera, LA SONNAMBULA.

Amine. In the Arabian Nights, wife of Sidi Nouman, who ate her rice with a bodkin, and was in fact a ghoul. "She was so hard-hearted that she led about her three sisters like a leash of greyhounds."

Aminta. Heroine of Meredith's novel LORD ORMONT AND HIS AMINTA.

Amintc. In Molière's Précieuses Ridicules the name assumed by CATHOS.

Amintor. A character in Beaumont and Fletcher's The Maid's Tragedy who sacrificed his loyalty to his betrothed to his King.

Amis, see AMYS.

Amish. The Amish Mennonites, a strict sect of the 17th century, named from Jacob Ammann or Amen, a Swiss MENNONITE bishop.

Ammers-Küller, Johanna van (1884-). Dutch novelist. Her best-known novel is The Rebel Generation (1925), which was a best seller in Holland and widely translated.

Ammon, Amun or Amen-Ra. The supreme King of the Gods among the ancient Egyptians, usually figured as a man with two long plumes rising straight above his head, but sometimes with a ram's head, the ram being sacred to him. He was the patron of Thebes. His oracle was at the oasis of Jupiter Ammon, and he was identified by the Greeks with Zeus. Ammon was originally the local deity of Thebes, but by the time his name was joined with that of Ra, the sun god, he reigned supreme above all other deities.

Amneris. In Verdi's opera Aïda, the daughter of the king of Egypt.

Amonasro. In Verdi's opera Aïda, the father of Aida.

Amores. The collective title of a series of love poems in elegiac verse by OVID, written in three books in 13 B. C.

Amoret, in Spenser's Faerie Queene, is the daughter of Chrysogone, sister of Belphebe, wife of Scudamore, and was brought up by Venus in the courts of love. In her relations with Timias (typifying Raleigh) she stands for Elizabeth Throgmorton. She falls a prey to Corflambo (sensual passion) but is rescued by Timias and Belphebe.

Amoretti. A sonnet sequence by Edmund Spenser, published in 1595 together with EPITHALAMION. Both works were addressed to his wife, Elizabeth Boyle.

Amory, Blanche. In Thackeray's Pendennis (1849) the daughter of Lady Clavering and the disreputable Colonel Altamont alias J. Amory.

Amos. One of the Minor Prophets of the Old Testament. His pleas for social righteousness are to be found in the book of Amos.

Amos Barton, The Sad Fortunes of the Reverend. A story by George Eliot, one of her Scenes of Clerical Life (1857).

Amos 'n' Andy. Two Negro characters, taxi-drivers in HARLEM, in a comic radio serial named for them, at its height of popularity in the U.S. in the early 1930's.

Amour médecin, l' (The Love Doctor). A comedy by Molière (1665). The heroine is LUCINDE.

amour propre (Fr.). One's self-love, vanity, or opinion of what is due to self. To wound one's amour-propre, is to gall his good opinion of himself—to wound his vanity.

Ampère, André Marie (1775-1836.) French scientist. Discovered important principles in field of magnetism and electricity; formulated Ampère's law which is the basis of study of electrodynamics. The ampère, the unit of intensity of an electric current, is named in his honor.

Amphiaras. In classic legend, the soothsayer of Argos who foretold calamity for the famous expedition of the "Seven against Thebes" but accompanied Adrastus in spite of his misgivings. He was pursued by his enemies and, due to Jupiter's intervention, was swallowed up by the earth. He also took part in the Calydonian boar hunt and the expedition of the Seven against THEBES.

amphigouri. A verse composition which, while sounding well, contains no sense or meaning. A good example is Swinburne's well-known parody of his own style, Nephe lidia, the opening lines of which are:

From the depth of the dreamy decline of the dawn through a notable nimbus of nebulous moonshine Pallid and pink as the palm of the flag-flower that flickers with fear of the flies as they float, Are they looks of our lovers that lustrously lean from a marvel of mystic miraculous moonshine.
These that we feel in the blood of our blushes that thicken and threaten with throbs through the throat?

Amphion. The son of Zeus and Antiope who, according to Greek legend, built Thebes by the music of his lute, which was so melodious that the stones danced into walls and houses of their own accord. Tennyson has a poem called Amphion, a skit and rhyming jeu d'esprit.

Amphitrite. In classic mythology, the goddess of the sea; wife of Poseidon, daughter of Nereus and Doris. (Gr. amphi-trio for tribo, rubbing or wearing away [the shore] on all sides.)

Amphitryon. Le véritable Amphitryon est l'Amphitryon ou l'on dîne (Molière). That is, the person who provides the feast (whether master of the house or not) is the real host. The tale is that Jupiter assumed the likeness of Amphitryon for the purpose of visiting his wife, ALCMENA, and gave a banquet at his house; but Amphitryon came home, and claimed the honor of being the master of the house. As far as the servants and guests were concerned, the dispute was soon decided—"he who gave the feast was to them the host." Alcmena was by Jupiter the mother of Hercules. This legend is the subject of three famous comedies by Plautus, Molière and Dryden, all entitled Amphitryon. In 1929 there appeared a play entitled Amphitryon 38, meaning that it was the thirty-eighth treatment of the famous theme, by the French dramatist Jean Giraudoux (1882-), later produced on the New York stage. See also BEHRMAN, S. N. amrita or amreeta (Sans.). In Hindu mythology, the elixir of immortality, the soma-juice, corresponding to the AMBROSIA of classical mythology.

Amun, see AMMON.

Amundsen, Roald (1872-1928). Famous Norwegian polar explorer. Flew across North Pole with Lincoln Ellsworth (1926). Disappeared (June, 1928) on flight to rescue the Italian explorer Nobile, who was lost returning from the North Pole.

Amyclaeon silence. Amyclae was a Laconian town in the south of Sparta, ruled by the mythical Tyndareus. The inhabitants had so often been alarmed by false rumors of the approach of the Spartans that they made a decree forbidding mention of the subject. When the Spartans actually came no one dared give warning, and the town was taken. Hence the proverb, more silent than Amyclae.

Castor and Pollux were born at Amyclae and are hence sometimes referred to as the Amyclaeon brothers.

Amys and Amylion. A French romance of the 13th century telling the story of the friendship between two heroes of the Carolingian wars, the Pylades and Orestes of medieval story. The story culminates in Amylion's sacrifice of his children to save his friend. It is of Greek or Oriental origin.

Anabasis. The expedition of the younger Cyrus against his brother Artaxerxes, and the retreat of his "ten thousand" Greeks, described by Xenophon the Greek historian. Literally anabasis means a journey upward. The French poet LÉGER, under the pseudonym of St-T Perse, wrote a long poem Anabase, a series of images of migration, etc.

Anacharsis, Le Voyage du jeune. A once celebrated historical romance by Barthélemy (1788). It is a description of Greece in the time of Pericles and Philip. The original Anacharsis the Scythian, a historical character of princely rank, left his native country to travel in pursuit of knowledge. He reached Athens, about 594 B.C. Barthélemy's romance is not a translation of the Scythian's book, but an original work.

anachorism (Gr. ana choros, "out of place"). A thing geographically out of place—in contrast to ANACHRONISM, a misplacing in the order of time.

anachronism (Gr. ana chronos, "out of time"). An event placed at a wrong date; as when Shakespeare, in Troilus and Cressida, makes Nestor quote Aristotle.

Anacreon. A Greek lyric poet, who wrote chiefly in praise of love and wine (about 563–478 B.C.).

Anacreon of the Twelfth Century. Walter Mapes (about 1140–1210), also called "The Jovial Toper." His best-known piece is the famous drinking-song, Meum est, propositum in taberna mori, translated by Leigh Hunt.

Anacreon Moore. Thomas Moore (1779–1852), who not only translated Anacreon into English, but also wrote original poems in the same style.

Anacreon of Painters. Francesco Albano, a famous painter of beautiful women (1578–1660).

Anacreon of the Guillotine. Bertrand Barère de Vieuzac (1755–1841), president of the National Convention; so called from the flowery language and convivial jests used by him towards his miserable victims.

Anacreon of the Temple. Guillaume Amfrye (1639–1720), abbe de Chaulieu; the "Tom Moore" of France.

the French Anacreon. Pontus de Thiard, one of the Pleiad poets (1521–1605); also P. Laujon (1727–1811).

the Persian Anacreon. Hafiz (d. about 1390).

the Scotch Anacreon. Alexander Scot, who flourished about 1550.

the Sicilian Anacreon. Giovanni Meli (1740–1815).

Anadyomene. An epithet of Aphrodite, alluding to her rising from the sea at birth.

anagoge. An elevation of mind to things celestial. The mystical or spiritual meaning and application of words. Interpretation of the Bible in the mystical sense. See FOUR SENSES.

anagram (Gr. ana graphem, "to write over again"). A word or phrase formed by transposing and writing over again the letters of some other word or phrase. Among the many famous examples are:

Dame Eleanor Davies (prophetess in the reign of Charles I.) = Never so mad a lady.

Gustavus = Augustus.

Horatio Nelson = Honor est a Nelo.

Queen Victoria's Jubilee Year = I require love in a subject.

Quid est Veritas (John xviii, 38)? = Vir est qui adest.

Marie Touchet (mistress of Charles IX, of France) = Je charme tout (made by Henri IV).

Voltaire is an anagram of Arouet l(e) j(eune).

These are interchangeable words:

Aleuinus and Calvinus; Amor and Roma; Eros and Rose, Evil and Live; and many more.

Anah. In Byron's HEAVEN AND EARTH, a tender-hearted, pious creature, granddaughter of Cain, and sister of Aholibamah.

Anak. In the Old Testament, a giant of Palestine, whose descendants were terrible for their gigantic stature. The Hebrew spies said that they themselves were mere grasshoppers compared with the Anakim.

analogy. Similarity of relations, congruence, resemblance. The analogy between sleep and death lies in passivity and apparent repose. It is a device used extensively in literature.

analects. Remnants gathered from a feast. Miscellaneous passages collected from works of authors, as Analects of Confucius. See FOUR BOOKS.

Ananias. A liar. Ananias and Sapphira, his wife, were struck dead for lying about the price of a piece of land which they had sold in order to give the proceeds to the early church (Acts V).

Ananias club. A hypothetical organization to which Theodore Roosevelt, president of the United States 1901-1909, made frequent reference. The allusion is obvious.

anapest. In prosody an anapest is a poetic foot consisting of two short syllables followed by a long one, as contravene, acquiesce, importune. Anapestic verse is verse based on anapests. The following is a good example of anapestic trimeter.

I am monarch of all I survey,
My right there is none to dispute;
From the center all round to the sea,
I am lord of the fowl and the brute, Cowper, Alexander Selkirk.

anarchist. One who believes that society should not be governed by any constituted authority. The theory that all government is evil was advanced by PROUDHON, who was often called the "Father of Anarchism," as a political theory. At its best, it recommends a society in which everyone produces according to his powers and receives according to his needs. A "philosophical anarchist" is one who believes in such a society but takes no direct action to bring it about.

Anarchiad, The. An American satirical epic poem, published in the New Haven Gazette in 1786-1787, in twelve installments. The five HARTFORD WITS collaborated in its composition. It was chiefly an attack on French philosophy and the condescending attitude of Europeans toward America.

anathema. A denunciation or curse. The word is Greek, and means "a thing devoted"—originally, a thing devoted to any purpose, e.g., to the gods, but later only a thing devoted to evil, hence, an accursed thing. It has allusion to the custom of hanging in the temple of a patron god something devoted to him. Thus Gordius hung up his yoke and beam; the shipwrecked hung up their wet clothes; retired workmen hung up their tools; cured cripples their crutches, etc.

Anatol. The best known drama of Arthur SCHNITZLER (1893), a series of "seven vignettes connected only by the fact that they present seven different scenes out of the love adventures of the same idle worldling."

Anatomy of Melancholy, The. A famous prose work by Robert Burton (1621) which treats of all phases of melancholy with an abundance of illustrative material from classic sources.

Anatomy of the World, An. An elegiac poem by John DONNE.

Anaxagoras (500?-428 B.C.). An early Greek philosopher, who asserted nous, or "mind," to be the source of all motion and creation in the world. Nous acts upon masses of extremely small particles, or atoms, of which all natural objects are composed. He taught for thirty years in Athens, his pupils including Pericles, Euripides, and possibly Socrates. Later, he was charged with impiety, and banished from Athens for life.

Anaxarete. In Greek legend, a noble lady of Cyprus who treated her lover Iphis with such haughtiness that he hanged himself at her door. The gods punished her by changing her body into stone. She was kept as a statue in the temple of Venus at Salamis.

Anaximander (fl. 547 B.C.). An early Greek philosopher, of the MILESIAN SCHOOL, who interpreted motion and separation as the cause of plurality and variety in the universe, asserting that the primary substance is eternal and indestructible matter, containing within itself all contradictory elements. He also introduced the sundial and invented geographical maps. See also ANAXIMENES.

Anaximenes (died ca. 525 B.C.). An early Greek philosopher, of the MILESIAN SCHOOL, who regarded air as the primary substance from which the universe was formed. See also ANAXIMANDER.

Anchises. In classic legend, the father of Aeneas by Venus, who had fallen in love with him on account of his beauty. When Troy fell, Aeneas carried his aged father out of the burning city on his shoulders.

ancien régime (Fr.). The old order of things; a phrase used during the French Revolution for the old Bourbon monarchy, or the system of government, with all its virtues and vices, which existed prior to that great change.

Ancient Mariner, Rime of the. A poem by Coleridge (about 1796). It deals with the supernatural punishment and penance of a seaman who had shot an albatross, a bird of good omen, in the Antarctic regions. The story is told by the Ancient Mariner himself who stops a wedding guest and holds him with his "skinny hand" and "glittering eye," and finally with the mystery and horror of his tale.

Ancient of Days. A scriptural title of the Deity (Dan. vii. 9).

Andersen, Hans Christian (1805-1875). Danish poet, novelist, and dramatist. In English he is best known as the author of Andersen's Fairy Tales, a series the first group of which was published in 1835. These are stories of folk and legendary origin, often invested with moral and symbolic significance in their retelling, which have become popular in books for children.

Anderson, Charley. A character in U. S. A., trilogy by John Dos Passos. Of a poor North Dakota family, he is interested in socialism for a while as a boy, joins World War I, and becomes a war hero. After the armistice he returns to the U.S. and turns airplane manufacturer. In spite of himself he becomes involved in the stock manipulations and illegal financial ventures of the 1920's and escapes only by death in an automobile accident.

Anderson, Mary Antoinette (1859-1940). American actress, chiefly known for her Shakespearean roles.

Anderson, Maxwell (1888-). American playwright, best known for his experiments in verse drama. Among his plays are WHAT PRICE GLORY? (1924) written with Laurence Stallings; Saturday's Children (1927); Elizabeth the Queen (1932); Mary of Scotland (1933); Both Your Houses (1933), winner of the Pulitzer prize in 1934; WINTERSET (1935); The Star Wagon (1937); High Tor (1937); Journey to Jerusalem (1940); Candle in the Wind (1941). The Feast of the Oztolans (1938) is a radio play.

Anderson, Sherwood (1876-1941). American author, associated with the "Chicago group" of writers which included Theodore Dreiser, Carl Sandburg, Floyd Dell, Ben Hecht and others in the period immediately preceding and following World War I. He became known for his realistic portrayal of life in the small towns of the American Middle West. Novels: POOR WHITE (1920); Many Marriages (1923); DARK LAUGHTER (1925); Beyond Desire (1933); Kut Brandon (1936). Short stories: WINEBURG, OHIO (1919); The Triumph of the Egg (1921); Windy McPherson's Son (1922); Horses and Men (1923); Death in the Woods (1933). Essays: Sherwood Anderson's Notebook (1926); A New Testament (1927); Perhaps Women (1931); No Swank (1934); Puzzled America (1935); Home Town (1940). A Story-Teller's Story (1924) and Tar (1927) were autobiographical works. Sherwood Anderson's Memoirs was published posthumously in 1942.

André, Major John. The British officer to whom Benedict Arnold delivered the plans for the betrayal of West Point during the American Revolution. He was caught and executed as a spy in 1780. His remains were later transferred to Westminster Abbey. He is the hero of several early American dramas of which the best is by Dunlap (1798). Over a century later, Clyde Fitch made him the hero of his play, Major André.

Andrea del Sarto. The title of a poem by Robert Browning in which Andrea del Sarto, known as "the Faultless Painter" (1487-1531), tells of the consuming passion for his beautiful, unscrupulous wife, Lucrezia, that weakened him and kept him from real attainment.

Andrea Ferrara. A sword, also called, from the same cause, an Andiew and a Ferrera. So called from a famous 16th century sword-maker of the name.

Andreas Capellanus. Chaplain to Marie de Champagne, daughter of ELEANOR OF AQUITAINE and an early patroness of the TROUBADOURS. At her behest he wrote De Arte Honeste Amandi (Concerning the Art of Loving Honestly), a treatise on the art of love in the tradition of Ovid's ARS AMORIS. It later became a handbook in the practice of the highly stylized convention of COURTLY LOVE.

André Chénier. An opera by Umberto Giordano (first produced, 1896), dealing with the French Revolution.

Andreiev, Leonid (1871-1919). Russian dramatist and novelist, and short-story writer. He is best known for The Red Laugh (1904); The Life of Man (1906), a symbolic drama; The Seven That Were Hanged (1908), an attack on capital punishment, and He Who Gets Slapped (1916), a play.

Andret. In medieval romance a dishonorable knight who spied upon Tristram and Ysolde (or Isoude) and aroused King Mark's suspicions of their mutual passion.

Andrew, St. See under SAINTS.

Andrewes, Lancelot (1555-1626). An Anglo-Catholic churchman, Bishop of Winchester and author of numerous sermons, devotions, and religious commentaries, who was known as one of the greatest preachers of his day. Interest in him in the 20th century was awakened by the essays of T. S. ELIOT.

Andrews, Joseph. Hero of Fielding's novel JOSEPH ANDREWS.

Andrews, Pamela. Heroine of Richardson's novel PAMELA.

Androcles and the Lion. An oriental apologue on the benefits to be expected as a result of gratitude; told in Aesop, by Aulus Gellius, in the Gesta Romanorum, etc., but of unknown antiquity. Androcles was a runaway slave who took refuge in a cavern. A lion entered, and instead of tearing him to pieces, lifted up his fore paw that Androcles might extract from it a thorn. The slave, being subsequently captured, was doomed to fight with a lion in the Roman arena. It so happened that the same lion was let out against him, and recognizing his benefactor, showed towards him every demonstration of love and gratitude.

Androcles and the Lion is the title of a play by Bernard Shaw (1912), in which he treats the early Christian faith in satirical vein. Androcles appears as a Christian eager for martyrdom, but the lion circumvents his desire.

Andromache. In Greek legend, the heroic and devoted wife of Hector and mother of Astyanax. After Hector's death and the fall of Troy she was allotted to Neoptolemus of Epirus, but eventually became the wife of Hector's brother Helenus. She is the subject of Euripides' tragedy Andromache (B. C. 420), of Racine's Andromaque (1667) and of an English adaptation of the latter by Ambrose Phillips called The Distressed Mother (1712).

Andromeda. In Greek mythology, daughter of Cepheus and Cassiopeia. Her mother boasted that the beauty of Andromeda surpassed that of the Nereids; so the Nereids induced Neptune to send a sea-monster on the country, and an oracle declared that Andromeda must be given up to it. She was accordingly chained to a rock, but was delivered by Perseus, who married her and, at the wedding, slew Phineus, to whom she had been previously promised, with all his companions. After death she was placed among the stars.

Andronicus, Titus, see TITUS ANDRONICUS.

Andvari. In northern myth, especially in the Edda and the Volsunga Saga, a dwarf whom Loki robs of his treasure and a ring. See also ALBERICH.

Andy, Handy, see HANDY ANDY.

Anet, Claude, see SCHOPFER, J.

Anelida and Arcite. A poem by CHAUCER, written during his early period.

Angel. (1) From Greek angelos 'messenger.' In post-canonical and apocalyptic literature angels are grouped in varying orders, and the hierarchy thus constructed was adapted to Church uses by the early Christian Fathers. In his De Hierarchia Celesti the pseudo-Dionysius (early 5th century) gives the names of the nine orders; they are taken from the Old Testament, Eph. i. 21, and Col. i. 16, and are as follows:

(i) Seraphim, Cherubim, and Thrones, in the first circle.

(ii) Dominions, Virtues, and Powers, in the second circle.

(iii) Principalities, Archangels, and Angels, in the third circle.

The seven holy angels are—Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, Uriel, Chamuel, Jophiel, and Zadkiel. Michael and Gabriel are mentioned in the Bible, Raphael in the Apocrypha, and all in the apocryphal book of Enoch (viii. 2).

Milton (Paradise Lost, Bk. i. 392) gives a list of the fallen angels.

Mohammedans say that angels were created from pure, bright gems; the genii, of fire; and man, of clay.

(2) An obsolete English coin, current from the time of Edward IV to that of Charles I, bearing the figure of the archangel Michael slaying the dragon. Its value varied from 6s. 8d. in 1465 (when first coined) to 10s. under Edward VI. It was the coin presented to persons touched for the King's Evil.

Angel of the Schools. St. Thomas Aquinas. See under DOCTOR.

Angel Arms. See FEARING, KENNETH.

Angel Clare. In Hardy's TESS OF THE D'URBERVILLES.

Angelica. (1) The fascinating heroine of the Italian epic poems dealing with the adventures of ORLANDO and other famous paladins of Charlemagne's court. She appears in Biardo's ORLANDO INNAMORATO and Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO as the daughter of Galaphron, king of Cathay.

(2) The heroine of Congreve's comedy Love for Love (1695), an heiress whom the debtor-hero Valentine Legend courts and finally marries.

(3) The bad-tempered heroine of Thackeray's THE ROSE AND THE RING.

Angélique. (1) In Molière's comedy Le Malade imaginaire, daughter of ARGAN, the malade imaginaire.

(2) In Molière's GEORGE DANDIN the aristocratic wife of George Dandin, a French commoner. She has a liaison with a M. Clitandre, but always contrives to turn the tables on her husband.

Angell, Sir Norman. Originally Ralph Norman Angell Lane (1874-). English economist and peace advocate. The Great Illusion (1910) was published in eleven countries, translated into fifteen languages.

Angelo. (1) In Shakespeare's comedy of Measure for Measure, lord-deputy of Vienna in the absence of Vincentio, the duke. His betrothed lady is Mariana. Lord Angelo conceives a base passion for Isabella, sister of Claudio; but his designs are foiled by the Duke, who compels him to marry Mariana.

(2) The name of a goldsmith in Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

Angels and Earthly Creatures. See WYLIE, Elinor.

Angel Street. Long-run (1295 performances) mystery play by Patrick Hamilton.

Angelus. A Roman Catholic devotion in honor of the Incarnation, consisting of three texts, each said as versicle and response and followed by the Ave Maria, and a prayer. So called from the first words, "Angelus Domini" (The angel of the Lord, etc.).

The prayer is recited three times a day at 6 A. M., noon, and 6 P. M., at the sound of a bell called the Angelus. Millet has a well-known painting with this title.

Angevin, Angevine. Member of this famous ruling family of France, whose power was founded by the marriage of Geoffrey, heir to the County of Anjou, to Matilda, daughter of Henry I of England, in 1128, and the subsequent conquest of much territory in France. Also a designation of the PLANTAGENETS.

Angiolina. In Byron's MARINO FALIERO, the daughter of Loredano, and the young wife of Marino Faliero, the doge of Venice.

Angles. A people, first located in what is now Schleswig-Holstein, who, with the Saxons and Jutes, came to conquer England in the 5th century. From their name come the words England and English.

Anglin, Margaret Mary (1876-). Well-known American actress.

Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, The. The source-book for much of the early history of England, said to have been begun at the instigation of King Alfred. The early material is compiled in a great measure from the VENERABLE BEDE, who died in 901. It ends with the accession of Henry II in 1154.

Angurvadel. Frithiof's sword, inscribed with runic letters, which blazed in time of war, but gleamed with a dim light in time of peace.

Anider or Anyder (Gr. ana udor, "without water"). The chief river of Sir Thomas More's Utopia.

animal.

animals in heaven. According to Mohammedan legend the following ten animals have been allowed to enter paradise:

(1) Jonah's whale; (2) Solomon's ant; (3) the ram caught by Abraham and sacrificed instead of Isaac; (4) the lapwing of Balkis; (5) the camel of the prophet Saleh; (6) Balaam's ass, (7) the ox of Moses; (8) the dog Kratim or Katmir of the Seven Sleepers; (9) Al Borak, Mahomet's ass; and (10) Noah's dove.

animals in art. Some animals are appropriated to certain saints: as the calf or ox to St. Luke; the cock to St. Peter; the eagle to St. John the Divine, the lion to St. Mark; the raven to St. Benedict, etc.

animals sacred to special deities. To Apollo, the wolf, the griffon, and the crow; to Bacchus, the dragon and the panther; to Diana, the stag; to Aesculapius, the serpent; to Hercules, the deer; to Isis, the heifer; to Jupiter, the eagle; to Juno, the peacock and the lamb; to the Lares, the dog; to Mars, the horse and the vulture, to Mercury, the cock; to Minerva, the owl; to Neptune, the bull; to Tethys, the halcyon; to Venus, the dove, the swan, and the sparrow; to Vulcan, the lion, etc.

animals in symbolism. The lamb, the pelican, and the unicorn, are symbols of Christ.

The dragon, serpent, and swine, symbolize Satan and his crew.

The ant symbolizes frugality and prevision; ape, uncleanliness, malice, lust, and cunning; ass, stupidity, bantam cock, pluckiness, prigishness; bat, blindness; bear, ill-temper, uncouthness; bee, industry; beetle, blindness; bull, strength, straight-forwardness; bull-dog, pertinacity, butterfly, sportiveness, living in pleasure; camel, submission, cat, deceit; calf, lumpishness, cowardice; cicada, poetry; cock, vigilance, overbearing insolence; crow, longevity; crocodile, hypocrisy; cuckoo, cuckoldom, dog, fidelity, dirty habits; dove, innocence, harmlessness; duck, deceit (French, canard, a hoax); eagle, majesty, inspiration; elephant, sagacity, ponderosity. fly, feebleness, insignificance; fox, cunning, artifice, frog and toad, inspiration, goat, lasciviousness goose, conceit, folly; grasshopper, old age; gull, gullibility; hare, timidity; hawk, rapacity, penetration; hen, maternal care; hog, impurity; horse, speed, grace; jackdaw, vain assumption, empty conceit; jay, senseless chatter; kitten, playfulness, lamb, innocence, sacrifice, lark, cheerfulness, leopard, sin; lion, noble courage; lynx, suspicious vigilance; magpie, garrulity; mole, blindness, obtuseness; monkey, tricks, mule, obstinacy; nightingale, forlornness; ostrich, stupidity; ox, patience, strength, and pride; owl, wisdom, parrot, mocking verbosity; peacock, pride; pigeon, cowardice (pigeon-livered); pig, obstinacy, dirtyness; puppy, empty-headed conceit, rabbit, fecundity; raven, ill luck; robin redbreast, confiding trust; serpent, wisdom; sheep, silliness, timidity; sparrow, lasciviousness; spider, wiliness; stag, cuckoldom; swallow, a sunshine friend; swan, grace, swine, filthiness, greed; tiger, ferocity; tortoise, chastity; turkey-cock, official insolence; turtle-dove, conjugal fidelity; vulture, rapine; wolf, cruelty, savage ferocity, and rapine, worm, cringing; etc.

Animal Kingdom, The. See BARRY, PHILIP.

Anitra. An Oriental enchantress in Ibsen's PEER GYNT.

Anker Larsen, Johannes (1874-). Danish novelist. His The Philosopher's Stone (English translation, 1924) won the Gylden-dal prize of 70,000 Kroner.

ankh. A tau cross with a loop on top, symbolizing life; a sacred emblem also called crux ansata.

Ann, Mother. Ann Lee (1736-1784) the founder and "spiritual mother" of the SHAKERS.

Annabel Lee. A poem by Edgar Allan Poe (1849).

Anna Christie. A drama by Eugene O'Neill (1922). Anna Christie is the daughter of Chris Christopherson, a Swedish bosun who has come to regard all evil and misfortune as the work of "dat ol' devil sea." He had sent her away to be brought up in Minnesota, but in the play she turns up in port and falls in love both with the sea and with a brawny Irish seaman named Mat Burke. When she confesses to a shameful past in St. Paul, both her father and lover repudiate her. In the end, however, she is forgiven by them both. Anna Christie was awarded the Pulitzer prize in 1922.

Anna Comnena (1083-?1148). Daughter of the Byzantine emperor ALEXIUS COMNENUS, who wrote a history of her father's career entitled the Alexiad.

Anna Karénina. A novel by Tolstoi (1873-1876). The heroine, Anna Karénina, is a young and beautiful woman of noble birth and sensitive, passionate nature. Her husband, Alexis Karenin, who is much older, she finds vain and tiresome. The novel deals with the mutual love of Anna and Count Vronski, an ardent, talented young officer; with her struggle and surrender and its desperate, tragic outcome. Anna at last commits suicide as the only way out of her despair.

Anna Livia Plurabelle. In James Joyce's monumental novel FINNEGAN'S WAKE, the personification of the Irish river Liffey, which flows through Dublin, and in general symbolic of the feminine principle in the universe, as Humphrey Chimpden EARWICKER generally represents the masculine principle. Anna Livia is frequently invoked throughout the book by her identifying initials, ALP.

Anna Matilda. An ultra-sentimental girl. Mrs. Hannah Cowley used this pen-name in her responses in the World to "Della Crusca." See DELLA CRUSCANS.

Anna of the Five Towns. A novel by Arnold Bennett (1902).

Annapolis. The United States naval academy at Annapolis, Md., where all regular officers of the American navy are trained.

Anne, Sister. In the old fairy tale, the sister of Fatima, the seventh and last wife of BLUEBEARD. Fatima, having disobeyed her lord by looking into the locked chamber, is allowed a sort of respite before execution. Sister Anne ascends the high tower of the castle, with the hope of seeing her brothers, who are expected to arrive every month. Fatima, in her agony, keeps asking "Sister Anne" if she sees them, and Bluebeard keeps crying out for Fatima to use greater dispatch. As the patience of both is well-nigh exhausted, the brothers come, and Fatima is rescued from death.

Anne of Cleves (1515-1557). Fourth wife of Henry VIII of England. The marriage was declared null and void at his request, but she was pensioned and not beheaded as was his wont with other wives.

Anne of Geierstein. A novel by Sir Walter Scott (1829), based on the conquest of Charles the Bad, Duke of Burgundy, by the Swiss in the 14th century.

Anne of Green Gables. A widely read book for girls by L. M. Montgomery.

Annie, Little Orphant, see LITTLE ORPHANT ANNIE.

Annie Kilburn. A novel by W. D. Howells (1888). After eleven years in Italy, Annie Kilburn returns to New England open to modern ideas and desirous of doing good with her wealth. The hero of the book is Rev. Mr. Peck, a young clergyman afire with social service ideals and extremely impatient of the old-fashioned snobbish charity carried on by the local "Social Union."

Annie Laurie was eldest of the three daughters of Sir Robert Laurie, of Maxwellton William Douglas, of Fingland (Kirkcudbright), wrote the popular song, but Annie married, in 1709, James Fergusson, of Craigdarroch, and was the grandmother of Alexander Fergusson, the hero of Burns' song called The Whistle.

Annie Oakley. See under OAKLEY, ANNIE.

anno Domini (Lat.). In the Year of our Lord; i.e., in the year since the Nativity: generally abbreviated to "A.D." It was Dionysius Exiguus who fixed the date of the Nativity; he lived in the early 6th century, and his computation is probably late by some three to six years. The custom of determining dates on this basis is said to be the result of the work of the VENERABLE BEDE.

Annual Register, The. A summary of the chief historic events of the year, first published by John Dodsley in 1758. It is still issued annually in England.

Annunciation, The Day of the. The 25th of March, also called Lady Day, on which the angel announced to the Virgin Mary that she would be the mother of the Messiah.

ORDER OF THE ANNUNCIATION. An Italian order of military knights, founded as the Order of the Collar by Amadeus VI of Savoy in 1362, and dating under its present name from 1518.

Annunzio, Gabriele D', see D'ANNUNZIO, GABRIELE.

annus mirabilis. The year of wonders, 1666, memorable for the great fire of London and the English successes over the Dutch.

Dryden wrote a poem with this title, in which he described both these events.

Ann Veronica. A novel by H. G. WELLS (1909), dealing with the struggle for independence made by a girl of the middle class.

Another Time. See under AUDEN, WYSTAN HUGH.

ansate cross. The crux ansata. See ANKH.

Anschaung (Ger.). Intuitive apprehension. Weltanschauung, literally, "world view." A philosophical apprehension of the universe.

Anschluss (Ger.). Union. Specifically, the proposed political and economic attachment between the Austrian republic and the German Reich after World War I.

Anselm, St. (1033-1109). Theologian.

Anselme. In Molière's L'Avare, an old man who wishes to marry the daughter of HARPAGON.

Anselmo. Hero of an episode called FATAL CURIOSITY told in Cervantes' Don Quixote.

Anstey, F. Pseudonym of Thomas Anstey GUTHRIE (1856-1934).

Antaeus. In Greek mythology, a gigantic wrestler (son of Earth and Sea, Ge and Poseidon), whose strength was invincible as long as he touched the earth; and when he was lifted from it, it was renewed by touching it again. It was Hercules who succeeded in killing this charmed giant by lifting him up from the earth and squeezing him to death.

Antelope State. Nebraska. See under STATES.

Antenor. In Homer's Iliad, a Trojan who advises that Helen return to Menelaus. He appears also in Chaucer's Troilus and Criseyde and in Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

Anteros. In classic mythology, the brother of Eros, the avenger of unreturned love; or according to some authorities the opponent of Eros.

Antheil, George (1900-). Modern American concert pianist and composer, famous for his Ballet-Mécanique (1925). Has written an autobiography, Bad Boy of Music.

Anthony, Captain Roderick. Hero of Conrad's novel, CHANCE.

Anthony, John. Head of the Trenartha Tin Plate Works and the chief representative of capital in Galsworthy's drama STRIFE. His son Edgar Anthony also plays a prominent part.

Anthony, Katharine Susan (1877-). Descendant of Susan B. ANTHONY. American biographer. Author of Margaret Fuller (1920); Catherine the Great (1925); Queen Elizabeth (1929); Marie Antoinette (1932); Louisa May Alcott (1937); etc.

Anthony, St. See under SAINTS.

Anthony, Susan Brownell (1820-1906). Famous American leader in the cause of woman suffrage. She also participated in the Abolitionist and Temperance movements.

Anthony Adverse. Best-selling historical novel of the Napoleonic period, written by Hervey ALLEN and published in 1933.

Antic Hay. See HUXLEY, ALDOUS.

antichrist. The many legends connected with Antichrist, or the Man of Sin, expected by some to precede the second coming of Christ, that were so popular in the Middle Ages are chiefly founded on 2 Thess. ii. 1-12, and Rev. xiii. In ancient times Antichrist was identified with Caligula, Nero, etc., and there is little doubt that in 2 Thess. ii. 7, St. Paul was referring to the Roman Empire. Mahomet was also called Antichrist, and the name has been given to many disturbers of the world's peace. It has been applied, often as a figure of speech but often also in sincere conviction, to Napoleon, William II of Germany, Stalin, and Hitler. The Mohammedans have a legend that Christ will slay the Antichrist at the gate of the church at Lydda, in Palestine.

anticlimax. An event or statement which instead of being more important than the series leading up to it, is of decidedly less importance, as, for instance, the judge's charge to the jury in a larceny case, "For forty centuries the thunders of Sinai have echoed through the world 'Thou shalt not steal.' It is also a principle of the common law and a rule of equity." Anticlimax is frequently made use of to good effect in humorous writing but is considered very weakening in serious work.

Antigone. In classic legend, daughter of Oedipus by his mother Jocasta, famed for her heroic attachment to her father and brothers. When Oedipus had blinded himself, and was obliged to quit Thebes, Antigone accompanied him, and remained with him till his death, after which she returned to Thebes. Creon, the king, had forbidden any one to bury Polynices, her brother, who had been slain by his elder brother in battle (see Seven Against Thebes under THEBES); but Antigone, in defiance of this prohibition, buried the dead body. Creon shut her up in a vault under ground, where, according to the usual version, she killed herself. Haeman, her lover, killed himself also by her side. She is the heroine of Sophocles' drama Antigone and of Euripides' Phoenissae.

The modern Antigone. Marie Therese Charlotte, duchesse d'Angoulême, the sister of Louis XVII.

Antigonus. In Shakespeare's Winter's Tale, a Sicilian lord, commanded by King Leontes to take his infant daughter to a desert shore and leave her to perish.

Antilochus. In Greek legend, the son of Nestor and friend of ACHILLES. He was chosen to break to Achilles the news of Patroclus' death. Antilochus himself was killed by Memnon, the son of Aurora and Tithonus. The three friends, Antilochus, Achilles, and Patroclus were buried in the same mound. Ulysses saw them walking together in the underworld.

antimacassar. A tidy for use on the back of chairs, sofas, etc. Macassar oil used to be a favorite hair oil.

Antinous. A model of manly beauty. He was the page of Hadrian, the Roman emperor. Also one of PENELOPE's suitors.

Antiope. (1) In classic myth, Queen of Thebes and mother of AMPHION. See THESEUS.

(2) In Fénelon's TÉLÉMAQUE, an accomplished maiden loved by Télémaque.

Antipholus. In Shakespeare's COMEDY OF ERRORS, the name of two brothers, twins, the sons of Aegeon, a merchant of Syracuse.

antipope. A pope chosen or nominated by temporal authority in opposition to one canonically elected by the cardinals; or one who usurps the popedom: the term is particularly applied (by the opposite party) to those popes who resided at Avignon during the Great Schism of the West, 1309-1376.

Antiquary, The. A novel by Sir Walter Scott (1816), the story of the love and eventual marriage of William Lovel and the daughter of Sir Arthur Wardour, in the period of George III.

Anti-Saloon League. A temperance organization, founded in 1893, active in the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment to the American Constitution (1919, repealed in 1933) which prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquor. See also PROHIBITION.

anti-Semitism. A movement of agitation against and persecution of the Jewish people.

antithesis. A placing of things in opposition to heighten their effect by contrast, as "I will talk of things heavenly or things earthly; things moral or things evangelical, things sacred or things profane, things past or things to come, things foreign or things at home, things more essential or things circumstantial, provided that all be done to our profit (Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress)."

Antoinette, Marie, see MARIE ANTOINETTE.

Antoinette de Langeais, see LANGEAIS, Antoinette de.

Antonia. Heroine of Willa Cather's novel MY ÁNTONIA.

Antonio. (1) The "MERCHANT OF VENICE" in Shakespeare's drama so called.

(2) The usurping Duke of Milan, brother of Prospero, the rightful heir, in Shakespeare's TEMPEST.

(3) Father of Proteus and suitor of Julia in Shakespeare's TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

(4) An old fisherman in Cooper's novel, The Bravo.

(5) The monk killed by Donatello in Hawthorne's MARBLE FAUN.

Antony. Titular hero of a tragedy by Dumas (1831). This proud and sensitive misanthrope wins Adele away from her husband Colonel d'Hervey but with disastrous results.

Antony, Mark (83-31 B.C.). A Roman who came into power after the assassination of Julius Caesar, through his successful efforts to defeat the conspirators responsible for Caesar's death. He is one of the chief characters of Shakespeare's JULIUS CAESAR and hero of Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra (1608) and Dryden's All for Love or the World Well Lost (1678).

The first-mentioned play portrays his skillfully organized opposition to the conspirators, Brutus and Cassius, launched by the famous oration over Caesar's dead body and ending in victory at Philippi. The other plays deal with his love for Cleopatra, queen of Egypt, and consequent neglect of his duties as one of the triumvirate ruling the vast Roman empire. He is recalled to Rome and induced to marry Octavia, the sister of Octavius Caesar, but when he returns to Egypt he falls again under Cleopatra's spell, and Caesar proclaims war against him. Upon his defeat at the battle of Actium, he falls on his own sword and Cleopatra kills herself with the poisonous bite of an asp. For names of other dramas see CLEOPATRA.

Anubis. In Egyptian mythology, a deity similar to the Hermes of Greece, whose office it was to take the souls of the dead before the judge of the infernal regions. Anubis was the son of Osiris the judge, and is represented with a human body and jackal's head.

Anville, Evelina. Heroine of Fanny Burney's novel EVELINA.

anxious bench. At Methodist and other religious revivals in America the anxious benches used to be set aside for those members of the congregation who had repented of their previous life and desired to be admitted to the Church. Hence on the anxious bench, in a state of great difficulty or depression.

Anzac. Originally, a member of the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps engaged, during World War I, in the fighting at Gallipoli. The word was formed from the initials of the corps name. Loosely, any Australian or New Zealand soldier serving abroad or even a civilian from those parts of the British empire.

Aonian. Pertaining to Aonia, the region of Mts. Helicon and Cithaeron, in Ancient Boeotia. The Muses were supposed to live there.

Aonian fount. The fountain of Aganippe at the foot of Mt. Helicon.

Aouda. In Verne's romance, AROUND THE WORLD IN EIGHTY DAYS, the Hindu widow rescued from SUTTEE.

Apache. The name of a tribe of North American Indians, given to—or adopted by—the hooligans and roughs of Paris about the opening of the last century.

ape. lead apes in Hell. Said of old maids, from the medieval legend that women married neither to God nor to man will be given to apes in the next world.

play the sedulous ape. See SEDULOUS.

Apelles. Greek painter of the 4th century B.C. Regarded as the greatest painter of antiquity.

Apemantus. In the drama Timon of Athens, attributed to Shakespeare, a churlish Athenian philosopher, who snarls at men systematically, but shows his cynicism to be mere affectation when Timon attacks him with his own weapons.

aphorism. A concise definition, a pithy, compendious sentence, a maxim.

Aphrodite (Gr. aphros, foam). The Greek VENUS; so called because she sprang from the foam of the sea.

Aphrodite's girdle. The cestus. Whoever wore it immediately became the object of love.

Apicius. An epicure in the time of Tiberius. He wrote a book on the ways of provoking an appetite. Having spent a fortune in supplying the delicacies of the table, and having only ten million sesterces (about $400,000) left, he hanged himself, not thinking it possible to exist on such a wretched pittance. Apicia, however, became a stock name for certain cakes and sauces, and his name is still proverbial in all matters of gastronomy.

Apis. In Egyptian mythology, the bull of Memphis, sacred to Osiris of whose soul it was supposed to be the image. The sacred bull had to have natural spots on the forehead forming a triangle, and a half-moon on the breast. It was not suffered to live more than twenty-five years, after which it was sacrificed and buried with great pomp. Cambyzes, king of Persia (529–522 B.C.), and conqueror of Egypt, slew the sacred bull of Memphis with his own hands, and is said to have become mad in consequence.

Apley, George. A pompous, convention-bound Bostonian, hero of THE LATE GEORGE APLEY, by J. P. MARQUAND.

Apocalypse. The Revelation which constitutes the last book of the New Testament; any revelation. See also LAWRENCE, D. H. and THE FOUR HORSEMEN OF THE APOCALYPSE.

apocalyptic number. The mystic number 666 (Rev. xiii. 18.). See THE BEAST.

Apocrypha (Gr. apokrupto, hidden; hence, of unknown authorship). Those books included in the Septuagint and Vulgate versions of the Old Testament, but which, at the Reformation, were excluded from the Sacred Canon by the Protestants, mainly on the grounds that they were not originally written in Hebrew and were not looked upon as genuine by the Jews. They are not printed in Protestant Bibles in ordinary circulation, but in the Authorized Version, as printed in 1611, they are given immediately after the Old Testament. The books are as follows:

1 and 2 Esdras
Tobit
Judith
The rest of Esther Wisdom
Ecclesiasticus
Baruch, with the Epistle of Jeremiah
The Song of the Three Children
The Story of Susanna
The Idol Bel and the Dragon
1 and 2 Maccabees

The New Testament also has a large number of apocryphal books more or less attached to it. These consist of later gospels and epistles, apocalypses, etc., as well as such recently discovered fragments as the Logia (sayings of Jesus) of the Oxyrhynchus papyrus. The best known books of the New Testament apocrypha are:

Protevangelium, or the Book of James Gospel of Nicodemus, or the Acts of Pilate
The Ascents of James
The Acts of Paul and Thecla
Letters of Abgarus to Christ
Epistles of Paul to the Laodiceans, and to the Alexandrines, and the Third Epistle to the Corinthians
The Teaching of the Apostles (Didaché)
The three Books of the Shepherd of Hermas

Apollinaire, Guillaume. Pseudonym of Wilhelm Kostrowitzki (1880–1918). French poet, short story writer, and art critic, of Polish origin. A colorful personality, he was among the leaders of avant-garde movements in the painting and literature of the early 20th century. His writing was marked by mystery and eroticism, his last works anticipating many of the elements of SURREALISM. His best-known works are Le Bestiaire ou le cortège d'Orphée (1911); Alcools (1913); Le poète assassiné (1916), translated into English as The Poet Assassinated (1923); Les Mamelles de Tirésias (1917), described as a "super-realist" drama; and Calligrammes (1918).

Apollo. In Greek and Roman mythology, son of Zeus and Leto (Latona), one of the great gods of Olympus, typifying the sun in its light- and life-giving as well as in its destroying power; often identified with Helios, the sun-god. He was god of music, poetry and the healing art, the latter of which he bestowed on his son, Aesculapius. He is represented in art as the perfection of youthful manhood.

a perfect Apollo. A model of manly beauty, referring to the Apollo Belvedere.

Apollo of Portugal. Luis Camoëns (c. 1524-1580), author of the Lusiad

Apollo Belvedere. An ancient marble statue, supposed to be a Roman-Greek copy of a bronze votive statue set up at Delphi in commemoration of the repulsion of an attack by the Gauls on the shrine of Apollo in 279 B. C.

Apollonius of Tyana. Greek philosopher of the 1st century A. D. Traveled in India. Regarded as a magician and miracle worker by his contemporaries.

Apollyon. The Greek name of ABADDON, king of hell and angel of the bottomless pit. (Rev. ix. 11). His introduction by Bunyan into PILGRIM'S PROGRESS has made his name familiar.

Apologia pro Vita Sua. A famous autobiographical treatise in which the English Cardinal John Henry NEWMAN defends his conversion from the Anglican to the Roman Catholic Church.

Apology for Poetry, An. Essay written by Sir Philip SIDNEY in 1580 in answer to an attack on poetry by Stephen Gosson in The School for Abuse. In it, Sidney maintains that the purpose of poetry is to teach under the guise of entertainment.

Apophis. In Egyptian mythology, the power of darkness in the form of a serpent against whom the sun, as Ra, waged daily war.

aposiopesis. An abrupt breaking off in the middle of a sentence for effect, as, for example, "And if it bear fruit—but if not, cut it down." The best-known instance in literature is probably Virgil's Quos ego.

a posteriori (Lat. from the latter). An a posteriori argument is proving the cause from the effect. Thus, if we see a watch we conclude there was a watchmaker. Robinson Crusoe inferred there was another human being on the desert island, because he saw a human footprint in the wet sand. It is thus the existence and character of Deity is inferred from His works. See also A PRIORI.

apostles (Literally, one sent forth). A name used with reference to the original twelve disciples of Jesus, sometimes with the addition of Matthias and Paul; also used in a general sense for the missionaries of the early church whose deeds are related in The Acts of the Apostles.

The badges or symbols of the fourteen apostles:

Andrew, a cross, because he was crucified on a cross shaped like the letter x

Bartholomew, a knife, because he was flayed with a knife

James the Greater, a scallop-shell, a pilgrim's staff, or a gourd bottle, because he is the patron saint of pilgrims.

James the Less, a fuller's pole, because he was killed by a blow on the head with a pole, dealt him by Simeon the fuller

John, a cup with a winged serpent flying out of it, in allusion to the tradition about Aristodemus, priest of Diana, who challenged John to drink a cup of poison. John made the sign of a cross on the cup, Satan like a dragon flew from it, and John then drank the cup, which was quite innocuous.

Judas Iscariot, a bag, because he had the bag and "bare what was put therein." (John xii 6).

Jude, a club, because he was martyred with a club

Matthew, a hatchet or halbert, because he was slain at Nadabar with a halbert.

Matthias, a battle-axe, because he was first stoned, and then beheaded with a battle-axe.

Paul, a sword, because his head was cut off with a sword. The convent of La Lisle, in Spain, boasts of possessing the very instrument

Peter, a bunch of keys, because Christ gave him the "keys of the kingdom of heaven." A cock, because he went out and wept bitterly when he heard the cock crow. (Matt. xxvi. 75.)

Philip, a long staff surmounted with a cross, because he suffered death by being suspended by the neck to a tall pillar.

Simon, a saw, because he was sawn to death, according to tradition.

Thomas, a lance, because he was pierced through the body, at Meliapour, with a lance.

Apostles of Abyssinians. St. Frumentius. (4th century.)

Alps. Felix Neff. (1798-1829)

Andalusia. Juan de Avila. (1500-1569.)

Aidenfes. St. Hubert. (656-727.)

Armenians. Gregory of Armenia, "The Illuminator." (256-331.)

Brazil. José de Anchieta, a Jesuit missionary. (1533-1597.)

English. St. Augustine. (Died 604.) St. George.

Ethiopia. See Abyssinians.

Free Trade. Richard Cobden. (1804-1865.)

French. St. Denis. (3rd century.)

Frisians. St. Willibrord. (657-738)

Gauls. St. Irenaeus (130-200); St. Martin of Tours (338-401).

Gentiles. St. Paul.

Germany. St. Boniface. (680-755)

Highlanders. St. Columba. (521-597.)

Hungary. St. Anastatus. (954-1044.)

Indians (American). Bartolomé de Las Casas (1474-1566); John Ehot (1604-1690).

Indies (East). St. Francis Xavier. (1506-1552.)

Infidelity. Voltaire. (1694-1778.)

Ireland. St. Patrick. (373-463.)

Iroquois. François Piquet (1708-1781).

Liberty. Henry Clay

North. St. Ansgar or Anscarius (801-864); Bernard Gilpin. (1517-1583.)

Peak, The. William Bagshaw. (1628-1702.)

Peru. Alonzo de Barcena. (1528-1598)

Picts. St. Ninian. (5th century.)

Scottish Reformers. John Knox. (1505-1572.)

Slavs. St. Cyril (c. 820-869.)

The Sword. Mahomet. (570-632.)

Temperance. Father Mathew. (1790-1856.)

Apostolic Fathers. Christian authors born in the 1st century, when the apostles lived. John is supposed to have died about 99 A. D., and Polycarp, the last of the Apostolic Fathers, born about 69, was his disciple. The Five Apostolic Fathers most referred to are Clement of Rome, Barnabas, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp apostolic succession. Theological doctrine enunciated by Irenaeus (fl. 190), maintaining that since the bishops of the church were direct spiritual descendants of Christ through the Apostles, authority on questions of orthodoxy should reside with them.

apostrophe. A figure of speech in which something absent is addressed in the second person as if present; for example, "O death, where is thy sting?" "Milton, thou shouldst be living at this hour," "But come, thou Goddess fair and free."

Appian Way (Lat. Via Appia). The oldest and best of all the Roman roads, leading from Rome to Brundisium (Brindisi) by way of Capua. This "queen of roads" was commenced by Appius Claudius, the decemvir, 313 B. C.

Appius Claudius. A Roman decemvir (ruled 451-449 B. C.) whose passion for Virginia, a beautiful plebeian girl whom he managed by a mock trial to make his slave, caused her father to kill her in the forum. For the use made of this famous legend in drama, see VIRGINIA.

apple.

Newton and the apple. The well-known story is that the great scientist Newton, seeing an apple fall, was led into the train of thought which resulted in his establishment of the law of gravitation (1685).

When Newton saw an apple fall, he found,
In that slight startle from his contemplation, . . .
A mode of proving that the earth turned round,
In a most natural whirl called gravitation.

Byron. Don Juan, x. 1.

apple of discord. A cause of dispute; something to contend about. At the marriage of Thetis and Peleus where all the gods and goddesses met together, Discord (Eris), who had not been invited, threw on the table a golden apple "for the most beautiful." Juno, Minerva, and Venus put in their separate claims; the point was referred to Paris, who gave judgment in favor of Venus. This brought upon him the vengeance of Juno and Minerva, to whose spite the fall of Troy is attributed.

The "apple" appears more than once in Greek story; see ATALANTA'S RACE; HESPERIDES.

Of course, the story of Eve and the apple will be familiar to every reader, but it is a mistake to suppose that the apple is mentioned in the Bible story. We have no further particulars than that it was "the fruit of that forbidden tree," and the Mohammedans leave the matter equally vague, though their commentators hazard the guess that it may have been an ear of wheat, or the fruit of the vine or the fig. The apple is a comparatively late conjecture.

For the story of William Tell and the apple, see TELL.

Prince Ahmed's apple or the apple of Samarkand. In the Arabian Nights story of Prince Ahmed, a cure for every disorder. The prince purchased it at Samarkand.

apples of Istakhar are "all sweetness on one side, and all bitterness on the other."

apples of Paradise, according to tradition, had a bite on one side, to commemorate the bite given by Eve.

apples of perpetual youth. In Scandinavian mythology, the golden apples of perpetual youth, in the keeping of Idhunn, daughter of the dwarf Svald and wife of Bragi. It is by tasting them that the gods preserve their youth.

apples of Pyban, says Sir John Mandeville, fed the pigmies with their odor only.

apples of Sodom. Thevenot says—"There are apple-trees on the sides of the Dead Sea which bear lovely fruit, but within are full of ashes." Josephus, Strabo, Tacitus, and others speak of these apples, and are probably referring to the gall-nuts produced by the insect Cynips insana. The phrase is used figuratively for anything disappointing.

apple of the eye. The pupil, because it was anciently supposed to be a round solid ball like an apple. Figuratively applied to anything extremely dear or extremely sensitive.

apple-pie order. Prim and precise order.

The origin of this phrase is still doubtful. Some suggest cap-à-pie, like a knight in complete armor. Some tell us that apples made into a pie are quartered and methodically arranged when the cores have been taken out. Perhaps the suggestion of nap-pe-pli (Fr. nappes pliées, folded linen, neat as folded linen) is nearer the mark. It has also been suggested that it may be a corruption of alpha, beta, meaning as orderly as the letters of the alphabet; and another guess is that it is connected with the old alphabet rhyme, "A was an apple pie," etc., the letters of the alphabet being there all "in apple-pie order."

Appreciations. See PATER, WALTER.

Après-midi d'un faune, L'. The Afternoon of a Faun, a poem by the French poet Stéphane MALLARMÉ, published in 1876. It presents the wandering thoughts of a faun on a drowsy summer afternoon. Claude DEBUSSY, the French Impressionist composer, set it to music in a tone poem of the same title (1891), and it became one of the most popular ballets in the repertoire of the Russian Ballet when introduced in 1912 by the famous dancer Nijinsky. It is best known in its musical and choreographic form.

Aprile. In BROWNING'S PARACELSUS, the Italian poet who exalts love as Paracelsus exalts knowledge.

April Fools' Day. April 1st, when practical jokes are in order. An April Fool is called in France un poisson d'Avril, and in Scotland a gowk (cuckoo). In Hindustan similar tricks are played at the Huli Festival (March 31st); so that it probably does not refer to the uncertainty of the weather, nor yet to the mockery trial of our Redeemer, the two most popular explanations. A better solution is this: As March 25th used to be New Year's Day, April 1st was its octave, when its festivities culminated and ended.

It may be a relic of the Roman "Cerealia," held at the beginning of April. The tale is that Proserpina was sporting in the Elysian meadows, and had just filled her lap with daffodils, when Pluto carried her off to the lower world. Her mother, Ceres, heard the echo of her screams, and went in search of "the voice"; but her search was a fool's errand.

a priori (Lat. from an antecedent). An a priori argument is one in which a fact is deduced from something antecedent, as when we infer certain effects from given causes. All mathematical proofs are of the a priori kind, whereas judgments in the law courts are usually a posteriori; we infer the animus from the act.

apron strings. Tied to the apron-strings. Under the influence of a wife, mother or other female relative.

Apuleius (born ca. 114 A.D.). Author of THE GOLDEN ASS.

aqua (Lat. water).

aqua tofana. See TOFANA.

aqua vitae (Lat. water of life). Brandy; any spirituous liquor; also, formerly, certain ardent spirits used by the alchemists.

aquaregia (Lat. royal water). A mixture of one part of nitric acid, with from two to four of hydrochloric acid; so called because it dissolves gold, the king of metals.

Aquarius (Lat. the water-bearer). The eleventh of the twelve zodiacal constellations, representing the figure of a man with his left hand raised and with his right pouring from a ewer a stream of water. It is the eleventh division of the ecliptic, which the sun enters on January 21st, and which does not now coincide with the constellation.

Aquilina. A courtesan who appears in several of the novels of Balzac's COMÉDIE HUMAINE, notably The Wild Ass's Skin (La Peau de chagrin).

Aquinas, St. Thomas. See under SAINTS.

Arabella. The first wife of Jude in Hardy's JUDE THE OBSCURE.

Arabia. It was Ptolemy who was the author of the threefold division into Arabia Petraea, "Stony Arabia"; Arabia Felix (Yemen), "Fertile Arabia," i.e. the south-west coast; and Arabia Deserta, "Desert Arabia." Arabia Deserta is the name of a famous book of travel by the explorer, C. M. DOUGHTY.

Arabian Nights' Entertainments, The. A collection of ancient Oriental tales, first collected in its present form about 1450, probably in Cairo. The first European translation was the French one by Antoine Galland (12 vols., 1704-1708), which is a free rendering of the oldest known MS. (1548). There are English translations founded on this by R. Heron (4 vols., 1792), W. Beloe (4 vols., 1795), and others. In 1840 E. W. Lane published an entirely new translation (3 vols.), made from the latest Arabic edition (Cairo, 1835); John Payne's translation appeared in 4 vols., 1882-1884, and Sir Richard Burton's monumental version was issued to subscribers only, by the Kamashastra Society of Benares in 10 vols., 1885-1886, followed by 6 vols. of Supplemental Nights in 1886-1888. The standard French translation is that by J. C. Mardrus, 16 vols., 1899-1904. For the stories of the Arabian Nights, see Ali Baba, Aladdin, etc.

Robert Louis Stevenson called a volume of tales The New Arabian Nights.

Arachne. Pronounce A-ra-k'ny. A spider; metaphorically, a weaver. Arachne's labors. Spinning and weaving. Arachne was a Lydian maiden, who challenged Minerva to compete with her in needle tapestry, and Minerva metamorphosed her into a spider. Hence arachnida, the scientific name for spiders, scorpions, and mites.

Araf or 'Al Araf (Arab. the partition, from 'arafa, to divide). A region, according to the Koran, between Paradise and Jahannam (hell), for those who are neither morally good nor bad, such as infants, lunatics, and idiots. Others regard it as a kind of "LIMBO" where those whose good and evil deeds were about equally balanced can await their ultimate admission to heaven. Edgar Allan Poe has a poem entitled Al Aaraaf (1829).

Arafat, Mount. A hill southeast of Mecca where, according to Mohammedan tradition, Adam met Eve after a punitive separation of two hundred years. He was conducted to its summits by Gabriel.

Aragon, Louis (1897-). French novelist. He was associated with the Dadaist and Surrealist movements in their early days of experiment (see Dadaism, Surrealism), but after 1930 turned to the novel of the 19th-century French tradition, in which a whole society is portrayed in a series of individual, self-contained panels. His novels are Anicet (1921); Les Aventures de Télémaque (1923); Les Cloches de Basle (translated as The Bells of Basle) (1934); Les Beaux quartiers (translated as Residential Quarter) (1937); Les Voyageurs de l'Impériale (translated as The Century Was Young) (1941). The last three belong to a series with the general title of The Real World. In 1945 an anthology of Aragon's poems appeared as Aragon, Poet of the French Resistance. It is a monument to "the magnificent resurgence of the free spirit" in France.

Aram, Eugene (1704-1757). English school master and murderer. Subject of a romance by Bulwer-Lytton and a ballad by Thomas Hood.

Araminta. Chief woman character in Congreve's Old Bachelor.

Aramis. One of the famous trio in Dumas' THREE MUSKETEERS and a prominent character in its sequels, Twenty Years After and The Vicomte de Bragelonne.

Arbaces. The villainous high priest of Isis in Bulwer-Lytton's historical novel, THE LAST DAYS OF POMPEII.

Arbela, Battle of. See fifteen decisive BATTLES.

Arber, Edward (1836-1912). Englishman of letters. Editor of English Reprints, accurate texts of rare editions made accessible.

Arblay, Madame d', see FANNY BURNBY.

Arbor Day. A day set apart in Canada and the United States for planting trees. It was first inaugurated about 1885 in Nebraska.

Arbor of Amorous Devices, The. An anthology of Elizabethan lyric poetry, published in 1597, one of the many such published in England after the success of TOTTIEL'S MISCELLANY.

Arbuckle, Roscoe C. A popular comedian in the early days of the motion picture, known to the public as "Fatty" Arbuckle.

Arbuthnot, Mrs. The titular heroine of Oscar Wilde's WOMAN OF NO IMPORTANCE. Her son Gerald is an important character.

Arbuthnot, John (1667-1735). Scottish physician and writer. Author of witty political pamphlets, one of which, The History of John Bull, a satire against the Duke of Marlborough, fixed the modern conception of John Bull as the typical Englishman. He was a close friend of SWIFT.

Arbuton, Miles. In W. D. Howells' novel, A Chance Acquaintance (1873), a handsome and traveled Boston aristocrat who meets and falls in love with the delightful Kitty Ellison on a steamboat.

Arc, Joan of, see JOAN OF ARC.

Arcades ambo. Both fools alike; both "sweet innocents"; both alike eccentric. There is nothing in the character of Corydon and Thyrsis (Virgil's Eclogue, vii.4) to justify this disparaging application of the phrase; but as Arcadia was the least intellectual part of Greece, an Arcadian came to signify dunce, and hence Arcades ambo received its present acceptance.

Arcadia. A district of the Peloponnesus which, according to Virgil, was the home of pastoral simplicity and happiness. The Arcadians were, however, considered the least intellectual of all the Greeks; hence Arcadian came to have a derogatory meaning (see Arcades Ambo).

The name Arcadia was taken by Sir Philip Sidney as the title of his famous pastoral romance (1590) and was soon generally adopted in English with much the old Virgilian significance. The famous painting Shepherds in Arcadia by Nicholas Poussin shows a group standing about a shepherd's tomb on which are the now-familiar words "Et in Arcadia ego (I, too, have dwelt in Arcadia)."

archaism. The use of obsolete words or syntax for deliberate effect. The poet Spenser, for example, chose to write his Faërie Queene in an archaic style.

archangel. In Christian legend, the title is usually given to Michael, the chief opponent of Satan and his angels and the champion of the Church of Christ on earth. In the medieval hierarchy (see ANGEL) the Archangels comprise the second order of the third division.

According to the Koran, there are four archangels. Gabriel, the angel of revelations, who writes down the divine decrees; Michael, the champion, who fights the battles of faith; Azrael, the angel of death; and Israfil, who is commissioned to sound the trumpet of the resurrection.

Archbishop of Granada. In Le Sage's GIL BLAS, a church dignitary for whom the hero, Gil Blas, works as secretary.

Archer, Francis. The friend of Aimwell, one of the two fortune-hunting "beaux" of George Farquhar's comedy, THE BEAUX' STRATAGEM.

Archer, Isabel. Heroine of Henry James' novel, THE PORTRAIT OF A LADY.

Archer, Newland. Hero of Edith Wharton's AGE OF INNOCENCE.

Archibald or Archie. An anti-aircraft gun. The term came into use at the front during the World War, applied first to the German mobile anti-aircraft gun, later to any similar gun.

Archilochian bitterness. Ill-natured satire, so named from Archilochus, the Grecian satirist (714-676 B. C.).

Archimago. The enchanter in Spenser's Faërie Queene (Bks. I and II), typifying hypocrisy and false religion. He assumes the guise of the Red Cross Knight, and deceives Una; but Sansloy sets upon him, and reveals his true character. When the Red Cross Knight is about to be married to Una, Archimago presents himself before the king of Eden, and tells him that the Knight is betrothed to Duessa. The falsehood being exposed, he is cast into a vile dungeon (Bk. I). In Book II the arch-hypocrite is loosed again for a season, and employs Braggadocchio to attack the Red Cross Knight.

Archimedes (287?-212 B. C.). Greek mathematician and inventor. Discovered the principle that a body immersed in fluid loses in weight by an amount equal to the weight of the fluid displaced. Said to have shouted "Eureka!" ("I have found it!") upon this discovery.

Archipenko, Alexander Porifievich (1887-). Russian radical modernist sculptor. Attempted to attain pure, abstract sculpture.

Archpoet. The greatest of the GOLIARDIC poets, medieval authors of satiric and ribald verse in Latin. His Confession of Goliath is considered the most representative poem of the Goliards.

Archy the Cockroach. A humorous creation of the American newspaper columnist Don MARQUIS, appearing in book-form in archy and mehitabel (1927).

Arcite, see PALAMON AND ARCITE.

Arden, Enoch. Hero of Tennyson's poem, ENOCH ARDEN.

Arden, Forest of. The scene of Shakespeare's As You Like It. Some authorities identify it with a forest of that name in Warwickshire, England, others with the French forest of Ardennes, and still others hold that it is a purely imaginary place. The characters of the play are French, but references to Robin Hood, etc. imply an English background.

à Rebours, see AGAINST THE GRAIN.

Areopagitica. Famous prose pamphlet by John MILTON, written in 1644 as an argument against restriction of freedom of the press.

Areopagus (Gr. "the hill of Mars, or Ares"). The seat of a famous tribunal in Athens; so called from the tradition that the first cause tried there was that of Mars or Ares, accused by Neptune of the death of his son Halirrhothius.

Ares. The god of war in Greek mythology, son of Zeus and Hera. In certain aspects he corresponds with the Roman MARS.

Arethusa. In Greek mythology, a wood nymph from Elis whom the river god Alpheus, madly in love with her, pursued until Diana changed her into a fountain. In this shape she fled through the lower parts of the earth where she saw Ceres' daughter Proserpine and could thus help Ceres in her search for Proserpine whom Pluto had carried away. This fable was used as the subject of a poem (1820) by SHELLEY.

Aretno, Pietro (1492-1557). Italian humanist and author, known for his licentious-ness and audacity and the position of prestige that he won through flattery and blackmail. He wrote sonnets, tragedies, comedies, and satires.

Argan. The principal character of Molière's comedy, Le Malade Imaginaire, a hypochondriac who plans to marry his daughter Angelique to a doctor in order to avoid the expense of apothecary's bills. During the play, he feigns death, and at the conclusion is himself made a mock doctor in a burlesque investiture ceremony in macaronic Latin.

Argantes. In Tasso's epic poem Jerusalem Delivered, one of the two bravest fighters in the infidel army. He is slain by Rinaldo.

Argo (Gr. argos, "swift"). The galley of Jason that went in search of the Golden Fleece. Hence, a ship sailing on any specially adventurous voyage, and figuratively.

Argonauts. The sailors of the ship Argo, who sailed from Greece to Colchis in quest of the Golden Fleece, which was hung on an oak and guarded by a sleepless dragon. After many strange adventures the crew reached Colchis, and the King promised to give Jason the fleece if he would yoke to a plough the two fire-breathing bulls, and sow the dragons' teeth left by Cadmus in Thebes. Jason, by the help of Medea, a sorceress, fulfilled these conditions, became master of the fleece, and, with Medea who had fallen in love with him, secretly quitted Colchis. The return voyage was as full of adventures as the outward one, but ultimately the ship arrived at Iolcus, and was dedicated to Neptune in Corinth. See also JASON.

Argus. (1) A fabulous creature which, according to Grecian fable, had one hundred eyes, and Juno set him to watch Io, of whom she was jealous. Mercury, however, charmed Argus to sleep and slew him; whereupon Juno changed him into a peacock with the eyes in the tail. Hence argus-eyed, jealously watchful.

(2) The name of Odysseus' dog who recognized his old master on his return home from his wanderings.

Argyle, John, Duke of. A historical personage (1678-1743) introduced in Scott's Rob Roy and The Heart of Midlothian. In the latter he introduces Jeanie Deans to Queen Caroline.

Ariadne. In Greek mythology, daughter of Minos, king of Crete. She gave Theseus a clew of thread to guide him out of the Cretan labyrinth. Theseus married his deliverer, but when he arrived at Naxos forsook her, and she hanged herself. Other versions state that she became the wife of Bacchus.

Ariane et Barbe Bleue. A drama by Maurice MAETERLINCK (1899) dealing with the old tale of Bluebeard and his wives. (See Bluebeard.) Ariane et Barbe Bleue was made into an opera with music by Paul Dukas (Fr. 1907).

Arians. The followers of Arius, a presbyter of the church of Alexandria, in the 4th century. He maintained (1) that the Father and Son are distinct beings; (2) that the Son, though divine, is not equal to the Father; (3) that the Son had a state of existence previous to His appearance on earth, but not from eternity; and (4) that the Messiah was not real man, but a divine being in a case of flesh. Their tenets varied from time to time and also among their different sections. The heresy was formally anathematized at the Council of Nicaea (325), but the sect was not, and never has been, wholly extinguished. See also ATHANASIUS.

Ariel. The name of a spirit. Used in cabalistic angelology, and in Heywood's Hierarchy of the Blessed Angels (1635) for one of the seven angelic "princes" who rule the waters; by Milton for one of the rebel angels (Paradise Lost, vi. 371); by Pope (Rape of the Lock) for a sylph, the guardian of Belinda; but especially by Shakespeare, in The Tempest, for "an ayrie spirit." He was enslaved to the witch Sycorax, who overtasked him, and in punishment for not doing what was beyond his power, shut him up in a pinnerift for twelve years. On the death of Sycorax, Ariel became the slave of Caliban, who tortured him most cruelly. Prospero liberated him from the pinnerift, and the grateful fairy served him for sixteen years, after which he was set free.

Shelley frequently referred to himself as Ariel and the name was adopted by his friends. André Maurois was the author of a life of Shelley, entitled Ariel (1925).

Aries. The Ram. The sign of the Zodiac in which the sun is from March 21st to April 20th; the first portion of the ecliptic, between 0° and 30° longitude.

Arimanes. See AHRIMAN.

Arimaspians. A race of one-eyed men in Scythia who fought the gryphons.

Arioch. In Paradise Lost (vi. 371) one of the fallen angels. The word means a fierce lion; Milton took it from Dan. ii. 14, where it is the name of a man.

Arion. A Greek poet and musician who flourished about 700 B. C., and who, according to legend, was cast into the sea by mariners, but carried to Taenaros on the back of a dolphin.

George Eliot has a poem called Arion (1874). See also under HORSE.

Ariosto (1474-1533). One of the greatest of Italian poets. His masterpiece is the epic Orlando Furioso (Orlando Mad) (1516), a continuation of Boiardo's Orlando Innamorato (1495), relating the adventures of Charlemagne's paladins in their wars against the Saracens. See ORLANDO.

Ariosto of the North. So Lord Byron calls Sir Walter Scott.

Aristaeus. In Greek mythology, protector of vines and olives, huntsmen and herdsmen. He instructed man also in the management of bees, taught him by his mother Cyrene.

Aristarchus. Any critic. Aristarchus of Samothrace (fl. 156 B. C.) was the greatest critic of antiquity. His labors were chiefly directed to the Iliad and Odyssey of Homer. He divided them into twenty-four books each, marked every doubtful line with an obelus, and every one he considered especially beautiful with an asterisk.

Ariste. In Molière's L'ÉCOLE DES MARIS, one of the two brothers who attempted to bring up two orphan wards as suitable wives for themselves. Unlike his brother SGANARILLE, Ariste gave his ward Léonor a large amount of liberty.

Aristeas. In Greek legend, a sort of "WANDERING JEW," a poet who continued to appear and disappear alternately for above 400 years, and who visited all the mythical nations of the earth. When not in the human form, he took the form of a stag.

Aristides. An Athenian statesman and general (530-468 B. C.), surnamed "The Just"; hence an impartial judge.

The British Aristides. Andrew Marvell, the poet and satirist (1621-1678).

The French Aristides. François Paul Jules Grévy, president of the Third Republic.

Aristippus. A Greek philosopher (fl. 375 B. C.), pupil of Socrates, and founder of the Cyrenaic school of hedonists; hence any advocate of self-indulgence and luxury. See HEDONISM.

Aristophanes. (ca. 450-380 B. C.). The greatest of the Greek comic dramatists noted for his satires of contemporary Greek life. His best-known comedies are the Clouds, Birds and Frogs.

The English or modern Aristophanes. Samuel Foote (1720-1777).

The French Aristophanes. Molière (1622-1673).

Aristotelian unities. See UNITIES.

Aristotle (384-322 B. C.). Greek philosopher, one of the greatest thinkers in history. His writings cover the whole field of philosophy and have had greater influence through the ages than perhaps any other comparable works. He helped systematize Greek thought, dignified logic from a game of the Sophists to a science, and gave a new orientation to philosophy through his interest in natural science, especially biology. In the Middle Ages he was known through the commentaries of Arabic scholars (see AVERROES), and his system was used in the formulation of Scholastic philosophy by the great medieval rationalist Thomas Aquinas (see ST. THOMAS AQUINAS). Aristotle's most famous works are his Ethics, Aesthetics, Politics, Metaphysics, and Poetics. Aristotle of China. Tehuhe, who died 1200 A. D., called the "Prince of Science."

Aristotle of Christianity. SAINT THOMAS AQUINAS (1224-1274), scholastic theologian and philosopher.

Aristotle of the nineteenth century. Baron Cuvier, the great naturalist (1769-1832).

Arius (died 336 A. D.). See ARIANS

Arjuna. One of the five Pandavas, a hero of the great Hindu epic, the MAHABHARATA.

Ark, Henry. A prominent character in Cooper's sea story, The Red Rover (1827).

Arkel. The king of Allemonde, grandfather of Pelléas in Maeterlinck's drama, PELLÉAS AND MÉLISANDE.

Arlen, Michael, originally Dikran Kuyumjian (1895-). British author of Armenian birth, known for a popular novel entitled THE GREEN HAT.

Arline. The heroine of Balfe's opera, THE BOHEMIAN GIRL.

Arlliss, George (1868-1946). English actor and author, noted for his performances in the U.S. on both stage and screen in such plays as The Green Goddess; Old English; Disraeli; etc.

armada. Originally Spanish for army. In the form Armada, the word is now used, from the Spanish Armada, for any fleet of large size or strength. Formerly also armado.

The Spanish Armada. The fleet assembled by Philip II of Spain, in 1588, for the conquest of England.

Armado, Don Adriano de. A pompous military bully and braggart, in Shakespeare's LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Armageddon. The name given in the Apocalypse (Rev. xvi. 16) to the site of the last great battle that is to be between the nations before the Day of Judgment; hence, any great battle or scene of slaughter. Theodore Roosevelt popularized the word in connection with his break from the Republicans to form a Progressive party in the presidential election of 1912. It was frequently used in reference to the World War.

The poet of Armageddon. John Davidson, a Scotch poet (1857-1906), has been so called.

Armande. One of the "learned ladies" in Molière's FEMMES SAVANTES.

armed neutrality. Action just short of war by a neutral power in time of war, jealous of its rights and anxious to safeguard them. The first Armed Neutrality was formed under the lead of Russia in 1780 and directed against England, at war with France, Spain, and the United States.

arme Heinrich, Der. A Middle High German epic (ca. 1200) whose theme Longfellow used in The Golden Legend. See under HEINRICH VON AVE.

Armida. In Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED, a beautiful sorceress, with whom Rinaldo falls in love, and wastes his time in voluptuous pleasure. After his escape from her, Armida follows him, but not being able to lure him back, sets fire to her palace, rushes into the midst of a combat, and is slain. Both Gluck and Rossini have taken the story of Armida as the subject of an opera.

Armida's girdle. Armida had an enchanted girdle, which, "in price and beauty," surpassed all her other ornaments; even the cestus of Venus is less costly. It tells her everything; "and when she would be loved, she wore the same."

The garden of Armida. Gorgeous luxury

Arminianism. A religious heresy, opposed to CALVINISM, which began in Holland in the early 17th century and then spread to England and the colonies in America. It denied the leading Calvinistic tenets that only the "elect" were to benefit by the sacrifice of Christ's death, and that the human will was powerless to reject or to forfeit divine grace once it had been received; it also opposed the doctrine of absolute predestination. Jonathan EDWARDS violently attacked Arminianism in America.

Arminius, possibly a Latinized form of Hermann (18 B. C.-21 A. D.). Chieftain of the Germanic tribe of the Cherusci. Trained in Rome and Roman citizen. Organized a revolt of his people against Roman dominion; was defeated by GERMANICUS (16 A. D.) but the effects of his crushing victory over Varus in the Teutoburg Forest (9 A. D.) proved lasting. Assassinated in a conspiracy of allied chiefs. Survives in popular legend and song.

Armistice Day. November 11th, celebrated as the anniversary of the Armistice that brought World War I to an end, November 11, 1918.

Arms and the man. The opening phrase of Virgil's Aeneid, "Arms and the man I sing (Arma virumque cano)"; hence any military hero. It was popularized as the title of one of George Bernard Shaw's plays (1898), a drama laid in Bulgaria satirizing the romantic attitude toward war. The libretto of the comic opera The Chocolate Soldier was unofficially based on Shaw's play.

Armstrong, Hamilton Fish (1893-). Son of David Maitland Armstrong, American artist, and editor of Foreign Affairs since 1928. Writer on foreign affairs, a director of the Council on Foreign Relations. His sister, Margaret Neilson Armstrong, was a biographer, painter, and botanist.

Armstrong, John. Hero of Scott's tale, THE LAIRD'S JOCK.

Armstrong, Robert. Rhoda's lover in Meredith's RHODA FLEMING.

army of occupation. The name given to the army that "occupied" Germany after the Armistice in 1918 at the close of World War I until peace was concluded and conditions were somewhat stabilized. Also used for the army staying in Germany after the conclusion of World War II.

Arne. An idyllic romance by Bjornstjerne Bjornson (Nor. 1858).

Arne, Thomas Augustine (1710-1778). English musical composer. Wrote music for many celebrated English works.

Arnim, Gräfin von, see ELIZABETH, Countess Russell.

Arnim, Ludwig Achim von (1781-1831). German romantic poet and novelist. With Clemens BRENTANO, editor of German folk-songs in Des Knaben Wunderhorn (1805-1808).

Arno. The river of Florence, a city which was the birthplace of both Dante and Boccaccio.

Arno, Peter. Pseudonym of Curtis Arnoux Peters (1902-). American cartoonist and illustrator, known for his humorous drawings in the magazine THE NEW YORKER.

Arnold. The titular hero of Byron's unfinished dramatic poem, THE DEFORMED TRANSFORMED.

Arnold, Benedict (1741-1801). American army officer and traitor. Arranged to surrender West Point to the British.

Arnold, Sir Edwin (1832-1904). English poet, famous for The Light of Asia, a poem on the life and teachings of Buddha.

Arnold, Matthew (1822-1888). English poet, literary critic, and classical scholar. For the dissatisfactions and doubts that he detected in the Victorian era in which he lived, he saw culture—"the best that has been thought and said in the world"—as the only cure. The English middle class to whom he addressed most of his writings he regarded as the only hope for England's future. (See PHILISTINE; SWEETNESS AND LIGHT). He was interested in science and in social and religious questions. His best-known prose works are:

Essays in Criticism (1865-1888); The Study of Celtic Literature (1867); CULTURE AND ANARCHY (1869); St. Paul and Protestantism (1870); Literature and Dogma (1873); God and the Bible (1875); and Last Essays on Church and Religion (1877). Among his poetry, most of which was written in the early years of his life, are: THE FORSAKEN MERMAN (1849); TRISTRAM AND ISEULT (1852); SOHRAB AND RUSTUM (1853); THYRSIS and Rugby Chapel (1867).

Arnold, Thomas (1793-1842). Headmaster of Rugby School, father of Matthew ARNOLD.

Arnold of Brescia (died 1155). Medieval Italian heretic, pupil of Pierre ABÉLARD, and an ardent opponent of the temporal power and worldly luxury enjoyed by the Church and the clergy of his day. In 1145 he led a revolution in the city of Rome to abolish the pope's control of civic affairs. He was persecuted by ST. BERNARD and burned by the Emperor Frederick BARBAROSSA acting for the pope, Hadrian IV.

Arnolphe. In Molière's comedy, L'ÉCOLE DES FEMMES, a man of wealth, who has a crotchet about the proper training of girls to make good wives, and tries his scheme on Agnes, whom he adopts from a peasant's hut, and whom he intends in time to make his wife. See AGNES.

Arnoux, Mme. Marie. The heroine of Flaubert's SENTIMENTAL EDUCATION.

Arondight. The sword of Sir Launcelot of the Lake.

Aroostook. The freighter on which the action of W. D. Howells' novel, THE LADY OF THE AROOSTOOK, takes place.

Arouet, François Marie, see VOLTAIRE

Around the World in Eighty Days. A romance by Jules Verne (Fr. 1873). The hero, Phileas Fogg, an Englishman, undertakes his hasty world tour as the result of a bet made at his London club. He and his French valet, Passepartout, set out that very night, and by superhuman effort, particularly by this resourceful Englishman's cool determination in the face of every obstacle, succeed in making the circuit of the globe and turning up again at the Club ten minutes before the time agreed upon eighty days later.

Arp, Bill. The pseudonym of the Georgian humorist, Charles Henry Smith (Am. 1826-1903). His letters, Bill Arp to Abe Linkhorn, published before the Civil War, were popular throughout the entire South.

Arp, Hans (1888-). German painter of the post-Cubist period. The subject-matter of his painting is fantastic, humorous, and incongruous, and has an affinity with that of the Surrealists (see SURREALISM), although Arp was not associated with that group.

Arrow Maker, The. A drama of American Indian life by Mary AUSTIN (1911) dealing with the career of a desert prophetess.

Arrow of Gold, The. A novel by Joseph Conrad (1919), dealing with the Carlist revolution.

Arrowsmith. A novel by Sinclair LEWIS, published in 1925 and largely the work for which the author was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1930, although he had previously declined the Pulitzer Prize for it. It tells of the career of a young midwestern doctor and his struggles to serve the cause of scientific research in spite of ignorance and corruption in society.

Arrowsmith, Martin. Hero of Sinclair LEWIS' novel, ARROWSMITH.

'Arry and 'Arriet. A good-natured but vulgar costermonger and his wife who appeared frequently in the pages of the English Punch. 'Arry was the creation of the Punch artist Edwin J. Milliken and made his debut in Punch's Almanac of 1874 in 'Arry on 'orse-back.

Ars Amoris. A treatise by the Roman poet OVID on the prescribed behavior of lovers, which was one of the sources of the Provençal cult of COURTLY LOVE. See also TROUBADOURS.

Arsenic and Old Lace. Humorous mystery drama by Russel CROUSE and Howard LINDSAY, which had 1444 performances.

Ars Poetica. A treatise by the Roman poet HORACE, laying down rules for the writing of poetry. This work had a wide influence on English critics of the Renaissance and post-Renaissance period.

Artagnan, D'. Charles de Baatz, seigneur D'Artagnan. One of the famous guardsmen whose amazing adventures Dumas narrates in THE THREE MUSKETEERS, Twenty Years After and The Vicomte de Bragelonne.

Artamenes or Le Grand Cyrus. A "long-winded romance," by Mlle. Scudéry (1607-1701). See CYRUS.

Artaxaminous. In Rhodes' burlesque BOMBASTES FURIOSO, king of Utopia.

Artegall, or Arthegall, Sir. The hero of Bk. v of Spenser's Faërie Queene, lover of Britomart, to whom he is made known by means of a magic mirror. He is emblematic of Justice, and in many of his deeds, such as the rescue of Irena (Ireland) from Grantorto, is typical of Arthur, Lord Grey of Wilton, who went to Ireland as Lord Lieutenant in 1580 with Spenser as his secretary. See ELIDURE.

Art as Experience. See DEWEY, JOHN.

Artemis. The same as DIANA.

art for art's sake. English equivalent of the French l'art pour l'art, which itself derives from Edgar Allan Poe in THE POETIC PRINCIPLE:

There neither exists nor can exist any work more thoroughly dignified . . . than the poem which is a poem and nothing more—the poem written solely for the poem's sake

The doctrine which this represents—that the aim of art should be creation and the perfection of technical expression rather than the service of a moral, political, or didactic end—had been evolving ever since the Romantic period. It was adumbrated by Coleridge and given early expression by Poe in the above treatise, flowered among the French SYMBOLIST poets and their English associate, Walter PATER, and reached its culmination in SURREALISM and the aesthetic theory of I. A. RICHARDS. It was the dominant theory of art and especially poetry until the 1930's, when the Proletarian and Marxist movements in literature threatened for a time to revive the 18th-century didactic theories. See PROLETARIAN LITERATURE and MARXISM IN LITERATURE. After the beginning of World War II in 1939, these movements began to lose much of their influence.

Artful Dodger. A young thief in Dickens' OLIVER TWIST, pupil of Fagin. His name was John Dawkins, and he became a most perfect adept in villainy, up to every sort of dodge.

Arthegal. See ARTEGAL.

Arthez, Daniel d'. An author who appears in several of the novels of Balzac's COMÉDIE HUMAINE as leader of the group or club known as the "Cénacle"; a man who displays "the unity of excellent talent and excellent character." In later life he becomes a deputy on the right and the lover of Diane de Maufrigneuse, the princess of CADIGNAN.

Arthur. The hero of a great cycle of medieval romance. (See below under ARTHURIAN ROMANCE for the development of this cycle.) Historically Arthur was a shadowy British chieftain of the 6th century, who fought many battles and is said to have been a king of the Silures, a tribe of ancient Britons, to have been mortally wounded in the battle of Camlan (537), in Cornwall, during the revolt of his nephew, Modred (who was also slain) and to have been taken to Glastonbury, where he died.

By the time the Arthurian legends were given permanent shape in Malory's Morte d'Arthur (ca. 1470) the figure of Arthur as a legendary hero had become fairly distinct. He was the natural son of Uther and Igrerna (wife of Gorlois, duke of Cornwall), and was brought up by Sir Ector. By pulling out the famous sword Excalibur from a block of stone he proved his right to the throne of England. He subdued twelve rebellious princes, of whom Lot, king of Norway, was chief, and won twelve great battles against the Saxon invaders. About his ROUND TABLE he gathered a group of knights whose deeds of daring and chivalry won him court a high renown. Arthur himself became known far and wide as a mighty warrior and a just and generous ruler. His wife was GUINEVERE, his most valiant knight LAUNCELOT. In the earlier romances the ruin that finally overtook Arthur was due entirely to Guinevere and the traitorous MODRED; the story of Guinevere's guilty amour with Launcelot and its demoralizing effect on the court was added later. In distinct contrast to Malory and the older romancers, who say that Arthur's sons were born out of wedlock (Modred being both son and nephew), Tennyson in his Idylls of the King makes Arthur a man of the highest morals, not only absolutely loyal to Guinevere but requiring that all his knights "cleave to one maiden only." The treason that brought an end to Arthur's court was hatched while he was away on conquest. After his return and defeat in the battle of Camlan, the mortally wounded King was borne away to the island of AVALON, where some accounts say that he was buried, others that he lived with his sister Morgan le Fay "till he shall come again full twice as fair to rule over his people."

The old romances of Arthur and his court were burlesqued by Mark Twain in his CONNECTICUT YANKEE IN KING ARTHUR'S COURT.

Arthurian Romances. The stories that center round the legendary King Arthur owe their inception in English literature to the Historia Regum Britanniae (ca. 1148) of Geoffrey of Monmouth (d. 1154). This drew partly on the work of "Nennius," a Breton monk of the 10th century partly—according to the author—from an ancient British (? or Breton) book (lost, if ever existing) lent him by Walter, Archdeacon of Oxford, and partly from sources which are untraced, but the originals of which are probably embedded in Welsh or Celtic legends, most of them being now non-extant. The original Arthur was a very shadowy warrior; Geoffrey of Monmouth, probably at the instigation of Henry I and for the purpose of providing the new nation with a national hero, made many additions. The story was taken up in France and further expanded; Wace, a French poet (who is the first to mention the ROUND TABLE), turned it into a metrical chronicle of some 14,000 lines (Brut d'Angleterre, ca. 1155); Celtic and other legends, including those of the GRAIL and Sir Tristan, were superadded. In about 1205 Layamon, the Worcestershire priest, completed his Brut (about 30,000 lines), which included Wace's work and amplifications such as the story of the fairies at Arthur's birth, who, at his death, wafted him to Avalon, as well as Sir Gawain and Sir Bedivere. In France the legends were worked upon by Robert de Boron (fl. 1215), who first attached the story of the GRAIL to the Arthurian Cycle and brought the legend of Merlin into prominence, and CHRESTIEN DE TROYES, who is responsible for the presence in the Cycle of the tale of Enid and Geraint, the tragic loves of Launcelot and Guinevere, the story of Perceval, and other additions, for many of which he was indebted to the Welsh MABINOGION. Many other legends in the form of ballads, romances, and Welsh and Breton songs and lays were popular, and in the 15th century the whole corpus was collected, edited, and more or less worked into a state of homogeneity by Sir Thomas MALORY (d. 1471), his Le Morte d'Arthur being printed by Caxton in 1485. In the 19th century Tennyson drew upon the Arthurian material for his IDYLLS OF THE KING. For the different heroes, sections, etc., of this great Cycle of Romance, see the various names throughout this Handbook.

The six following clauses may be considered almost as axioms of the Arthurian romances:

- (1) There was no braver or more noble king than Arthur.
- (2) No fairer or more faithless wife than Guinevere.
- (3) No truer pair of lovers than Tristan and Isolt (or Tristram and Ysolde).
- (4) No knight more faithful than Sir Kaye.
- (5) None so brave and amorous as Sir Launcelot.
- (6) None so virtuous as Sir Galahad.

Arthur or Arturo. (1) In Bellini's opera I PURITANI, Lord Arthur Talbot.

(2) In Donizetti's opera LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR, Arthur Bucklaw.

Arthur, Prince. In Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE, the character who symbolizes the Aristotelian quality of Magnificence. He is considered by some to represent either Sir Philip SIDNEY or the Earl of Leicester, or both.

Arthur Merwyn, Or Memoirs of the Year 1793. See BROWN, CHARLES BROCKDEN.

Artie. An illiterate office boy who first appeared in George Ade's contributions to the Chicago Record and later as the titular hero of a book given over to his amusing experiences (1896).

Artists in Uniform. See EASTMAN, MAX.

Arts. In the medieval ages the full course consisted of the three subjects which constituted the Trivium, and the four subjects which constituted the Quadrivium:

The Trivium was grammar, logic, and rhetoric.

The Quadrivium was music, arithmetic, geometry, and astronomy.

All seven subjects constituted the Seven Arts. The Master of Arts was the person qualified to teach theology, law, or medicine. In modern American universities, the degrees given in arts are the bachelor's B.A. or A.B. and the master's M.A. or A.M.

Artzybasheff, Boris (1899-). American artist, illustrator, and writer of stories for children derived from Russian folklore. Possesses a remarkable sense of design.

Artzybasheff, Mikhail Petrovich (1878-1927). Russian novelist and dramatist. Famous for his novel Sanine. A minor Andreyev. Father of Boris ARTZYBASHEFF.

Arundel. Novel by Kenneth ROBERTS.

Arvalan. In Southey's oriental epic, The Curse of Kehama, the wicked son of Kehama, slain by Ladurlad for attempting to dishonor his daughter Kailyal.

Arvin, Newton (1900-). American biographer and critic. His works include Hawthorne, The Heart of Hawthorne's Journals, and Whitman.

Arviragus. (1) In The Franklin's Tale, one of Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES, the husband of DORIGEN.

(2) In Shakespeare's CYMBELINE, Cymbeline's younger son, kidnaped with his brother Guiderius by Belarius.

Aryan (from Sanskrit arya, noble). Term applied to the Indo-European family of languages, from the name by which the Hindus and Iranians used to distinguish themselves from the nations they conquered. The place of origin of these languages is not definitely known, authorities differing so widely as between a locality enclosed by the river Oxus and the Hindu-kush mountains, and the shores of the Baltic Sea. The Aryan family of languages includes the Persian, Hindu, Sanskrit, Zend, Latin, Greek, and Celtic, with all the European except Basque, Turkish, Hungarian, and Finnic. It is sometimes called the Indo-European, sometimes the Indo-Germanic, and sometimes the Japhetic.

Aryan race. The term ARYAN came into special prominence when the National Socialist Government of Germany (1933-1945) (see under NAZISM) used it to designate the original race of Europe, from whom the German nation was claimed to have descended and whose power and superiority the Nazis proposed to restore. Scientists, however, consider the hypothesis of a single, original Aryan race extremely unsound. •

Ascalaphus. In Greek mythology, an inhabitant of the underworld who, when Pluto gave Proserpine permission to return to the upper world if she had eaten nothing, said that she had partaken of a pomegranate. In revenge Proserpine turned him into an owl by sprinkling him with the water of Phlegethon.

Ascanius. In classic legend, the son of Aeneas. He escaped from Troy as a child and accompanied his father to Italy. Later he built the city of Alba Longa and ruled over the kingdom his father had secured.

Ascapart. A legendary giant conquered by Sir Bevis of Southampton. He was thirty feet high, and the space between his eyes was twelve inches. This mighty giant, whose effigy may be seen on the city gates of Southampton, could carry under his arm, without feeling distressed, Sir Bevis with his wife and horse.

ascendant. In casting a horoscope the point of the ecliptic or degree of the zodiac which is just rising at the moment of birth is called the ascendant, and the easternmost star represents the HOUSE of life, because it is in the act of ascending. This is a man's strongest star, and when his outlook is bright, we say his star is in the ascendant.

the House of the Ascendant includes five degrees of the zodiac above the point just rising, and twenty-five below it. Usually, the point of birth is referred to.

the Lord of the Ascendant is any planet within the "house of the Ascendant." The house and lord of the Ascendant at birth were said by astrologers to exercise great influence on the future life of the child.

Asch, Sholem (1880-). Novelist, born in Poland and living in the U.S. His books are written chiefly in Yiddish and include The Mother (1930); Three Cities (1933); and The Nazarene (1939), the last a novel on the life of Christ.

Ascham, Roger (1515-1568). English prose writer and teacher, tutor to Elizabeth before her accession to the throne, later connected with her court as Greek preceptor. In his writings he urged the adoption of sports in an educational curriculum and defended English prose as a literary medium. His best-known works are Toxophilus (1545), a treatise on archery, and The Schoolmaster (1570).

Ascot races. A very fashionable "meet," run early in June on Ascot Heath, Berkshire (six miles from Windsor). They were instituted early in the 18th century. The best horses of all England were in competition, and at a somewhat more advanced age than at the great "classic races."

Asc. In Ibsen's PEER GYNT, the old mother of the wayward hero.

Asgard (As, "a god," gard or gardh, "an enclosure, garth, yard"). The realm of the Aesir or the Northern gods, the Olympus of Scandinavian mythology. It is said to be situated in the center of the universe, and accessible only by the rainbow-bridge (Bifrost). It contained many regions and mansions, such as Gladseim, Valhalla, Vingolf, Valaskjalf, Ydalir, etc.

Ashburton, Mary. Heroine of Longfellow's poetical romance Hyperion. The character was drawn from Fanny Appleton, whom Longfellow met in Europe under similar circumstances and whom he afterward married.

Ashburton Treaty. Negotiated by Daniel Webster for the U.S. and Lord Ashburton for Great Britain. Signed Aug. 9, 1842. Settled Northeast boundary dispute by a compromise line between Maine and Canada.

Ashford, Daisy. The child author of The Young Visitors, a narrative relating the adventures of Mr. Salteena; hence a Daisy Ashford is an imaginative, precocious child. She was supposed to be nine when she produced this masterpiece which caused something of a sensation when it was published much later (in 1919, with a preface by J. M. Barrie).

Ashkenazim. The northern Jews, as opposed to the SEPHARDIM of Spain, Portugal, etc. The Ashkenazim are those coming from Ashkenaz, a name, originally of a people mentioned in the Old Testament (cf. Gen. x. 3; 1 Chron. i. 6), later applied to Germany.

Ashmolean. Designating the museum at Oxford University founded by Elias Ashmole, English antiquary, and opened in 1683.

Ashton, Helen Rosaline (1891-). English novelist. Known in the United States for her Doctor Seacold. Wrote William and Dorothy about the Wordsworths and The Swan of Usk about Henry Vaughan.

Ashton, Lucy. Titular heroine of Scott's novel THE BRIDE OF LAMMERMOOR. Her father, Sir William Ashton and other members of the family figure prominently in the novel. The same characters appear in Donizetti's opera Lucia di Lammermoor, founded on the novel, but the names vary slightly, the Ashton becoming Aston and the proper names being changed in some cases.

Ashtoreth or Ashtoroth. The goddess of fertility and reproduction among the Canaanites and Phoenicians, called by the Babylonians Ishtar (Venus), and by the Greeks ASTARTE. She may possibly be the "queen of heaven" mentioned by Jeremiah (vii. 18 xlv. 17, 25). Solomon built her a temple mentioned in 2 Kings. Formerly she was supposed to be a moon-goddess; hence Milton's reference in his Ode on the Nativity.

Mooned Ashtaroth,
Heaven's queen and mother both.

According to some authorities Ashtoreth is singular, Ashtoroth plural. Thus the latter form may be a general name for all Syrian goddesses.

Ash Wednesday. (1) The first Wednesday in Lent, so called from an ancient Roman Catholic custom of sprinkling on the heads of the priests and people assembled the ashes of the palms that were consecrated on the Palm Sunday of the previous year which themselves had been consecrated at the altar. The custom, it is said, was introduced by Gregory the Great.

(2) A poem by T. S. ELIOT (1930) celebrating the spiritual peace to be found in orthodox religion.

Asia. (1) In classic mythology, one of the Oceanides, usually spoken of as wife of Iapetus and mother of Prometheus. In his PROMETHEUS UNBOUND, Shelley makes her play an important part as Prometheus' wife.

(2) According to the Koran the wife of that Pharaoh who brought up Moses. Her husband tortured her for believing in Moses; but she was taken alive into paradise. Mahomet numbers her among the four perfect women.

As I Lay Dying. A stream-of-consciousness novel by William FAULKNER, published in 1930, depicting the death and burial of the mother of an ignorant, back-country family in the South, the Bundrens.

Asir, see AESIR.

Ask or Askr. In Norse Mythology, the first man, created out of an ash tree by the gods Odin, Vili, and Ve. The first woman was EMBLA.

Asmodeus. (1) The "evil demon" who appears in the Apocryphal book of Tobit. His business was "to plot against the newly wedded and . . . sever them utterly by many calamities." In Tobit Asmodeus falls in love with Sara, daughter of Raguel, and causes the death of seven husbands in succession, each on his bridal night. After her marriage to Tobias, he was driven into Egypt by a charm, made by Tobias of the heart and liver of a fish burnt on perfumed ashes, and being pursued was taken prisoner and bound.

In the Talmud Asmodeus is called "king of the devils."

(2) A much better known Asmodeus is the engaging devil-companion of Don Cleofas in Le Sage's romance The Devil on Two Sticks (Le Diable boiteux, 1726) sometimes entitled Asmodeus in English translations. He is a "diable bon-homme," with a great deal more gaiety than malice; not the least like Mephistopheles, yet with all his wit, acuteness, and playful malice, we never forget the fiend.

Asmodeus flight. Don Cleofas, catching hold of his companion's cloak, is perched on the steeple of St. Salvador. Here the fiend stretches out his hand, and the roofs of all the houses open in a moment to show the Don what is going on privately in each respective dwelling.

Aspasia. (1) A Milesian woman (fl. 440 B. C.), celebrated for her beauty and talents, who lived at Athens as mistress of Pericles, and whose house became the center of literary and philosophical society; hence a fascinating and cultured courtesan. Landor has a series of imaginary letters Pericles and Aspasia (1836).

(2) Titular heroine of Beaumont and Fletcher's drama, The Maid's Tragedy (1610). She is betrothed to Amintor but the King, wishing to provide a husband for his mistress Evadne, commands Amintor to marry her instead. Aspasia is a pathetic figure, the very type of ill-fortune and wretchedness, but she bears her fate with patience even when she becomes a jest and byword. Her tragic death gives the drama its name.

Asquith, Herbert Henry. 1st Earl of Oxford and Asquith (1852-1928); prime minister (1908-16). Parliament Act, HOME RULE Bill for Ireland, Welsh Disestablishment Act.

Ass. The dark stripe running down the back of an ass, crossed by another at the shoulders, is, according to tradition, the cross that was communicated to the creature when our Lord rode on the back of an ass in His triumphant entry into Jerusalem.

till the ass ascends the ladder—i.e. never. A rabbinical expression. The Romans had a similar one, Cum asinus in tegulis ascenderit (When the ass climbs to the tiles).

That which thou knowest not perchance thine ass can tell thee. An allusion to BALAAM'S ASS.

ass, deaf to music. This tradition arose from the hideous noise made by "Sir Balaam" in braying. See ASS-EARED.

an ass in a lion's skin. A coward who hectors, a fool that apes the wise man. The allusion is to the fable of an ass that put on a lion's hide, but was betrayed when he began to bray.

make an ass of oneself. To do something very foolish. To expose oneself to ridicule.

asses' bridge. See PONS ASINORUM.

urangle for an ass's shadow. To contend about trifles. The tale told by Demosthenes is, that a man hired an ass to take him to Megara; and at noon, the sun being very hot, the traveler dismounted, and sat himself down in the shadow of the ass. Just then the owner came up and claimed the right of sitting in this shady spot, saying that he let out the ass for hire but there was no bargain made about the ass's shadow; and the two men fell to blows.

feast of asses See FOOLS.

ass-eared. Midas had the ears of an ass. The tale says Apollo and Pan had a contest, and chose Midas to decide which was the better musician. Midas gave sentence in favor of Pan; and Apollo, in disgust, changed his ears into those of an ass.

See GOLDEN ASS.

Assad. In the story of Amgiad and Assad in the Arabian Nights, joint hero with his half-brother Amgiad of numerous adventures.

Assassins. A sect of supposedly Mohammedan Oriental fanatics of a military and religious character, founded in Persia in 1090 by Hassan ben Sabbah, better known as the Old Man of the Mountains, a translation of Sheikh al Sabal, the title given to the supreme ruler of the order. This band was the terror of the world for two centuries. Their religion was a compound of Magianism, Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism, and their name is derived from haschisch (bang), an intoxicating drink, with which they are said to have "doped" themselves before perpetrating their orgies of massacre. They were finally put down by the Sultan Bibars, about 1272.

Asser (d. 909?). English monk, author of a Latin life of King Alfred, "the earliest biography of an English layman."

Asshur. The chief god of the Assyrian pantheon, perhaps derived from the Babylonian god of heaven, Anu. His symbol was the winged circle in which was frequently enclosed a draped male figure carrying three horns on the head and with one hand stretched forth, sometimes with a bow in the hand. His wife was Belit (i.e. the Lady, par excellence), who has been identified with the Ishtar (see ASHTORETH) of Nineveh.

Assistants, the. Comic characters in Franz Kafka's novel, THE CASTLE.

Assommoir, L'. A novel by Émile Zola, published in 1877 and part of the series LES ROUGON-MACQUART. Written in the argot of the Paris streets, it is a study of the effects of drink on the lives of working-class people and is considered to be one of the best examples of the author's naturalistic method. It was the book which brought fame to Zola and also caused him to be bitterly attacked because of the nature of the subject.

assonance. A peculiar form of rhyme in which the last accented vowel sounds and succeeding vowels, if any, must be identical. Fate, take, glory, holy, make assonance, not rhyme. In skillful and conscious use, the substitution of assonance for rhyme can produce extraordinary effects. In late Vulgar Latin and early Romance poetry this is the predominant form of rhyme.

Assumption, Feast of the. August 15th, so called in honor of the Virgin Mary, who (according to one legend) was taken to heaven that day (45 A. D.) in her corporeal form, being at the time seventy-five years of age. Another legend has it that the Virgin was raised soon after her death, and assumed to glory by a special privilege before the general resurrection.

Astaire, Fred (1899-). Famous American dancer, and actor; originally starred in musical comedies with his sister, Adele, from 1916 until her marriage in 1932. In moving pictures often with Ginger Rogers. Real name, Fred Austerlitz.

Astarotte. A fiend in Pulci's epic, MORGANTE MAGGIORE, who conducts Rinaldo from Egypt to Roncesvalles by magic in a few hours and swears eternal friendship at parting. Pulci uses him as a mouthpiece for many of his own views.

Astarte. The Greek name for ASHTORETH, sometimes thought to have been a moon-goddess. Byron gave the name to the lady beloved by Manfred in his drama, MANFRED.

Astolat. This town, mentioned in the Arthurian legends, is generally identified with Guildford, in Surrey.

the Lily Maid of Astolat. ELAINE.

Astolpho. In medieval romance one of the twelve famous paladins of Charlemagne, an English duke who joined the Emperor in his struggle against the Saracens. He was a great boaster, but was generous, courteous, gay and singularly handsome. In Ariosto's epic poem, ORLANDO FURIOSO, Astolpho is carried to Alcina's isle on the back of a whale; and when Alcina tires of him, she changes him into a myrtle tree, but Melissa disenchant him. Astolpho also went to the moon, to cure Orlando of his madness by bringing back his lost wits in a phial.

Astolpho's book. The fairy Logistilla gave Astolpho a book, which would direct him aright in all his journeyings, and give him any other information he required.

Astolpho's horn. Also the gift of Logistilla. Whatever man or beast heard it, was seized with instant panic and became an easy captive.

Aston, Enrico. So Henry ASHTON is called in Donizetti's opera of Lucia di Lammermoor (1835).

Astoreth, see ASHTAROTH.

Astoria. A book by Washington IRVING, concerning the original John Jacob Astor (1763-1848), fur trader and financier.

Astraea. In classic mythology, goddess of justice, or, as sometimes represented, of innocence and purity, generally said to be the daughter of Themis and Jupiter. She was the last of the immortals to withdraw from the earth after the Golden Age. Afterwards she became the constellation Virgo.

The name Astraea has been applied to Queen Elizabeth and to various other goddesses addressed by poets. It was assumed by Aphra Behn (1640-1689), a woman dramatist of somewhat lax morals.

astral body. In theosophical parlance, the phantasmal or spiritual appearance of the physical human form, that is existent both before and after the death of the material body, though during life it is not usually separated from it; also the "kamarupa" or body of desires, which retains a finite life in the astral world after bodily death.

Astrée. A French pastoral romance by Honore D'Urfé (1616), widely celebrated for giving birth to the pastoral school, which had for a time an overwhelming power over literature, dress, and amusements. The romance is laid in fourth-century France and deals with the adventures of the shepherdess Astrée (in English translations Astrea) and Celadon, her shepherd lover. Celadon in despair at Astrée's jealousy, tries to commit suicide and is borne away to the court of the Princess Galatea, but after many vicissitudes, including a second attempt at suicide (in the Fountain of Truth, where, being faithful in love, he cannot drown), he is reconciled at last to his love.

astrology, see HOUSES.

Astrophel. Sir Philip SIDNEY. "Phil. Sid." being a contraction of Philos Sidus, and the Latin sidus being changed to the Greek astron, we get astron-philos (star-lover). The "star" that he loved was Penelope Devereux, whom he called Stella (star), and to whom he was betrothed. Spenser wrote a pastoral called Astrophel, to the memory of his friend and patron, who fell at the battle of Zutphen.

Astyages. Last King of Media (reigned ca. 584-550 B. C.). Held captive by Cyrus who took over the kingdom.

Astyanax. In classic mythology, the young son of Hector and Andromache. The Greeks threw him down from the walls of Troy after they captured the city.

Astynome. Another name for the CHRYSEIS of classic myth.

Asur, see ASSHUR.

Asura. In Hindu mythology, the opposers of the gods.

Asvins. In Hindu mythology, twin gods of light, the youngest of the gods. More than fifty hymns of the Rig Veda are addressed to them.

Asynja. The goddesses of Asgard; the feminine counterpart of the Aesir.

As You Like It. A comedy by Shakespeare (1599 or 1600). Most of the action takes place in the Forest of Arden, where Rosalind's father, the rightful duke whom Celia's father Frederick has deposed, lives in contentment with his followers (see JACQUES). When Rosalind is banished from Frederick's court she escapes to Arden in boy's clothing with Celia, who adopts the disguise of a rural maiden. There they are found by Orlando, a young wrestler with whom Rosalind had fallen in love at court. He talks incessantly of his love for Rosalind to the youth, Ganymede, who is in reality Rosalind herself. Later Orlando's older brother, who had driven him away from home, appears, is reconciled to Orlando and falls in love with Celia. Eventually the Duke is restored to his dominions and a double wedding takes place.

Atahualpa (1500?-1533). Last Inca King of Peru (see HUAYNA CAPAC). Condemned to death by PIZARRO on refusal to become a Christian. Killed by strangulation.

Atala. A novel by François René CHATEAUBRIAND (1801). Like his novel called René, it was designed as an episode of his Génie du Christianisme. His wanderings through the primeval woods of North America are described in both Atala and René.

Atalanta. In Greek legend, a daughter of Iasus (some authorities say Zeus) and Clymene. She took part in the Calydonian hunt and, being very swift of foot, refused to marry unless the suitor should first defeat her in a race. Milanion overcame her at last by dropping, one after another, during the race, three golden apples that had been given him for the purpose by Venus. Atalanta was not proof against the temptation to pick them up, and so lost the race and became a wife. In the Boeotian form of the legend Hippomenes takes the place of Milanion. William MORRIS made this legend the subject of one of the tales in his Earthly Paradise and Swinburne wrote a dramatic poem Atalanta in Calydon on the same theme.

Atalantis. Secret Memoirs of Persons of Quality in the court of 1688, by Mrs. de la Riviere Manley (1709). It is full of party scandal; not unfrequently new minting old lies; hence an Atalantis is a narrative retailing scandal.

Atar-Gull. Titular hero of a sea story by Eugene Sue, a powerful West Indian negro who poses as the most devoted of servants while in reality thoroughly malicious.

Ate. In Greek mythology, the goddess of vengeance and mischief. She was driven out of heaven and took refuge among the sons of men. In Spenser's Faerie Queene (IV, i, iv, ix, etc.) the name is given to a lying and slanderous hag, the companion of Duessa.

Atellanae, or Atellan farces. Licentious interludes in the Roman theaters, introduced from Atella, in Campania. The characters of Macchus and Bucco are the forerunners of the modern Punch and Clown. Also called Atellan fables.

Athaliah. In the Old Testament (2 Kings xi), the daughter of Ahab and Jezebel, and wife of Joram, king of Judah. She massacred all the remnant of the house of David; but Joash escaped, and six years afterwards was proclaimed king. Athaliah, attracted by the shouts, went to the temple, and was killed by the mob. Racine's great tragedy Athalie (1691) is based on this story.

Athanaël. In Massenet's opera, Thais, based on Anatole France's novel of the same name, the young monk who succeeds in converting THAIS. In the book his name is Paphnutius.

Athanasius, Saint. Called Athanasius the Great (293?-373). Greek father of the Church and lifelong opponent of the ARIAN Heresy. He is not the author of the Athanasian creed which originated in the 5th or 6th century.

Athelstane. The "thane of Coningsburgh" in Scott's Ivanhoe. He was surnamed "The Unready" (i.e. impolitic, unwise).

Athene. The goddess of wisdom and of the arts and sciences in Greek mythology: the counterpart of the Roman MINERVA.

When she disputed with the sea-god Poseidon as to which of them should give name to Athens, the gods decided that it should be called by the name of that deity which bestowed on man the most useful boon. Athene created the olive tree, Poseidon created the horse. The vote was given in favor of the olive tree, and the city called Athens.

Athene, according to legend, sprang full-armed from the head of Zeus. In the Iliad and Odyssey she is the constant friend and protector of Ulysses and intervenes frequently on his behalf.

Athenian Bee. See under BEE.

Athens. In allusion to Athens of ancient Greece, a city of paramount cultural achievements and importance.

German Athens. Saxe-Weimar.

Athens of Ireland. Belfast; Cork.

Modern Athens. Edinburgh. So called from its resemblance to the Acropolis.

Mohammedan Athens. Bagdad in the time of Haroun al Raschid.

Athens of the New World. Boston, noted for its literary institutions.

Athens of the North. Copenhagen.

Athens of Switzerland. Zurich.

Athens of the West. Cordova, in Spain, was so called in the Middle Ages.

Athens, Maid of, see MAID OF ATHENS.

Atherton, Gertrude Franklin (1857-1948). American novelist, writing chiefly of life in California. Among her books are: The Californians (1898); THE CONQUEROR (1902); Rezánov (1906); BLACK OXEN (1923); The Jealous Gods (1928); The Sophisticates (1931).

Athos. One of the famous friends and adventurers in Dumas' THREE MUSKETEERS. He appears also in the sequels, Twenty Years After and The Vicomte de Bragelonne, and his son is the titular hero of the latter book.

Atkins, see TOMMY ATKINS.

Atkinson, Mrs. Eleanor (1863-1943). American novelist, wrote a popular sentimental book, Greyfriars Bobby (1912) a classic dog story. Her Johnny Appleseed (1915) is also worth mentioning.

Atkinson, Justin Brooks (1894-). American dramatic critic of the New York Times, essayist, etc. Also an ornithologist. Received Pulitzer prize (1947) for superior reporting from China.

Atlantes. (1) In Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, a famous magician and sage who educated ROGERO in all manly virtues. His wily plans to lure his pupil back from the career of a Saracen warrior destined to become a Christian, furnish many of the incidents of the epic.

(2) Figures of men, used in architecture as pillars, so called from ATLAS. Female figures are called CARYATIDES.

Atlantic Charter, The. A declaration of the war aims of Great Britain and the United States in World War II, drawn up (August 3-14, 1941) at a meeting, aboard American and British warships anchored off Newfoundland, between Franklin D. ROOSEVELT, President of the United States, and Winston CHURCHILL, Prime Minister of Great Britain. The two statesmen agreed on eight principles:

First, their countries seek no aggrandizement, territorial or other;

Second, they desire to see no territorial changes that do not accord with the freely expressed wishes of the peoples concerned;

Third, they respect the right of all peoples to choose the form of government under which they will live; and they wish to see sovereign rights and self-government restored to those who have been forcibly deprived of them;

Fourth, they will endeavor, with due respect for their existing obligations, to further the enjoyment by all states, great or small, victor or vanquished, of access, on equal terms, to the trade and to the raw materials of the world which are needed for their economic prosperity;

Fifth, they desire to bring about the fullest collaboration between all nations in the economic field with the object of securing, for all, improved labor standards, economic advancement, and social security;

Sixth, after the final destruction of the Nazi tyranny, they hope to see established a peace which will afford to all nations the means of dwelling in safety within their own boundaries, and which will afford assurance that all the men in all the lands may live out their lives in freedom from fear and want;

Seventh, such a peace should enable all men to traverse the high seas and oceans without hindrance.

Eighth, they believe that all of the nations of the world, for realistic as well as spiritual reasons, must come to the abandonment of the use of force. Since no future peace can be maintained if land, sea, or air armaments continue to be employed by nations which threaten, or may threaten, aggression outside of their frontiers, they believe, pending the establishment of a wider and permanent system of general security, that the disarmament of such nations is essential. They will likewise aid and encourage all other practicable measures which will lighten for peace-loving peoples the crushing burden of armaments.

Atlantic Monthly, The. An American magazine founded in Boston in 1857, named by Oliver Wendell HOLMES. Among its editors during the 19th century were James Russell Lowell, William Dean Howells, and Thomas Bailey ALDRICH, and its record of contributors included many well-known authors, journalists, and statesmen. After World War I, its influence began to decline.

Atlantis. A mythic island of great extent which was anciently supposed to have existed in the Atlantic Ocean. It is first mentioned by Plato (in the Timaeus and Critias), and Solon was told of it by an Egyptian priest, who said that it had been overwhelmed by an earthquake and sunk beneath the sea 9000 years before his time. See also LEMURIA; LYONNESSE.

The New Atlantis. An allegorical romance by Bacon (written between 1614 and 1618) in which he describes an imaginary island where was established a philosophical commonwealth bent on the cultivation of the natural sciences. See UTOPIA, CITY OF THE SUN.

Mrs. Manley, in 1709, published a scandalous chronicle under the slightly modified title The New Atalantis. See ATALANTIS.

Atlas. In Greek mythology, one of the Titans condemned by Zeus for his share in the War of the Titans to uphold the heavens on his shoulders. He was stationed on the Atlas mountains in Africa, and the tale is merely a poetical way of saying that they prop up the heavens, because they are so lofty.

We call a book of maps an "Atlas," because the figure of Atlas with the world on his back was employed by the Flemish geographer Mercator (1512-1594, real name Gerhard Kremer) on the title-page of his collection of maps in the 16th century.

Atlas, Witch of. See WITCH OF ATLAS.

Atman, in Buddhist philosophy, is the noumenon of one's own self. Not the Ego, but the ego divested of all that is objective; the "spark of heavenly flame." In the Upanishads the Atman is regarded as the sole reality.

atomists. A school of early Greek philosophers, founded by Leucippus (b. ca. 460 B. C.). They regarded creation and change as the result of the combination and separation of a basic and unchanging set of atoms.

Atossa. A name given by Pope to Sarah, the duchess of Marlborough. The original Atossa was the daughter of Cyrus, wife of Darius and mother of Xerxes.

But what are these to great Atossa's mind?
Pope, Moral Essays, ii.

Atreus. In classic legend, son of Pelops and father of Agamemnon and Menelaus, called the Atreidae. His brother Thyestes seduced his wife, and in revenge Atreus made his brother eat the cooked flesh of his own son. Thyestes' vengeance was worked out in the next generation when his son Agistheus became the paramour of Clytemnestra and the co-murderer of AGAMEMNON.

atrium. Principal room in a Roman house, probably with a central opening in the roof to permit rain water to gather in a tank underneath.

Atropos. In Greek mythology, that one of the three FATES whose office it was to cut the thread of life with a pair of scissors.

Attalus. A king of Pergamum (241-197 B. C.), noted for his riches; hence, the wealth of Attalus.

Attic.

the Attic bee, see Athenian bee under BEE.

the Attic bird. The nightingale; so called either because PHILOMELA was the daughter of the king of Athens, or because of the great abundance of nightingales in Attica.

the Attic boy. Cephalus, beloved by Aurora or Morn; passionately fond of hunting.

Attic faith. Inviolable faith, the very opposite of PUNIC FAITH.

the Attic Muse. Xenophon (444-356 B. C.), the historian, a native of Athens; so called because the style of his composition is a model of elegance.

Attic salt. Elegant and delicate wit. Salt, both in Latin and Greek, was a common term for wit, or sparkling thought well expressed.

the Attic school. In sculpture, the Greek school centering in Athens and known for sensuous delicacy and refinement of form.

attic, attic story.• Humorously, the attic or attic story is the head; the body being compared to a house, the head is the highest story; hence such expressions as rats in the attic, queer in the attic story.

Atticus. The most elegant and finished scholar of the Romans, a bookseller (109-32 B. C.).

the Christian Atticus. Reginald Heber (1783-1826), bishop of Calcutta.

the English Atticus. Joseph ADDISON, so called by Pope (Prologue to Satires), in a keen but biting satire on the personal characteristics of the famous essayist.

the Irish Atticus. George Faulkner (1700-1775), bookseller, publisher, and friend of Swift; so called by Lord Chesterfield when Viceroy of Ireland.

Attila. King of the Huns (d. 453) notorious for his inroads upon Europe and his acts of cruelty and vandalism. He is called "the Scourge of God." Pierre Corneille made him the hero of a tragedy Attila (1667). In the Nibelungenlied Attila appears as ETZEL; in the Volsunga Saga as Atli.

Attitudes Toward History. See BURKE, KENNETH.

Attucks, Crispus (1723?-1770). Negro hero of the American Revolution. Leader of mob in "Boston Massacre" and one of three men killed by fire of British troops.

Atwill, Lionel (1885-1946). English-born stage and screen actor, famous for his roles in Ibsen's plays. He supported Katharine Cornell and Helen Hayes and played opposite Nazimova. On the screen most of his parts were in "horror" pictures.

Atys. The Phrygian counterpart of the Greek Adonis and Phoenician Tammuz. He was beloved by Cybele, the mother of the gods, but died in youth at a pine-tree, and violets sprang from his blood. Catullus wrote a poem in Latin on the subject, which has been translated into English by Leigh HUNT.

Auber, Daniel François Esprit (1782-1871). French composer; regarded as founder of French grand opera.

Aubrey, John (1626-1697). English antiquary. Author of Miscellanies (1696) and Minutes of Lives (published 1813). John Collier has edited a modern selection of his best.

Aubrey's dog. See under MONTAGIS.

Aubry, Octave (1881-1946). French novelist and historian. Leading authority on the Napoleonic period.

Auburn. The name of Goldsmith's DESERTED VILLAGE. It is an imaginary English village but is probably drawn largely from Lissay, in Kilkenny West, Ireland, where Goldsmith's father was pastor.

A.U.C. Abbreviation of the Lat. Anno Urbis Conditae or Ab Urbe Condita, "from the foundation of the city" (Rome). It is the starting point of the Roman system of dating events, and corresponds to 753 B. C.

Aucassin and Nicolette. One of the best of the medieval romances (13th century). It deals with the love of Aucassin for the Saracen captive Nicolette, who is in reality daughter of the king of Carthage. After overcoming numerous obstacles created by the bitter opposition of Aucassin's father, Count Garim, and the unhappy accidents of fate, the lovers are finally united.

Auchinleck, Sir Claude John Eyre (1884-). British general. Commander-in-chief in the Middle East, following WAVELL. Replaced by General Sir Harold R. L. G. ALEXANDER, August 1942, as General (later Field Marshal) MONTGOMERY took over General Ritchie's Eighth Army.

Au clair de la lune. Famous French song. The line prête-moi ta plume "lend me your pen," is a modern substitute for . . . ta lume ". . . light," which came into use when the old word lume was no longer understood.

Auden, Wystan Hugh (1907-). English poet, best-known of the group of British poets of Marxist sympathies, which included C. DAY LEWIS and Stephen SPENDER, in the 1930's. Auden parodied the styles of numerous traditional English poets in his early satirical poetry, and was influenced by a variety of 19th- and 20th-century writers, including W. S. GILBERT, Wilfred OWEN, Gerard Manley HOPKINS, James JOYCE, and T. S. ELIOT. After the outbreak of World War II, his poetry became concerned with questions of philosophy and religion. He had an important influence on a number of young American poets. Works: Poems (1930); THE ORATORS (1932); The Dance of Death (1933); THE DOG BENEATH THE SKIN (1936), with Christopher ISHERWOOD; Letters from Iceland (1937), with Louis MACNEICE; On This Island (1937); Journey to a War (1939), with Christopher ISHERWOOD; Another Time (1940); The Double Man (1941).

Audhumla. In Scandinavian mythology, the cow created by Surtr to nourish YMR. She supplied him with four rivers of milk. Through her licking the salty stones Buri arose; his son, Borr, was the father of Odin.

Audley, John. It is said that in the 18th century a traveling showman named Shuter used to lengthen out his performance till a goodly number of newcomers were waiting for admission. An assistant would then call out, "Is John Audley here?" and the play was brought to an end as soon as possible. Hence the theatrical phrase, We will John Audley it, meaning to abridge, or bring to conclusion, a play in progress.

Audrey. In Shakespeare's As You Like It, an awkward country wench, who jilted William for Touchstone.

Audubon Society. An organization for the protection of birds, named after the noted naturalist, John James Audubon (1780-1851).

au fait (Fr.). Skillful, thorough master of; as, He is quite au fait in those matters, i.e., quite master of them or conversant with them.

Augean stables. The stables of Augeas, the mythological king of Elis, in Greece. In these stables he had kept 3,000 oxen, and they had not been cleansed for thirty years. One of the labors of HERCULES was to cleanse them, and he did so by causing two rivers to run through them. Hence the phrase, to cleanse the Augean stables, means to clear away an accumulated mass of corruption.

Augustan age. The best literary period of a nation; so called from the Emperor Augustus whose period was the most fruitful and splendid time of Latin literature. Horace, Ovid, Propertius, Tibullus, Virgil, etc., flourished in his reign (B. C. 27-14 A. D.).

Augustan age of English Literature. (1) The period of Pope, Addison, Steele, Thomson, and the classical writers of the time of Queen Anne and George I; (2) The Elizabethan period.

Augustan age of France. That of Louis XIV (1610-1740).

Augustan age of Germany Nineteenth century.

Augustan age of Portugal. From John the Great to John III (1385-1557).

Augustina. The Maid of SARAGOSSA.

Augustine, Saint. See under SAINT.

Augustus (Lat. the august one). A title of honor and sacred majesty among the Romans.

Auld Hornie. An epithet of the devil in Scotland. Pan, with his horns, crooked nose, goat's beard, pointed ears, and goat's feet, was transformed by the Scotch into his Satanic majesty. In Scotland and northern England Satan is also Auld Clootie, Auld Hangie, Auld Nick and Auld Ane. The use of Auld seems to imply that he can appear only as an old man.

O thou, whatever title suit thee,
Auld Hornie, Satan, Nick, or Clootie.
Burns.

Auld Kirk. See under FREE KIRK.

auld lang syne. In the olden time, in days gone by. Lang syne is Scotch for "long since." The song called Auld Lang Syne, usually attributed to Robert Burns, is really a new version by him of a very much older song: in Watson's Collection (1711) it is attributed to Francis Sempill (d. 1682), but it is probably even earlier. Burns says in a letter to Thomson, "It is the old song of the olden times, which has never been in print. . . . I took it down from an old man's singing." See also AYTOUN, SIR ROBERT.

Auld Licht Idylls. A volume by J. M. Barrie (1888) sketching in happy vein the peculiarities of one of the strictest Scotch sects. It was followed by An Auld Licht Manse (1893).

Auld Reekie. Edinburgh old town; so called because it generally appears to be capped by a cloud of "reek" or smoke.

Auld Robin Gray. A song written (1771) by Lady Anne Barnard.

Aumonier, Stacy (1887-1928). English writer chiefly noted for short stories. His work was praised by Rebecca West.

aunt. For characters in fiction such as Aunt Norris, Aunt Polly, see under their respective names.

Aunt Sally. A game in which sticks or cudgels are thrown at a wooden head mounted on a pole, the object being to hit the nose of the figure, or break the pipe stuck in its mouth. The word aunt was anciently applied to any old woman; thus, in Shakespeare, Puck speaks of aurora. Early morning. According to Grecian mythology, the goddess Aurora, called by Homer "rosy-fingered," sets out before the sun, and is the pioneer of his rising.

The wisest aunt telling the saddest tale
Midsummer Night's Dream, II 1.

Aurangzeb. One of the greatest of the Mogul emperors of India (1618-1707). He is the hero of Dryden's tragedy Aurengzebe (1675).

aurora borealis. The electrical lights occasionally seen in the northern part of the sky; also called "Northern Lights," and "Merry Dancers." The similar phenomenon that occurs in the south and round the South Pole is known as the aurora australis, or septentrionalis.

Aurora Leigh. A narrative poem by Elizabeth Barrett Browning (1856). The heroine, a talented girl who is left an orphan without financial resource, learns to support herself by her pen. She falls in love with and eventually marries her cousin, Romney Leigh, a man whose passion for social reform has involved him in strange and varied experiences.

Auslander, Joseph (1897-). American poet. Among his books are Cyclop's Eye (1926); The Winged Horse (1927), a story of poetry, with Frank Ernest Hill; and Riders at the Gate (1938).

Austen, Jane (1775-1817). English novelist, known for her delicately satirical portraits of the English country gentry of her time. Her best-known novels are SENSE and SENSI-

BILITY (1811); PRIDE AND PREJUDICE (1813); MANSFIELD PARK (1814); EMMA (1816); NORTHANGER ABBEY, and PERSUASION (both 1818).

Austin, Mary Hunter (1868-1934). American author who wrote chiefly of Indian life in the southwestern region of the U.S. Among her books are The Basket Woman (1904) and The Trail Book (1918), short stories; THE ARROW-MAKER (1911), a play; The Land of Little Rain (1903), The Man Jesus (1915), The American Rhythm (1923), all essays and studies; Starry Adventure (1931), a novel; and Earth Horizon (1932), an autobiography.

Austin Friars. A monastery of Augustinian hermits in London.

Austrian lips. The thick underlip of the Hapsburg family, said to have first appeared with Emperor Maximilian I (1459-1519).

Authorized Version. See BIBLE, ENGLISH.

Authors' League of America and Authors' Guild, included in former. Organizations to protect the rights of authors.

auto. As a Spanish or Portuguese word (from Lat. actus 'an act'), a short dramatic play, originally dealing with Biblical characters. See also under CALDERÓN.

Autobahn (Ger.). In Germany a road with double traffic lanes in each direction separated by a park strip and with no restriction on speed. The Autobahnen were built under Hitler as a network of strategic highways.

Autobiography of Alice B. Toklas. A pretended account of the life of Gertrude Stein's secretary, written by Miss STEIN herself.

Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin. One of Franklin's most popular writings, composition of which was spread over nearly all his life. Parts of it were published in France between 1791 and 1798, but the complete work did not appear until 1868.

Autobiography of Lincoln Steffens. See STEFFENS, LINCOLN.

Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table, The. A famous series of essays contributed by Oliver Wendell HOLMES to the first twelve numbers of the ATLANTIC MONTHLY and published in book form in 1858. It was followed by The Professor at the Breakfast-Table (1860), The Poet at the Breakfast-Table (1872) and Over the Teacups (1890). These witty and entertaining essays record imaginary conversations in a Boston boarding-house.

auto-da-fé (Port. act of faith). A day set apart by the Inquisition for the examination of heretics, or for the carrying into execution of the sentences imposed by it. Those who persisted in their heresy were delivered to the secular arm and usually burnt.

Autolycus. In Greek mythology, son of Mercury, and the craftiest of thieves. He stole the flocks of his neighbors, and changed their marks; but Sisyphus outwitted him by marking his sheep under their feet. Shakespeare uses his name for the rascally peddler in The Winter's Tale, called "a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles."

automatism. In SURREALISM a suspension of the conscious mind to release for expression the repressed ideas and images of the unconscious.

Automedon. According to Homer, the companion and the charioteer of Achilles, but according to Virgil the brother-in-arms of Achilles' son, Pyrrhus. Hence, a coachman.

autonym. One's own name, as opposed to pseudonym. Hence a work published under the author's real name.

Avalon. A Celtic word meaning "the island of apples," and in Celtic mythology applied to the Island of Blessed Souls, an earthly paradise set in the western seas. In the Arthurian legends it is the abode and, according to some versions, burial place of Arthur, who was carried hither by Morgan le Fay. Its identification with GLASTONBURY rests on etymological confusion. Ogier le Dane and Oberon also held their courts at Avalon.

Avare, L' (The Miser). A comedy by Molière (1667). For the plot see Harpgon.

avatar (Sans. avatara, "descent"; hence, the incarnation of a god). In Hindu mythology the advent to earth of a deity in a visible form. The ten avatars of Vishnu are by far the most celebrated. 1st advent (the Matsya), in the form of a fish; 2nd, (the Kurma), in that of a tortoise; 3rd, (the Varaha), of a boar; 4th, (the Narasinha), of a monster, half man and half lion; 5th, (the Vamana), in the form of a dwarf; 6th, (Parashurama), in human form, as Rama with the axe; 7th, (Ramachandra), again as Rama; 8th, as KRISHNA; 9th, as Buddha. These are all past. The 10th advent will occur at the end of four ages, and will be in the form of a white horse (Kalki) with wings, to destroy the earth.

The word is used metaphorically to denote a manifestation or embodiment of some idea or phase.

Avatar of Vishnuland. Rudyard Kipling was so called from a phrase in the poem Waring by Robert Browning.

ave. (Lat., "hail"). Ave atque vale! Hail and farewell; the words of Catullus at his brother's tomb.

Ave is the title of the first and Vale of the last volume of George Moore's autobiographical trilogy Hail and Farewell (1911-1913).

Ave Maria (Lat. Hail, Mary!). The first two words of the angel's salutation to the Virgin Mary (Luke 1. 28). In the Roman Catholic Church the phrase is applied to an invocation to the Virgin beginning with those words; and also to the smaller beads of a rosary, the larger ones being termed paternosters.

Avenel, Lady Alice. In Scott's novel, The Monastery, mother of the heroine, Mary of Avenel.

Mary of Avenel. Heroine of The Monastery and a prominent character in its sequel, The Abbot. She marries Sir Halbert Glendinning.

The White Lady of Avenel. A spirit mysteriously connected with the Avenel family, as the Irish banshee is with true Milesian families. She announces good or ill fortune, and manifests a general interest in the family to which she is attached, but to others she acts with considerable caprice.

Avenging Angels. The Danites, a secret association of Mormons, popularly so called.

Aventine. One of the seven hills of Rome, in early times a haven for refugees.

Avernus. A lake in Campania noted for its sulphurous and mephitic vapors, which gave rise to the belief that it was the entrance to the infernal regions. Through it Odysseus and Aeneas were said to have entered the lower world. Hence, Avernus is used as synonymous with hell, infernal regions.

Averroes (1126-1198). Arabic scholar, author of commentaries on the works of Aristotle, which had an important influence on the Rationalist movement in philosophy in the early 13th century. His works were proscribed by the Catholic Church as heretical.

Avès, the pleasant Isle of. In the refrain of a poem The Last Buccaneer by Charles KINGSLAY. "The pleasant Isle of Avès, beside the Spanish main" was, apparently, a gathering place for buccaneers.

Oh, the palms grew high in Avès, and fruits that shone like gold,
And the colibris and parrots they were gorgeous to behold;
And the negro maids to Avès from bondage fast did flee,
To welcome gallant sailors, a-sweeping in from sea.

Avesta. The Zoroastrian and Parsee Bible, dating in its present form from the last quarter of the 4th century, A.D., collected from the ancient writings, sermons, etc., of Zoroaster (fl. before 800 B.C.), oral traditions, etc. It is only a fragment, and consists of (1) the Yasna, the chief liturgical portion, which includes Gathas, or hymns; (2) the Vispered, another liturgical work; (3) the Vendidad, which, like our Pentateuch, contains the laws; (4) the Yashts, dealing with stories of the different gods; together with prayers and other fragments.

The books are sometimes called the Zend-Avesta from a misunderstanding of the term "Avesta-Zend," which means simply "text and commentary."

Avicenna (980-1036). Arabic doctor and scholar, who wrote commentaries on the writings of Aristotle and was the author of Canon of Medicine, a work used as a textbook of medicine in the Middle Ages.

Avignon captivity, the. The period of the residence of the Popes at Avignon under the control of the French kings, 1305-1377 A.D.

Avon, Bard of. See under BARD.

Awake and Rehearse. See BROMFIELD, LOUIS.

Awake and Sing! A play by Clifford ODETS, produced in 1935, which presents the various frustrations and tragedies among the Bergers, a lower middle class Jewish family living in the Bronx section of New York City. It has been compared with similar dramas by Anton CHEKHOV.

Awakening of Helena Richie, The. A novel by Margaret Deland (Am. 1906).

Awkward Age, The. A novel by Henry James (1899) dealing with the effect of an innocent young girl upon a social set in London.

awkward squad. Military recruits not yet fitted to take their place in the ranks.

axe. He has an axe to grind. Some selfish motive in the background; some personal interest to answer. Franklin tells of a man who wanted to grind his axe, but had no one to turn the grindstone. Going to the yard where he saw young Franklin, he asked the boy to show him how the machine worked, and kept praising him till his axe was ground, and then laughed at him for his pains.

Axel Heyst. In Conrad's VICTORY.

Axel's Castle. See WILSON, EDMUND.

Ayankeeados. Mexican sympathizers with the United States during the war between the two countries in 1846. Literally, the Yankee-fied.

Aylmer. Leading character in THE BIRTH-MARK, a tale by Hawthorne.

Aylmer, Rose, see ROSE AYLMER.

Aymer, Prior. A jovial Benedictine monk, prior of Jorvaulx Abbey in Scott's IVANHOE.

Aymon, The Four Sons of. A medieval French romance belonging to the Charlemagne cycle. Aymon is a semi-mythical hero, and was father of Reynaud (or RINALDO), Guiscard, Alard, and Richard, all of whom were knighted by Charlemagne. The earliest version was probably compiled by Huon de Villeneuve from earlier chansons in the 13th century. The brothers, and their famous horse BAYARD, appear in many poems and romances, including Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered, Pulci's Morgante Maggiore, Boiardo's Orlando Innamorato, Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, etc., and this romance formed the basis of a number of French chap-books.

Ayres, Ruby M. (1883-). English novelist of the type of Miss BRADDON.

Ayrshire Bard. See under BARD.

Ayscough, Mrs. Florence Wheelock (1878-1942). American poet and authority on Chinese literature. Collaborator with Amy Lowell in Four-Flower Tablets.

Aytoun, Sir Robert (1570-1638). Scotch poet at the court of King James I of England. He was private secretary to Queen Anne and a friend of Ben Jonson. He is believed by some to be the author of the original version of AULD LANG SYNE.

Azazel. In Lev. xvi we read that among other ceremonies the high priest, on the Day of Atonement, cast lots on two goats; one lot was for the Lord, and the other lot for Azazel; the goat on which the latter lot fell was the SCAPEGOAT. No satisfactory explanation of the word Azazel has been forthcoming; it may have referred to the scapegoat itself, or the place to which it was sent, or (which seems most likely) to an evil spirit inhabiting the desert. Milton uses the name for the standard-bearer of the rebel angels (Paradise Lost, i. 534). In Mohammedan legend, Azazel is a jinn of the desert. When God commanded the angels to worship Adam, Azazel replied, "Why should the son of fire fall down before a son of clay?" and God cast him out of heaven. His name was then changed to EBLIS, which means "despair."

Azo. In Byron's PARISINA, the husband of Parisina.

Azrael. In Mohammedan legend, the angel that watches over the dying, and takes the soul from the body; the angel of death. He will be the last to die, but will do so at the second trump of the archangel.

the Wings of Azrael. The approach of death; the signs of death coming on the dying.

Aztecs. An ancient Indian people, the early inhabitants of Mexico, known for their architecture and their religion of sun-worship. In the 16th century they were conquered by the Spaniards under Cortez.

Azucena. An old gipsy who stole Manrico, infant son of Garzia, the Conte di Luna's brother in Verdi's opera, IL TROVATORE.

B

B., Mr. In Richardson's Pamela, a gentleman of station who attempts to seduce Pamela but ends by marrying her. He appears only as "Mr. B." in the series of letters which constitutes the novel. In Fielding's JOSEPH ANDREWS, which was started as a burlesque of Pamela, Mr. B has a sister called Lady Booby; and some of the later editions of Pamela have attempted to avoid the implication by giving him the name Boothby.

Baal, plural Baalim. A general name for all the Syrian gods, as Ashtaroth is for the goddesses. Baal is a Semitic word meaning proprietor or possessor, primarily the title of a god as lord of a place (e.g. Baal-peor, lord of Peor), or as possessor of some distinctive characteristic or attribute (e.g. Baal-zebul, or Beelzebub). The worship of the Baalim—for they were legion—was firmly established in Canaan at the time of the Israelites' incursion; the latter adopted many of the Canaanitish rites, and grafted them on to their own worship of Jehovah, Jehovah becoming—especially when worshiped at the "high places"—merely the national Baal. It was this form of worship that Hosea and other prophets denounced as heathenism. Hence a Baal is a false god.

Baba, Ali. The hero of the tale ALI BABA AND THE FORTY THIEVES.

Cassim Baba. Brother of Ali Baba, who entered the cave of the forty thieves, but forgot the pass-word, and stood crying, "Open, Wheat!" "Open, Barley!" to the door, which obeyed no sound but "Open, Sesame!"

Mustapha Baba. A cobbler who sewed together the four pieces into which Cassim Baba's body had been cleft by the forty thieves.

Babalatchi. A one-eyed native of Sambir, father of Aissa and chief adviser of Lakamba, the rajah, in Conrad's OUTCAST OF THE ISLANDS.

Babar. The little elephant in a series of French children's books, written and illustrated by Jean de Brunhoff (1899-1937), which were translated into English and proved very popular in the United States.

Bab Ballads. A book of humorous verse by W. S. GILBERT, published in 1869.

Babbie. The heroine of Baffie's LITTLE MINISTER.

Babbitt. A satirical novel by Sinclair Lewis, published in 1922, which presents a portrait of George F. BABBITT, a prosperous real-estate broker in the Midwestern city of Zenith. He is narrow, self-important, and bound by the conventions of a typical American middle-class businessman of the time. He comes in contact with enlightened ideas on culture, politics, and love and for a time makes an effort to escape the pattern of his life, only to return to it in repentance and relief.

Babbitt, George Folansbee. Hero of Sinclair Lewis' novel BABBITT, whose life and thought are bound by all the platitudes dominant in the Middle West during the 1920's in regard to politics, morality, religion, business, love, and the home. His name became a generic one for the type of American businessman he represented.

Babbitt, Irving (1865-1933). American scholar and leader in the movement of HUMANISM, which attacked the Romantic tradition. His works include Literature and the American College (1908); THE NEW LAOCOON (1910); Rousseau and Romanticism (1919); Democracy and Leadership (1924); On Being Creative (1932).

Babbitt. A term applied to the narrow, conventional, unimaginative, crudely "go-getting" outlook of the type of American businessman represented in Sinclair Lewis' character, George F. BABBITT.

Babcock, Winnifred, nee Eaton. Pseudonym Onoto Watanna (1879-). American writer of stories about Japan. She was born in Nagasaki.

babel. A thorough confusion. A confused uproar, in which nothing can be heard but hubbub. The allusion is to the confusion of tongues at Babel (Gen. xi). According to the narrative the children of men attempted to build a tower that would reach to heaven, and Jehovah, to prevent its completion, "confounded their language" so that they could not understand one another. Hence a Tower of Babel is a visionary scheme.

Babel, Isaak Emmanuilovich (1894-). Russian short story writer whose tales like "The Letter" and "Salt" are known by heart by many Russians. His Story of My Dove-Cote (1925) and the thirty-four sketches in Red Cavalry (1926) relating incidents in Budenny's Volhynia campaign, are his best writing.

Babes, Protecting Deities of. According to Varro, Roman infants were looked after by Vag tanus, the god who caused them to utter their first cry; Fabulinus, who presided over their speech; Cuba, the goddess who protected them in their cots; and Domiduca, who brought young children safe home, and kept guard over them when out of their parents' sight.

Babes in the Wood. Characters in an old English ballad and nursery tale. See CHILDREN. The phrase has been humorously applied to (1) simple trustful folks, never suspicious, and easily gulled; (2) insurrectionary hordes that infested the mountains of Wicklow and the woods of Enniscorthy towards the close of the 18th century; and (3) men in the stocks or in the pillory.

Babeuf, François Émile. Pseudonym Gracchus Babeuf (1760–1797). Journalist during French Revolution who advocated communistic theories (Babouvism). Caught as a conspirator to overthrow Directory and re-establish the constitution of 1793, he cheated the guillotine by stabbing himself.

Babington's conspiracy. Induced by John Ballard, a priest, Anthony Babington (1561–1586) organized a conspiracy in 1586 to murder Queen Elizabeth, lead a Catholic uprising, and release Mary Queen of Scots, whose page he had been, from prison. The plot was detected by Walsingham's spies, and Babington and a dozen others were executed.

Baboon, Lewis. A character in Arbuthnot's political satire The History of John Bull (1712) meant to represent Louis XIV (Lewis Bourbon) and, in a larger sense, the French nation.

babushka. Russian for grandmother. A term of genuinely sentimental connotations not easily expressed by an English word.

Babylon. A city of wealth and luxury, in early times the capital of the Chaldean empire.

the Modern Babylon. So London is sometimes called, on account of its wealth, luxury, and dissipation. Cairo in Egypt was so called by the Crusaders. Rome was so called by the Puritans; and the name has often been given to New York.

the hanging gardens of Babylon. See HANGING.

the whore of Babylon. An epithet bestowed on the Roman Catholic Church by the early Puritans and some of their descendants. The allusion is to Rev. xvii–xix. In the book of the Revelation Babylon stands for the city of the ANTICHRIST.

Babylonian captivity. The seventy years that the Jews were captives in Babylon. They were made captives by Nebuchadnezzar, and released by Cyrus (536 B. C.). Also, a term synonymous with AVIGNON CAPTIVITY.

Baca, the Valley of. An unidentified place mentioned in Ps. lxxxiv. 6, meaning the Valley of Weeping, and so translated in the Revised Version. Baca trees were either mulberry trees or balsams.

Bacchus. A Chaldean or Assyrian word for an earthenware pitcher, cruse, or bottle, taken by Rabelais as the name of the Oracle of the Holy Bottle (and of its priestess), to which PANTAGRUËL and his companions make a famous voyage. The question to be proposed is whether or not Panurge ought to marry. The Holy Bottle answers with a click like the noise made by a glass snapping. Bacchus tells Panurge the noise means trinc (drink), and that is the response, the most direct and positive ever given by the oracle. Panurge may interpret it as he likes; the obscurity will always save the oracle. See ORACLE.

Bacchae, The. A tragedy by Euripides (ca. 485–407 B. C.), considered one of his greatest; a study of religious intoxication. BACCHUS who has just returned from India to his native Thebes, finds King Pentheus determined to put an end to the wild rites of the Bacchantes, of whom his mother Agave is chief. Encouraged by Bacchus, Pentheus goes out to the forests in search of the revelers, and the excited Agave kills him under the delusion that he is a wild beast.

Bacchanalia. The triennial festivals held at night in Rome in honor of Bacchus, called in Greece Dionysia, Dionysus being the Greek equivalent of Bacchus. In Rome, and in later times in Greece, they were characterized by drunkenness, debauchery and licentiousness of all kinds. Hence bacchanalian, drunken. The terms are now applied to any drunken and convivial orgy on the grand scale. Originally these celebrations were very different and are of greater importance than are any other ancient festivals on account of their connection with the origin and development of the drama; for in Attica at the Dionysia choragic literary contests were held, from which both tragedy and comedy originated.

bacchanals, bacchants, bacchantes. Priests and priestesses, or male and female votaries, of Bacchus; hence, drunken roisterers.

Bacchus. In Roman mythology, the god of wine, the Dionysus of the Greeks, son of Zeus and Semele. He is represented in early art as a bearded man and completely clad, but after the time of Praxiteles as a beautiful youth with black eyes, golden locks, flowing with curls about his shoulders and filleted with ivy. In peace his robe was purple, in war he was covered with a panther's skin. His chariot was drawn by panthers.

In the famous statue at the Borghese Palace he has a bunch of grapes in his hand and a panther at his feet. Pliny tells us that, after his conquest of India, Bacchus entered Thebes in a chariot drawn by elephants, and, according to some accounts, he married Ariadne after Theseus had deserted her in Naxos. His return to Thebes is the subject of Euripides' drama THE BACCHAE. In the LUSIAD Camoëns makes Bacchus the guardian power of Mohammedanism and the evil demon of Zeus.

Bacchus sprang from the thigh of Zeus. The tale is that Semele, at the suggestion of Juno, asked Zeus to appear before her in all his glory, but the foolish request proved her death. Zeus saved the child which was prematurely born by sewing it up in his thigh till it came to maturity.

What has that to do with Bacchus? i.e., what has that to do with the matter in hand? When Thespis introduced recitations in the vintage songs, the innovation was suffered to pass, so long as the subject of recitation bore on the exploits of Bacchus; but when, for variety's sake, he wandered to other subjects, the Greeks pulled him up with the exclamation, "What has that to do with Bacchus?" See also MOUTONS.

a priest, or son, of Bacchus. A toper.

Bach, Johann Sebastian (1685-1750). The great German composer, of a family which produced many musicians in the 17th and 18th centuries. He is known for his church music and his work in counterpoint and the fugue, marked by a strong intellectual appeal. His BRANDENBURG CONCERTOS (1721), Passion according to St. Matthew (1728), and Mass in B-Minor (1733) are among the most famous of his works. Bach was a "craftsman of God." In him protestant faith reached its cultural apex.

Bachelor, Irving (1859-). American author of popular novels, including Eben Holden (1900); Silas Strong (1906); A Man for the Ages (1919), concerned with Lincoln; and A Candle in the Wilderness (1930).

bachelor. A man who has not been married. The word is from O.Fr. bachelor, which is from a late Latin word baccalaris. This last may be merely a translation of the French word, as it is only of rare and very late occurrence, but it may be allied to baccalarius, a late Latin adjective applied to farm laborers, the history of which is very doubtful.

In the Prologue to the Canterbury Tales (l. 80), Chaucer uses the word in its old sense of a knight not old enough to display his own banner, and so following that of another.

With him ther was his sone, a young Squyer.
A lovyere, and a lusty bachelor.

Bachelor of Arts. A student who has passed his examinations and has taken the first or lowest degree at a university, but is not yet of standing to be a master. See ARTS; A.B. B.S.

bachelor's buttons. Several flowers are so called. Red bachelor's buttons are the double red campion; yellow, the upright crowfoot; white, the white ranunculus, or white campion.

The similitude these flowers have to the jagged cloath buttons anciently worn . . . gave occasion . . . to call them Bachelor's Buttons.

Gerard, Herbal.

It may have been derived from a custom still sometimes observed by rustics of carrying the flower in their pockets to know how they stand with their sweethearts. If the flower dies, it is a bad omen; but if it does not fade, they may hope for the best; hence, to wear bachelor's buttons, to remain a bachelor.

bachelor's fare. Bread and cheese and kisses.

bachelor's porch. An old name for the north door of a church. Menservants and poor men used to sit on benches down the north aisle, and maidservants and poor women on the south side. After service the men formed one line and the women another, down which the clergy and gentry passed.

a bachelor's wife. A hypothetical ideal or perfect wife.

Bachelors' wives and maids' children be well taught.
Heywood, Proverbs.

Bachelor of Salamanca, The. A novel by LE SAGE (1736). The hero, Don Cherubim de la Ronda, a bachelor of arts, is placed in a vast number of different situations of life, and made to associate with all classes of society, that the author may sprinkle his satire and wit in every direction.

back. To support with money, influence, or encouragement: as to "back a friend." A commercial term meaning to endorse.

back and edge. Entirely, heartily, tooth and nail, with might and main. The reference is to a wedge driven home to split wood.

back and fill. A mode of tacking, when the tide is with the vessel and the wind against it. Metaphorically, to be irresolute.

break the back of a thing. To surmount the hardest part.

his back is up. He is angry, he shows that he is annoyed. The allusion is to a cat, which sets its back up when attacked by a dog or other animal.

get one's back up. To be irritated.

have his back at the wall. To act on the defensive against odds.

turn one's back on another. To leave, forsake or neglect him.

behind my back. When I was not present; when my back was turned; surreptitiously.

laid on one's back. Laid up with chronic ill-health; helpless.

thrown on his back. Completely worsted. A figure taken from wrestlers.

take a back seat. To withdraw into a less prominent position. The phrase was popularized by Andrew Johnson, president of the United States, in 1868.

Back Bay. A fashionable residential section of Boston, whose name came to be synonymous with the New England aristocracy who made it their home.

Backbite, Sir Benjamin. In Sheridan's comedy, THE SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL, the nephew of Crabtree, very conceited and very censorious. His friends call him a great poet and wit, but he has never published anything, because it is "very vulgar to print."

Backfisch (Ger.). An immature, yet mature girl in her teens. A FLAPPER. The word means "fried fish" and its application to a girl is to be associated with appetizing crispness.

backgammon. A very old game played by two persons on a board of two "tables" hinged together. Each side has twelve triangles of alternating colors. Formerly called tables.

back number. A person whose ideas or methods are as out of date as a back number of a magazine or newspaper.

Backs, the. Grounds sloping to the river Cam from the backs of certain colleges at Cambridge University, England.

back-seat driver. A passenger in an automobile, especially a wife, who insists on giving instructions to the driver. A term popularized in the jokes and comic strips of the 1920's. A back-seat driver is a person giving instructions in a matter he (or more often she), knows nothing about.

back slang. A species of slang which consists in pronouncing the word as though spelled backwards. Thus police becomes ecilop (hence the term slop for a policeman), parsnips spin-sap, and so on. It was formerly much used by London costermongers. Cf. also its use in advertising. E.g., Scrutan, a laxative.

backstair influence. Private or unrecognized influence. It was customary to build royal palaces with a staircase for state visitors, and another for those who sought the sovereign upon private matters.

backstrip. The usually narrow portion of a book cover connecting the front and back boards or sides.

Back to Methuselah. A comedy by George Bernard Shaw, produced in 1921. It is a satirical fantasy on the perfectibility of the human race and scientific prolongation of life. Its scenes are laid in the Garden of Eden, in the political England of the time the play was written, and in successive stages of the future, when the life-span has been increased and mankind has become almost wholly intellect, with no need for food, sleep, or attention to the body.

Backward Glance O'er Travel'd Roads, A. Prose epilogue to Walt Whitman's book of poems LEAVES OF GRASS.

bacon

baste one's bacon. To strike or scourge. Bacon is the outside portion of the sides of pork, and may be considered generally as the part which would receive a blow.

save one's bacon. To save oneself from injury; to escape loss. The allusion may be to the care taken by our forefathers to save from the numerous dogs that frequented their houses the bacon which was laid up for winter.

bring home the bacon. A phrase derived from the colloquial use of the word bacon as a desirable result or prize.

Bacon, Francis (1561-1626). Famous English philosopher and statesman, appointed Lord Chancellor under James I in 1618, and created Baron Verulam in 1618 and Viscount St. Albans in 1621. He carried on scientific and philosophic investigations and planned to reorganize on an experimental and inductive basis the systems of thought and the practical methods of obtaining power over nature that were current in his day. He was violently opposed to reasoning from authority and the syllogistic quibbling to which Scholastic philosophy had declined in the early 17th century, and argued always for clarity of observation and the development of keen critical faculties of mind. Most of his work on philosophy and science was written in Latin. Bacon's most important writings are THE ADVANCEMENT OF LEARNING (1605); NOVUM ORGANUM (1620); De Augmentis Scientiarum (1623); Sylva Sylvarum (1624); and NEW ATLANTIS (1624). He is best-known in the field of literature for his series of Essays, published in 1597, 1612, and 1625.

Bacon, Josephine Dodge Daskam (1876-). Author of much light fiction, best of which is the story of The House by the Road (1937). Her short stories include The Madness of Philip (1902) and The Strange Cases of Dr. Stanchon (1913).

Bacon, Leonard (1887-). American poet and critic, known chiefly for satire. Pulitzer prize in 1941 for his book of poems Sunderland Capture. Author of remarkably sustained long poems and an autobiography, Semi-Centennial.

Bacon, Nathaniel. See BACON'S EPITAPH and BACON'S REBELLION.

Bacon, Peggy (1895-). American illustrator and artist, known for her satirical etchings and drawings. See BROOK, ALEXANDER.

Bacon, Roger. An English monk of the 13th century (1214-1292) noted for his scientific experiments which caused him to be regarded as a wizard in league with the devil. He is a popular character in legend and is the central figure in Greene's comedy Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay (1594). Bacon is particularly famed for his BRAZEN HEAD.

Baconian philosophy. A system of philosophy based on principles laid down by the English philosopher Francis BACON in the second book of his Novum Organum.

Baconian theory. The theory (now discredited) that Lord Bacon wrote the plays attributed to Shakespeare. One who holds this theory is known as a Baconian.

Baconists. A name given to the liberals in Virginia and Maryland at the end of the 17th century, after Nathaniel Bacon, the Virginia rebel. See BACON'S EPITAPH and BACON'S REBELLION.

Bacon's Epitaph. An elegiac poem on the death of Nathaniel Bacon (1647-1676), the leader of BACON'S REBELLION, "made by his man." Except for the indication that the author was probably a personal servant, nothing is known about the poem. It is considered by some critics to be the best example of verse written in the American colonies before the revolution.

Bacon's Rebellion. An armed expedition (1676) of the Virginia colonists, led by Nathaniel Bacon, a planter, against the tyrannical English governor William Berkeley and the hostile Indians of the region. See also BACON'S EPITAPH and BURWELL PAPERS.

Bactrian sage. Zoroaster, or Zarathustra, the founder of the Perso-Iranian religion, who is supposed to have flourished in Bactria (the modern Balkh) before 800 B. C.

Bad Child's Book of Beasts, The. See BELLOC, JOSEPH HILAIRE PIERRE.

Badebec. In Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, wife of Gargantua and mother of Pantagruel. She dies in giving him birth, or rather in giving birth at the same time to 900 dromedaries laden with ham and smoked tongues, 7 camels laden with eels, and 25 wagons full of leeks, garlic, onions and shallots.

Badger, Mr. Bayham. In Dickens' BLEAK HOUSE, a medical practitioner, at Chelsea, under whom Richard CARSTONE pursues his studies.

Badger State. Wisconsin. See under STATES.

Bad Girl. A best-selling novel of the loves of a city typist by Viña Delmar (1928).

Badinguet. A nickname given to Napoleon III. It is said to be the name of the workman whose clothes he wore when he contrived to escape from the fortress of Ham, in 1846.

Bad Lands. From French Mauvaises Terres or Terres Mauvaises. Barren regions with fossil deposits in Dakota and Nebraska. As a common name, the term badlands is applied to similar regions west of Missouri. They are extensive tracts of sterile, alkali hills, rocky, desolate, and almost destitute of vegetation.

Badman, Mr. The leading character in Bunyan's allegory THE LIFE AND DEATH OF MR. BADMAN.

badminton. A popular game similar to tennis, in which shuttlecocks are used in place of balls. The name derives from that of the county seat of the Duke of Beaufort in Gloucestershire.

Badoglio, Pietro (1871-). Italian army man. Promoted general at end of World War I; signed armistice for Italy; Marshal 1926; Governor General of Libya (1928-1933); commanded Italian forces in Ethiopian campaign (1935-1936); after collapse of Mussolini in World War II became his successor; in surrender of Italy, signed armistice secretly, July 1943, naming King to replace Mussolini. Italy surrendered too late to gain peace and German troops occupied the country until the Allies finally made them surrender.

Badon, or Mount Badon. In Arthurian legend, the place of King Arthur's great victory over the pagan Saxon invaders.

Badoura. In the Arabian Nights, the daughter of Gaiour, king of China, the "most beautiful woman ever seen upon earth." She marries Prince Camaralzaman with whom, by fairy influence, she falls in love and exchanges rings in a dream.

Badroulboudour. In the Arabian Nights, the daughter of the sultan of China, a beautiful brunette. She becomes the wife of ALADDIN, but twice nearly causes his death; once by exchanging "the wonderful lamp" for a new copper one, and once by giving hospitality to the false Fatima.

Baedeker. Now almost synonymous with "guide book." From the name of the German printer Karl Baedeker (1801-1859), who began the publication of a widely known series of guide books.

Baedeker bombing. In World War II, the seemingly wanton destruction by air bombardment of cultural monuments, as in Coventry, Cologne, etc.

bag.

bag and baggage, as "get away with you, bag and baggage," i.e. get away, and carry with you all your belongings. Originally a military phrase signifying the whole property and stores of an army and of the soldiers composing it. Baggage is an old contemptuous term for a woman, either because soldiers send their wives in the baggage wagons, or from the Italian bagascia (a harlot), French bagasse, Spanish bagaso, Persian, bagā. In 1876 Gladstone, speaking on the Eastern question, said, "Let the Turks now carry away their abuses in the only possible manner, namely, by carrying away themselves. . . . One and all, bag and baggage, shall, I hope, clear out from the province they have desolated and profaned."

This was for a time known as the bag and baggage policy.

a bag of bones. Very emaciated; generally "A mere bag of bones."

a bag of tricks or a whole bag of tricks. Numerous expedients.

Bagarag, Shibli. In THE SHAVING OF SHAGPAT by George Meredith, the young man who shaves Shagpat.

Bagshot, Walter (1826-1877). English economist. Author of books of analysis by a scientific observer.

Bagheera. The black panther in Kipling's stories of Mowgli in the Jungle Books.

Bagnold, Enid. English novelist. Anonymous author of Serena Blandish or The Difficulties of Getting Married, by "A Lady of Quality," a great success in 1925, dramatized three years later by S. N. Behrman. Her best known novel is National Velvet which has been made into a very successful moving picture. She is the wife of Sir Roderick Jones, Chairman of Reuter's News Agency. Her brother, Major Ralph Bagnold, is a world authority on sand particles and dune formation.

Bagot, William. The hero of Du Maurier's TRILBY, best known by his nickname of LITTLE BILLIE.

Bagstock, Major Joe. In Dickens' novel, DOMBEY AND SON, an apoplectic retired military officer, living in Princess's Place, opposite to Miss Tox. He speaks of himself as "Old Joe Bagstock," "Old Joey," "Old J.," "Old Josh," "Rough and tough Old Jo," "J. B.," "Old J. B.," and so on. He is given to over-eating, and to abusing his poor native servant.

Bahaism. Doctrines of the Bahais, emphasizing the spiritual unity of mankind, advocating universal peace, and imbued with mild Oriental mysticism. Succeeding the Persian religious sect of Babism.

Bahay. In TAGALOG, a house.

He lived in a nipa bahay
That served as a stable and sty.
Army song of the Philippines.

Baïf, Antoine de (1531-1592). French poet, member of the PLÉIADE, who founded an Academy for musicians and poets and tried to reform the prosody of his time. He invented a line consisting of fifteen syllables, called the vers baïfin, but it never achieved widespread adoption.

bailey. The outer wall of a feudal castle. Old Bailey. An ancient prison in London.

Bailey, Henry Christopher (1878-). English detective story writer whose sleuth is "plump, drawling Reggie Fortune," hero of many cases and now in A Reggie Fortune Omnibus (1942).

Bailey, Nathan or Nathaniel (?-1742). An Universal Etymological English Dictionary (1721) by Bailey marks the beginning of modern English lexicography in the sense of objective registration of the complete body of words in the language. It served as the point of departure for Dr. JOHNSON's famous work.

Bailey, Philip James (1816-1902). Author of FESTUS (1839), based on the story of FAUST.

Bailey, Temple. American popular novelist from Virginia.

Bailey, Tom. Hero of Thomas Bailey Aldrich's The Story of Bad Boy, obviously meant for the author.

Bailiff's Daughter of Islington. An old ballad of true love told in Percy's Reliques of English Poetry, ii. 8.

bailiwick. Used colloquially for one's special domain. Literally the jurisdiction of a bailie or bailiff. Wick is an old word for village, vicinity, etc. and survives in combinations like Warwick, Greenwich, etc.

Baillie, Gabriel. The nephew of Meg Merrilies in Scott's GUY MANNERING. The gipsies knew him as Gabriel Faa and the people of Liddesdale as Tod Gabbie or Hunter Gabbie.

Baillie, or Bailly, Harry. Host of the Tabard Inn at Southwark in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales.

Baily's beads. When the disc of the moon has (in an eclipse) reduced that of the sun to a thin crescent, the crescent assumes the appearance somewhat resembling a string of beads. This was first described in detail by Francis Baily in 1836, whence the name of the phenomenon, the cause of which is the sun shining through the depressions between the lunar mountains.

Bairam. The name given to two great Mohammedan feasts. The Lesser begins on the new moon of the month Shawwal, at the termination of the fast of Ramadan, and lasts three days. The Greater is celebrated on the tenth day of the twelfth month (Dhul Hijja), lasts for four days, and forms the concluding ceremony of the pilgrimage to Mecca. It comes seventy days after the Lesser Bairam.

Bairnsfather, Bruce (1887-). Creator of the famous "Old Bill" cartoons in World War I whence came his play, The Better 'Ole.

Bajardo. See BAYARD.

Bakeless, John Edwin (1894-). American biographer noted for his Christopher Marlowe (1937) Daniel Boone (1939), and Lewis & Clark (1947).

Baker, the. Louis XVI was called "the baker" (le boulanger), the queen was called "the baker's wife" (la boulangère), and the dauphin the "shop boy" (le garçon de boutique); because they gave bread to the mob of starving men and women who came to Versailles on October 6, 1789.

Baker, Mrs. Dorothy (Dodds) (1907-) wrote a highly praised first novel, Young Man with a Horn (1938), based on the life of Leon (Bix) Beiderbecke, the swing musician.

Baker, George Pierce (1866-1935). American teacher of play writing at Harvard and Yale, noted for his "47 Workshop," so called because it figured as "English 47" in the college catalogue. Dramatic Technique is his best-known book.

Baker, Newton Diehl (1871-1937). President Wilson's Secretary of War, although he had declared himself a pacifist. Acted throughout World War I and won the praise of General Pershing and the Allied Commanders. A true and faithful servant of his country. Influenced Wendell Willkie.

Baker, Ray Stannard (1870-1946). American journalist and author. He wrote Woodrow Wilson and World Settlement (1922), and his Woodrow Wilson, Life and Letters (1927-1939) was awarded the Pulitzer prize for biography in 1940. Adventures in Contentment (1907) was published under the pseudonym of David Grayson, followed by Adventures in Friendship and other similar collections of familiar essays. See also MUCKRAKERS.

baker's dozen. Thirteen. When a heavy penalty was inflicted for short weight, bakers used to give a surplus number of loaves, called the inbread, to avoid all risk of incurring the fine. The 13th was the "vantage loaf."

baksheesh. Persian for gratuity, tip, used throughout the Orient; also spelled bakshish.

Bakst, Leon Nikolaevich (1866?-1924). Original surname Rosenberg. Russian painter and decorative artist. Chief artist for scenery and costumes for Russian ballets produced by DIAGHILEV.

Bakunin, Mikhail A. (1814-1876). Russian leader who advocated revolutionary anarchism. Established nihilism in Russia. Was in U.S. in 1861. Major work God and the State (1882).

Balaam. (1) In the Old Testament (Numb. xxii-xxiii), a prophet whom Balak, king of Moab, had persuaded to prophesy against the Israelites. On the way to utter the curse, the ass upon which Balaam was riding stopped short in a narrow pass and could not be forced to go on. "And Jehovah opened the mouth of the ass, and she said unto Balaam, What have I done unto thee that thou hast smitten me these three times . . . Then Jehovah opened the eyes of Balaam and he saw the angel of Jehovah standing in the way." Balaam and his ass were favorite characters in the early mystery plays on Biblical themes.

(2) Matter kept in type for filling up odd spaces in periodicals. Lockhart, in his Life of Scott (ch. lxx) tells us:

Balaam is the cant name for asinine paragraphs about monstrous productions of nature and the like, kept standing in type to be used whenever the real news of the day leaves an awkward space that must be filled up somehow.

Hence Balaam basket or box; the printer's slang term for the receptacle for such matter, and also for the place where stereotyped "fill-ups" are kept.

Balafré, le (Fr. the gashed). Henri, second Duke of Guise (1550-1588). In the Battle of Dormans he received a sword-cut which left a frightful scar on his face. Henri's son, François, third Duke of Guise, also earned the same title; and it was given by Scott in QUENTIN DURWARD to Ludovic Lesly, an old archer of the Scottish Guard.

Balan. The name of a strong and courageous giant in many old romances. In FIERABRAS the "Sowdan of Babylon," he is father of Fierabras, ultimately conquered by Charlemagne. In the Arthurian cycle, he is brother of BALIN.

Balance, the. Libra, an ancient zodiacal constellation between Scorpio and Virgo; also the 7th sign of the zodiac, which now contains the constellation Virgo, and which the sun enters a few days before the autumnal equinox.

balance of power. A policy of preventing one nation from gaining so much power that it will be in a position to threaten the security of other nations. It was formulated by Prince Metternich at the Congress of Vienna in 1815, and became a leading principle of the continental policy of Great Britain with regard to France and Germany. In European history after Napoleon it played an important part in the wars and shifting diplomatic alliances of the nations on the continent. Many observers foresee a revival of this principle in the relation of Great Britain to Russia and the U.S.

Balanchine, George (1904-). Russian-born dancer and choreographer. Danced in state theaters of Russia, toured Germany, joined Ballets Russes de Sergei DIAGHILEV, came to U.S. (1933). With Metropolitan Opera House, New York City (1934-1937); helped organize School of American Ballet (1934). Choreography for motion pictures and plays. Married Vera Zorina (1938).

Balaustion. An imaginary character of ancient Greece in Browning's Balaustion's Adventure (1871) and Aristophanes' Apology, including a Transcript from Euripides, being the last Adventure of Balaustion (1875). Balaustion's Adventure is for the most part a free version of Euripides' drama Alceste.

Balbec. A shore resort frequently referred to in Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST.

Balbo, Italo (1896-1940). Italian aviator and statesman. Embraced Fascism in Ferrara (1919). Commanded mass transatlantic flights to Brazil (1929) and the U.S. (summer, 1933). Killed in air crash over Tobruk (June, 1940).

Balboa, Vasco Nuñez de (1475-1517) The discoverer of the Pacific Ocean in 1513, a member of the expedition to Mexico made by the Spanish conqueror Cortez. Balboa was later executed on a charge of treason, for having usurped command of the smaller expedition during which he made his discovery.

Balcony Stories. See KING, GRACE ELIZABETH.

Baldassarre Calvo. In George Eliot's Romola. See CALVO.

Balder. Son of Odin and Frigga; the Scandinavian god of light, who dwelt at Breidhablik, one of the mansions of Asgard. He is the central figure of many myths, the chief being connected with his death. He is said to have been slain by his rival Hoder while fighting for possession of the beautiful Nanna, Hoder having obtained Miming's sword, by which alone Balder could be wounded. Another legend tells that Frigga bound all things by oath not to harm him, but accidentally omitted the mistletoe. Loki learnt this, and armed his blind brother Hoder with a mistletoe twig, with which, after all else had been tried, Balder was slain. His death brought general consternation to the gods, and formed the prelude to their final overthrow.

Among modern poems written around the Balder legend are Matthew Arnold's Balder Dead, William Morris' Funeral of Balder in The Lovers of Gudrun, Robert Buchanan's Balder the Beautiful and Longfellow's Tegner's Drapa.

Balderston, John Lloyd (1889-). Anglo-American playwright, author of Berkeley Square (1929).

Balderstone, Caleb. In Scott's BRIDE OF LAMMERMOOR, the loyal but tedious old butler of the master of Ravenswood, at Wolf's Crag Tower. His ingenuity in concealing the signs of poverty is only equaled by the faithfulness with which he serves the Ravenswoods in their misfortunes without hope of reward. Hence a Caleb Balderstone is a loyal servant.

Baldwin. (1) In the Charlemagne romances, nephew of Roland and the youngest and comeliest of Charlemagne's paladins.

(2) Brother of Godfrey of Bouillon, whom he succeeded (1100) as king of Jerusalem. He figures in Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED as the restless and ambitious Duke of Bologna, leader of 1,200 horse in the allied Christian army. He died in Egypt in 1118.

Baldwin, Faith (1893-). A "circulating-library" novelist, lightly sophisticated and extremely popular.

Baldwin, Stanley. 1st Earl of Bewdley (1867-1947). Conservative Prime Minister of England and First Lord of the Treasury (1923-1924, 1924-1929, 1935-1937).

Balearic Islands. In Spanish Baleares. The isles of Majorca, Minorca, and Iviza in the Mediterranean Sea, off the coast of Valencia. In Caesar's time the men were noted as slingers.

Balestier, Charles Wolcott (1861-1891). American publisher and writer. Collaborated with Rudyard Kipling in The Naulahka. His sister, Caroline, married Kipling.

Balfe, Michael William (1808-1870). Irish composer. His chief opera is THE BOHEMIAN GIRL.

Balfour, David. See KIDNAPPED and DAVID BALFOUR.

Balfour, John, 3rd Baron of Burley (d. 1688). Confused with John Balfour of Kinloch. In Scott's Old Mortality, a bold and violent leader of the Covenanters' army. He is disguised for a time as Quentin Mackell of Irongray.

Balfour Declaration. A statement issued by the British Government on Nov. 2, 1917, declaring that they "view with favor the establishment in Palestine of a National Home for the Jewish people, and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of that object." The declaration was so called from the English statesman, Sir Arthur James Balfour (1848-1930), who was also a philosophical and political writer. See also ZIONISM.

Bali. (1) An island in the Dutch East Indies, east of Java, known for the highly developed handcraft art of the natives.

(2) In the Ramayana, a king of the monkeys.

(3) See BALY.

Balin. Brother to Balan in the Arthurian romances. They were devoted to each other, but they accidentally met in single combat and slew each other, neither knowing until just before death who was his opponent. At their request they were buried in one grave by Merlin. The story is told in Malory, Bk. ii. Tennyson gives a much altered version in the Idylls of the King.

Baliol or Balliol. A famous college at Oxford founded by John de Baliol (died 1269).

Balisarda. In Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, a famous sword made in the garden of Oragna by the sorceress Falerina. It will cut through even enchanted substances, and was given to Rogero for the express purpose of "dealing Orlando's death."

He knew with Balisarda's lightest blows,
Nor helm, nor shield, nor cuirass could avail,
Nor strongly tempeied plate, nor twisted mail
Bk. xxiii

Balkans, the. States of the Balkan Peninsula and mountain range: Bulgaria, Rumania, Serbia, etc. The Balkan Wars of 1912-1913 preceded World War I. Because of the complex nature of Balkan politics, the term Balkan question is a standing phrase. The Balkans are often called the powder keg of Europe. Cf. also expressions like the Balkanization of Germany, the Balkans of South America, etc.

Balkis. The Mohammedan name for the Queen of Sheba, who visited Solomon.

Ball, John (1861-1940). British golf champion.

ballad. An old narrative song, chiefly of popular origin, of which the refrain is a prominent feature. Ballads are written in so-called ballad meter, i.e., in alternating lines of iambic tetrameter and iambic trimeter, as in the following:

Then first | he kissed | her pale, | pale cheek
And syne | he kissed | her chin
And syne | he kissed | her wane | wane lips
There was | na breath | within.
Anonymus, The Lass of Lochroyan.

There are several types of ballad: the "domestic tragedy," concerned with a neighborhood occurrence, especially a murder or family feud; the historical ballad, dealing with actual historical events; the outlaw ballad, celebrating a popular rebel against established law, such as ROBIN HOOD or the American JESSE JAMES; the "coronach" or lament ballad, lyric and elegiac in character; and the ballad making use of ancient and universal folk-lore themes, especially a supernatural love affair. See also BROADSIDE BALLADS. Coronach and historical ballads and those involving romance elements were usually composed by minstrels attached to noblemen's courts and written with a sense of literary values for a definite audience. The other types were products of the unlettered classes, transmitted by oral tradition, and written with little attempt at artistic finish. In the U.S., many folk ballads are survivals or variants of the old English ballads, but there are a number of indigenous types, dealing with occupational pursuits, such as CASEY JONES, with the Negroes and other national or racial groups, such as JOHN HENRY, with various sections of the country, with battles, and with actual or legendary heroes.

The best English ballads date from the 14th to the 16th centuries and are to be found in such anthologies as Percy's Reliques of Ancient Poetry, Child's English and Scottish Popular Ballads, etc. There are many modern literary ballads in the old form, among the best known of which are Campbell's Lord Ullin's Daughter, Scott's Rosabelle and Rossetti's Sister Helen. Among the best collections of American ballads is AMERICAN SONGBAG, compiled by Carl Sandburg.

ballade. A verse form, frequently represented in French literature. It consists most often of three stanzas of eight or ten lines apiece and an envoy of four, five, or six lines. Three or four rimes only occur throughout the poem, and the same refrain ends each stanza. Chaucer is thought to have written the first ballades in English. Swinburne's A Ballad of Dreamland is a good example of this form.

Ballade des dames du temps jadis. See BALLAD OF DEAD LADIES.

Ballad of Dead Ladies, The. A translation (1869) by the English poet Dante Gabriel ROSSETTI of the famous Ballade des dames du temps jadis, written by the French medieval poet François VILLON.

Ballad of Reading Gaol, The. A poem by OSCAR WILDE. A study of a man condemned to die, its background is drawn from the author's own experiences in the prison named in the title.

Ballads and Barrack-Room Ballads. A volume of poems by RUDYARD KIPLING (1892), many of them in Cockney dialect. It contains Danny Deeveer, Fuzzy Wuzzy and THE ROAD TO MANDALAY, among others.

Ballad Upon a Wedding. See SUCKLING, SIR JOHN.

Ballambangjan, the Straits of. A sailor's joke for a place where he may lay any wonderful adventure. These straits, he will tell us, are so narrow that a ship cannot pass through without jamming the tails of the monkeys which haunt the trees on each side of the strait; or any other rigmarole which his fancy may conjure up at the moment.

Ballantyne, Robert Michael (1825-1894). Scottish writer of "story books for young folks," including The Gorilla Hunters.

Ballengeigh, Guidman. The name assumed by the Scotch James V when out in disguise on his adventures among the people.

ballet russe (Fr.) The Russian ballet. The ballet today has an entire literature of its own. The Englishman, Arnold Haskell, and American, Lincoln Kirstein, have contributed considerably to it.

Ballhausplatz or Ballplatz. The Foreign Office of the former Austro-Hungarian Government, from the name of the street in Vienna in which it was situated.

Balloon Hoax, The. Fictitious account of the flight of a balloon from Wales to South Carolina, devised by Edgar Allan Poe and published in the New York Sun (April 13, 1844) as a genuine news story.

balls, three golden. The well-known sign of the pawnbroker; originally the cognizance of the great Lombard family of the Medici, the Lombards being the first recognized moneylenders in England. They are said to have represented three gilded pills, in allusion to the Medici's old profession of medicine; but see Mugello.

ballyhoo. An American term for the shouts of a circus barker. Also applied to any loud publicity. In 1931 a magazine was published in the United States called Ballyhoo. It satirized advertising and the political scene.

balm (Fr. baume, a contraction of balsam). Is there no balm in Gilead? (Jer. viii. 22). Is there no remedy, no consolation? "Balm" in this passage is the Geneva Bible's translation of the Heb. sori, which probably means mastic, the resin yielded by the mastic tree, Pistacia Lentiscus, which was formerly an ingredient used in many medicines. In Wyclif's Bible the word is translated "gumme," and in Coverdale's "triacle." Balm of Gilead is also a name given to the black or balsam poplar.

Balmawhapple. A stubborn Scotch laird in Scott's WAVERLEY.

Balmoral. Castle in Aberdeen County The royal residence in Scotland. Also a kind of figured woolen petticoat showing below a looped-up skirt. Also a kind of boot or high-topped shoe, lacing in front.

Balmung. In the NIBELUNGENLIED, the sword of Siegfried, forged by Volund, the smith of the Scandinavian gods. In a trial of merit, Volund cleaves Amilias (a brother smith) to the waist; but so fine is the cut that Amilias is not even conscious of it till he attempts to move, when he falls apart into two pieces.

Balni-Barbi. The land of projectors and inventors visited by Gulliver in Swift's GULLIVER'S TRAVELS (1726).

baloney, boloney. Something pretentious but worthless; bunk; hokey. American slang. Cf. the German expression das ist mir Wurst, literally "that is sausage to me," meaning "it has no significance for me."

Baloo. The bear, in Kipling's stories of Mowgli in the Jungle Books. Actual North Indian for bear.

Balor. In Celtic myth a giant whose eye blighted all on whom it was turned.

balsa. South American. A raft built over balsa logs or inflated hides. The balsa tree is also called corkwood. Its wood is actually lighter than cork, easy to carve, and yet quite strong. Hence its use in airplane models and the like.

Balsamo, Giuseppe. See CAGLIOSTRO.

Balthazar. (1) A merchant, in Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

(2) A name assumed by Portia, in Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

(3) Servant to Romeo, in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

(4) Servant to Don Pedro, in Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing.

(5) One of the three MAGI.

Balue, Cardinal. A historical character of great influence in the court of Louis XI of France (1420-1491), introduced by Scott into his QUENTIN DURWARD. After his downfall he was imprisoned for eleven years in a cage he had himself devised.

Balwhidder, Rev. Micah. In Galt's Annals of the Parish (1821), a Scotch Presbyterian pastor, filled with all the old-fashioned national prejudices, but sincere, kind-hearted, and pious. He is one of the famous clergymen of fiction.

Baly or Bali. One of the ancient and gigantic kings of India, who founded the city called by his name. He redressed wrongs, upheld justice, was generous and charitable, so that at death he became one of the judges of hell. One day a dwarf, named Vamen, asked the mighty monarch to allow him to measure three of his own paces for a hut to dwell in. Baly smiled, and bade him measure out what he required. The first pace of the dwarf compassed the whole earth, the second the whole heavens, and the third the infernal regions. Baly at once perceived that the dwarf was Vishnu, and adored the present deity. Vishnu made the king "Governor of Padalon" or hell, and permitted him once a year to revisit the earth, on the first full moon of November. See also BALI.

Balzac, Honoré de (1799-1850). Great French novelist, founder of the school of vast, carefully documented, minutely detailed studies of contemporary society which distinguished the prose fiction of France during the 19th and early 20th centuries, and influenced American and English literature to an important degree. Critics have found in him a transitional figure between ROMANTICISM and REALISM, evidenced by the combination in his work of melodramatic situations, violent passions, extreme individualism, purple rhetoric, and mysticism, with meticulous detail, scientific viewpoint, comprehensiveness of scope, accuracy of setting and documentation, and faithful portraiture of ordinary and undistinguished lives. He wrote voluminously, devoted long hours to his literary labors, and prospered materially as an author. His masterpiece, COMÉDIE HUMAINE, occupied twenty years of his life and represents an attempt to apply the methods of scientific study and classification, particularly those used in biology, to a fictional portrait of society. Among the most outstanding in this series of novels are Eugénie Grandet, Le Père Goriot, and La Recherche de l'Absolu (see CLAES) (1833-1834); and César Birotteau (1837). Balzac was also the author of Contes Drôlatiques (Droll Stories) (1833), a collection of stories of the FABLIAUX type.

Bamberg Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

bambino. A picture or image of the infant Jesus, swaddled (It. bambino, a little boy). The most celebrated is that in the church of Santa Maria in the Ara Coeli of Rome.

Ban. In Arthurian legend the King of Brittany and father of Lancelot.

Banagher. A town in Ireland, on the Shannon (King's County). It formerly sent two members to Parliament, and was a pocket borough. When a member of Parliament spoke of a rotten borough, he could devise no stronger expression than that beats Banagher, which passed into a household phrase.

Banba. A poetic name for Ireland. From the name of a mythical queen.

Bancroft, George (1800-1891). American statesman, diplomat, and scholar, both Secretary of Navy and Secretary of War during his lifetime, and author of a famous History of the United States (1834-1876).

Bandar-log. In Kipling's Jungle Books, the monkey race shown as chattering and poseurs.

bandbox, he looks as if he were just out of a. He is so neat and precise, so carefully got up in his dress and person, that he looks like some company dress, carefully kept in a bandbox.

neat as a bandbox. Neat as clothes folded and put by in a bandbox.

the bandbox plot. Rapin (History of England, iv, 297) tells us that a bandbox was sent to the lord-treasurer, in Queen Anne's reign, with three pistols charged and cocked, the triggers being tied to a pack-thread fastened to the lid. When the lid was lifted, the pistols would go off and shoot the person who opened the lid. He adds that Dean Swift happened to be by at the time the box arrived, and seeing the pack-thread, cut it, thereby saving the life of the lord-treasurer.

Bandello, Matteo (1480?-1562). Writer of Italian novelle, which were translated into French and supplied material for several Shakespearean and other Elizabethan plays.

Bandusian spring, see FONS BANDUSIAE.

Bangorian Controversy. A theological paper-war stirred up by a sermon preached March 31, 1717, before George I, by Dr.

Hoadley, Bishop of Bangor, on the text, "My kingdom is not of this world," the argument being that Christ had not delegated His power or authority to either king or clergy. The sermon was printed by royal command; it led to such discord in Convocation that this body was prorogued, and from that time till 1852 was allowed to meet only as a matter of form.

Bankhead, Tallulah Brockman (1903-). Brilliant American actress, daughter of the late W. B. Bankhead, speaker of the House of Representatives (1936-1940). Actress in London (1923-1931), in New York (from 1933). Most recent success, THE SKIN OF OUR TEETH by Thornton Wilder (1942 Pulitzer prize).

bank night. A copyrighted form of lottery in moving picture theaters with a drawing for cash prizes at specified evening performances. It was introduced by Charles Urban Yeager in the Egyptian Theater at Delta, Colorado, and the Oriental Theater in Montrose, Colorado, in 1932, and afterward spread to thousands of other theaters.

Banks' horse. A horse trained to do all manner of tricks, called Marocco, and belonging to one Banks about the end of the reign of Queen Elizabeth. One of his exploits is said to have been the ascent of St. Paul's steeple. He is frequently mentioned in contemporary literature.

Bankside. The bank of the Thames at Southwark, opposite the old City of London. The theaters were located here in Shakespeare's time.

banner of the prophet, the. What purports to be the actual standard of Mahomet is preserved in the Eyab mosque of Constantinople. It is called sinjaqu 'sh-sharif and is 12 feet in length. It is made of four layers of silk, the topmost being green, embroidered with gold. In times of peace the banner is guarded in the hall of the "noble vestment," as the dress worn by the Prophet is styled. In the same hall are preserved the sacred teeth, the holy beard, the sacred stirrup, the saber, and the bow of Mahomet.

Banning, Kendall (1880-1945). American editor of Hearst magazines and executive of other publications. Compiled a pictorial record of World War I and wrote many books on miscellaneous subjects, including books of verse and the rather startling Mother Goose Rhymes, Censored (1930).

Bannockburn, Battle of. A battle in which the English forces under King Edward II were defeated by the Scotch? in 1314, and Scotland was restored as an independent kingdom, with Robert Bruce as sovereign. The English and Scotch did not acknowledge a common king until 1603, when the king in question was a Scotsman, JAMES I.

Banquo. In Shakespeare's Macbeth, the thane of Lochaber and general in the king's army, slain by order of Macbeth because the witches had foretold that his descendants would reign over Scotland. His ghost afterwards appears to Macbeth at the banquet, though it is invisible to the others present. Banquo's name is given in many old genealogies of the Scottish kings, but there is no reason for supposing he ever existed.

banshee. The domestic spirit of certain Irish or Highland Scottish families, supposed to take an interest in their welfare, and to wail at the death of one of the family. The word is the Old Irish ben síde, a woman of the elves or fairies.

Bantam, Angelo Cyrus. In Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS, grand-master of the ceremonies at "Ba-ath," and a very mighty personage in the opinion of the élite of Bath.

bantingize. To reduce superfluous fat by dieting according to the method adopted by William Banting, a London cabinet-maker (1796-1878). His name gave rise to the humorous verb, to bant.

Banville, Théodore de (1823-1891). French poet, playwright, story writer.

Bap. A contraction of Baphomet. An imaginary idol or symbol which the Templars were accused of employing in their mysterious religious rites. It was a small human figure cut in stone, with two heads, one male and the other female, but all the rest of the figure was female.

Baphomet. See BAP.

Baptēs. Priests of the goddess Cotytto, the Thracian goddess of lewdness, whose midnight orgies were so obscene that they disgusted even the goddess herself. They received their name from the Greek verb bapto, to wash, because of the so-called ceremonies of purification connected with her rites. (Juvenal, ii, 91.)

Baptista. In Shakespeare's TAMING OF THE SHREW, a rich gentleman of Padua, father of Katharina "the shrew" and of Bianca.

bar. The whole body of lawyers; as bench means the whole body of judges.

at the bar. As the prisoner at the bar, the prisoner in the dock before the judge.

a bar sinister in an heraldic shield means one drawn the reverse way; that is, not from left to right, but from right to left. Popularly but erroneously supposed to indicate bastardy. See also BEND SINISTER.

to be called to the bar. To be admitted to the practice of the law.

Bara, Theda. American motion-picture actress, known for her roles as a temptress or VAMP in the early days of the cinema.

Barabas. The hero of Marlowe's tragedy, THE JEW OF MALTA.

Barabbas. In the New Testament, the robber who was released by popular demand in place of Jesus, according to the custom that one prisoner should be freed at the feast. The hero of Marlowe's Jew of Malta is BARABAS. Barabbas is also the title of a narrative poem by Sara Bard Field, portraying him as a revolutionary leader.

Barataria. In Cervantes' romance Don Quixote, the island-city over which Sancho Panza was appointed governor. The table was presided over by Dr. Pedro Rezio de Agüero, who caused every dish set before the governor to be whisked away without being tasted,—some because they heated the blood, and others because they chilled it, some for one evil effect, and some for another, so that Sancho was allowed to eat nothing.

Barbara, Major, see MAJOR BARBARA.

Barbara, St. See under SAINTS.

Barbara Allan. A ballad by Allan Ramsay (1724) inserted in Percy's Reliques. The tale is that Sir John Grehme is dying of love for Barbara Allan. Barbara goes to see him, and, drawing aside the curtain, says, "Young man, I think ye're dyan'." She then leaves him, but has not gone above a mile or so when she hears the death-bell toll, which causes her to repent and say:

O mither, mither, mak' my bed . . .
Since my love died for me to-day,
Ise die for him to-morrow.

Barbara Frietchie. A ballad by John Greenleaf WHITTIER (1863), narrating how the ninety-year-old Barbara Frietchie hung out the Union flag in Fredericktown and withstood the Confederate general, Stonewall Jackson, who was marching through with his soldiers:

"Shoot, if you must, this old gray head,
But spare your country's flag," she said.

Clyde FITCH is the author of a drama entitled Barbara Frietchie (1899).

Barbarossa (It. Red-beard, similar to Rufus). The surname of Frederick I of Germany (1121-1190). It is said that he never died, but is still sleeping in the Kyffhäuser in Thuringia. There he sits at a stone table with his six knights, waiting the "fulness of time," when he will come from his cave to rescue Germany from bondage, and give her the foremost place of all the world. His beard has already grown through the table-slab, but must wind itself thrice round the table before his second advent. See also SLEEPERS.

Khareddin Barbarossa, the famous corsair, became Bey of Algiers in 1518.

Barbary Coast. A section of San Francisco known for its gambling resorts and dance halls.

Barbason. A friend mentioned in Shakespeare's Henry V and Merry Wives of Windsor.

Barbellion, W. N. P. See CUMMINGS, BRUCE.

barber. In ancient Rome, as in modern England, the barber's shop was a center for the dissemination of scandal, and the talk of the town. Hence the phrase every barber knows that.

Omnibus notum tonsoribus.
Horace, 1 Satires, vii 3.

barber's pole. This pole, painted spirally with two stripes of red and white, and displayed outside barbers' shops as a sign, is a relic of the days when the callings of barber and surgeon were combined; it is symbolical of the winding of a bandage round the arm previous to blood-letting. The gilt knob at its end represents a brass basin, which is sometimes actually suspended on the pole.

Barber of Seville, The. The title of a comedy by BEAUMARCHAIS (1775) and an opera by ROSSINI based on the comedy. The hero is the rascally Figaro, the barber. He aids Count Almaviva to gain entrance to Dr. Bartolo's house to woo the doctor's ward, Rosina.

Barber Poet. Jacques Jasmin (1798-1864). a Provençal poet, who was also known as "the last of the Troubadours," was so called. He was a barber.

Barbey d'Aureville, Jules (1808-1889). French man of letters. Author of essays, novels, criticism.

Barbizon school. A group of French landscape painters in the 19th century who did their work at Barbizon, in the Forest of Fontainebleau. Among them were Théodore Rousseau, Daubigny, Dupré, Diaz, MILLET, and COROT.

Barbour, John (1316?-1395). Scottish poet. Author of the Brus (1375), a national epic about Robert Bruce, the war of independence and the battle of Bannockburn.

Barbusse, Henri (1874-1935). French novelist, of Socialist sympathies. He became famous for Le Feu (1916), translated as Under Fire, a bitter denunciation of war. After World War I he took part in the international peace movements of the time. Others of his works are The Inferno (1918); We Others (1918), short stories; Clarté (1919), translated as Light; La Lueur dans l'abîme (1920); Les Enchaînements (1925); translated as Chains; Jesus (1927); I Saw It Myself (1928); Thus and Thus (1929), short stories; Élévation (1930), a novel; Ce qui fut sera (1930); Stalin:

A New World Seen Through One Man (1935).

barcarole. Properly, a song sung by Venetian boatmen, as they row their gondolas (It. barcaruolo, a boatman).

Barcheater Towers. A novel by Anthony TROLLOPE, one of his Chronicles of Barsetshire. See BARSETSHIRE.

Barclay, Alexander (1475?-1552). English poet, variously throughout his life a priest, a Benedictine monk, a Franciscan, and the rector of a London church. He translated the German allegory NARRENSCHIFF as The Ship of Fools (1509) and wrote a volume of Eclogues (1515), considered one of the earliest examples of pastoral verse in English. He also translated the poetry of AENEAS SILVIUS.

Barclay, Florence (1862-1921). English novelist whose The Rosary was sensationally successful. She had a gift for purple religiosity and, as Sir John Squire once said,

Though on all sides the blood rains down in torrents, Love's interests still are in safe hands with Florence.

bard. A minstrel of the ancient Celtic peoples, the Gauls, British, Welsh, Irish, and Scots. The bards celebrated the deeds of gods and heroes, incited to battle, sang at royal and other festivities, and frequently acted as heralds.

Bard of Avon. Shakespeare (1564-1616), who was born and buried at Stratford-upon-Avon.

Bard of Ayrshire. Robert Burns (1759-1796), a native of Ayrshire. See also PEASANT BARD below.

Bard of Hope. Thomas Campbell (1777-1844), author of The Pleasures of Hope.

Bard of the Imagination. Mark Akenside (1721-1770), author of Pleasures of the Imagination.

Bard of Memory. Samuel Rogers (1763-1855), author of The Pleasures of Memory.

Bard of Olney. Cowper (1731-1800), who resided at Olney, in Bucks, for many years.

Bard of Prose. Boccaccio (1313-1375), author of the Decameron.

Bard of Rydal Mount. William Wordsworth (1770-1850); so called because Rydal Mount was his mountain home.

Bard of Twickenham. Alexander Pope (1688-1744), who resided at Twickenham.

Mantuan Bard, Swan, etc. Virgil (70-19 B.C.), a native of Mantua, in Italy.

Mulla's Bard. Spenser (1553-1599), author of the Faerie Queene. The Mulla (Awbeg) is a tributary of the Blackwater, in Ireland, and flowed close by the spot where the poet's house stood.

Peasant Bard. Robert Burns (1759-1796). See also BARD OF AYRSHIRE above.

Theban Bard or Eagle. Pindar, born at Thebes (c. 520–435 B.C.). Also called the Theban Lyre.

Bard, The. A poem by Thomas GRAY (1757), concerning a prophecy made by a Welsh bard to the invading King Edward I of England, based on Welsh legendary material.

Bardell, Mrs. In Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS, a landlady of "apartments for single gentlemen" in Goswell Street. Under the influence of Messrs. DODSON AND FOGG, two unprincipled lawyers, she succeeds in placing Mr. Pickwick in a compromising situation and sues him for breach of promise. A verdict is obtained against him, but Mrs. Bardell is subsequently arrested by her own lawyers and lodged in prison.

Bar-dolph. Corporal of Captain Sir John Falstaff in Shakespeare's 1 and 2 Henry IV and in The Merry Wives of Windsor. In Henry V he is promoted to lieutenant. Bar-dolph is a low-bred, drunken swaggerer, wholly without principle, and always poor. His red, pimply nose is an everlasting joke with Sir John, who calls him "The Knight of the Burning Lamp."

Bareacres, George, Earl of. A character in Thackeray's VANITY FAIR with "not much pride and a large appetite." His wife, a great snob in spite of her poverty, comes off badly in her encounters with Becky Sharp.

Barebone's Parliament. See PARLIAMENTS.

Barefoot Boy, The. A poem by WHITTIER (1856), singing the joys of country life.

barghost or barguest. A frightful goblin, portending misfortune—not to be confused with barfly. Sometimes it appears in the shape of a large dog.

Barham, Richard Harris. See INGOLDSBY LEGENDS.

Baring, Maurice (1874–1945). English novelist, journalist, and playwright, author of Puppet Show of Memory (1922) (autobiography); A Triangle (1923); C (1924); Half a Minute's Silence (1925); The Coat Without Seam (1929); Roger Peckham (1930).

Baring-Gould, Sabine (1834–1924). English clergyman and author, best known for his compilation of medieval legends entitled Curious Myths of the Middle Ages (1866–1868), and authorship of hymn, Onward, Christian Soldiers.

Barker, Harley Granville-, see GRANVILLE-BARKER.

Barker, Lemuel. The principal character in Howells' MINISTER'S CHARGE.

Barkis. In Dickens' novel, David Copperfield, the carrier who courts Clara Peggotty by telling David Copperfield when he writes home to say to his nurse, "Barkis is willin'."

Peggotty takes the hint and becomes Mrs. Barkis.

Barkley, Catherine. Heroine of Ernest Hemingway's novel A FAREWELL TO ARMS, an English nurse in Italy during World War I.

Barlaam and Josaphat. An Eastern romance telling how Barlaam, an ascetic monk of the desert of Sinai, converted Josaphat, son of a Hindu king, to Christianity. Probably written in the first half of the 7th century, it is said by some authorities to have been put into its final form by St. John of Damascus, a Syrian monk of the 8th century. It became immensely popular in the Middle Ages. It includes (among many other stories) the Story of the Three Caskets, which was used by Shakespeare in The Merchant of Venice. A poetical version of the romance was written by the minnesinger Rudolf von Ems (13th century).

Bar-le-Duc. A jam made from seeded currants at Bar-le-Duc, France.

Barleycorn, Sir John. Malt-liquor personified. In the old song of that title written down by Robert Burns, his neighbors vowed that Sir John should die, so they hired ruffians to "plough him with ploughs and bury him"; thus they did, and afterwards "combed him with harrows and thrust clods on his head," but did not kill him by these or by numerous other means which they attempted. Sir John bore no malice for this ill usage, but did his best to cheer the flagging spirits even of his worst persecutors. Hence the name is used for an innkeeper.

Jack LONDON wrote a volume called John Barleycorn (1913), an autobiography which he described as his "alcoholic memories."

Barlow, Joel (1754–1812). American poet and diplomat, a leader in the anti-Federalist party and one of the best-known of the HARTFORD WITS. His most popular poem was one called HASTY PUDDING (1796) and his most ambitious, The Vision of Columbus, first published in 1787 and later revised, lengthened, and re-issued in 1807 as THE COLUMBIAD. He was one of the authors of THE ANARCHIAD and also wrote ADVICE TO THE PRIVILEGED ORDERS (1792), a controversial prose tract.

Barlow knife. Old American single-bladed jackknife. Used by TOM SAWYER. Named from the original maker.

Barmecide feast. An illusion: particularly one containing a great disappointment. The reference is to the story of The Barber's Sixth Brother in the Arabian Nights. A prince of the great Barmecide family in Bagdad, wishing to have some sport, asks Schacabac, a poor, starving wretch, to dinner, and sets before him a series of empty plates. "How do you like your soup?" asks the merchant. "Excellently well," replies Schacabac. "Did you ever see whiter bread?" "Never, honorable sir," is the civil answer. Illusory wine is later offered him, but Schacabac excuses himself by pretending to be drunk already, and knocks the Barmecide down. The latter sees the humor of the situation, forgives Schacabac, and provides him with food to his heart's content.

Barnabas, Parson. In Fielding's JOSEPH ANDREWS a pompous clergyman of whose sermons "three bishops had said that they were the best that ever were written."

Barnabas, St. See under SAINT.

Barnaby, Widow. The title and chief character of a novel by Mrs. Trollope (1839). The widow is a vulgar, pretentious husband-hunter, wholly without principle. She finds a husband in the sequel The Widow Married (1840), and The Barnabys in America records unfavorable impressions of American travel.

Barnaby Rudge. A novel by Charles Dickens (1841), dealing with the Gordon riots. For the plot see RUDGE.

barnacle. A species of wild goose allied to the brent goose, also the popular name of the Cirripedes, especially those which are attached by a stalk to floating barks of timber, the bottoms of ships, etc. In medieval times it was thought that the two were different forms of the same animal (much as are the frog and the tadpole), and as late as 1636 Gerard speaks of "broken pieces of old ships on which is found certain spume or froth, which in time breedeth into shells, and the fish which is hatched therefrom is in shape and habit like a bird."

The origin of this extraordinary belief is very obscure, but it is probably due to the accident of the identity of the name coupled with the presence in the shell-fish of the long feathery cirri which protrude from the shells and when in the water, are very suggestive of plumage.

The watery clamor of the barnacle geese.
W. B. Yeats.

The name is given figuratively to close and constant companions, hangers on, or sycophants, also to placemen who stick to their offices but do little work, like the barnacles which stick to the bottoms of ships but impede their progress.

Dickens in his LITTLE DORRIT gives the name to a "a very high family and a very large family" active in governmental circles, no less than nine of whom appear in the pages of the novel. In all of them, but particularly in Mr. Tite Barnacle, "a permanent official at the CIRCUMLOCUTION OFFICE," he satirizes governmental red tape.

Barnard, George Grey (1863-1938). American sculptor, who executed a number of figures and monuments for public buildings. His collection of medieval art, The Cloisters, became the property of the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City, where it was housed in a specially designed building in Fort Tryon Park.

Barnardine. A prisoner introduced in the last scene of Measure for Measure, but only to be reproved by the Duke.

Sirrah, thou art said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no further than this world,
And squar'st thy life according.

Shakespeare Measure for Measure, act v. sc. 1.

Barnardo Home. A Home for destitute children, named after Thomas Barnardo who started the first in London in 1867. Hence, a Barnardo boy.

Barnburners. (1) Destroyers, who, like the Dutchman of story, would burn down their barns to rid themselves of the rats.

(2) A name given to the radical element of the Democratic Party in New York in the middle of the last century.

Barnes, Barnabe (1569?-1609). English poet, author of a sonnet sequence, Parthenophil and Parthenophe (1593), and also A Divine Century of Spiritual Sonnets (1595).

Barnes, Djuna. American novelist and short-story writer, for many years a resident of Europe, known for her intense psychological studies. Among her books are Ryder (1928); A Night Among the Horses (1929); and Nightwood (1936).

Barnes, Harry Elmer (1889-). American historian and sociologist, author of The Social History of the Western World (1921); The New History and the Social Studies (1925); The Twilight of Christianity (1929); Society in Transition (1939).

Barnes, Margaret Ayer (1886-). American playwright and novelist. Her novels include Years of Grace (1930), awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1931; Within This Present (1933); and Wisdom's Gate (1938). For the theater she was the author of an adaptation of Edith Wharton's THE AGE OF INNOCENCE (1928) and Dishonored Lady (1930) with Edward Sheldon.

Barnes, William (1801-1886). English poet, famous for writing in Dorset dialect.

Barney Google. A character of the American comic supplement, created by the cartoonist Billy de Beck and most popular during the 1920's. Barney himself is usually in debt, but his horse, Spark Plug, is always about to make a record in the races.

Barnfield, Richard (1574-1627). English poet, author of The Affectionate Shepherd (1594), Cynthia (1595), and The Encomium of Lady Pecunia (1598), and represented in Poems in Divers Humors (1598). Several of his poems were published in THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM (1599) as Shakespeare's.

Barnhelm, Minna von. Titular heroine of Lessing's drama, MINNA VON BARNHELM.

barnstormer. Itinerant player or actor. Also applied to aviators touring towns to do acrobatic flying for pay.

Barnum, Phineas Taylor (1810-1891). American showman, famous for his side-shows, his innovations in entertainment, and his sensational methods of publicity. He exhibited the midget, General Tom Thumb, in 1844, and handled a nation-wide tour of Jenny LIND in 1850-1852. He originated a type of showmanship, appealing to public curiosity and thirst for the sensational and the novel, which became a highly successful national business in later years.

Barnwell, George. The chief character in The London Merchant, or the History of George Barnwell, a prose tragedy by George Lillo, produced in 1731. It is founded on a popular 17th century ballad which is given in Percy's Reliques. Barnwell is a London apprentice who is seduced by Sarah Millwood, a disappointed and repulsive woman of the town, to whom he gives £200 of his master's money. He next robs and murders his pious uncle, a rich grazier at Ludlow. Having spent the money, Sarah turns him out; each informs against the other, and both are hanged. The popularity of the story is shown by James Smith's parody in the Rejected Addresses and Thackeray's caricature, George de Barnwell. In the latter, one of Thackeray's burlesque Novels by Eminent Hands, Barnwell murders his uncle out of the purest motives, in order to use his money for noble and altruistic purposes.

Baroja y Nessi, Pio (1872-). Spanish author. Physician in Basque country. Wrote novels on Basque life and the Carlist wars.

baroque. Term applied to the fantastic and over-decorative in art, the result of excessive technical development in a particular form or style within a fixed scope or subject. In architecture, painting, and sculpture, the dominant style in the 17th and 18th centuries was baroque. In poetry and prose, the same tendency manifested itself in the late 16th and early 17th centuries as GONGORISM and EUPHUISTISM, respectively. Hence the use of the term Baroque as designating a specific period in the arts; often used as a synonym of rococo.

Barr, Amelia Edith (Huddleston) (1831-1919). Voluminous Anglo-American novelist. Known for The Bow of Orange Ribbon (1886).

Barr, Robert (1850-1912). Scotch editor and novelist. Concluded Stephen CRANE's unfinished novel, The O'Ruddy (1903).

barrabara. An Eskimo earth lodge below ground. In Chinook jargon, a keskwilee house.

Barrack-Room Ballads. A volume of poems by Rudyard Kipling (1892). See Tommy Atkins, Fuzzy Wuzzy, Gunga Din.

Barras, Charles M. (1826-1873). American playwright. Author of The Black Crook, first produced at Niblo's Garden (1866). Not to be confused with the Paultons' Black Crook (1872).

Barrel, Flora de. Heroine of Conrad's CHANCE. Her convict father is prominent in the novel.

Barren Ground. See GLASGOW, ELLEN.

Barrès, Maurice (1862-1923). French novelist, whose writing developed from the psychological individualism of many of his literary compatriots at the end of the 19th century to a strong nationalism and patriotism. He was particularly famous at the time of World War I. Chief among his works are Sous l'Œil des barbares (1888); Un Homme libre (1889); Le Jardin de Bérénice (1891); Les Déracinés (1897); L'Appel au soldat (1900); Colette Baudouche (1909); L'Ame française et la guerre (1915), translated as The Soul of France; Les Traits éternels de la France (1917), translated as The Undying Spirit of France; and Chronique de la Grande Guerre (1920-1924).

Barrett, Laurence (1838-1891). American actor. In partnership with BOOTH (1886-1891). Excelled in Shakespearean rôles.

Barretts of Wimpole Street, The. A successful play by Rudolf Besier (1930), produced in London and New York and based on the romance of Robert BROWNING and Elizabeth Barrett BROWNING.

barricade. To block up. The term rose in France in 1588, when Henri de Guise returned to Paris in defiance of the King's order. The King sent for his Swiss Guards, and the Parisians tore up the pavement, threw chains across the streets, and piled up barrels filled with earth and stones, behind which they shot down the Swiss as they passed through the streets. The French for barrel is barrique, and to barricade is to stop up the streets with these barrels.

the day of the barricades:

(1) May 12, 1588, when the people forced Henri III to flee from Paris.

(2) August 5, 1648, the beginning of the Fronde War.

(3) July 27, 1830, the first day of la grande semaine which drove Charles X from the throne.

(4) February 24, 1848, which drove Louis Philippe to abdicate and flee to England.

(5) June 23, 1848, when Affre, archbishop of Paris, was shot in his attempt to quell the insurrection.

(6) December 2, 1851, the day of the coup d'état, when Louis Napoleon made his appeal to the people for re-election to the Presidency for ten years.

Barrie, Sir James Matthew (1860-1937). Scotch dramatist and novelist, known for the whimsy and sentimental fantasy of his work. His best-known plays are QUALITY STREET (1901); THE ADMIRABLE CRICHTON (1902); PETER PAN (1904); ALICE SIT-BY-THE-FIRE (1905); WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS (1908); DEAR BRUTUS (1917). His non-dramatic works include: A Window in Thrums (1889); MARGARET OGILVY (1896); AULD LIGHT IDYLLS (1888); THE LITTLE MINISTER (1891, dramatized in 1897); SENTIMENTAL TOMMY (1896). See also KAILYARD SCHOOL.

barrier treaty. A treaty fixing frontiers; especially that of November 15, 1715, signed by Austria, Great Britain, and the Netherlands, by which the Low Countries were guaranteed to the House of Austria, and the Dutch were to garrison certain fortresses. The treaty was annulled at Fontainebleau in 1785.

barring out. The closing of a schoolroom against a schoolmaster, a prank once common in British schools. The Barring Out: or, Party Spirit is the title of a novel by Maria EDGEWORTH (1767-1849).

Barrington, E. See BECK, L. M. A.

Barrow, George H. In John Dos Passos' trilogy U.S.A., a labor lawyer who is revealed to be dishonest. See also FRENCH, MARY.

Barry, Philip (1896-1949). American playwright, writing chiefly sophisticated comedies and dramas of life among the wealthier classes. His best-known plays are You and I (1923); In a Garden (1925); Paris Bound (1927); Tomorrow and Tomorrow (1931); The Animal Kingdom (1932); The Philadelphia Story (1939). Experiments in fantasy, mysticism, and allegory include: White Wings (1926); HOTEL UNIVERSE (1930); Here Come the Clowns (1938), published in novel form as War in Heaven in the same year; and Liberty Jones (1941).

Barry, Redmond, see BARRY LYNDON.

Barry Lyndon, Esq., The Memoirs of, Written by Himself. A novel by Thackeray (1852). The Irish narrator, Redmond Barry, is an utter scoundrel and manages to involve himself in a steady succession of affairs, which he writes of as though he were invariably in the right, "the victim of many cruel persecutions, conspiracies and slanders." He courts and wins the widowed Countess Lyndon, spends her money and keeps her in his power, but goes from bad to worse and finally dies in Fleet Prison.

Barrymore. Stage name of an American family of actors who performed on the stage, on the screen, and in radio. (Their real name is Blythe; the family originated in England.) The best known are Lionel Barrymore (1878-); Ethel Barrymore (1879-); and John Barrymore (1882-1942). The family is considered to be the one satirized in The Royal Family, a play by Edna FERBER and George KAUFMAN. The Barrymores represent a tradition of the theater that began to disappear in the 20th century, when the screen became the chief purveyor of "glamor" to the public. They were related to another famous stage family, the Drews.

Barssetshire, Chronicles of. A series of novels by Anthony Trollope, known also as the "Cathedral Stories." They comprise The Warden (1855), Barchester Towers (1857), Doctor Thorne (1858), Framley Parsonage (1861), The Small House at Allington (1864) and The Last Chronicle of Barset (1867). All these novels deal with the life of the cathedral town of Barchester and the same characters reappear in most of them.

The best-known characters of the Chronicles of Barssetshire are Bishop and Mrs. PROUDIE, Archdeacon GRANTLY, Rev. SEPTIMUS HARDING, Rev. Mr. CRAWLEY, the THORNES, Mr. SLOPE, LADY ARABELLA GRESHAM and SIGNORA MADELEINE NERONI. Descendants of these families appear in the novels of Angela THIRKELL.

Bart, Lily. The heroine of Edith Wharton's House of Mirth. Unfit for anything but a life of luxury, she fails either to live on her scant means or to make a successful marriage.

Bartas, Guillaume Salluste du (1544-1590). French poet, associated with King HENRY OF NAVARRE. His work is marked by extreme and elaborate metaphor and frequent neologisms, in the style that was widespread in the poetry of Italy, France, and later England in the late 16th and early 17th centuries. He wrote several epics on religious subjects, including Judith (1565); La Semaine (1578), an adaptation of the Biblical story of Genesis; and La Second Semaine (1584). Du Bartas was translated into English by Joshua SYLVESTER.

Bartholo. A doctor in the comedies of Le Mariage de Figaro, and Le Barbier de Séville, by Beaumarchais and in Rossini's opera, The Barber of Seville. See FIGARO.

Bartholdi, Frédéric Auguste (1834-1904). French sculptor who made our Statue of Liberty, presented to us by the French people in 1885, unveiled 1886, and located on Bedloe's Island, New York Harbor.

Bartholomew, St. See under SAINTS.

Massacre of St. Bartholomew. The slaughter of the French Protestants in the reign of Charles IX, instigated by Catherine de Medici, begun on St. Bartholomew's Day, i.e., between the 24th and 25th of August, 1572. It is said that 30,000 persons fell in this dreadful persecution.

Bartholomew fair. A fair held for centuries from its institution in 1133 at Smithfield, London, on St. Bartholomew's Day. After the change of the calendar in 1752 it was held on September 3rd; in 1840 it was removed to Islington, and was suppressed in 1855, the licentious revelry and rioting that went on having entirely changed its character, which originally was that of a market for cloth and other goods. Ben Jonson wrote a comedy (1614) satirizing the Puritans under this name.

Bartholomew doll A tawdry, overdressed woman; like a flashy, bespangled doll offered for sale at Bartholomew Fair.

Bartholomew pig. A very fat person. At Bartholomew Fair one of the chief attractions used to be a pig, roasted whole, and sold piping hot.

Bartimeus. (1) In the Bible, a blind man healed by Jesus at Jericho (Mark x. 46ff.).

(2) Pseudonym of L. A. da Costa Ricci (1886-). See RITCHIE, LEWIS.

Bartlett, John (1820-1905). American publisher, with Little, Brown & Co. from 1863. Compiled Familiar Quotations 1855, revised of recent years by Christopher Morley.

Bartlett, Robert Abram (1875-1946). Known as "Captain Bob Bartlett." Canadian-American arctic explorer. Author of Last Voyage of the Karluk (1916); Sails over Ice (1934); etc. Accompanied PEARY on his trip to the North Pole, for technical reasons, only to 87° 12' north. It has been said of Bartlett that "he commuted to the Arctic as though it were his suburban home."

Bartlett pear. Called bon chrétien in France and England where it originated in 1770. Distributed in America, where it became a very popular variety, by Enoch Bartlett of Dorchester, Mass.

Bartók, Béla (1881-1945). Hungarian composer. Gathered 6,000 folk songs of Magyar, Slovak, Roumanian and Transylvanian origin and 200 Arab melodies. Cf. Amy Lowell's poem "For a Waltz, by Bartók."

Bartolist. One skilled in law or, specifically, a student of Bartolus. Bartolus (1314-1357) was an eminent Italian lawyer who wrote extensive commentaries on the Corpus Juris Civilis, and did much to arouse and stimulate interest in the ancient Roman law.

Bartolozzi (1727-1815). Famous Italian engraver. Engraver to the King of England.

Barton, Amos. The hero of George Eliot's Sad Fortunes of the Reverend Amos Barton. His wife, Milly Barton, endures the buffets of fate with him until at last she dies. See AMOS BARTON.

Barton, Andrew (d. 1511). Scottish naval officer. Accused of piracy. Hero of the old ballad "Sir Andrew Barton."

Barton, Bernard (1784-1849). The "Quaker Poet." Close friend of Charles Lamb.

Barton, Bruce (1886-). American advertising executive, among other of his activities author of a best-selling book, The Man Nobody Knows (1925) which pictures Jesus as a forerunner of the successful business man, "the most popular dinner guest in Jerusalem," and the writer of parables which were "the most powerful advertisements of all time."

Barton, Clara. In full Clarissa Harlowe Barton (1821-1912). Founder of the American Red Cross.

Barton, Mary, see MARY BARTON.

Barton, Sir Andrew. A Scotch sea officer, who had obtained in 1511 letters of marque for himself and his two sons, to make reprisals upon the subjects of Portugal. He was the cause of much complaint from English merchant ships and was finally slain in an engagement with an English expedition sent against him. He is the hero of a ballad in two parts, called Sir Andrew Barton in Percy's Reliques, II. ii. 12.

Bartram, William (1739-1823). American botanist, explorer, and author, best known for his Travels through North and South Carolina (1791). His descriptions of tropical plants and animals were used as source-material by a number of literary men, including Wordsworth and Coleridge.

Baruch, Bernard Mannes (1870-). Widely known American business man and statesman. Consulted by Presidents Wilson and F. D. Roosevelt.

Barye, Antoine Louis (1795-1875). French sculptor; particularly famous for his animal figures.

Barzun, Jacques Martin (1907-). American historian of French birth. Has most recently written Culture in the Democracy (1940), and Darwin, Marx, Wagner: Critique of a Heritage (1941), and the popular Teacher in America (1945). He is professor of history at Columbia University.

bas bleu, see BLUESTOCKING.

baseball teams. Following is a list of the nicknames in common use for the baseball teams of the two Major Leagues of the United States.

National League:

Braves. Boston.
Cardinals. St. Louis.
Cubs. Chicago.
Dodgers. Brooklyn.
Giants. New York.
Phillies. Philadelphia.
Pirates. Pittsburgh.
Reds. Cincinnati.

American League:

Athletics. Philadelphia.
Browns. St. Louis.
Indians. Cleveland.
Nationals. See SENATORS below.
Red Sox. Boston.
Senators or Nationals. Washington.
Tigers. Detroit.
White Sox. Chicago.
Yankees. New York.

Bashkirtseff, Marie (1860-1884). A talented young Russian girl whose Journal, published posthumously in 1885, was called by Gladstone "a book without a parallel," and is one of the best known of modern autobiographies.

Basic English. A simplified system of learning English from a selected vocabulary of the 850 most essential words, set up by C. K. OGDEN and propagated, also as an International auxiliary language, by the Orthological Institute, Cambridge, England. I. A. Richards is one of its strongest advocates in America. Ogden owes the suggestion of his plan to a passage in Jeremy Bentham (1748-1832), the utilitarian. Opponents of the idea of Basic English claim that it kills all elements of expressiveness and stylistic modulation in the language. They quote illustrations of the type of Simeon Strunsky's translation into Basic of a famous phrase coined by Winston Churchill: "Blood and eye-water and face-water."

Basil. In Longfellow's Evangeline (1847), the blacksmith of Grand Pré, in Acadia (now Nova Scotia), and father of Gabriel, the betrothed of Evangeline. When the colony was driven into exile in 1755 by George II, Basil settled in Louisiana, and greatly prospered; but his son led a wandering life, looking for Evangeline, and died in Pennsylvania of the plague.

Basil, St. See under SAINTS.

Basile. A calumniating, niggardly bigot in Le Mariage de Figaro, and again in Le Barbier de Séville, both by Beaumarchais.

basilica. In Roman Antiquity, an oblong building with a broad nave ending in a semi-circular apse. In early Christian architecture, a church building consisting of a nave and four aisles.

Basilisco. A cowardly, bragging knight in Kyd's tragedy, Solyman and Perseda (1588). Shakespeare (King John, i. 1) makes the Bastard say to his mother, who asks him why he boasted of his illbirth, "Knight, knight, good mother, Basilisco-like"—i.e. my boasting has made me a knight. In the earlier play Basilisco, speaking of his name, adds, "Knight, good fellow, knight, knight!" and is answered, "Knaue, good fellow, knave, knave!"

basilisk. The king of serpents (Gr. basileos, a king), a fabulous reptile, also called a COCKATRICE, and alleged to be hatched by a serpent from a cock's egg; supposed to have the power of "looking any one dead on whom it fixed its eyes."

The Basiliske . . .
 From powrefull eyes close venom doth convey
 Into the lookers hart, and killeth farre away.
 Spenser, Faerie Queene, IV, viii. 37.

Also the name of a large brass cannon in use in Elizabethan times.

Thou hast talk'd
 Of sallies and retires, of trenches, tents,
 Of palisadoes, frontiers, parapets,
 Of basilisks, of cannon.
 Shakespeare, 1 Henry IV, ii. 3.

Baskerville. An old-style type based on the designs of J. Baskerville (1706-1775).

Baskervilles, Hound of the. A novel-length Sherlock Holmes story by A. Conan Doyle.

Bass, Jethro. The chief character in Churchill's CONISTON.

Bassanio. In Shakespeare's MERCHANT OF VENICE, the lover of Portia, successful in his choice of the three caskets, which awards her to him as wife. It was for Bassanio that his friend Antonio borrowed 3,000 ducats of the Jew Shylock on the strange condition that if he returned the loan within three months no interest should be required, but if not, the Jew might claim a pound of Antonio's flesh for forfeiture.

Basse, William (ca. 1583-ca. 1653). English poet, member of the Spenserian pastoral school of the early 17th century with William BROWNE, George WITHER, and John DAVIES of Hereford. He was the author of Sword and Buckler (1602); Three Pastoral Elegies (1602); and Great Britain's Sunset (1613), an elegy on the death of Prince Henry.

Basselin, Olivier. French song writer of the 15th century. Especially known for his drinking songs.

Bassett, John Spencer (1867-1928). Writer on the Negro in North Carolina and a vast amount of historical and biographical works. At Smith College for over twenty years.

Basshe, Emjo (1900-1939). Russian-American dramatist. Associated with Provincetown Theatre, one of the founders of the New Playwrights Theatre, etc. Great friend of the Negroes. Directed several of Paul Green's plays. Wrote Earth, Doomsday Circus, etc.

Bast. A lion-headed or cat-headed goddess of the Egyptians. Chief seat of worship at Bubastis. Cf. G. A. Henty's novel for boys The Cat of Bubastes.

Bastable Children, Stories about. See E. NESBIT.

Bastard of Normandy, the. William the Conqueror.

Bastard of Orleans, the. Jean Dunois, a natural son of Louis, duc d'Orleans (brother of Charles VI), and one of the most brilliant soldiers France ever produced (1403-1468). He is introduced into Shakespeare's 1 Henry VI and into most of the fiction and drama dealing with the story of JOAN OF ARC on whose behalf he fought.

Bastien-Lepage, Jules (1848-1884). French painter of peasant scenes. Famous for a painting of "Jeanne d'Arc." (Metropolitan Museum of New York.)

Bastille (O. Fr. bastir, now bâtir, to build). The famous state prison in Paris was commenced by Charles V as a royal château in 1370, and it was first used as a prison by Louis XI. It was seized and sacked by the mob in the French Revolution, July 14, 1789, and on the first anniversary its final demolition was commenced and the Place de la Bastille laid out on its site. A Bastille has come to mean a state prison for political offenders.

Bataille, Félix Henry (1872-1922). French poet and playwright.

Batavia. A poetic name for Holland or the Netherlands, so called from the Batavians, a Celtic tribe, which dwelt there. It is now the name of the capital of the Dutch East Indies.

Bateau Ivre (Drunken Boat). A poem by Arthur RIMBAUD. After World War II, a publishing house in Paris.

Bateman, Henry Mayo (1887-). British caricaturist of genius. Contributor to Punch. There are various books of his fantastic drawings.

Bates, Blanche (1873-1941). American actress and singer; starred in Madame Butterfly (1900), Under Two Flags, The Girl of the Golden West; married George CREEL.

Bates, Charley, generally called Master Bates. In Dickens' OLIVER TWIST one of Fagin's "pupils," training to be a pickpocket. He is always laughing uproariously, and is almost equal in artifice and adroitness to "The Artful Dodger" himself.

Bates, Ernest Sutherland (1879-1939). American biographer, historian, and educator. For three years literary editor of Dictionary of American Biography. Respectfully edited the Bible. Wrote The Gospel According to Judas (1928) and other vital works.

Bates, Herbert Ernest (1905-). English story writer. Encouraged by Edward and David Garnett. Distinguished in style.

Bates, Katharine Lee (1859-1929). American poet. See AMERICA THE BEAUTIFUL.

Bates, Miss. One of Jane Austen's most famous characters, an old maid who appears in the pages of EMMA. Miss Bates is such a great talker as to be a bore, but is nevertheless "a happy woman and a woman no one named without good-will . . . She loved everybody, was interested in everybody's happiness."

Bates, Ralph (1899-). English novelist, best known for his accounts of life in Spain and the Spanish civil war (1936-1939). His books include Lean Men (1934); The Olive Field (1936); Rainbow Fish (1937); Sirocco, And Other Stories (1939); The Undiscoverables (1939).

Bath, knight of the. This name is derived from the ceremony of bathing, which used to be practiced at the inauguration of a knight, as a symbol of purity. The last knights created in this ancient form were at the coronation of Charles II in 1661. G.C.B. stands for Grand Cross of the Bath (the first class); K.C.B. Knight Commander of the Bath (the second class); C.B. Companion of the Bath (the third class).

Bath, Major. In Fielding's novel AMELIA, a poor but high-minded gentleman, who tries to conceal his poverty under a bold bearing and independent speech.

bathos (Gr. bathos, depth). A ludicrous descent from grandiloquence to the commonplace. A good example is the well-known couplet given by Pope:

And thou, Dalhousie, the great god of war,
Lieutenant-general to the earl of Mar.
Art of Sinking, ix (1727).

Bathsheba. In the Old Testament (2 Sam.) the beautiful wife of Uriah the Hittite, for whose sake David gave orders that Uriah should be sent into the most dangerous part of the battle, where he was slain. She became the mother of Solomon. (See also DAVID.) In ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL Dryden means by Bathsheba, Louise de Kéroualle, the duchess of Portsmouth, a favorite court lady of Charles II.

Batrachomyomachia. THE BATTLE OF THE FROGS AND MICE.

Battle, Sarah. A celebrated character in one of Lamb's Essays of Elia, who considers whist the business of life and literature one of the relaxations.

Battle above the Clouds. A name given to the Battle of Lookout Mountain, part of the Battle of Chattanooga fought during the Civil War on November 24, 1863.

Battle Hymn of the Republic. An American patriotic hymn by Julia Ward Howe (1862).

Battle of Blenheim. A poem by Robert Southey (1774-1843) suggesting that war is nothing but a wasteful carnage.

Battle of Britain. Term applied to bombing raids on Great Britain by German airplanes during World War II, especially during the summer of 1940.

Battle of Brunanburh. Description, in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, of a battle scene, in which the Anglo-Saxon king, Aethelstan of Wessex, wins a victory over the Danes (937). It is written in the classical epic style.

Battle of France. The invasion and defeat of France by Axis armies during World War II, between May 17, 1940, when the German army crossed the French border, and June 22, 1940, when the armistice was signed.

Battle of Maldon. Fragment of an Anglo-Saxon battle epic, describing the defeat of the Anglo-Saxons under Ethelred the Unready by the invading Danes in 991.

battle of nerves or war of nerves. Term applied to psychological warfare during World War II, consisting of propaganda, threats, diplomatic falsehood, etc. An outstanding "battle of nerves" took place during the Munich Crisis in September 1938, and in August 1939, just before the beginning of the war.

Battle of Otterbourne. An early Border Ballad, concerning the strife between the Douglas of Scotland and the Percy of England (1388).

This deed was done at Otterbourne,
About the breaking of the day;
Earl Douglas was buried at the braken bush, battle of production. Term applied to the efforts of Great Britain and the United States during World War II to equal and surpass Axis production of airplanes, ships, tanks, and weapons.
And the Percy led captive away.

Battle of the Atlantic. Term applied to submarine warfare in the Atlantic Ocean during World War II, especially to attacks by German submarines on American vessels carrying men and supplies to Allied armies in Europe and Africa.

Battle of the Baltic. An Ode by Thomas Campbell.

Of Nelson and the north
Sing the glorious day's renown,
When to battle fierce came forth
All the might of Denmark's crown . . .

Battle of the Books. A satire, by Swift (written 1697, published 1704), on the literary squabble as to the comparative value of ancient and modern authors. In the battle the ancient books fight against the modern books in St. James' Library. Hence any controversy between literary men is so called.

Battle of the Frogs and Mice. A mock-heroic Greek poem of early date, the Batracho-myo-machia. War is caused by a frog's leaving his mouse friend to drown in the middle of a pond. When both sides are arrayed for battle, a band of gnats sounds the attack, and after a bloody battle the Frogs are defeated; but an army of land-crabs coming up saves the race from extermination, and the victorious Mice make their way home in terrible disorder. The name of the Mouse-king is Troxartes, probably a pun on Tros, a Trojan, and the poem is in many ways a burlesque of the Iliad. There is a 14th century German skit on the same theme by G. Rollenhagen, a meistersinger.

Battle of the Giants. The battle of Marignano in 1515, when Francis I won a complete victory over 12,000 Swiss, allies of the Milanese.

Battle of the Herrings. A sortie made during the Hundred Years War (February 12, 1429) by the men of Orleans, during the siege of their city, to intercept a supply of food being brought by the English under Sir John Fastolf to the besiegers. The English repulsed the onset, using barrels of herrings, which were among the supplies, as a defense. Hence the name.

Battle of the Kegs, The. A humorous ballad heroic by Francis Hopkinson (1737-1791), published in 1778, and telling of the alarm felt by the British over certain machines, in the form of kegs charged with gunpowder, which were floated down the Delaware.

Battle of the Lake Regillus, The. Title of a ballad by Macaulay in his Lays of Ancient Rome. Lake Regillus was in ancient geography the name of a small lake near Rome, traditional site of a Roman victory over the Latins (496 B. C.).

Battle of the Moat. A battle between Mahomet and Abu Sofian (chief of the Koreishites) before Medina; so called because the Prophet had a moat dug before the city to keep off the invaders, and in it much of the fighting took place.

Battle of the Nations. A name given to the great battle of Leipzig in the Napoleonic wars (October 16-19, 1813), when the French under Napoleon were defeated by the coalition armies, consisting of the Prussians, Russians, Austrians and Swedes. A huge monument, the Volkerschlachtdenkmal, has been erected on the battlefield.

Battle of the Spurs. A name given to the battles of Guinegate (1513) and Courtrai (1302). The former, between Henry VIII and the Duc de Longueville, was so called because the French used their spurs in flight more than their swords in fight; and the battle of Courtrai because the victorious Flemings gathered from the field more than 700 gilt spurs, worn by French nobles slain in the fight.

Battle of the Standard, between the English and the Scots, at Cuton Moor, near Northalerton, in 1138. Here David I, fighting on behalf of Matilda, was defeated by King Stephen's army under Raoul, Bishop of Durham, and Thurstan, Archbishop of York. It received its name from a ship's mast erected on a wagon, and placed in the center of the English army; the mast displayed the standards of St. Peter of York, St. John of Beverley, and St. Wilfred of Ripon. On the top was a little casket containing the consecrated host.

Battle of the Three Emperors. The Battle of Austerlitz (December 2, 1805), when Napoleon inflicted a heavy defeat on the Russians and Austrians. The Emperors of the three Empires were all present in person.

battle royal. A certain number of cocks, say sixteen, are pitted together; the eight victors are then pitted, then the four, and last of all the two; and the winner is victor of the battle royal. Metaphorically, the term is applied to chess, etc. Loosely, a free-for-all. Also a combat among several boxers who enter the ring at the same time and anyone can hit anyone else at discretion. The last man on his feet is the winner. This was at one time a very popular spectacle in the South and Southwest. The combatants were almost invariably Negroes.

Battles of the World, Fifteen Decisive. Title of a book by Sir Edward CREASY (1851), in which the author discusses the battles which in his opinion have effected some great and permanent political change. They are:

1. Marathon (Sept., 490 B. C.), when Miltiades, with 10,000 Greeks, defeated 100,000 Persians under Datis and Artaphernes.
2. Syracuse (Sept., 413 B. C.), when the Athenians under Nicias and Demosthenes were defeated with a loss of 40,000 killed and wounded, and their entire fleet.
3. Arbela (Oct., 331 B. C.), when Alexander the Great overthrew Darius Codomanus for the third time.
4. Metaurus (207 B. C.), when the consuls Livius and Nero cut to pieces Hasdrubal's army, sent to reinforce Hannibal.
5. The Teutoburg Forest, where Arminius and the Gauls utterly overthrew the Romans under Varus, and thus established the independence of Gaul (9 A. D.).

6. Chalons (451 A. D.), when Aetius and Theodoric utterly defeated Attila, and saved Europe from devastation.

7. Tours (Oct., 732 A. D.), when Charles Martel overthrew the Saracens under Abderahmen, and thus freed Europe from the Moslem yoke.

8. Hastings (Oct., 1066), when William of Normandy slew Harold II, and obtained the crown of England.

9. Orleans in 1429, when Joan of Arc secured the independence of France.

10. The defeat of the Spanish Armada in 1588, which destroyed the hopes of Spain and the Pope respecting England.

11. Blenheim (Aug., 1704), when Marlborough and Prince Eugene defeated Tallard, and thus prevented Louis XIV from carrying out his schemes.

12. Pultowa (July, 1709), when Peter the Great utterly defeated Charles XII of Sweden, and thus established the Muscovite power.

13. Saratoga (Oct., 1777), when General Gates defeated the British under General Burgoyne, and thus secured for the United States the alliance of France.

14. Valmy (Sept., 1792), when the French Marshal Kellermann defeated the Duke of Brunswick, and thus established for a time the French republic.

15. Waterloo (June, 1815), when Napoleon was defeated by the Duke of Wellington, and Europe was restored to its normal condition.

Battle Symphony. English title of Beethoven's Wellington's Sieg (Wellington's Victory).

Baubo. In myth, an Eleusinian slave woman; in the allegory of Goethe's Faust, Part II, she symbolizes sensuality.

Baucis and Philemon, see PHILEMON AND BAUCIS.

Baudelaire, Charles (1821-1867). French Romantic poet, one of the first of the DECADENTS and the man responsible for introducing the works of Edgar Allan Poe to Europe. His life showed what became the familiar Decadent pattern of debauchery, perversity, profound introspection, deliberate eccentricity of conduct, violent and extreme moods, and strong attraction to the mysticism and ritual of the Roman Catholic religion. In his poetry he foreshadows the Symbolist poets (see SYMBOLISM) in his precision of phrase and his handling of sensuous effects through selected, significant images. His most famous work was LES FLEURS DU MAL (1857). He also perfected the prose poem.

Bauhaus. Famous German art school, founded by Walter GROPIUS in 1919, located at Weimar (1919-1925), Dessau (1925-1928), and Berlin (1928-1933). Its purpose was to develop in both the fine and the practical arts a style that would be appropriate to the technical and mechanized culture of the 20th century. Courses in painting, handcrafts, photography, the theater, typography, and especially architecture were taught by outstanding experts in their fields, including Vassili KANDINSKI and Paul KLEE. FUNCTIONALISM, or the "International Style," in architecture and a number of examples of industrial design which later became very familiar in the U.S., such as tubular lighting and steel furniture, were developed at the Bauhaus. The conservative element at Weimar and elsewhere attacked the experiments of the school as "Bolshevist art," and in 1933 it was forced to close.

Baum, Lyman Frank (1856-1919). Author of The Wonderful Wizard of Oz (1900) and a subsequent series of tales for young folk dealing with the mythical country of "Oz."

Baum, Vicki (1888-). Austrian novelist, later a naturalized American. Best-known work Grand Hotel (1931) which was dramatized and made into a moving picture.

Baviad, The. A merciless satire by GIFFORD on the Della Cruscan poetry (see DELLA-CRUSCANS), published 1794, and republished the following year with a second part called The Maeviad. Bavius and Maevius were two minor poets pilloried by Virgil (Eclogue, iii. 9), and their names are still used for inferior versifiers.

Bax, Clifford (1886-). English dramatist and poet.

Bax, Ernest Belfort (1854-1926). Helped William Morris found Socialist League and edited with Morris The Commonweal, wrote with Morris Socialism, Its Growth and Outcome (1894).

Baxter, Richard (1615-1691). English divine, a member of the parliamentary faction during the English civil war (1642-1646). Among his religious writings is Saint's Everlasting Rest (1650).

Baxter, William Sylvanus. The adolescent hero of Booth Tarkington's SEVENTEEN.

Bayard. A horse of incredible swiftness, given by Charlemagne to the four sons of AYMEN. If only one of the sons mounted, the horse was of the ordinary size; but if all four mounted, his body became elongated to the requisite length. He is introduced in Boiardo's Orlando Innamorato, Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, and elsewhere, and legend relates that he is still alive and can be heard neighing in the Ardennes on Midsummer Day. The name is used for any valuable or wonderful horse, and means a "high bay-colored horse."

Bayard, Chevalier de. Pierre du Terrail (1473?-1524), a celebrated French knight and national hero, distinguished in the Italian campaigns of Charles VIII, Louis XII, and François I. Of him it was said that he was le chevalier sans peur et sans reproche.

the British Bayard. Sir Philip Sidney. (1554-1584).

the Polish Bayard. Prince Joseph Poniatski (1763-1814).

Bayard of the Confederate Army. Robert E. Lee (1867-1870).

Bayard of the East or of the Indian Army. Sir James Outram (1803-1863).

Bayard of Nations. Poland.

Bayardo. The famous steed of RINALDO, which once belonged to Amadis of Gaul. See also HORSE.

Bayardo's leap. Three stones, about thirty yards apart, near Sleaford. It is said that Rinaldo was riding on his favorite steed, when the demon of the place sprang behind him; but Bayardo in terror took three tremendous leaps and unhorsed the fiend.

bayberry wax or tallow. A fragrant green waxlike fat obtained from the wax myrtle, used in making candles.

... and the smell of bayberry candles
William Sycamore.

Bay rum is distilled with leaves of the Jamaica bayberry.

Bayes. A character in The Rehearsal, by the Duke of BUCKINGHAM (1671), designed to satirize Dryden. The name, of course, refers to the laureateship.

Bayes's troops. "Dead men may rise again, like Bayes's troops, or the savages in the Fantocini." In The Rehearsal a battle is fought between foot-soldiers and great hobby-horses. At last Drawcansir kills all on both sides. Smith then asks how they are to go off, to which Bayes replies, "As they came on—upon their legs"; upon which they all jump up alive again.

Bayes, Nora. Professional name of Dora Goldberg (1880-1928). American actress and singer widely known in vaudeville and musical comedy.

Bayeux tapestry. A strip of linen 231 feet long and 20 inches wide on which is represented in embroidery the mission of Harold to William, duke of Normandy (William the Conqueror), and all the incidents of his history from then till his death at Hastings in 1066. It is preserved at Bayeux, and is supposed to be the work of Matilda, wife of William the Conqueror. A replica is shown at the Victoria and Albert Museum, South Kensington.

In the tapestry, the Saxons fight on foot with javelin and battle-axe, and bear shields with the British characteristic of a boss in the center. The men were moustached.

The Normans are on horseback, with long shields and pennoned lances. The men are not only shaven, but most of them have a complete tonsure on the back of the head, whence the spies said to Harold, "There are more priests in the Norman army than men in Harold's."

Bayham, Frederick. In Thackeray's Newcomes, a high-spirited young newspaper man, a deal of a Bohemian, on the staff of the Pall Mall Gazette. He calls himself F. B. and is so called by his friends. He appears also, in a minor way, in Philip.

Bayle, Pierre (1647-1706). French rationalist philosopher. Voltaire called him the "greatest dialectician who has ever written."

His followers, in England, Germany, Sweden, Holland, acclaimed him "the master of doubt." He was hated by Louis XIV and admired by Frederick the Great. He compiled Dictionnaire historique et critique (1697), commonly known as Bayle's Philosophical Dictionary, which Frederick the Great called the "breviary of good sense."

Baynes, Charlotte. In Thackeray's Philip the pleasant and attractive girl whom Philip marries in spite of her family's opposition to the match.

General Charles Baynes is Charlotte's father, a hero in the field but quite under the thumb of his wife.

Bayou Folk. See CHOPIN, KATE.

Bayou State. Mississippi. See under STATES.

Bay Psalm Book. An attempt made by a group of Puritan theologians and scholars in the Massachusetts Bay Colony to present a version of the Psalms which would be more faithful to the original Biblical texts than the King James version. Begun in 1636 and completed and published in 1640, it was the first important book published in America, although the Freeman's Oath and an Almanac for New England had been published in 1639.

Bayreuth Festival. The musical festival held annually at Bayreuth for the representation of Wagner's operas.

Bayreuth hush. Intense silence, from the silence preceding the opening of the festival.

Bay State. Massachusetts. See under STATES.

Bazarov. The chief character in Turgenyev's FATHERS AND SONS.

Bazin, René (1853-1932). French Catholic novelist. His two best known works La Terre qui Meurt and Les Oberlé.

B.C. In dates an abbreviation for "Before Christ," before the Christian era.

marked with B.C. When a soldier disgraced himself by insubordination he was formerly marked with "B.C." (bad character) before he was drummed out of the regiment.

Beach, Mrs. Amy Marcy, née Cheney (1867-1944). Most celebrated of American women composers. A child prodigy, she made her public debut as a pianist at sixteen. Her Gaelic Symphony was called "a notable event in the history of women's accomplishments."

Beach, Rex Ellingwood (1877-1949). American popular novelist of the "he-man" school of James Oliver Curwood. Was once called "The Victor Hugo of the North."

Beachcroft, Thomas Owen (1902-). English short-story writer. Collections of his work already published are A Young Man in a Hurry (1935) and You Must Break Out Sometimes (1937).

Beaconsfield, Benjamin Disraeli, Earl of, see DISRAELI.

Beacon Street. Famous street in Boston, Massachusetts, representing culture and wealth. Runs from Tremont Street along the Common and westward through the Back Bay district.

Beadle's Library or more exactly Beadle's Half-Dime Pocket Library. A series of dime-novel thrillers of the latter part of the 19th century. Deadwood Dick, Calamity Jane, Kit Carson and other similar adventurers appeared in the pages of Beadle's Library.

Beal, Gifford Reynolds (1879-). American painter. Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York; Syracuse Museum of Art; Chicago Art Institute, etc.

Bealby. Title of a novel by H. G. WELLS.

Bean, The Late Christopher. Play by Sidney HOWARD.

bear. In the phraseology of the Stock Exchange, a speculator for a fall. Thus, to operate for a bear, or to bear the market is to use every effort to depress prices, so as to buy cheap and make a profit on the rise. Such a transaction is known as a bear account.

The term is of some antiquity, and was current at least as early as the South Sea Bubble, in the 18th century. Its probable origin will be found in the proverb, "Selling the skin before you have caught the bear."

A bull, on the other hand, is a speculative purchase for a rise; also a buyer who does this, the reverse of a bear. A bull account is a speculation made in the hope that the stock purchased will rise before the day of settlement.

the Bear. Albert, margrave of Brandenburg (1106-1170). He was so called from his heraldic device.

the Bear or the Northern Bear. Russia.

the Great Bear and the Little Bear. These constellations were so named by the Greeks, and their word, arktos, a bear, is still kept in the names Arcturus (the bear-ward, from ouros, guardian) and Arctic. The Sanskrit name for the Great Bear is from the verb raṅh, to be bright, and it has been suggested that the Greeks named it arktos as a result of confusion between the two words. See CHARLES' WAIN; NORTHERN WAGONER.

The classical fable is that Callisto, a nymph of Diana, had two sons by Jupiter, which Juno changed into bears, and Jupiter converted into constellations.

'Twas here we saw Calisto's star retire
Beneath the waves, unawed by Juno's ire.
Camoens, Lusiad, Bk. v.

the Three Bears. See GOLDBLOCKS.

Bear Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Beard, Charles Austin (1874-1948). American historian, known for his liberal viewpoint and unorthodox interpretations of events in American history, in which he stressed economic influences. His chief works are An Economic Interpretation of the Constitution (1913); Economic Origins of Jeffersonian Democracy (1915); The Rise of American Civilization (1927), with his wife, Mary R. Beard; A Charter for the Social Sciences (1932); and America in Midpassage (1939).

Beard, Daniel Carter (1850-1941). Known as Dan. American painter, illustrator, and organizer of Boy Scout movement in U.S.

Beardsley, Aubrey Vincent (1872-1898). English artist, known for his drawings on fantastic and erotic subjects, chiefly as illustrations for books and periodicals representative of the English Aesthetic movement during the 1890's. See YELLOW BOOK.

bear garden. A place full of confusion, noise, tumult, and quarrels. In Elizabethan and Stuart times the gardens where bears were kept and baited for public amusement were famous for all sorts of riotous disorder.

bear leader. A common expression in the 18th century denoting a traveling tutor who escorted a young nobleman, or youth of wealth and fashion, on the "Grand Tour." From the old custom of leading muzzled bears about the streets, and making them show off in order to attract notice and money.

Bear! [said Dr. Pangloss to his pupil]. Under favor young gentleman, I am the bear-leader, being appointed your tutor.—G. Colman, Heir-at-Law.

béarnaise sauce. A thick sauce made of vinegar, chopped onion, oil, butter, egg yolks, seasoning. For meat or fish.

Bear State. Arkansas. See under STATES.

Beast, the. The blasphemous Beast with seven heads and ten horns of Rev. xiii. and xiv. Its mystical number is 666. It is identified with the ANTICHRIST.

beatin'est. Surpassing all others. American dialect.

beati possidentes. Blessed are those who have (for they shall receive).

beatitudes. The first few verses of Christ's Sermon on the Mount (Matt. v. 3-12), beginning "Blessed are the poor in spirit" and continuing to name the virtues that make their possessors blessed. The Belgian-French composer César Auguste Franck (1822-1890) has a famous work entitled Les Béatitudes (1880).

Beatrice. (1) The heroine of Shakespeare's MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

(2) Dante's Beatrice, celebrated by him in the Vita Nuova and the DIVINA COMMEDIA, was born 1266 and died in 1290, under twenty-four years old. She was a native of Florence, of the Portinari family, and married Simone de' Bardi in 1287. Dante married Gemma Donati about two years after her death. Beatrice was Dante's constant inspiration and he makes her his guide through Paradise in the Divina Commedia.

Beatrice, Sister, see SISTER BEATRICE.

beat the bounds. To survey in procession a parish. An English custom of Anglo-Saxon origin. See under BOUNDS.

beat the Dutch. To be very astonishing. Probably a euphemism for beat the devil.

Beatty, David, 1st Earl of the North Sea (1871-1936). 1st Sea Lord of the Admiralty (1919-1927). See JUTLAND.

beau. The French word, which means "fine," or "beautiful," has, in England, often been prefixed to the name of a man of fashion or a fop as an epithet of distinction. The following are well known:

Beau Brummel. George Bryan Brummel (1778-1840). Clyde Fitch was the author of a successful comedy entitled Beau Brummel (1890) which popularized the name in America.

Beau D'Orsay. Father of Count D'Orsay, and called by Byron Jeune Cupidon.

Beau Feilding. Robert Feilding (d. 1712), called "Handsome Feilding" by Charles II. He died in Scotland Yard, London, after having been convicted of bigamously marrying the Duchess of Cleveland, a former mistress of Charles II. He figures as Orlando in Steele's Tatler (Nos. 50 and 51).

Beau Hewitt. The model for "Sir Fopling Flutter," hero of Etherege's Man of Mode.

Beau Nash. Richard Nash (1674-1761). Son of a Welsh gentleman, a notorious diner-out. He undertook the management of the bath-rooms at Bath, and conducted the public balls with a splendor and decorum never before witnessed; hence he was also known as the "King of Bath."

Beau Didapper, in Fielding's JOSEPH ANDREWS, and Beau Tibbs, noted for his finery, vanity, and poverty in Goldsmith's CITIZEN OF THE WORLD, may also be mentioned.

Beaucaire, Monsieur, see MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE.

Beauchamp, Kathleen, see MANSFIELD, KATHERINE.

Beauchamp, Mary Annette, see ELIZABETH, Countess Russell.

Beauchamp's Career. A political novel by George MEREDITH (1876). The hero, Nevil Beauchamp, influenced by the venerable Dr. Shrapnel, a radical agitator, enters politics as a reform candidate. He is sincere and enthusiastic, but is diverted by love affairs. The novel was suggested by the career of Meredith's friend Admiral Maxse.

Beauclerk, Helen DeVere (1892-). English novelist. Lived in France as a child and wrote first stories in French. Newspaper work and translation. Best-known book The Love of the Foolish Angel (1929).

Beauclerk, Topham (1739-1780). Descendant of Charles II and Nell Gwyn. Intimate friend of Doctor Johnson. Appears in Boswell.

beau garçon. A handsome fellow, a beau.

Beau Geste. Title of a popular novel by Percival Christopher WREN.

Beauharnais, Joséphine de, née Marie Joséphine Rose Tascher de la Pagerie. Married Napoleon Bonaparte March 9, 1796. Crowned empress of the French at Napoleon's coronation (December 2, 1804). Divorced by Napoleon in 1809.

beau idéal. Properly the ideal beautiful, the abstract idea of beauty, idéal, in the French, being the adjective, and beau, the substantive. But in English the parts played by the words are usually transposed, and thus have come to mean the ideal type or model of anything in its most consummate perfection.

Beaujeu, Monsieur le Chevalier de. In Scott's FORTUNES OF NIGEL, the keeper of a gambling-house to which Dalgarno took Nigel. He is described as "King of the Card-pack and Duke of the Dice-box."

Beaujon, Paul. Pseudonym of Beatrice Warde, American typographical expert living in London. See also May Lamberton BECKER.

Beaumarchais. The nom de plume of Pierre Augustin Caron (1733-1799), author of The Barber of Seville (1775) and THE MARRIAGE OF FIGARO (1784), and the name by which he is remembered today.

beau monde. The fashionable world; people who make up the coterie of fashion.

Beaumont and Fletcher, that is, Francis Beaumont (1584-1616) and John Fletcher (1579-1625). English dramatists of the Elizabethan era, joint authors of many plays. The best known of their dramas are The Maid's Tragedy (1611), Philaster or Love Lies a-Bleeding (1611) and the farcical Knight of the Burning Pestle (1609). See those entries. Fletcher is also known for his pastoral drama, The Faithful Shepherdess (1610), written after Beaumont's death.

Beau Sabreur. Literally Handsome Swordsman. Applied to Joachim Murat, Napoleon's cavalry commander.

beauséant. The black and white standard of the Knights Templars. Also their battle cry.

Beautiful and Damned, The. See FITZGERALD, F. SCOTT.

Beautiful People, The. See SAROYAN, WILLIAM.

Beauty and the Beast. The hero and heroine of the well-known fairy tale in which Beauty saved the life of her father by consenting to live with the Beast; and the Beast, being disenchanted by Beauty's love, became a handsome prince, and married her.

A couple consisting of a beautiful woman and ugly escort or husband is often referred to as Beauty and the Beast.

Beauty of Buttermere. Mary Robinson married in 1802 to John Hatfield, a heartless impostor, and already a bigamist, who was executed for forgery at Carlisle in 1803. She was the subject of many dramas and stories.

Here, too, were "forms and pressures of the time,"
Rough, bold, as Grecian comedy displayed
When Art was young; dramas of living men,
And recent things yet warm with life;
I mean, O distant Friend! a story drawn
From our own ground,—The Maid of Buttermere,—
And how, unfaithful to a virtuous wife Deserted and deceived, the Spoiler came
And wooed the artless daughter of the hills,
And wedded her, in cruel mockery
Of love and marriage bonds

Wordsworth, Prelude, vii. 288.

beauty sleep. Sleep taken before midnight. Those who habitually go to bed, especially during youth, after midnight, are usually pale and more or less haggard.

Beaux, Cecilia (1863-1942). Renowned American woman painter. Work represented in all important public collections.

beaux-arts. The fine arts. Also short for École des Beaux-Arts in Paris.

beaux-esprits (Fr.). Men of wit or genius (singular, bel esprit, a wit, or genius).

Beaux' Stratagem, The. A comedy by Farquhar (1707). Thomas Aimwell and his friend Archer, the two beaux, having run through all their money, set out fortune-hunting, and come to Lichfield as "master and man." Aimwell pretends to be very unwell, and as Lady Bountiful's hobby is tending the sick, she orders him to be removed to her mansion. Here he and Dorinda, daughter of Lady Bountiful, fall in love with each other, and finally marry. Archer falls in love with Mrs. Sullen, the wife of Lady Bountiful's son, Squire Sullen.

beaux yeux (Fr.). Beautiful eyes or attractive looks. "I will do it for your beaux yeux" (because you are so pretty, or because your eyes are so attractive).

The poor fellow is mad for your beaux yeux, I believe.
Thackeray, Pendennis, ch. 26.

Beaverbrook, 1st Baron. William Maxwell Aitken (1879-). British newspaper tycoon. British Minister of Information 1918; Minister of Supply 1941. Publisher of The Daily Express and other newspapers.

Bebel, August (1840-1913). German Social Democratic leader and writer. Converted to Socialism by Wilhelm Liebknecht (1826-1900).

Becher, Johann Joachim (1635-1682). German chemist. With STAHL, he advanced the PHLOGISTON theory of combustion.

Beck, Mrs. Lily Moresby Adams (?-1931). Pseudonym E. Barrington. English novelist and mystic. Wrote a succession of popular romantic historical novels dealing with such famous folk as Nelson and Lady Hamilton, Lord Byron, Perdita Robinson, Queen Elizabeth, etc., and a fictionalized life of Buddha.

Becker, Carl Lotus (1873-1945). Distinguished American historian. Professor of European history at Cornell.

Becker, Mrs. May Lamberton (1873-). American editor and critic. Author of A Reader's Guide Book and Adventures in Reading. Compiler of Golden Tales of New England (1931) and other regional anthologies. Co-author, with daughter Beatrice Warde, of Introducing Charles Dickens (1940).

Becket, Thomas à. See St. Thomas à Becket under SAINTS.

Beckford, William (1759-1844). English novelist, author of Vathek.

Beckmesser. The town clerk, a leading character in Wagner's opera, DIE MEISTERSINGER (1868).

Becky Sharp.

A regular Becky Sharp. An unprincipled, scheming young woman, who by cunning, hypocrisy, and low smartness raises herself from obscurity and poverty to some position in society, and falls therefrom in due course after having maintained a more or less precarious foothold. Of course she is good-looking, and superficial amiability is a sine qua non. Becky Sharp, the original of this, and one of the finest creations in all fiction, is the principal character in Thackeray's VANITY FAIR. "She was small and slight in person, pale, sandy-haired, and with green eyes, habitually cast down, but very large, odd, and attractive when they looked up."

Bécquer, Gustavo Adolfo (1836-1870). Spanish poet of German descent. Several of his poems are beautifully translated by John Masefield.

Beddoes, Thomas Lovell (1803-1849). English playwright, who wrote in the tradition of the Elizabethan poetic drama, in the movement given impetus by the English Romantic critics, COLERIDGE, LAMB, HAZLITT, and DE QUINCEY. His best-known play is Death's Jest-Book, Or the Fool's Tragedy, written in 1829.

Bede, Adam, see ADAM BEDE.

Bede, Cuthbert. Pseudonym of Edward BRADLEY.

Bede, Venerable (673-735). Anglo-Saxon historian and scholar, a Benedictine monk whose studies covered a wide field, including metrics, spelling, physics, and chronology. Our custom of determining dates from the year of Christ's birth is said to have come from Bede's work in chronology. See ANNO DOMINI. He is best known for his commentaries on the Bible and his Historia Ecclesiastica Gentis Anglorum, or ECCELESIASTICAL HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH PEOPLE, on which he stopped work in 731.

Bedell's Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Bedivere, or Bedver. In the Arthurian romances, a knight of the Round Table, butler and staunch adherent of King Arthur. It is he who, at the request of the dying King, throws Excalibur into the Lake, and afterwards bears his body to the ladies in the barge which is to take him to Avalon.

Bedlam. A lunatic asylum or madhouse; a contraction for Bethlehem, the name of a religious house in London, converted into a hospital for lunatics.

St Mary of Bethlehem was founded as a priory in 1247 and in 1547 it was given to the mayor and corporation of London, and incorporated as a royal foundation for lunatics.

Tom o' Bedlam, see TOM O' BEDLAM.

Bedlamite. A madman, a fool, an inhabitant of a Bedlam. See ABRAHAM-MAN.

Bedott, Widow. The imaginary author of a series of humorous sketches by Mrs. F. M. Whitcher (Am. 1811-1852). So popular was this "egregiously wise and respectable and broadly humorous matron" that two editions were called for after Mrs. Whitcher's death.

Bedouins. French (and hence English) form of an Arabic word meaning "a dweller in the desert," given indiscriminately by Europeans to the nomadic tribes of Arabia and Syria, and applied in journalistic slang to gypsies, or the homeless poor of the streets. In this use it is merely a further extension of the term "street Arab," which means the same thing.

Bedreddin Hassan. In the Arabian Nights, the son of Nouredin Ali, grand vizier of Basora. After the death of his father he comes into disfavor with the Sultan and is carried by the fairies to Damascus, where he has lived for ten years as a pastry-cook. Search is made for him, and the search-party, halting outside the city of Damascus, sends for some cheese-cakes. When the cheese-cakes arrive, the widow of Nouredin declares that they must have been made by her son, for no one else knows the secret of making them, and she herself taught it to him. On hearing this, the vizier orders Bedreddin to be seized "for making cheese-cakes without pepper," and the joke is carried on till the party arrives at Cairo, where the pastry-cook prince is reunited with his wife, the Queen of Beauty.

Bedtime Stories. See BURGESS, THORNTON WALDO.

bee.

Athenian Bee, Bee of Athens; also Attic Bee, Bee of Attica. (1) Plato (ca. 427-347 B. C.).

(2) Sophocles (496-405 B. C.).

(3) Xenophon (444-355). So called from the sweetness of their style. It is said that when Plato was in his cradle, a swarm of bees alighted on his mouth.

Spelling bee, husking bee, etc. A social gathering for some voluntary competition. The expression is of American origin, and refers possibly to the social and industrious character of the bee.

Bee, The Life of the. See MAETERLINCK, MAURICE.

Beebe, Charles William (1877-). American biologist and popularizer of scientific subjects. Of his non-technical books, designed for general consumption, the best known are The Arcturus Adventure (1925); Beneath Tropic Seas (1928); Exploring with Beebe (1932); Half Mile Down (explorations in the bathysphere; 1934); and The Zaca Adventure (1938).

Beebe, Lucius Morris (1902-). American journalist and reporter of café society for various newspapers. Epicure, and writer on Boston and on the romance of railroad engineering, as in High Iron.

Beecham, Sir Thomas (1879-). English conductor and musical impresario. Son of the manufacturer of Beecham's Pills. Many tours in the U.S.

Beecher, Henry Ward (1813-1887). American Congregationalist minister, famous for the oratory in his sermons and lectures and for his crusade against slavery. During the Civil War he went on a lecture tour of England, speaking for the Union cause.

Beecher, Lyman (1775-1863). American Presbyterian minister, a celebrated preacher and the enemy of liquor and Catholicism. He was the father of Harriet Beecher Stowe and Henry Ward Beecher.

Beeding, Francis. Pseudonym of the British authors John Leslie Palmer (1885-1944) and Hilary Aidan St. George Saunders (1898-). Under this name were published many superior mystery novels. St. George Saunders, in the Air Ministry, World War II, wrote The Battle of Britain (1940), a pamphlet that sold three million copies in England alone, and was translated into 25 languages, and also Bomber Command (1941).

beefeater. One of the yeomen of the guard (see GILBERT, W. S.) in England, who since the accession of Henry VII have attended state occasions dressed in medieval uniform. Also one of the warders of the Tower of London who wear the same uniform. Originally, one who eats another's beef, that is, a servant.

Beelzebub. The name should be spelled Beelzebub (or, rather, Baalzebub, see Baal), and means "lord of the high house"; but, as this title was ambiguous and might have been taken as referring to Solomon's Temple, the late Jews changed it to Beelzebub, which has the meaning "lord of flies." Beelzebub was the particular Baal worshiped originally in Ekron and afterwards far and wide in Palestine and the adjacent countries. To the Jews he came to be the chief representative of the false gods, and he took an important place in their hierarchy of demons. He is referred to in Matt. xii. 24, as "the prince of the devils," and hence Milton places him next in rank to Satan.

One next himself in power, and next in crime,
Long after known in Palestine, and named Beelzebub.

Paradise Lost, i. 79.

Beer, Thomas (1889-1940). American author, known for his popular novels and short stories, and his studies of American social customs and politics, respectively, in the last years of the 19th century, in The Mauve Decade (1926) and Hanna (1929).

Beerbohm, Sir Max (1872-). English critic, author, and caricaturist known for his parody and satire. Half brother of Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree. His best-known books are A Book of Caricatures (1907); Zuleika Dobson (1911), a satirical novel; and A Christmas Garland (1912), a collection of parodies of his contemporaries.

Beer-Hofmann, Richard (1866-1945). Austrian poet, playwright, and novelist of the Vienna School of Schnitzler, Herman Bahr, and Hugo von Hofmannsthal. Received a special award of merit from the National Institute of Arts and Letters in 1945.

Beers, Clifford Whittingham (1876-1943). American mental hygienist. Published famous book, after a mental breakdown, A Mind that Found Itself (1908; 24th ed. 1939). Awarded gold medal (1933) of National Institute of Social Sciences for "distinguished services for the benefit of mankind."

Beers, Ethel Lynn (1827-1879). American poet, author of All Quiet Along the Potomac (1879).

Beers, Henry Augustin (1847-1926). Yale professor and poet; authority on romanticism of the 18th and 19th centuries.

Beethoven, Ludwig van (1770-1827). Famous German composer, a student of HAYDN, who added the new, emotional qualities of Romanticism to the tradition of formal precision that he inherited from the 18th-century masters of music. His nine symphonies are most widely known among his works, although he wrote in a number of other musical forms, including chamber music, sonatas, and concertos. The most famous of the symphonies are: the Third, called the Eroica (1804); the Fifth (1808); the Sixth, or Pastoral (1808); and especially the Ninth, or Choral (1823).

Beetle. One of the trio of schoolboys whose pranks are told in Kipling's Stalky and Co. Beetle is usually considered a portrait of Kipling himself.

Befana. The good fairy of Italian children, who is supposed to fill their stockings with toys when they go to bed on Twelfth Night. Someone enters the children's bedroom for the purpose, and the wakeful youngsters cry out, "Ecco la Befana." According to legend, Befana was too busy with house affairs to look after the Magi when they went to offer their gifts, and said she would wait to see them on their return; but they went another way, and Befana, every Twelfth Night, watches to see them. The name is a corruption of Epiphania.

Beg, Callum. In Scott's Waverley, page to Fergus M'Ivor, whom he serves with devotion and a reckless willingness to undertake anything, good or evil, in his behalf. He is usually known as Little Callum Beg.

Begbie, Harold (1871-1929). English journalist, author of didactic novels and of a biography of General William Booth.

beggar on horseback. A social upstart. Hence the saying, set a beggar on horseback, and he'll ride to the de'il, that is, there is no one so proud and arrogant as a beggar who has suddenly grown rich.

Beggars of Life. An autobiographical novel by Jim TULLY. It became a best-seller in 1924, partly because of an introduction written by G. B. SHAW.

Beggar's Opera, The. A famous burlesque by John GAY (1727), the chief characters of which are beggars and thieves. See MACHEATH; PEACHUM; LOCKIT.

Beglerbeg. See RULERS, TITLES OF.

Beguines. A sect of lay nuns organized in the Low Countries during the 12th century, named for Lambert la Bègue (Lambert the Stammerer), a priest of Liège at the time. A popular song by Cole Porter (Am.; ca. 1934) was entitled Begin the Beguine, referring to a type of dance.

Begum. See rulers, titles of.

behaviorism. A system of psychology which stresses activity rather than thought and regards the human organism as a mechanism composed solely of habits and "conditioned" responses that can be learned or unlearned according to the environment, varying only with the stimulus. The keystone of the system is the Conditioned Reflex. Behaviorism was at the height of its popularity in the 1920's, known especially through the writings of J. B. WATSON.

Behemoth. The animal described under this name in Job xl. 15 ff., is, if an actual animal were intended, almost certainly the hippopotamus; but modern scholarship rather tends to the opinion that the reference is purely mythological.

Behind That Curtain. See BIGGERS, EARL DERR.

Behn, Mrs. Aphra (1640-1689). English playwright and novelist, a spy for King Charles II at Antwerp during one period of her life. The Rover (1677-1681) was her most popular play, and Oroonoko or the History of the Royal Slave (1678) was her most popular novel.

Behrens, Dr. In THE MAGIC MOUNTAIN by Thomas MANN, the director of Haus Berghof.

Behrman, Samuel Nathaniel (1893-). American playwright, author of sophisticated comedies including The Second Man (1927); Brief Moment (1931); Biography (1932); Rain from Heaven (1934); End of Summer (1936); Wine of Choice (1938); No Time for Comedy (1939). In 1937 he prepared an adaptation of Jean Giraudoux's AMPHITRYON 38.

Bein, Albert (1903-). American author, best known for his plays on proletarian subjects as Little Ol' Boy (1933); Let Freedom Ring (1935), an adaptation of To Make My Bread, a novel by Grace LUMPKIN; and Heavenly Express (1940).

Beith, John Hay. Pseudonym Ian Hay (1876-). English novelist, known in World War I for his account of Kitchener's army The First Hundred Thousand.

Bel. The name of two Assyrio-Babylonian gods; it is the same word as BAAL. The story of Bel and the Dragon, in which we are told how Daniel convinced the king that Bel was not an actual living deity but only an image, was formerly part of the Book of Daniel, but is now relegated to the Apocrypha.

Bel, le and la Belle. Personal epithets. See under FAIR.

Belamour. Anyone, man or woman, loved by one of the opposite sex; from Fr. bel amour, fair love. Also, some unidentified white flower:

Her lips did smell like unto Gilly flowers,
Her ruddy cheeks like unto Roses red;
Her snowy brows like budded Bellamours.
Spenser, Amoretti, lxiiv.

Belarius. In Shakespeare's CYMBELINE, a nobleman and soldier in the army of Cymbe-line, king of Britain. He was banished, and stole away, out of revenge, the King's two infant sons, Guiderius and Arviragus.

Belasco, David (1859-1931). American playwright and theatrical producer. Known for the stars he managed, his stage effects, Madame Butterfly, The Gnl of the Golden West and The Return of Peter Grimm.

Belch, Sir Toby. A reckless, roistering, jolly fellow, from the knight of that name in Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

bel-dam. An ugly old woman. According to its etymology the word ought to mean "fair lady."

bel-esprit (Fr.). Literally, fine mind, means, in English, a vivacious wit; one of quick and lively parts, ready at repartee (pl. beaux-esprits).

Belford. A friend of Lovelace in Richardson's CLARISSA HARLOWE. These "friends" made a covenant to pardon every sort of liberty which they took with each other.

Belgravia. A fashionable residence district in the West End of London. Type name for the world of aristocratic fashion.

Belial (Heb.). The worthless or lawless one, i.e., the devil.

What concord hath Christ with Belial?
2 Cor. vi. 15.

Milton, in his pandemonium, makes him a very high and distinguished prince of darkness.

Belial came last—than whom a spirit more lewd
Fell not from heaven, or more gross to love
Vice for itself.

Paradise Lost, bk. 1. 490.

sons of Belial. Lawless, worthless rebellious people.

Now the sons of Eli were sons of Belial.
1 Sam. ii. 12.

Believe me, if all those endearing young charms. A famous song by the English poet Thomas Moore.

Belinda. (1) The heroine of Pope's mock heroic poem, THE RAPE OF THE LOCK.

(2) Title and heroine of a novel by Maria Edgeworth (1803).

Beline. The wife of ARGAN in Molière's comedy, Le Malade Imaginaire.

Belisarius (d. 565). The greatest of Justinian's generals. Being accused of conspiring against the life of the emperor, was deprived of all his property. The tale is that his eyes were put out, and that when living as a beggar in Constantinople he fastened a bag to his roadside hut, with the inscription, "Give an obolus to poor old Belisarius." This tradition is of no historic value.

Belise. In Molière's FEMMES SAVANTES, sister of Philaminte, and, like her, a femme savante. She imagines that everyone is in love with her.

bell.

beat the bell. To be first fiddle; to carry off the palm; to be the best. Before cups were presented to winners of horse-races, etc., a little gold or silver bell used to be given for the prize.

who is to bell the cat? Who will risk his own life to save his neighbors? Anyone who encounters great personal hazard for the sake of others undertakes to bell the cat. The allusion is to the fable of the cunning old mouse, who suggested that they should hang a bell on the cat's neck to give notice to all mice of her approach. Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, was called Bell-the-Cat. James III made favorites of architects and masons; one mason, named Cochrane, he created Earl of Mar. The Scotch nobles held a council in the church of Lauder for the purpose of putting down these upstarts, and Lord Gray asked, "Who will bell the cat?" "That will I," said Douglas, and he fearlessly put to death, in the King's presence, the obnoxious minions.

ban with bell, book, and candle. A solemn form of excommunication used in the medieval church.

Bell, Acton, Ellis, and Currer. The pseudonyms adopted by Anne, Emily and Charlotte BRONTË respectively. In 1846 they published a volume entitled Poems by Currer, Ellis, and Acton Bell.

Bell, Adam, see ADAM BELL.

Bell, Alexander Graham (1847-1922). Scottish-American scientist and inventor of the telephone. In 1871 he came from Scotland to the U.S. as teacher of a system of speech for the deaf. Improved recorder for phonograph; coinventor of airplane ailerons.

Bell, Bessie, see BESSIE BELL.

Bell, Clive (1881-). English art critic. Married Vanessa Stephen, sister of Virginia Woolf. "Bloomsbury Group." Chevalier of the Legion of Honor (1936). Critical articles a feature of the New Statesman and Nation. Believes in the complete separation of Art from Life. His son, Julian, a modern poet, was fatally wounded driving ambulance for Loyalists in war of the Spanish people against Fascism.

Bell, Gertrude Margaret Lowthian (1868-1926). English traveler and writer on travel. An authority on Arabia.

Bell, J. J. (1871-1934). Scottish journalist and author. Creator of WEE MACGREGOR.

Bell, Laura or more accurately, Helen Laura. The heroine of Thackeray's PENDENNIS. As Mrs. Arthur Pendennis she appears also in The Newcomes and Philip.

Bell, Peter, see PETER BELL.

Bellamy, Edward (1850-1898). American author, best known for his popular Utopian novel, LOOKING BACKWARD (1887).

Bellarino, Dr. In Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice, the lawyer whose letter Portia produces in the famous trial scene. He does not appear on the stage.

Bellaston, Lady. In Fielding's TOM JONES, a profligate, from whom Tom Jones accepts support.

Bellay, Joachim du (ca. 1525-1560). French poet, member of the school of the PLÉIADE. He wrote sonnets in the Italian neo-Platonic tradition (see NEO-PLATONISM) and a series, inspired by a visit to Rome (1553-1558), which consisted of Antiquités de Rome, Regrets, and Jeux rustiques. He is best known for his DÉFENSE ET ILLUSTRATION DE LA LANGUE FRANÇAISE (1549), an important critical treatise.

belle (Fr.). A beauty.

the belle of the room. The most beautiful lady present.

belle amie (Fr.). Fair friend; mistress.

la belle France. Beautiful France. A common French phrase applied to France.

la belle sauvage. A name for POCAHONTAS.

Belleau Wood. Forested tract east of Paris where American troops stopped the German offensive in 1918. Beginning June 6, two weeks' fighting cost the U.S. 285 officers and 7,585 men killed, wounded or missing.

Belle Dame sans Merci, La. A poem by John Keats (1819), the title and general theme of which are taken from an earlier poetic dialogue "between a gentleman and a gentlewoman, who finding no mercy at her hand dieth for sorrow." The earlier poem was once considered a translation by Chaucer from Alain Chartier (1385?-after 1433).

Bellefontaine, Benedict. In Longfellow's Evangeline, a wealthy farmer of Grand Pré (Nova Scotia) and father of Evangeline. When the inhabitants of his village are driven into exile, Benedict dies of a broken heart as he is about to embark, and is buried on the seashore.

Bellegarde, De. The name of the old French family in Henry James' novel THE AMERICAN who opposes Christopher Newman's efforts to marry their widowed daughter, Claire de Cintré.

belle-mère (Fr.). Mother-in-law; step-mother. Kathleen Norris used the phrase as the title of one of her novels.

Bellenden, Lady Margaret. In Scott's OLD MORTALITY, an old lady, mistress of the Tower of Tillietudlem, and devoted to the house of Stuart.

Miss Edith Bellenden. Heroine of Scott's OLD MORTALITY, granddaughter of Lady Margaret, betrothed to Lord Evendale, of the King's army, but in love with Morton, a leader of the Covenanters, and the hero of the novel.

Bellerus. A giant, the fabled guardian of Land's End, England.

Sleep'st by the fable of Bellerus old.
Milton, Lycidas.

belles-lettres. Polite literature; poetry, and standard literary works which are not scientific or technical: the study or pursuit of such literature. The term—which, of course, is French—has given birth to the words belle-lettrist and belletristic.

Bellerophon. The Joseph of Greek mythology; Antaea, the wife of Proetus, being "Potiphar's wife" who tempted him, and afterwards falsely accused him. Her husband, Proetus, sent Bellerophon with a letter to Iobates, the king of Lycia, his wife's father, recounting the charge, and praying that the bearer might be put to death. Iobates, unwilling to slay him himself, gave him many hazardous tasks (including the killing of the CHIMAERA), but as he was successful in all of them, Iobates made him his heir. Later Bellerophon is fabled to have attempted to fly to heaven on the winged horse Pegasus, but Zeus sent a gadfly to sting the horse, and the rider was overthrown. See also URIAH.

Bellerophonitic letters. Letters containing the bearer's death warrant, as the letter which Bellerophon brought from the jealous Proetus to king Iobates of Lycia.

Bellew, Harold Kyrle (1855-1911). Well-known actor on English and American stage. Son of one of England's foremost preachers. An English actress is named Kyrle Bellew.

Bellicent. Daughter of Gorloise and Igerna, half-sister of King Arthur. According to Tennyson, she was the wife of Lot, King of Orkney; but in Le Morte d'Arthur Lot's wife is Margause.

Bellin. The ram in the tale of Reynard the Fox. His wife was Olewey.

Bellini, Giovanni (ca. 1430-1516). Venetian painter, of a famous Venetian family of painters, influenced by MANTEGNA and DONATELLO. He is best known for his altar-pieces.

Bellini, Vincenzo (1802-1835). Composer of the operas LA SONNAMBULA, NORMA and I PURITANI.

Bellisant. The mother of Valentine and Orson in the romance of that name, sister to King Pepin of France, wife of Alexander, emperor of Constantinople. Being accused of infidelity, she was banished by the Emperor.

Bellman, the. Character in Lewis Carroll's The Hunting of the Snark.

Bellman of London, The. A prose pamphlet by Thomas DEKKER, written in 1608 and an example of Elizabethan "ROGUE LITERATURE."

bell mare. A mare wearing a bell to lead a mule herd, or pack-animals. Cf. BELLWETHER, used contemptuously for the leader of a (human) herd.

Belloc, Joseph Hilaire Pierre (1870-). English writer, born in France, author of light verse, travel books, history, biography, essays, and fiction. His works include: The Bad Child's Book of Beasts (1896); a series of essays, On Nothing, On Everything, On Anything, On Something, On (1908-1911, 1923); Book of the Bayeux Tapestry (1914); History of England (1925-1927); biographies of ROBESPIERRE, JAMES II, RICHELIEU, and Cardinal WOLSEY (1927-1930). Like G. K. CHESTERTON, a firm Roman Catholic in his beliefs.

Belloc Lowndes, see LOWNDES.

Bellona. In Roman mythology, goddess of war and wife of Mars.

Bellona's handmaids. Blood, fire and famine.

Bellona's bridegroom. Mars, and hence, war.

Belloni, Sandra, see SANDRA BELLONI.

Bellows, George Wesley (1882-1925). American painter and lithographer, best known for his scenes of prizefights.

Bells, The. A famous onomatopoeic poem by Edgar Allan Poe.

Bells and Pomegranates. A series of pamphlets containing poems by Robert BROWNING, issued (1841-1846) in an effort by his publishers to popularize his work.

Bells of Basle, The. See ARAGON, LOUIS.

bellwether of the flock. A jocose and rather deprecatory term applied to the leader of a party. Of course the allusion is to the wether or sheep which leads the flock with a bell fastened to its neck.

beloved disciple. John, to whom the Fourth Gospel is attributed (John xiii. 23, etc.).

beloved physician. Supposedly Luke the evangelist (Col. iv. 14).

Beloved Returns, The. English translation of Lotte in Weimar, a novel by Thomas MANN, published in the U.S. in 1941. It tells of an imagined visit to GOETHE in his honored old age at Weimar by Charlotte Buff, the reputed original of the heroine in his first important work, The Sorrows of Werther (see WERTHER). The book gives an ironic portrait of a Romantic poet grown old and overshadowed by his greatness, and contains numerous philosophic conversations on art and the rôle of the artist in society in the author's familiar vein.

Beloved Vagabond, The. A novel by W. J. Locke (Eng. 1906). The "Beloved Vagabond" is Paragot, a Bohemian philosopher and violinist who, with the adopted stray, Anticot (who tells the story), and Blanquette, a homeless country girl whom he has befriended, wanders about Europe as a tramp musician.

Belphegor. The Assyrian form of "Baal-Peor" (see BAAL), the Moabitish god to whom the Israelites became attached in Shittim (Numb. xxv. 3).

The name was given in a medieval Latin legend to a demon who was sent into the world from the infernal regions by his fellows to test the truth of certain rumors that had reached them concerning the happiness—and otherwise—of married life on earth. After a thorough trial, the details of which are told with great intimacy, he fled in horror and dismay to the happy regions where female society and companionship were nonexistent. Hence, the term is applied both to a misanthrope and to a nasty, licentious, obscene fellow.

The story is found in Machiavelli's works and became very popular. Its first appearance in English is in Barnabe Rich's Farewell to the Military Profession (1581); and it either forms the main source of, or furnishes incidents to, many plays including Grim, the Collier of Croydon (1600), Jonson's The Devil is an Ass (1616), and John Wilson's Belphegor, or the Marriage of the Devil (1691).

Belpheobe. The huntress-goddess in Spenser's FAERIE QUEENE, daughter of Chrysogone and sister of Amoret with whom she is contrasted. Belpheobe, who was brought up by Diana, as Amoret by Venus, typifies Queen Elizabeth as a model of chastity. She was of the Diana type; cold as an icicle, passionless, immovable, and, like a moonbeam, had light without warmth.

Belshazzar. King of Babylon when it was taken by Cyrus 539 B. C. Son of Nebuchadnezzar and the last of the Chaldean dynasty. Cf. Dan. 30. The name means "may Bel protect the king."

Belsize, The Honorable Charles. In Thackeray's NEWCOMES, a gay young nobleman known as Jack, who later becomes Lord Highgate.

Beltane. The May-day festival, originally connected with sun or fire worship, celebrated with bonfires. Druids drove their cattle between two fires at Beltane to prevent the murder.

Belus. Dido's father, king of Tyre.

Belvawney, Miss. In Dickens' NICHOLAS NICKLEBY, an actress of the Portsmouth Theater.

Belvidera. The heroine of Otway's Venice Preserved (1682).

Bembo, Pietro (1470–1547). Italian writer and ecclesiastic. Restored classic tradition in Italian language and literature.

Bemelmans, Ludwig (1898–). Austrian-born writer and illustrator, a naturalized American citizen, known for the humor and whimsical charm of his stories and paintings. His books for children are Hansy (1934); Castle Number Nine (1937); Quito Express (1938); Madeline (1939). His other books, chiefly autobiographical, include The Golden Basket (1936); My War with the United States (1937); Life Class (1938); Hotel Splendide (1941); The Donkey Inside (1941).

Benares. City on the Ganges in India. Birthplace of the Hindu religion.

Benassis, Dr. The hero of Balzac's COUNTRY DOCTOR (Le Médecin de campagne), one of Balzac's most admirable characters. His kindly spirit and his indefatigable efforts on behalf of all the people of his little French town make him universally beloved.

Benavente y Martínez, Jacinto (1866–). Spanish playwright. Nobel Prize winner 1922. During World War I Benavente fanged himself on the side of Germany, but during the Franco rebellion in Spain which preceded World War II, he stood by the Loyalists. His technique in dramatic writing has been called analogous to Bernard Shaw's.

Ben Bolt. A popular song of the 19th century, published for the first time in 1843 in the New York Mirror. See also sweet ALICE.

bench. Properly, a long wooden seat, hence the official seat of judges in Court, bishops in the House of Lords, aldermen in the council chamber, etc.; hence, by extension, judges, bishops, etc., collectively, the court or place where they administer justice or sit officially, the dignity of holding such an official status, etc. Hence Bench of bishops. The whole body of prelates, who sit in the House of Lords. The word bench appears in French as banc, in Italian as banca. Both words were taken into English as bank.

be raised to the bench. To be made a judge.
be raised to the Episcopal bench. To be made a bishop.

bench and bar. Judges and barristers.

Benchley, Robert Charles (1889–1945). American humorist and dramatic critic, contributor to leading New York periodicals, especially THE NEW YORKER, and also a radio and motion-picture performer. His humor revolves about the difficulties of the average middle-class American man in contact with the complexities of 20th-century social and mechanical life, presented in whimsical satire. Among his books are 20,000 Leagues under the Sea or David Copperfield (1928); The bench show. An exhibition of small animals, especially dogs.

Treasurer's Report (1930); My Ten Years in a Quandary (1936); After 1903—What? (1938); Inside Benchley (1941).

bend. In heraldry, an ordinary formed by two parallel lines drawn across the shield from the dexter chief (i.e. the top left-hand corner when looking at the shield) to the sinister base point (i.e. the opposite corner). It is said to represent the sword-belt.

bend sinister. A bend running across the shield in the opposite direction, i.e. from right to left. It is taken as an indication of bastardy (see BAR SINISTER); hence the phrase "he has a bend sinister," he was not born in lawful wedlock.

Benda, Julien (1867–). French novelist and critic, author of Dialogue d'Éleuthère (1911); L'Ordination (1912), a novel; Le Bergsonisme ou une philosophie de la mobilité (1912), a criticism of the philosophy of Henri BERGSON; Belpégor (1919), an analytical essay on the tendencies of French thought in his day; La Trahison des clercs (1927), translated as The Treason of the Intellectuals, an attack on scholars with political ambitions. His writings in general denounce emotionalism and uphold the principle of rationality.

Benda, Wladyslaw Theodor (1873–1948). Polish-American painter and illustrator. Creator of the Benda masks.

Ben Day process. After Benjamin Day (1838–1916), New York printer. Mechanical method of making a shaded, stippled background on a line plate by means of the Ben Day shading machine.

Bender, Harold Herman (1882–). American philologist. Special editor for etymology and philology, Webster's New International Dictionary, Second Edition.

Bendix, Vincent (1881–1945). American industrialist. Head of a large corporation manufacturing self-starters (of his development), brakes, carburetors, etc., for automobiles. Also president of Bendix Aviation Corporation.

Bendy, Old. The devil.

benedicite. The 2nd pers. pl. imperative of the Latin verb, benedicere, meaning "bless you," or "may you be blessed." In the first given sense it is the opening word of many old graces ("Bless ye the Lord," etc.); hence, a grace, or a blessing. The second sense accounts for its use as an interjection or expression of astonishment, as in Chaucer's

The god of love, A benedicite,
How myghty and how great a lord is he!
Knight's Tale, 927.

Benedick. A sworn bachelor in Shakespeare's MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

Benedict. (1) Probably corrupted from BENEDICK. A confirmed bachelor caught in the snares of matrimony.

(2) Formerly a bachelor of marriageable age, not necessarily pledged to celibacy, from St. Benedict, who was a most uncompromising stickler for celibacy.

Benedictines. Monks who follow the rule of St. Benedict, implicit obedience, celibacy, abstaining from laughter, spare diet, poverty, the exercise of hospitality, observance of canonical hours, feasts, and fasts, and unremitting industry. They are known as the "Black Monks" (the Dominicans being the Black Friars). The Order was founded by St. Benedict at Subiaco and Monte Cassino, Italy, about 530, and its members have from the earliest times been renowned for their learning.

benefice. Under medieval European feudalism, land owned by one person and granted by him to another for cultivation and use, often as a means of payment or in return for the performance of certain services. The practice originated in the surrender by small property owners of title to their holdings in exchange for the right to live and farm on their land, and for protection by the lord who received the title. In time, the rendering of military service came to be one of the conditions of obtaining a benefice. The Roman Catholic Church in the Middle Ages extensively granted benefices.

Benefield, John Barry (1880-). American short-story writer and novelist. Best-known novel, made into motion picture, Valiant is the Word for Carrie (1935).

benefit of clergy. Originally, the privilege of exemption from trial by a secular court enjoyed by the clergy if arrested for felony. In time it comprehended not only the ordained clergy, but all who, being able to write and read, were capable of entering into holy orders. It was finally abolished in the reign of George IV (1827).

Kipling called one of his best-known stories Without Benefit of the Clergy, meaning by the phrase, without the religious rites of matrimony. It deals with the love of an Englishman and a native Indian woman.

Benelli, Sem (1877-). Italian dramatist known especially for his La Cena Delle Beffe (1909) produced in New York as The Jest (1919), with John and Lionel Barrymore.

Benengeli, Cid Hamet, see CID HAMET BENENGELI.

Beněš, Eduard (1884-1948). Modern Czechoslovak statesman. President of Czechoslovakia 1935-1938, 1946-1948. Author of works on political problems.

Benét, Stephen Vincent (1898-1943). American poet, novelist, and short-story writer, interested in fantasy and American themes. His best-known works are John Brown's Body (1928), a narrative poem of the American Civil War, awarded the Pulitzer prize in 1929, and The Devil and Daniel Webster, a short story first published in the SATURDAY EVENING POST which became very popular and was later made into a one-act opera, with libretto by the author and music by Douglas Moore, and into a motion picture. It appears in Thirteen O'Clock: Stories of Several Worlds (1937). Benét's poetry includes A Ballad of William Sycamore (1923); Tiger Joy (1925); The Barefoot Saint (1929); Ballads and Poems, 1915-1930 (1931); A Book of Americans (1933), written with Rosemary Benét; Burning City (1936); Johnny Pye and the Fool-Killer (1938); The Ballad of the Duke's Mercy (1939). Among his novels are: Young People's Pride (1922); Jean Huguenot (1923); and Spanish Bayonet (1926).

Benét, William Rose (1886-). American poet and critic. His poetry includes Merchants from Cathay (1913); The Falconer of God (1914); The Burglar of the Zodiac (1918); Moons of Grandeur (1920); Man Possessed (1927); Rip Tide (1932), a novel in verse; Starry Harness (1933); The Dust Which Is God (1941; Pulitzer prize 1942); Day of Deliverance; A Book of Poems in Wartime (1944); The Stairway of Surprise (1947). He has edited a number of books, including the works of Elinor Wylie, his wife; with Norman Pearson, The Oxford Anthology of American Literature; with Norman Cousins, The Poetry of Freedom; Anthology of Famous English Poetry, etc.

Bengodi. A "land of COCKAIGNE" mentioned in Boccaccio's Decameron (viii. 3), where "they tie the vines with sausages, where you may buy a fat goose for a penny and have a gosling into the bargain; where there is also a mountain of grated Parmesan cheese, and people do nothing but make cheesecakes and macaroons."

Benham, William. The hero of Wells' RESEARCH MAGNIFICENT.

Ben Hur, A Tale of the Christ. A best-selling historical novel by Lew Wallace (Am. 1880). The hero is Judah Ben Hur, heir of a rich Jewish family, by accident responsible for injury to the new Roman governor by a falling tile. His quondam friend Messala accuses him of treason and he is sent to the galleys. It is years before he escapes. In the course of the novel John the Baptist and Jesus are introduced. The most famous of the many adventuresome episodes of the book is the chariot race in which Ben Hur defeats his old friend and enemy Messala. Ben Hur was dramatized on stage and screen with great success.

Benicia Boy. John C. Heenan, the American pugilist, who challenged and fought Tom Sayers for "the belt" in 1860; so called from Benicia in California, his birthplace.

Benjamin. The pet, the youngest; in allusion to Benjamin, the youngest son of Jacob (Gen. xxxv. 18). When Jacob sent his sons down from Canaan to buy bread during the famine, he refused to let Benjamin go "lest peradventure harm befall him." Jacob's son Joseph who was in charge over the granaries of Egypt, without revealing his identity, told his brothers that they must bring Benjamin with them if they returned for more corn. When they finally did so, Joseph feasted them and gave them grain, but sent word after them that his silver cup was missing; and when search was made, "the cup was found in Benjamin's sack" where it had been placed by Joseph's orders. He then disclosed his identity.

Benjamin's mess. The largest share. The allusion is to the banquet given by Joseph, viceroy of Egypt, to his brethren. "Benjamin's mess was five times so much as any of theirs" (Gen. xliii. 34).

Benjamin, René (1885-1948). French novelist, best known for Gaspard (1915), a novel of a Paris street urchin become soldier in World War I; Les Plaisirs du hazard (1922); La Prodigieuse vie de H. de Balzac (1925).

Bennet, Elizabeth. Heroine of Jane Austen's PRIDE AND PREJUDICE.

Mrs. Bennet. In the same novel, the type of a fussy, match-making mother. Jane Bennet, Lydia and Mr. Bennet are also prominent characters.

Bennett, Enoch Arnold (1867-1931). English journalist, novelist, and playwright. He is best known for THE OLD WIVES' TALE (1908), and the novels in the "CLAYHANGER" series—Clayhanger (1910), Hilda Lessways (1911), These Twain (1916), and The Clayhanger Family (1925), an omnibus volume. Bennett was also the author of Buried Alive (1908); Denry the Audacious (1911); The Matador of the Five Towns (1912), short stories; Mr. Prohack (1922); RICEYMAN STEPS (1923); Lord Raingo (1926); The Vanguard (1927); Accident (1929); IMPERIAL PALACE (1930). See also FIVE TOWNS.

Bennett, Floyd (1890-1928). American aviator. With Commander Byrd in flight over North Pole (1926). Was to be second in command of Byrd's South Pole exploration, but died of pneumonia. Had received Congressional Medal of Honor.

Bennett, James Gordon (1795-1872). American journalist and editor. Born in Scotland. Started New York Herald (May 6, 1835). His son of same name (1841-1918) became famous; sent Stanley to Africa to find Livingstone; financed North West passage and Arctic expeditions; established Paris edition of New York Herald (1887); with John W. Mackay in Commercial Cable Co. laid transatlantic cables and broke Gould monopoly. Resident of Paris (from 1877). Established James Gordon Bennett trophies in yachting and automobile and aeroplane racing.

Benoît, Pierre (1886-). French novelist whose L'Atlantide (1919) won him the Grand Prix du Roman of the Académie Française.

Benoît de Sainte-Maure (fl. 12th cent.). Medieval French poet, author of the Roman de Troie (ca. 1165), written in honor of Eleanor of Poitou. This was one of the metamorphoses of the TRILUS and Cressida story, which culminated in the famous romance by Chaucer. Benoît contributed to the traditional theme the atmosphere of feudal luxury and the conventions of COURTLY LOVE.

Benserade, Isaac de (1613-1691). French poet and naturalist. His sonnet, "Job," as rivaling Voiture's sonnet "Uranie," started literary war of the two poets at court. Their factions called Jobelins and Uranins.

Benshee, see BANSHEE.

Benson, Arthur Christopher (1862-1925), Edward Frederic (1867-1940), and Robert Hugh (1871-1914). Three sons of Edward White Benson (1829-1896) archbishop of Canterbury. Arthur Christopher wrote a biography of his father, and monographs and essays; Edward Frederic, a novelist, captured society with the sensational Dodo; Robert Hugh, as a Catholic priest, wrote interesting historical fiction from the Catholic viewpoint.

Benson, Sir Frank Robert (1858-1939). English actor-manager; founded touring repertory company. Produced many of Shakespeare's plays.

Benson, Frank Weston (1862-). American painter. Excels in painting women and children, often in outdoor scenes of brilliant light and color. Murals in Congressional Library, Washington, D.C.

Benson, Sally (1900-). American short-story writer, best known for the biting wit and irony of her character sketches of women, published chiefly in THE NEW YORKER. Collections of her stories are People Are Fascinating (1936), Emily (1938); Junior Miss (1941); Meet Me in St. Louis (1942). The last two volumes are series of stories grouped about a single set of characters, written in a gentler mood than the author's characteristic work. Junior Miss was a best-seller, and was adapted as a successful play in 1941.

Benson, Stella (1892-1933). English novelist, whose witty and original books include: Living Alone (1919); The Poor Man (1922); Goodbye, Stranger (1926); The Faraway Bride (1930); Hope Against Hope, And Other Stories (1931); Collected Short Stories (1936); Mundos (1935), a novel left unfinished at her death.

Bentham, Jeremy (1748-1832). English philosopher of the Utilitarian school (see UTILITARIANISM). His social and philosophical ideas are to be found in his Fragment on Government (1776) and Introduction to Principles of Morals and Legislation (1789). His watchword was "the greatest good for the greatest number," and he tried to work out scientifically on a quantitative scale the values of pleasure and pain in moral motivation.

Bentinck, William. 1st Earl of Portland (1649?-1709). Trusted agent and intimate friend of William III of England. Arranged Treaty of Ryswick (1697).

Bentley, Edmund Clerihew (1875-). English writer of detective fiction and originator of a kind of pseudo-biographical verse known as clerihews. Trent's Last Case (1912) is his best and best-known book.

Bentley, Richard (1662-1742). English clergyman and scholar. In controversy (1697-1679) with Charles Boyle proved spuriousness of Epistles of Phalaris. This controversy gave rise to The Battle of the Books by Jonathan Swift.

Benton, Thomas Hart (1889-). American painter, known for his pictures of life in the U.S., particularly in the Middle West. Grandnephew of Thomas Hart Benton (1782-1858), the American political leader whose daughter Jessie married John Charles FRÉMONT.

ben trovato (Ital.). Well found, well invented; a happy discovery or invention. The full phrase is se non è vero, è ben trovato, if it is not true it is well invented: said of a plausible story.

Bent Twig, The. A novel by Dorothy Canfield FISHER (1915). The scene is laid in a middle-western University town where the heroine, Sylvia Marshall, grows up to maturity. The novel deals with the problems of her youth.

Benu. Egyptian prototype of Greek phoenix. A bird, the emblem of Ra, sacred to Osiris.

Benvolio. Nephew to Montague in Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet; a testy, litigious gentleman, who would "quarrel with a man that had a hair more or a hair less in his beard than he had."

Beowulf. The hero of the ancient Anglo-Saxon epic poem of the same name, of unknown original date and authorship, but certainly written before the coming of the Saxons to England, and modified subsequent to the introduction of Christianity.

The scene is laid in Denmark or Sweden: the hall (Heorot) of King Hrothgar is raided nightly by GRENDEL, whom Beowulf mortally wounds after a fierce fight. Grendel's dam comes next night to avenge his death. Beowulf pursues her to her lair under the water and ultimately slays her with a magic sword. Beowulf in time becomes king, and fifty years later meets his death in combat with a dragon, the guardian of an immense hoard, his faithful Wiglaf being his only follower at the end.

The version of the epic that we know dates from the 8th century, but it probably represents a gradual growth which existed in many successive versions. In any case, it is not only the oldest epic in English, but one of the oldest in the whole Teutonic group of languages.

Beppo. A contraction of Giuseppe, and therefore equal to our Joe. In Byron's poem of this name (1818), Beppo is husband of Laura, a Venetian lady. He is taken captive in Troy, becomes a Turk, joins a band of pirates, grows rich, and, after several years' absence, returns to his native land, where he discovers his wife at a carnival ball with her cavaliero servente. He makes himself known to her, and they live together again as man and wife.

Béranger, Pierre Jean de (1780-1857). French lyric poet. Author of popular songs, gay and ribald, patriotic and topical, and sentimental. He frequently celebrated Napoleon, and is considered to have crystallized the popular feeling of his time in his work, although it is not distinguished by much literary merit.

Bérard, Victor (1864-1931). French scholar and publicist. Translator of the Odyssey.

Berchta, see PERCHTA.

Berchtesgaden. One of the sites of the legendary sleep of the German emperor, Frederick BARBAROSSA, in a mountain cave until the day when he is destined to awake and leave his resting place to restore unity, power, and peace to Germany. Berchtesgaden, in Bavaria, came into prominence in the third decade of the 20th century as the mountain retreat of Adolf HITLER who, as Führer of the National Socialist government of Germany, promised to restore unity and power to the nation. In September 1938, Berchtesgaden was the scene of a visit to Hitler made by Neville CHAMBERLAIN, Prime Minister of England, during the MUNICH CRISIS.

Bercovici, Konrad (1882–). American author, born in Roumania, whose writings are concerned with the East Side section of New York City, travel, and life among the Balkan gypsies. Among his works are Crimes of Charity (1917); Dust of New York (1919); Ghitzza (1921); The Marriage Guest (1925); The Volga Boatman (1926); Peasants (1928); Story of the Gypsies (1928); The Incredible Balkans (1933); It's the Gypsy in Me (1941), an autobiography.

Berdyaev, Nikolai Aleksandrovich (1874–1948). A widely read Russian philosophical writer. He was expelled by the Bolsheviks in 1922 as an upholder of religion. In 1934 he directed the Academy of the Philosophy of Religion in Paris. He acknowledged Dostoevsky as playing a decisive part in his spiritual life. Wrote The Bourgeois Mind; Dostoevsky: An Interpretation; The Origin of Russian Communism, etc.

Berengaria. Queen-consort of Richard Cœur de Lion, introduced in Scott's novel, THE TALISMAN. Berengaria died in 1230.

Berenger, Eveline. Heroine of Scott's novel, THE BETROTHED.

Berenice. The sister-wife of Ptolemy Euergetes, king of Egypt (247–222 B.C.). She vowed to sacrifice her hair to the gods if her husband returned home the vanquisher of Asia. She suspended her hair in the temple of Arsinoë at Zephyrium, but it was stolen the first night, and Conon of Samos told the king that the winds had wafted it to heaven, where it still forms the seven stars near the tail of Leo, called Coma Berenices.

Berenson, Bernhard (1865–). American art critic, born in Lithuania of a poor Jewish family. Recognized as the greatest living connoisseur of Italian Renaissance art. Collectors rely implicitly on his judgment. Member of the American Academy of Arts and Letters.

Beresford, John Davys (1873–1947). English novelist, author of Jacob Stahl (see STAHL) (1911); God's Counterpoint (1919); The Monkey Puzzle (1925); Love's Illusion (1930).

Berezina. A river in White Russia which flows into the Dnieper. Here the Russians in retreat halted the Germans for almost a week, July 3–8, 1941, and here the Russian First Baltic Army crossed in return on July 4, 1944. In 1812 the retreating Grande Armée of Napoleon forced the crossing of the Berezina with enormous losses.

Bergamasca (Ital.). A type of dance, originating in Bergamo, Italy, referred to in Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream. In the 17th century it became a form of instrumental music. Debussy has written a Suite Bergamasque. See CHACONNE.

Bergelmir. One of the frost-giants of Scandinavian mythology. When Ymir was slain by Odin and others, and the whole race of frost-giants was drowned in his blood, Bergelmir alone escaped, and he thereupon founded a second dynasty of giants.

Bergen, Edgar John (1903–). American ventriloquist who achieved success on radio and in motion pictures with his famous dummy, "Charlie McCarthy" (first radio appearance, Dec. 17, 1936), and, later, "Mortimer Snerd."

Bergerac, Cyrano de (1619–1655). French soldier and author, best known as the hero of a successful play written over three centuries after his death by Edmond ROSTAND (see CYRANO DE BERGERAC). An adventure tale of unknown authorship, Cyrano de Bergerac's Voyage to the Moon and the Sun, was widely read in France and England during the 17th century.

Bergeret, Monsieur. The central figure in the four novels that comprise Anatole France's Histoire Contemporaine (1897–1900)—The Elm Tree on the Mall (L'Orme du Mail), The Wicker-Work Woman (Le Mannequin d'osier), The Amethyst Ring (L'Anneau d'améthyste) and M. Bergeret à Paris. In the first volumes M. Bergeret holds an official position in one of the provincial universities of France; in the last two he is divorced from his wife and lives in Paris. The four novels deal very largely with the famous DREYFUS case and Bergeret is said to be a vehicle for much of France's own feelings and convictions on the subject.

Berghof, Haus, see HAUS BERGHOF.

Bergson, Henri (1859–1941). French philosopher, of wide influence and popularity in the years immediately preceding World War I, awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1927. His intellectual system, which tends toward the anti-rational and the mystical, favors direct intuition as a means of attaining knowledge, rather than the experimental and rationalistic methods of science. It also regards change or movement as the source of all reality (see also HERACLITUS) and time as a continuous flow, or duration, in which the past and present are inseparable to consciousness and the memory. These views, particularly as they apply to memory and time, appear prominently in the pattern of Marcel Proust's long novel, REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST. Bergson's most famous work is L'Évolution créatrice (1907), translated as CREATIVE EVOLUTION in 1911. Among his other important works are: Matière et mémoire (1896), translated as Matter and Memory; Le Rire (1900), translated as Laughter; L'Énergie spirituelle (1919), translated as Mind-Energy; Durée et simultanéité (1922). In 1940, after the defeat of France in World War II, Bergson renounced all of his honors and his posts in France as a protest against hostile legislation passed by the VICHY GOVERNMENT against the Jews, of whom he was one.

Bergsonism. The intuitive, anti-rational, and highly poetic philosophy of Henri BERGSON, part of the movement of reaction against the mechanistic conceptions of 19th-century science which arose in a number of intellectual quarters at the beginning of the 20th century.

Berkeley, George (1685–1753). English churchman and philosopher, born in Ireland, one of the earliest and most important thinkers of the philosophic school of IDEALISM. He maintained that the objects of sense perception are only ideas in our minds, with no independent existence outside of the perceiving mind, and that the whole of reality consists only of ideas in the mind of God. His chief works are ESSAY TOWARDS A NEW THEORY OF VISION (1709); Principles of Human Knowledge (1710); Three Dialogues Between Hylas and Philonous (1713); ALCIPHRON (1732), pseudo-Platonic dialogues; Theory of Vision (1733); SIRIS (1744). He was active in attacking the opinions of free-thinkers, and was associated with a number of well-known 18th-century literary figures, including Addison, Pope, and Swift. From 1729 to 1732 he lived in the colony of Rhode Island in America, where he wrote Alciphron and founded a Literary and Philosophical Society.

Berkeley, Sir William (1606–1677). English governor of the colony of Virginia (1642–1652 and 1660–1677). His dictatorial policy of government led to BACON'S REBELLION and became even harsher after the death of the leader of the revolt, Nathaniel Bacon.

Berlin, Irving (Israel Baline) (1888–). American composer of popular songs and lyrics for musical shows. Born in Russia. His Alexander's Ragtime Band (1911) was one of the first and most successful examples of JAZZ. His later compositions were of a sentimental and patriotic nature, such as White Christmas and God Bless America.

Berlin Conference. (1) November 15, 1884, to January 30, 1885. By the Berlin Act it recognized the International Association of the Congo of King Leopold, regulated commerce in that region and tried to partition Africa.

(2) The Berlin Conference of 1945 settled areas in Germany assigned to management by Britain, U.S., Russia, and France.

Berlin decree. A decree issued at Berlin by Napoleon I in November, 1806, forbidding any of the nations of Europe to trade with Great Britain, proclaiming her to be in a state of blockade, declaring all English property forfeit, and all Englishmen on French soil prisoners of war.

Berlin Diary. A best-selling book by William L. Shirer, published in 1941. It contains selections from a diary kept by the author while he was an American newspaper correspondent and radio news commentator in Berlin just preceding and during the first years of World War II. Its informal, first-hand impressions of the war and the Nazi régime in Germany made it extremely popular.

Berling, Gösta, see GOSTA BERLING.

Berlioz, Louis Hector (1803–1869). French composer, known for the typically Romantic quality of his music, much of which was written on literary subjects. The work for which he is most famous, the SYMPHONIE FANTASTIQUE (Fantastic Symphony) (1830), subtitled Épisode de la vie d'un artiste, was the first piece of sustained narrative music, a form that was subsequently used notably by Richard STRAUSS. Others of Berlioz's best-known works are Waverley (1827–1828), Les Francs-Juges (1827–1828), Le Roi Lear (1831), and Le Carnaval romain (1844), all overtures; Harold en Italie (1834) and Roméo et Juliette (1838–1839), dramatic symphonies; Benvenuto Cellini (1838), an opera; and La Damnation de Faust (1846), a "concert opera." The composer also wrote essays and criticism on music, and a volume of memoirs (1870); his correspondence was published after his death. See also RECIO, MARIE.

Berma. In Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, a famous actress whose art is an object of the narrator's youthful admiration. The character is considered to represent Sarah BERNHARDT.

Bermoothes. The name of the island in the Tempest, feigned by Shakespeare to be enchanted and inhabited by witches and devils.

From the still-vexed Bermoothes, there she's hid.
Shakespeare, The Tempest, i. 2.

Shakespeare almost certainly had the recently discovered Bermudas in his mind, but a case has also been made out for the island of Lampedusa between Malta and the coast of Tunis.

Bermudas. An old slang name for a district of London—thought to have been the narrow alleys in the neighborhood of Covent Garden, St. Martin's Lane, and the Strand—which was an ALSATIA, where the residents had certain privileges against arrest. Hence, to live in the Bermudas, to skulk in some out-of-the-way place for cheapness or safety.

Bernadette of Lourdes, St. See under SAINT. The Song of Bernadette, a novel by Franz WERFEL (1890-1945) became a successful moving picture.

Bernard, Rosine, see BERNHARDT, SARAH.

Bernard de Ventadour (fl. 12th cent.). TROUBADOUR of ELEANOR OF AQUITAINE and considered one of the greatest of the group of love poets who wrote in the convention of COURTLY LOVE.

Bernardo. In Shakespeare's Hamlet, an officer in Denmark to whom the ghost of the murdered King appeared during the night-watch at the royal castle.

Bernardo del Carpio. A semi-mythical Spanish hero of the 9th century, and a favorite subject of the minstrels, and of Lope de Vega, who wrote many plays around his exploits. He is credited with having defeated Roland (or Orlando) at Roncesvalles.

Bernard of Clairvaux, St. (1091-1153). French ecclesiastic known as "Thaumaturgus of the West." Founder and first abbé of the Cistercian Monastery of Clairvaux. See also under SAINTS.

Bernard of Cluny or Morlaix. 12th century Benedictine monk; author of Latin poem De Contemptu Mundi, the beginning of which was translated by John Mason Neale into three hymns: Jerusalem the Golden, The World is Very Evil, and For Thee, O Dear, Dear Country.

Berners, Isopel. Heroine of George BORROW'S Lavengro.

Berners, 2nd Baron. John BOURCHIER (1467-1533). English author and statesman, who was in attendance to Henry VIII at the FIELD OF THE CLOTH OF GOLD. He translated a number of French and Spanish works, including the Chronicles of FROISSART (1523-1525) and the romance, HUON OF BORDEAUX.

bernesque poetry. Serio-comic poetry; so called from Francesco Berni (1498-1535), of Tuscany, who greatly excelled in it. Byron's Beppo is a good example of English bernesque.

Bernhardi, Friedrich von (1849-1930). Prussian general and military writer. Fought in World War I on eastern front (1915) and on western front (1918). Author of Germany and the Next War (1911). Disciple of von Treitschke, calling war a biological necessity.

Bernhardi, Professor, see PROFESSOR BERNHARDI.

Bernhardt, Sarah (1845-1923). Originally Rosine Bernard. Famous French actress, noted for her performances in plays by Victor HUGO, Victorien SARDOU, and Edmond ROSTAND, and especially in Racine's PHÈDRE. See also BERMA.

Bernini, Giovanni Lorenzo (1598-1680). Italian sculptor, architect, painter. Dominant influence for over a century on European sculpture. Created the Berninesque style.

Bernstein, Baroness. The name under which the Beatrix ESMOND of Henry Esmond appears, as an old woman, in Thackeray's Virginians.

Bernstein, Henry (1876-). French dramatist, writer of violent realistic melodrama, noted duelist. His plays have been successful in U.S.

Bernstorff, Count Johann-Heinrich von (1682-1939). German diplomat. Tried without his government's support, to help President Wilson's mediation attempts prior to America's entry into World War I. Later member of Reichstag (1921-1928), chairman of the German League-of-Nations Union, and vice chairman of League of Nations.

Bérout (fl. 12th cent.). Medieval French poet, author of an early version of the famous romance of TRISTAN and Isolte.

Berry, Bessie. Richard's good-hearted old nurse in Meredith's RICHARD FEVEREL.

Bersagliere. Member of an infantry corps organized in 1850 by Victor Immanuel II of Italy as riflemen. The Bersaglieri wore hats decorated with cock's feathers. They were in World War I and in Albania in World War II.

berserker. In Scandinavian mythology, a wild, ferocious, warlike being who was at times possessed of supernatural strength and fury. The origin of the name is doubtful; one account says that it was that of the grandson of the eight-handed Starkader and the beautiful Alfhilde, who was called boer-serce (bare of mail) because he went into battle unharnessed. Hence, any man with the fighting fever on him.

Another disregards this altogether and holds that the name means simply "men who have assumed the form of bears." It is used in English both as an adjective denoting excessive fury and a noun denoting one possessed of such.

Let no man awaken it, this same Berserker rage!
 Carlyle, Chartism.
 You say that I am berserker. And . . . baresark I go to-morrow to the war.
 Kingsley, Hereward the Wake.

Bertha, Big, see BIG BERTHA.

Bertha, Frau. A German impersonation of the Epiphany, corresponding to the Italian BEFANA. Represented as a white lady, who steals softly into nurseries and rocks infants asleep in the absence of negligent nurses, she is, however, the terror of all naughty children. Her feet are very large, and she has an iron nose.

Berthe au Grand Pied (Bertha with the large foot). Mother of Charlemagne, and great-granddaughter of Charles Martel; so called because she had a clubfoot. She is a prominent character in the medieval romances dealing with Charlemagne and his court, and is in particular the heroine of a 13th-century romance by a minstrel named Adenés which was immensely popular.

Bertillon, Alphonse (1853-1914). As chief of identification bureau of Paris police established an identification system adopted throughout Europe. It was based on physical measurements, markings, deformities, color, impression of thumb lines. Modern fingerprinting has superseded this system.

Bertoldo. A famous clown of popular Italian legend. The tales of his witty pranks were collected in a Life of Bertoldo (Vita di Bertoldo) by Giulio Cesare Croce in the 16th century; and in the two centuries that followed, his exploits and those of his son Bertoldina and grandson Cacasenno, both of whom were supposed to have succeeded to his post of court jester, formed the subject matter of many tales and poems.

imperturbable as Bertoldo, i.e. not to be taken by surprise, thrown off your guard, or disconcerted at anything.

Bertram. (1) The hero of Shakespeare's ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

(2) In Meyerbeer's opera ROBERT LE DIABLE, the fiend father of Robert.

Bertram, Edmund, also Maria Bertram and Sir Thomas Bertram. Characters in Jane Austen's novel MANSFIELD PARK.

Bertram, Harry. Hero of Scott's GUY MANNERING, alias Captain Vanbeest Brown, alias Dawson, alias Dudley, son of the laird, and heir to Ellangowan. The character was suggested by James Annesley, Esq., rightful heir of the earldom of Anglesey, of which he was dispossessed by his uncle Richard. He died in 1743.

Bertran de Born (1140?-1215). One of the poets of medieval Provence (see TROUBADOURS), who was best known for his songs of war. He is to be found in Dante's INFERNO because he allegedly stirred up hostility between Henry II of England and his sons.

Berzelius, Baron Jöns Jakob (1779-1848). Swedish chemist. Author of the system of chemical symbols. Discovered selenium and thorium. Experimented in electrolysis. His name was used as the name of one of the fraternities of the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University. A passage in his writings dealing with elective affinities in chemistry became the nucleus of GOETHE's famous novel of that title (Die Wahlverwandtschaften).

Bes. Egyptian god of pleasure.

Besant, Mrs. Annie Wood (1847-1933). English theosophist. First became an active Free Thinker with Charles Bradlaugh. Did much for wayward children and homeless girls. W. T. Stead introduced her to the work of Mme. Blavatsky. She became her right-hand helper in 1891 and succeeded her as head of the Esoteric School. Went to India 1894. President of Theosophical Society 1907. Discovered a "New Messiah" in Krishnamurti. Died at Madras. Wrote at least seventeen principal works.

Besant, Sir Walter (1836-1901). English novelist. Co-author with James Rice of a series of novels. Sole author of novels on social conditions such as All Sorts and Conditions of Men (1882).

Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush. A narrative of Scotch life by Ian Maclaren (1894), relating simple incidents in the little village of Drumtochty.

Besier, Rudolf. See THE BARRETT'S OF WIMPOLE STREET.

Bess, Good Queen. Queen Elizabeth (1533-1603).

Bess o' Bedlam. A female lunatic vagrant. See BEDLAM.

Bess of Hardwick. Elizabeth Talbot, Countess of Shrewsbury (1518-1608) to whose charge, in 1569, Mary Queen of Scots was committed. The Countess treated the captive Queen with great harshness, being jealous of the earl her husband. Bess of Hardwick married four times: Robert Barlow (when she was only fourteen); Sir William Cavendish; Sir William St. Loe, Captain of Queen Elizabeth's Guard; and lastly, George sixth Earl of Shrewsbury. She built Hardwick Hall, and founded the wealth and dignity of the Cavendish family.

Bessee, the beggar's daughter of Bednal (Bethnal) Green, the heroine of an old ballad given in Percy's Reliques, and introduced by Chettle and Day into their play The Blind Beggar of Bednal Green (1600). Sheridan Knowles also has a play on the story (1834). Bessee is very beautiful, and is courted by four suitors at once—a knight, a gentleman of fortune, a London merchant, and the son of the innkeeper at Romford. She tells them that they must obtain the consent of her father, the poor blind beggar of Bethnal Green. When they hear, they all slink off except the knight, who goes to ask the beggar's leave to wed the "pretty Bessee." The beggar gives her £3,000 for her dower, and £100 to buy her wedding gown. At the wedding feast he explains to the guests that he is Henry, son and heir of Sir Simon de Montfort, and has only assumed the garb of a beggar to escape the vigilance of King Henry's spies because of his participation in the battle of Evesham on the barons' side.

Bessie, Alvah Cecil (1904-). American story-writer, novelist, and essayist. Served in the Lincoln Battalion in Spain for the Loyalists (1937) continuously at the front till end of the war. Men in Battle (1939).

Bessie Bell and Mary Gray. A ballad by Allan Ramsey, relating how two young ladies of Perth, to avoid the plague of 1666, retire to a rural retreat called the Burnbraes, near Lyne-dock, the residence of Mary Gray. A young man, in love with both, carries them provisions, and they all die of the plague and are buried at Dornock Hough.

Bessus. In BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER'S King and No King, a cowardly, bragging captain, a sort of BOBADIL.

bestiaries. Books very popular in the 11th, 12th, and 13th centuries, containing accounts of the supposed habits and peculiarities of animals, which, with the legendary lore connected with them, served as texts for devotional homilies. They were founded on the old Physiologi, and those in English were, for the most part, translations of continental originals. The Bestiaires of Philippe de Thaon, Guillaume le Clerc, and Le Bestiaire d'amour, by Richard de Fournival, were among the most popular.

Beston, Henry (1888-). A distinguished American naturalist and writer, of mixed Irish and French extraction, married to the poet, Elizabeth Coatsworth. His American Memory (1937) is the first study of our history to give a proper perspective to the rôle of the American Indian.

best seller. Loosely, a book that sells better than others; also its author. Originally a phrase not essentially different from "good seller, excellent seller," etc., the term has been crystallized since about 1910 and is often but mistakenly thought to be a technical term for books selling a stipulated minimum number of copies. Weekly lists of best sellers were started by Publishers' Weekly and are now a feature of several newspaper book supplements. Perennial best sellers include the Bible; Post's Etiquette; Uncle Tom's Cabin; etc. Cf. F. L. Mott's GOLDEN MULTITUDES (1947).

bête noire (Fr. black beast). The thorn in the side, the bitter in the cup, the spoke in the wheel, the black sheep, the object of aversion. A black sheep has always been considered an eyesore in a flock, and its wool is really less valuable. In times of superstition it was looked on as bearing the devil's mark.

Bethany. Town of Palestine on the Mount of Olives that was the home of Lazarus, whose sisters were Mary and Martha, and whom Christ raised from the dead.

Bethesda, pool of. A spring in Jerusalem which was supposed to possess healing powers "when the water is troubled." Jesus here cured a sick man who had waited thirty-eight years, but had always been set aside by others.

Beth Gelert or the Grave of the Greyhound. A ballad by the Hon. William Robert Spencer. The tale is that one day Llewellyn returns from hunting, when his favorite hound, covered with gore, runs to meet him. The chieftain runs to see if anything has happened to his infant son, finds the cradle overturned and sprinkled with blood. Thinking the hound has eaten the child, he stabs it to the heart. Afterwards he finds the babe quite safe, and a huge wolf under the bed, dead; Gelert has killed the wolf and saved the child. The story is of very old origin and very widespread: with variations it is found in Sanskrit and in most ancient literatures.

It is told of Tsar Piras of Russia and in the Gesta Romanorum, of Folliculus a knight, but instead of a wolf the dog is said to have killed a serpent. The story occurs again in the Seven Wise Masters. In the Sanskrit version the dog is called an ichneumon and the wolf a "black snake." In the Hitopadesa (iv. 3) the dog is an otter; in the Arabic a weasel; in the Mongolian a polecat; in the Persian a cat, etc.

Bethlehem. (1) Town in Judaea where Christ was born.

(2) Town in Pennsylvania where war ordnance is manufactured by a huge steel company, and where the Bach Festival is held every year. Founded by Moravians.

Bethmann-Hollweg, Theobald von (1856-1921). Prussian who succeeded von Bülow as chancellor of German empire (1909-1917). Referred to Belgian neutrality treaty as a "scrap of paper" (1914). Forced out of office by Hindenburg and Ludendorff (1917) after having tried to restrict submarine warfare.

Bethulia, Judith of. A poem by Thomas Bailey Aldrich.

Betrothed, The. A novel by Sir Walter Scott (1825), dealing with the times of Henry II of England.

Betsy Ross, see Ross.

Bett, Lulu, see Miss LULU BETT.

Betterton, Thomas (1635-1710). Famous English actor who excelled in Shakespeare's characters.

Bettina. The name taken by Elisabeth Brentano, Countess von Arnim (1785-1859), in her publication, Letters to a Child, in 1835. The letters purported to be her correspondence with Goethe (1807-1811).

Betty. A name of contempt given to a man who interferes with the duties of female servants, or occupies himself in female pursuits. See also MOLLY. Also burglar's slang for a skeleton key (the servant of a picklock), and sometimes for a jimmy.

Betty, Cousin. In Balzac's Cousin Betty. See FISCHER, LISBETH.

Beulah, see LAND OF BEULAH.

Bevan, Mr. In Dickens' MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT, an American physician, who befriends Martin Chuzzlewit and Mark Tapley in many ways during their stay in the New World.

Beveridge, Albert Jeremiah (1862-1927). American historian and statesman. Famous for his two-volume Life of John Marshall (1916, 1919).

Beveridge, Sir William Henry (1879-). English economist, famous for the Beveridge Plan, making recommendations as to postwar social security in Great Britain. It was developed by Beveridge as chairman of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Social Insurance and Allied Services (1941) and is much in advance of anything so far considered in the U.S.

Beverley, Cecilia. Heroine of Fanny Burney's novel CECILIA.

Beverley, Ensign. The name assumed by CAPTAIN ABSOLUTE in Sheridan's School for Scandal.

Beverly, Robert (1675-1716). American historian of the Virginia colony. His chief work is History of the Present State of Virginia, published in 1705, which gives a clear picture of life in the colony in its early days.

Beverly of Graustark, see GRAUSTARK.

Bevis. (1) Marmion's horse in Scott's narrative poem Marmion.

(2) The faithful mastiff of Sir Harry Lee in Scott's novel Woodstock. See next entry.

Bevis of Hamtown or Southampton, Sir. A very well known medieval chivalric romance, slightly connected with the Charlemagne cycle, which (in the English version given in Drayton's Polyolbion) tells how the father of Bevis is slain by the mother, and how, when Bevis tries to avenge the murder, she sells him into slavery to Eastern merchants. After many adventures he converts and carries off Josian, daughter of the Soldan, returns to England and gets his revenge, and all ends happily. See ASCAPART.

bevy. See under COVEY.

Bewick, Thomas (1753-1828). Founder of modern school of English wood engraving. His History of British Quadrupeds and his British Birds are famous.

Bey. See RULERS, TITLES OF.

Beyle, Henri, see STENDHAL.

Beyond Life. A narrative, or more properly a series of essays by James Branch CABELL (1919). The supposed author is John CHARTERIS who appears in other Cabell novels and is frequently Cabell's mouthpiece.

Beyond the Horizon. A drama by Eugene O'NEILL (1920). Robert Mayo, a romantic dreamer, has always wanted to seek adventure "beyond the horizon" but has given up his dreams to marry the girl he loves and stay on the New England farm. Instead his prosaic brother Andrew, who has also loved Ruth, the girl, is the one to go adventuring over seven seas and come home with strange tales. Robert's life is embittered by the fact that Ruth comes to despise him as a failure and to idealize Andrew, and finally disease takes away all hope. Beyond the Horizon was awarded the Pulitzer prize in 1920.

bezonian. A new recruit; applied originally in derision to young soldiers sent from Spain to Italy, who landed both ill-accounted and in want of everything (Ital. besogni, from bisogno, need; Fr. besoin).

Bhagavadgita. A very early Hindu poem of religious and philosophical import "sung by the holy one," that is by KRISHNA. It is paraphrased in Edwin Arnold's Song Celestial.

Bianca. (1) In Shakespeare's TAMING OF THE SHREW the younger daughter of Baptista of Padua, as gentle and meek as her sister Katherine was violent and irritable.

(2) A courtesan in Shakespeare's Othello.

Bianca among the Nightingales. A poem by Elizabeth Barrett Browning. The Italian Bianca, forsaken by her English lover, pours out her grief and her hatred of the England in which she is living.

Bianchi. The political faction in Tuscany to which Dante belonged. It and the Neri (Whites and Blacks), both being branches of the Guelph family, engaged in a feud shortly before 1300 which became very violent in Florence and the neighboring cities, and eventually the Bianchi joined the Ghibellines, the opponents of the Guelphs. In 1301 the Bianchi, including Dante, were exiled from Florence.

Bianchi, Martha Dickinson (1866-1943). Niece of Emily Dickinson. Author of poems and translator of Slavic and other poetry. Introduction to The Single Hound by Emily Dickinson (1914); editor of The Life and Letters of Emily Dickinson (1924), The Poems of Emily Dickinson (1930; centenary edition), Unpublished Poems of Emily Dickinson (1935; with Alfred Leete Hampson), Poems of Emily Dickinson (with preface by Alfred Leete Hampson). Also Further Poems of Emily Dickinson Withheld From Publication By Her Sister Lavinia (with Alfred Leete Hampson).

Bianchon, Horace. A tolerant and charitable Parisian physician who appears in many of the novels of Balzac's COMÉDIE HUMAINE. He is a member of the CÉNACLE.

Bianco, Margery Williams (1881-1944). Writer of fiction for children, as The Velvet-teen Rabbit (1922), mother of Pamela Bianco, child prodigy and remarkable artist and illustrator.

Biathanatos, a Declaration of that Paradox or Thesis that Self-Homicide Is not so Naturally Sin that It May Never Be Otherwise. A defense of suicide, published in 1644, by John DONNE.

Biberius Caldius Mero. The punning nickname of Tiberius Claudius Nero (the Roman Emperor, Tiberius, who reigned from 14 to 37 A.D.). Biberius [Tiberius], drink-loving. Caldius Mero [Claudius Nero], by metathesis for calidus mero, hot with wine.

Bibesco, Princess Marthe Lucie (1887-). Rumanian novelist and essayist. Her work has been praised by Anatole France and Marcel Proust. Her travel book, The Eight Paradises, which she published at the age of eighteen, was crowned by the French Academy.

Bible.

(1) English versions. The principal versions of the English Bible are:

American Revised Version. A separate version published in 1901, the work of the American Committee on the Revised Version. It differs in a few particulars from the REVISED VERSION.

Authorized Version. This, the version in general use in England, was made by a body of scholars working at the command of King James I (hence sometimes called "King James' Bible") from 1604 to 1611, and was published in 1611. The modern "Authorized Version" is, however, by no means an exact reprint of that authorized by King James; a large number of typographical errors which occurred in the first edition have been corrected, the orthography, punctuation, etc., has been modernized, and the use of italics, capital letters, etc., varied. The BISHOPS' BIBLE was used as the basis of the text, but Tyndale's, Matthew's, Coverdale's, and the Geneva translations were also followed when they agreed better with the original.

Bishops' Bible. A version made at the instigation of Archbishop Parker (hence also called "Matthew Parker's Bible"), to which most of the Anglican bishops were contributors. It was a revision of the GREAT BIBLE, first appeared in 1568, and by 1602 had reached its eighteenth edition. It is this edition that forms the basis of our Authorized Version. See TREACLE BIBLE.

Coverdale's Bible. The first complete English Bible to be printed, published in 1535 as a translation out of Douche (i.e., German) and Latin by Miles Coverdale. It consists of Tyndale's translation of the Pentateuch and New Testament, with translations from the Vulgate, a Latin version (1527-1528) by the Italian Catholic theologian, Sanctes Pagninus, Luther's German version (1534) and the Swiss-German version of Zwingli and Leo Juda (Zurich, 1527-1529). The first edition was printed at Antwerp, but the second (Southwark, 1537) was the first Bible printed in England. MATTHEW'S BIBLE is largely based on Coverdale's. See BUG BIBLE.

Cranmer's Bible. The name given to the GREAT BIBLE of 1540. It, and later issues, contained a prologue by Cranmer, and on the wood-cut title-page (by Holbein) Henry VIII is shown seated while Cranmer and Cromwell distribute copies to the people.

Cromwell's Bible. The GREAT BIBLE of 1539. The title-page (see CRANMER'S BIBLE) includes a portrait of Cromwell.

Douai Bible. A translation of the Vulgate, made by English Catholic scholars in France for the use of English boys designed for the Catholic priesthood. The New Testament was published at Rheims in 1582, and the Old Testament at Douai in 1609; hence sometimes called the Rheims-Douai version. See ROSIN BIBLE; also DOUAI.

Geneva Bible. A revision of great importance in the history of the English Bible, undertaken by English exiles at Geneva during the Marian persecutions and first published in 1560. It was the work of William Whittingham, assisted by Anthony Gilby and Thomas Sampson. Whittingham had previously (1557) published a translation of the New Testament. The Genevan version was the first English Bible to be printed in roman type instead of black letter, the first in which the chapters are divided into verses (taken by Whittingham from Robert Stephen's Greek-Latin Testament of 1537), and the first in which italics are used for explanatory and connective words and phrases (taken from Beza's New Testament of 1556). It was immensely popular; from 1560 to 1616 no year passed without a new edition, and at least two hundred are known. In every edition the word "breeches" occurs in Gen. iii. 7; hence the Geneva Bible is popularly known as the "Breeches Bible." See GOOSE BIBLE, PLACEMAKERS' BIBLE.

Great Bible. Coverdale's revision of his own Bible of 1535 (see COVERDALE'S BIBLE), collated with Tyndale's and Matthew's, printed in Paris by Regnault, and published by Grafton and Whitchurch in 1539. It is a large folio, and a splendid specimen of typography. It is sometimes called "Cromwell's Bible," as it was undertaken at his direction, and it was made compulsory for all parish churches to purchase a copy. The Prayer Book version of the Psalms comes from the November, 1540, edition of the Great Bible. See also CRANMER'S BIBLE.

King James' Bible. The AUTHORIZED VERSION.

Matthew Parker's Bible. The BISHOPS' BIBLE.

Matthew's Bible. A pronouncedly Protestant version published in 1537 as having been "truly and purely translated into English by Thomas Matthew," which was a pseudonym, adopted for purposes of safety, of John Rogers, an assistant of Tyndale. It was probably printed at Antwerp, and the text is made up of the Pentateuch from Tyndale's version together with his hitherto unprinted translation of Joshua to 2 Chronicles inclusive and his revised edition of the New Testament, with Coverdale's version of the rest of the Old Testament and the Apocrypha. It was quickly superseded by the GREAT BIBLE, but it is of importance as it formed the starting-point for the revisions which culminated in the Authorized Version. See BUG BIBLE.

Revised Version. A revision of the Authorized Version commenced under a resolution passed by both Houses of Convocation in 1870 by a body of twenty-five English scholars (assisted and advised by an American Committee), the New Testament published in 1881, the complete Bible in 1885, and the Apocrypha in 1895.

Rheims-Douai Version. See DOUAI BIBLE.

Taverner's Bible. An independent translation by a Greek scholar, Richard Taverner, printed in 1539 (the same year as the first Great Bible) by T. Petit for T. Berthelet. It had no influence on the Authorized Version, but is remarkable for its vigorous, idiomatic English, and for being the first English Bible to include a third Book of Maccabees in the Apocrypha.

Tyndale's Bible. This consists of the New Testament (printed at Cologne, 1525), the Pentateuch (Marburg, Hesse, 1530 or 1531), Jonah, Old Testament lessons appointed to be read in place of the Epistles, and a MS. translation of the Old Testament to the end of Chronicles which was afterwards used in MATTHEW'S BIBLE. His revisions of the New Testament were issued in 1534 and 1535. Tyndale's principal authority was Erasmus' edition of the Greek Testament, but he also used Erasmus' Latin translation of the same, the Vulgate, and Luther's German version. Tyndale's version fixed the style and tone of the English Bible, and subsequent Protestant versions of the books on which he worked should—with one or two minor exceptions—be looked upon as revisions of his, and not as independent translations.

Wyclif's Bible. The name given to two translations of the Vulgate, one completed in 1380 and the other a few years later, in neither of which was Wyclif concerned as a translator. Nicholas of Hereford made the first version as far as Baruch iii. 20; who was responsible for the remainder is unknown. The second version has been ascribed to John Purvey, a follower of Wyclif. The Bible of 1380 was the first complete version in English; as a whole it remained unprinted until 1850, when the monumental edition of the two versions by Forshall and Madden appeared, but in 1810 an edition of the New Testament was published by H. H. Baber, an assistant librarian at the British Museum.

(2) specially named editions. The following Bibles are named either from typographical errors or archaic words that they contain, or from some special circumstance in connection with them:

Adulterous Bible. The "WICKED BIBLE."

Bamberg Bible. The "THIRTY-SIX LINE BIBLE."

Bear Bible. The Spanish Protestant version printed at Basle in 1569; so called because the woodcut device on the title-page is a bear.

Bedell's Bible. A translation of the Authorized Version into Irish carried out under the direction of Bedell (d. 1642), Bishop of Kilmore and Ardagh.

Breeches Bible. The GENEVAN BIBLE was popularly so called because in it Gen. iii. 7, was rendered, "The eyes of them bothe were opened . . . and they sowed figge-tree leaves together, and made themselves breeches." This reading occurs in every edition of the Genevan Bible, but not in any other version, though it is given in the then unprinted Wyclif MS. ("ya sewiden ye levis of a fige tre and madin brechis"), and also in the translation of the Pentateuch given in Caxton's edition of Voragine's Golden Legend (1483).

Brothers' Bible. The "KRALITZ BIBLE."

Bug Bible. COVERDALE'S BIBLE of 1535, is so called because Ps. xci. 5, is translated, "Thou shalt not nede to be afrayed for eny bugges by night." The same reading occurs in MATTHEW'S BIBLE and its reprints; the Authorized and Revised Versions both read "terror."

Complutensian Polyglot. The great edition, in six folio volumes, containing the Hebrew and Greek texts, the Septuagint, the Vulgate, and the Chaldee paraphrase of the Pentateuch with a Latin translation, together with Greek and Hebrew grammars and a Hebrew Dictionary, prepared and printed at the expense of Cardinal Ximenes, and published at Alcala (the ancient Complutum) near Madrid, 1513-1517.

Discharge Bible. An edition printed in 1806 containing discharge for charge in 1 Tim. v. 21: "I discharge thee before God, . . . that thou observe these things, etc."

Ears to Ear Bible. An edition of 1810, in which Matt. xiii. 43, reads: "Who hath ears to ear, let him hear."

Ferrara Bible. The first Spanish edition of the Old Testament, translated from the Hebrew in 1553 for the use of the Spanish Jews. A second edition was published in the same year for Christians.

Forty-two Line Bible. The "MAZARIN BIBLE."

Goose Bible. The editions of the GENEVAN BIBLE printed at Dort; the Dort press had a goose as its device.

Gutenberg's Bible. The "MAZARIN BIBLE." He Bible. In the two earliest editions of the Authorized Version (both 1611) in the first (now known as "the He Bible") Ruth iii. 15, reads: "and he went into the city"; the other (known as "the She Bible") has the variant "she." "He" is the correct translation of the Hebrew, but nearly all modern editions—with the exception of the Revised Version—perpetuate the confusion and print "she."

Idle Bible. An edition of 1809 in which "the idole shepherd" (Zech. xi. 17) is printed "the idle shepherd." In the Revised Version the translation is "the worthless shepherd."

Kralitz Bible. The Bible published by the United Brethren of Moravia (hence known also as the Brothers' Bible) at Kralitz, 1579–1593.

Leda Bible. The third edition (second folio) of the BISHOPS' BIBLE published in 1572, and so called because the decoration to the initial at the Epistle to the Hebrews is a startling and incongruous woodcut of Jupiter visiting Leda in the guise of a swan. This, and several other decorations in the New Testament of this edition, were from an edition of Ovid's Metamorphoses; they created such a storm of protest that they were never afterwards used.

Leopolita Bible. A Polish translation of the Vulgate by John of Lemberg (anc. Leopolis) published in 1561 at Cracow.

Mazarin Bible. The first printed Bible (an edition of the Vulgate), and the first large book to be printed from movable metal type. It contains no date, but was printed probably in 1455, and was certainly on sale by the middle of 1456. It was printed at Mainz, probably by Fust and Schoeffer, but as it was for long credited to Gutenberg—and it is not yet agreed that he was not responsible—it is frequently called the Gutenberg Bible. By bibliographers it is usually known as the Forty-two Line Bible (it having 42 lines to the page), to differentiate it from the Bamberg Bible of 36 lines. Its popular name is due to the fact that the copy discovered in the Mazarin Library, Paris, in 1760, was the first to be known and described.

Murderers' Bible. An edition of 1801 in which the misprint murdereis for murmureis makes Jude 16, read: "These are murderers, complainers, walking after their own lusts, etc."

Old Cracow Bible. The "LEOPOLITA BIBLE."

Ostrog Bible. The first complete Slavonic edition; printed at Ostrog, Volhynia, Russia, in 1581.

Pfister's Bible. The "THIRTY-SIX LINE BIBLE."

Placemakers' Bible. The second edition of the GENEVA BIBLE, 1562; so called from a printer's error in Matt. v. 9, "Blessed are the placemakers [peacemakers], for they shall be called the children of God." It has also been called the "Whig Bible."

Printers' Bible. An edition of about 1702 which makes David pathetically complain that "printers [princes] have persecuted me without a cause" (Ps. cxix. 161).

Proof Bible (Probe-Bible). The revised version of the first impression of Luther's German Bible. A final revised edition appeared in 1802.

Rebecca's Camels Bible. An edition printed in 1823 in which Gen. xxiv. 61 tells us that "Rebecca arose, and her camels," instead of "her damsels."

Rosin Bible. The DOUAI BIBLE, 1609, is sometimes so called, because it has in Jer. viii. 22: "Is there noe rosin in Galaad." The Authorized Version translates the word by "balm," but gives "rosin" in the margin as an alternative. See TREACLE BIBLE.

Sacy's Bible. A French translation, so called from Louis Isaac le Maistre de Sacy, director of Port Royal, 1650–1679. He was imprisoned for three years in the Bastille for his Jansenist opinions, and there translated, 1667, completing the Bible a few years later, after his release.

Schelhorn's Bible. A name sometimes given to the "THIRTY-SIX LINE BIBLE."

September Bible. Luther's German translation of the New Testament, published anonymously at Wittenberg in September, 1522.

She Bible. See HE BIBLE.

Standing Fishes Bible. An edition of 1806 in which Ezek. xlvi. 10, reads: "And it shall come to pass that the fishes (instead of fishers) shall stand upon it, etc."

Thirty-Six Line Bible. A Latin Bible of 36 lines to the column, probably printed by A. Pfister at Bamberg in 1460. It is also known as the Bamberg, and Pfister's, Bible, and sometimes as Schelhorn's, as it was first described by the German bibliographer J. G. Schelhorn, in 1760.

To-remain Bible. In a Bible printed at Cambridge in 1805 Gal. iv. 29, reads: "Persecuted him that was born after the spirit to remain, even so it is now." The words "to remain" were added in error by the compositor, the editor having answered a proofreader's query as to the comma after "spirit" with the penciled reply "to remain" in the margin. The mistake was repeated in the first 8vo edition published by the Bible Society (1805), and again in their 12mo edition dated 1819.

Treacle Bible. A popular name for the BISHOPS' BIBLE, 1568, because in it Jer. viii. 22, reads: "Is there no tryacle in Gilead, is there no phisition there?" See ROSIN BIBLE. In the same Bible "tryacle" is also given for "balm" in Jer. xlv. 11, and Ezek. xxvii. 17. Coverdale's Bible (1535) also uses the word "triacle."

Unrighteous Bible. An edition printed at Cambridge in 1653, containing the printer's error, "Know ye not that the unrighteous shall inherit [for "shall not inherit"] the Kingdom of God?" (1 Cor. vi. 9). The same edition gave Rom. vi. 13, as: "Neither yield ye your members as instruments of righteousness unto sin," in place of "unrighteousness." This is also sometimes known as the "Wicked Bible."

Wicked Bible. So called because the word not is omitted in the seventh commandment, making it, "Thou shalt commit adultery." Printed at London by Barker and Lucas, 1632. The "UNRIGHTEOUS BIBLE" is also sometimes called by this name.

Wife-hater Bible. An edition of 1810 in which the word "life" in Luke xiv. 26, is printed "wife."

Wuyck's Bible. The Polish Bible authorized by the Roman Catholics and printed at Cracow in 1599. The translation was made by the Jesuit, Jacob Wuyck.

Zurich Bible. A German version of 1530 composed of Luther's translation of the New Testament and portions of the Old, with the remainder and the Apocrypha by other translators.

Bible in Spain, The. An account of a journey through Spain by George Borrow, published in 1843 and one of the best-known books of travel in English. It was written while the author was touring Spain as an agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

Biblia Pauperum, the poor man's Bible. A picture-book, widely used by the illiterate in the Middle Ages in place of the Bible. It was designed to illustrate the leading events in the salvation of man, and later MSS. as a rule had a Latin inscription to each picture. These Biblia were probably the earliest books to be printed, first from blocks and later with movable type.

bibliography. (1) The history, or better historiography, of books.

(2) A list of books compiled for a specific purpose, as a list of references to sources or on a specific topic, as a list of works dealing with Shakespeare. A critical bibliography is one in which the merits of the individual items are evaluated.

bibliomancy. Practice of prophecy by interpreting the first passage one happens on in a random opening of some book, especially the Bible.

Bibulus. Colleague of Julius Caesar, a mere cipher in office, whence his name has become proverbial for one in office who is a mere nonentity.

Bickerstaff, Isaac. A pseudonym assumed by Dean Swift, in his violent burlesque paper-war with Partridge, the almanac-maker and astrologer (1709). This Isaac Bickerstaff, entering into competition with the astrologer in his own field, solemnly predicted his death at a particular moment and afterwards announced the details of the demise. Partridge insisted that he was still very much alive, but Bickerstaff continued to argue to the contrary, and the joke was taken up and played upon for months. So popular was it that Richard Steele, editor of The Tatler, entitled his periodical "The Lucubrations of Isaac Bickerstaff, Esq., Astrologer" (1709-1711) and continued to write for The Tatler under that pseudonym. Later a real Isaac Bickerstaffe (1735?-1812?) won fame as a dramatist.

Bickerstaffe-Drew, Monsignor Count Francis Browning Drew (1858-1928). English Roman Catholic clergyman and author under pseudonym of John Ayscough of twenty novels.

Bicorne. A mythical beast, fabled by the early French romancers to grow very fat and well-favored through living on good and enduring husbands. It was the antitype to CHICHIVACHE.

Chichevache (or lean cow) was said to live on good women; and a world of sarcasm was conveyed in always representing Chichevache as very poor,—all ribs, in fact—her food being so scarce as to keep her in a wretched state of famine. Bycorne, on the contrary, was a monster who lived on good men and he was always bursting with fatness, like a prize pig. Sidney Lanier, Shakespeare and his Forerunners, ch. vi.

Biddle, Francis (1886-). American lawyer and novelist. Attorney General of U.S. 1941. His brother George Biddle (1885-) distinguished American painter and sculptor. Frescoes in Justice Department building.

Biddle, Nicholas (1786-1844). Philadelphia financier, President of Bank of United States 1819. Center of attack by Jackson against bank. Secured state charter and bank became "The Bank of the United States of Pennsylvania" (1836). Resigned in 1839.

Biddy (i.e. Bridget). A heroic name for an Irish servant-maid, as Mike is for an Irish laborer. These generic names are very common: for example, Tom Tug, a waterman; Jack Pudding, a buffoon; Cousin Jonathan, a citizen of the United States; Cousin Michel, a German; John Bull, an Englishman; Moll and Betty, English female servants of the lower order; Colin Tompon, a Swiss; Nic Frog, a Dutchman; Mossoo, a Frenchman; John Chinaman, and many others.

Bidpay, Bilpay, see PILPAY.

Biedermeier. After Gottlieb Biedermeier, an imaginary Philistine and author of poems written by Ludwig Eichrodt (1827-1892). A style of German furniture resembling French Empire. Also applied to literature and the arts.

Bienville, Jean Baptiste Lemoyne (1680-1768). Son of Charles Lemoyne. Explorer of lower Mississippi and Red River (1699). Lieutenant of the King in Louisiana (1700); governor of the colony (1701-1712, 1718-1726, 1733-1743).

Bierce, Ambrose Gwinett (1842-1914?). American journalist and short-story writer. His best-known books are The Friend's Delight (1871); Tales of Soldiers and Civilians (1891; later published as In the Midst of Life, 1898); Can Such Things Be? (1894); Black Beetles in Amber (1895); Shapes of Clay (1910). Bierce, with Stephen CRANE, was one of the earliest of the realists in American fiction, although the element of horror is also strong in his work.

Bifrost (Icel. bifa, "tremble," rost, "path"). In Scandinavian mythology, the bridge between heaven and earth, Asgard and Midgard; the rainbow may be considered to be this bridge, and its various colors are the reflections of its precious stones. The keeper of the bridge is HEIMDALL. At Ragnarok it will collapse under the weight of the onrushing sons of Muspelheim.

Big Apple, the. A popular American ballroom dance of the year 1937, based on the old-fashioned square dance.

Bigart, Homer (1907-). American journalist. In World War II he covered for the New York Herald Tribune London and North Africa; then, in the Pacific theater, the invasion of Leyte and the campaigns of Iwo and Okinawa. He filed the last eyewitness story of the war with Japan after returning from a bombing run over Kumagaya. Received one of the four Pulitzer Prizes for reporting (1946).

Big Ben. The name given to the large bell in the Clock Tower (or St. Stephen's Tower) at the Houses of Parliament. It weighs 13½ tons, and is named after Sir Benjamin Hall, Chief Commissioner of Works in 1856, when it was cast. Big Ben and Baby Ben are trademark names of alarm clocks on the market.

Big Bend State. Tennessee. See under STATES.

Big Bertha. A German gun in World War I with a very large bore, so called from Frau Berta (or Bertha) Krupp von Bohlen und Halbach of the huge Krupp steel and munition works in Germany. See also FRAU BERTHA, BERTHE.

Bigelow, John (1817-1911). American writer and diplomat. Co-owner with William Cullen Bryant of New York Evening Post (1848-1861). Author of Life of Benjamin Franklin (1874).

Bigelow, Poulteney (1855-). American traveler, journalist and author. Personal friend of emperor William II of Germany.

Big-endians. In Swift's GULLIVER'S TRAVELS a party in the empire of Lilliput, who make it a matter of conscience to break their eggs at the big end. They are looked on as heretics by the orthodox party, who break theirs at the little end. The BIG-ENDIANS typify the Catholics, and the LITTLE-ENDIANS the Protestants.

Big Fiddle. A story by Kay BOYLE, published in a collection entitled The Crazy Hunter (1940). It is a psychological study of a member of an American jazz band in England, obsessed with the memory of a prison sentence and the charge on which he was convicted.

Big Five. (1) At the Paris Peace Conference in 1919, Clemenceau for France, Lloyd George for England, Orlando for Italy, Makino for Japan, and President Wilson for the U.S.

(2) The BIG THREE (U.S., Britain, Russia) plus China and France after World War II.

Biggers, Earl Derr (1884-1933). Popular American novelist and playwright, known for Seven Keys to Baldpate (1913), later made into a melodrama for the stage and the motion pictures, and for Charlie Chan, a clever Chinese detective, leading character in a series of detective stories which includes: The Chinese Parrot (1926); Behind That Curtain (1928); The Black Camel (1929). A large number of the books in this series were made into motion pictures also, starring the late Warner Oland and the late Sidney Toler.

Biglow Papers, The. A series of satires, chiefly in verse, written in the New England vernacular by James Russell LOWELL (1846-1848; second series, 1867). The original series, published during the Mexican War, was extremely popular throughout the North, where the general feeling was that the southern states were supporting the war merely to gain more slave territory. Three typical Yankee characters, created by Lowell, express their views in the Biglow Papers:—Hosea Biglow, a shrewd and sensible New England farmer with a deal of wit of the homely variety and a genuine enthusiasm for the cause of freedom; Birdofredum Sawin, a good-for-nothing fellow villager who goes off to the war and becomes an unconvincing advocate of the Southern cause; and Rev. Homer Wilber, an earnest but somewhat pompous and over-scholarly country minister. The second series tells how Birdofredum Sawin married and settled in the South.

Big Money, The. A novel by John Dos Passos, published in 1936 and the last volume in his trilogy entitled U.S.A. It follows the pattern of the two preceding volumes in the series, THE 42ND PARALLEL and 1919, with the same set of characters. The extravagance, abandon, and corruption of the era of the 1920's are here portrayed, culminating in the stock market crash of 1929 and the personal tragedy or moral defeat of several of the leading characters. Short biographies of representative people in the public eye at the time are included, presenting Henry Ford, Thorstein Veblen, Isadora Duncan, Frank Lloyd Wright, William Randolph Hearst, the Wright brothers, Samuel Insull, and Rudolph Valentino.

Big Parade, The. A popular motion picture dealing with World War I, released in 1925, and written by Laurence Stallings.

big stick. A phrase popularized by Theodore Roosevelt (1858-1919), president of the United States, denoting threats with some show of warlike attitude to back them up; pressure that may be brought to bear upon recalcitrant individuals, trusts, or nations who persist in alleged wrong-doing.

Big Three. (1) In Britain, an alliance (formed in 1919) of the miners' federation, the national transport workers federation, and the national union of railway men.

(2) Since the days of World War II, Great Britain, the U.S., and Russia; often also Churchill, Roosevelt, and Stalin.

bigwig. A person in authority, a "nob." Of course, the term arises from the custom of judges, bishops, and so on, wearing large wigs.

Bikini Atoll (Marshall Islands). Scene of underwater atomic bomb test by U.S. Navy, July 1, 1946.

bill.

true bill. Under the old judicial system before a case went to the criminal Assizes it was examined by the Grand Jury whose duty it was to decide whether or not there was sufficient evidence to justify a trial. If they decided that there was they were said "to find a true bill"; if, on the other hand, they decided there was not sufficient evidence they were said "to ignore the bill." Hence to find a true bill is a colloquial way of saying that after proper examination one can assert that such and such a thing is true.

bill of attainder. A legislative Act, introduced and passed exactly like any other Bill, declaring a person or persons attainted. It was originally used only against offenders who fled from justice, but was soon perverted to the destruction of political opponents, etc. The last Bill of Attainder in England was that passed in 1697 for the attainting and execution of Sir John Fenwick for participation in the Assassination plot.

bill of exchange. An order transferring a named sum of money at a given date from the debtor ("drawee") to the creditor ("drawer"). The drawee having signed the bill becomes the "acceptor," and the document is then negotiable in commercial circles just as is money itself.

bill of fare. A list of the dishes provided, or which may be ordered, at a restaurant, etc.; a menu.

bill of health. A document, duly signed by the proper authorities, to certify that when the ship set sail no infectious disorder existed in the place. This is a clean bill of health, and the term is frequently used figuratively. A foul bill of health is a document to show that the place was suffering from some infection when the ship set sail. If a captain cannot show a clean bill, he is supposed to have a foul one.

bill of lading. A document signed by the master of a ship in acknowledgment of goods laden in his vessel. In this document he binds himself to deliver the articles in good condition to the persons named in the bill, certain exceptions being duly provided for. These bills are generally in triplicate—one for the sender, one for the receiver, and one for the master of the vessel.

bill of pains and penalties. A legislative Act imposing punishment (less than capital) upon a person charged with treason or other high crimes. It is like a BILL OF ATTAINDER, differing from it in that the punishment is never capital and the children are not affected.

bill of quantities. An abstract of the probable cost of a building, etc.

Bill of Rights. The declaration delivered to the Prince of Orange on his election to the British throne, and accepted by him, confirming the rights and privileges of the people (February 13, 1689).

(2) The first ten amendments to the Constitution of the U.S., passed in 1791 and containing guarantees of freedom of speech, press, assembly, and religion, and protection in legal matters.

bill of sale. When a person borrows money and delivers goods as security, he gives the lender a "bill of sale," that is, permission to sell the goods if the money is not returned on a stated day.

Billings, Josh. The literary name of Henry Wheeler Shaw (1818-1885), an extremely popular American humorist. For many years he published an annual known as Josh Billings' Farmers' Almanac.

Billingsgate. The site of an old passage through that part of the city wall that protected London on the river side, so called from the Billings, who were the royal race of the Varini, an ancient tribe mentioned by Tacitus. Billingsgate has been the site of a fish-market for many centuries, and its porters, etc., were famous for their foul and abusive language at least three hundred years ago.

Parnassus spoke the cant of Billingsgate.
Dryden, Art of Poetry, c. 1.

talk Billingsgate. To talk slang; to use foul, abusive language; to scold in a vulgar, coarse style.

Billy Barlow. A street droll, a merry-andrew; so called from a half-idiot of the name, who fancied himself some great personage. He was well known in the East of London in the early half of the 19th century, and died in Whitechapel workhouse. Some of his sayings were really witty, and some of his attitudes really droll.

bi-metallism. The employment for coinage of two metals, silver and gold, which would be of fixed relative value. Gold was the only standard metal in England and some other countries; silver coins, like copper, were mere tokens; but a gold sovereign was always of one fixed legal value. The object was to minimize the fluctuations in the value of money.

Bimini. A legendary island of the Bahama group where the FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH conferred eternal youth on all who drank its waters. Many journeys were made in search of it. There is an island called Bimini or Bemini from this legend.

Binet test, Binet-Simon test, see SIMON-BINET TEST.

Bingen, bishop of. See under HATTO.

Bingham, Alfred Mitchell (1905-). American economist and journalist. Son of Hiram Bingham, American explorer and politician. The younger Bingham founded a journal, Common Sense, in 1932 with Selden Rodman. His writings include Insurgent America, Man's Estate, The United States of Europe, etc.

Binnie, James. In Thackeray's NEWCOMES, an amiable Scotch bachelor of the Indian Civil Service who lives for a time with Colonel Newcome in London.

Binns, Archie (1899-). American novelist, author of Lightship (1934); The Laurels Are Cut Down (1937); The Land Is Bright (1939); and other books dealing with the Northwest.

Binyon, Laurence (1860-1943). English poet and art historian. In charge of Oriental prints and drawings, British Museum (1913-1932). Author of works on Chinese, Japanese, and East Indian art; translated Dante. Collected Poems (1931).

Biographia Literaria. Volume of essays on literary criticism and aesthetics by COLERIDGE, published in 1817. The poetic theory expressed by the author here was found particularly interesting by the 20th-century English critic I. A. RICHARDS and publicized in his own aesthetic studies.

Biography. See BEHRMAN, S. N.

Bion. Greek pastoral poet of Smyrna, 3rd or 2nd century B.C. A contemporary of THEOCRITUS. Best known for Lament for Adonis.

Biondello. In Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew, one of the servants of Lucentio, the future husband of Bianca.

Birch, Harvey. The patriotic peddler hero of Cooper's novel THE SPY.

Birch, Reginald (1856-1943). English-born American illustrator, first famous for a depiction of Frances Hodgson Burnett's LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY. Illustrator for magazines and many books. Noted for pen-and-ink work of great delicacy and charm.

Birches. A poem by Robert Frost (1916).

Birchin Lane. I must send you to Birchin Lane, i.e. whip you. The play is on birch (a rod).

a suit in Birchin Lane. Birchin Lane was once famous for all sorts of apparel; references to second-hand clothes in Birchin Lane are common enough in Elizabethan books.

Passing through Birchin Lane amidst a camp-royal of hose and doublets, I took . . . occasion to slip into a captain's suit—a valiant buff doublet stuffed with points and a pair of velvet slops scored thick with lace.

Middleton, Black Book (1604).

bird. This is the Middle English and Anglo-Saxon brīd (occasionally byrde in M.E.), which meant only the young of feathered flying animals, foul, foule, or fowel being the M.E. corresponding to the modern bird. Cf. German Vogel "bird." An endearing name for a girl.

And by my word, your bonnie bird
In danger shall not tarry;
So, though the waves are raging white,
I'll row you o'er the ferry.
Campbell, Lord Ulm's Daughter.

This use of the word is probably connected with Burd, a poetic word for a lady which has long been obsolete, except in ballads.

a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush.

Possession is better than expectation.

bird of passage. A person who shifts from place to place; a temporary visitant, like a cuckoo, the swallows, starlings, etc.

bird of Juno. The peacock.

bird of Washington. The American eagle.

Arabian bird. The phoenix.

birds of Diomedes. Swans.

The Blue Bird. See under BLUE.

Bird in Space. See BRANCUSI, CONSTANTIN.

Birds, The. A famous comedy by Aristophanes (414 B. C.) in which "the birds" construct a cloud city (see CLOUD CUCKOO LAND) in midair and enter into friendly relations with the gods.

Birds and Poets. See BURROUGHS, JOHN.

Birds, Beasts, and Flowers. See LAWRENCE, D. H.

Birds' Christmas Carol, The. A Christmas tale by Kate Douglas Wiggin (Am. 1888).

Birmingham, George A. Pseudonym of James Owen Hannay.

Birmingham Poet. John Freeth, who died at the age of seventy-eight in 1808. He was wit, poet, and publican, who not only wrote the words and tunes of songs, but sang them also, and sang them well.

Biron. In Shakespeare's LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST, a merry mad-cap young lord, in attendance on Ferdinand, king of Navarre. Biron promises to spend three years with the King in study, during which time no woman is to approach his court; but no sooner has he signed the compact than he falls in love with Rosaline.

Birotteau, César. The hero of Balzac's novel, César Birotteau (L'Histoire de la grandeur et de la décadence de César Birotteau), a dealer in perfumes who is allied with the militant royalists. When he is admitted into the Legion of Honor, he gives a great ball in honor of the occasion. The necessary changes in his apartments, together with unfortunate speculations, ruin him completely. He now devotes himself to the task of paying off his creditors and succeeds within three years, but dies soon afterward.

Birrell, Augustine (1850-1933). English essayist and statesman. Author of Obiter Dicta.

birth control. Control, usually limitation, of the number of children born, by conscious regulation of impregnation. Many books have been written concerning birth control, including those by Margaret SANGER. Opposition to birth control on religious grounds argues that the birth of a child is considerably more than purely a matter of biology.

Birthmark, The. An allegory by Hawthorne published in 1845 in Mosses from an Old Manse. It tells of Aylmer, a scientist with a passion for perfection, who kills his beautiful wife Georgiana by removing a small birthmark from her cheek, the one flaw in her beauty.

Birth of a Nation, The. A motion picture dealing with the Civil War period in the South, produced in 1915 by D. W. GRIFFITH and the first of the gigantic screen "epics" for which Hollywood later became famous.

bisexual. Of both sexes. Hermaphroditic. This state of nature, frequent in flowers, not rare in animals, is now recognized as a compelling force in human psychology and hence in certain areas of literature.

bishop.

bishop Barnaby. The Maybug, lady-bird, etc.

Bishop of Chester. The wealth of the Bishopric of Chester in the 15th century was proverbial; hence the satiric expression as poor as the Bishop of Chester.

Bishop of Hippo. St. Augustine (354-430) is often so referred to. He held the See for many years.

Bishop's Bible. See under BIBLE.

Age of the Bishops. See AGE.

Bishop, Bridget. One of the women accused by Cotton MATHER of witchcraft during the celebrated trials in Massachusetts at the end of the 17th century. She is mentioned in MATHER'S WONDERS OF THE INVISIBLE WORLD.

Bishop, Isabel (1902-). American artist, instructor of life painting and composition at the Art Students League, New York City (1936-1937); represented in Whitney Museum, Metropolitan Museum, Corcoran Art Galleries, etc. Member of National Institute of Arts and Letters.

Bishop, John Peale (1891-1944). American poet and novelist. His poetry includes The Undertaker's Garland (1922) (with Edmund Wilson); Now With His Love (1933); Minute Particulars (1935). He was also the author of Many Thousands Gone (1931), stories, and Act of Darkness (1935).

Bishop Blougram's Apology. A dramatic monologue by Browning in his Men and Women (1885). The speaker is Sylvester Blougram, a bishop who confesses to intellectual scepticism yet continues to stand before the world as an exponent of doctrines he no longer holds. He justifies his position to Gigadibs, a young poet.

Bismarck, in full Prince Otto Eduard Leopold von Bismarck-Schönhausen (1815-1898). Prussian statesman who brought about the foundation of the German Reich in 1871 at the end of the Franco-Prussian war. Called the "Iron Chancellor" of Germany (1871-1890). The event of his resignation, precipitated by his disagreement with Emperor William II, was interpreted by the London Punch in a famous cartoon, "Dropping the Pilot," in which the young emperor watches his dejected Chancellor leaving the ship, where he remains in sole command.

Bismarck of Asia. Li Hung Chang (1823-1901), the Chinese statesman; so called after OTTO VON BISMARCK.

Bitter Sweet. (1) A long narrative poem by J. G. HOLLAND (1858), at one time widely read. Its characters are Israel, a good old New England farmer, and his numerous children and grandchildren, gathered together in the old homestead for Thanksgiving Day.

(2) An operetta by Noel COWARD (1929).

Bixion, Jean-Jacques. A keen-witted cartoonist and humorist who appears in many of the novels of Balzac's Comédie humaine. He was one of the lesser officials of the Civil Service, where he exercised his talent for caricature and practical jokes in unofficial moments.

Bizet, Alexandre César Léopold, called Georges (1838-1875). French composer, best known for his suite of incidental music to Alphonse DAUDER's play, L'Arlésienne (1872), and for his opera CARMEN (1875). The latter was NIETZSCHE's favorite opera after he had turned his back on WAGNER's music.

Björkman, Edwin August (1866-). Swedish-American novelist and critic. Editor of the Modern Drama series which introduced Strindberg, Björnson, and Schnitzler to an American audience. Translated Georg Brandes' Jesus, A Myth (1926).

Björnson, Bjørnstjerne (1832-1910). Norwegian dramatist, known for his plays of his native country. His works include Between the Battles (1852); Lame Hulda (1858); Sigurd Slembe (1862); Mary Stuart in Scotland

(1864); The Newly Married (1868); The Edictor (1874); The King (1877); A Gauntlet (1883); Beyond Our Power (1883); Geography and Love (1885); Paul Lange and Tora Parsburg (1898); Laboremus (1901); Dayland (1904); When the New Wine Blooms (1909).

black. In blazonry, the symbol of prudence, wisdom, and constancy. In art, it represents evil and error, and as a mortuary color, grief and death; by extension of the latter, it is the church decoration for Good Friday. See under COLORS for other information on symbolism and usage.

black and blue. Bruised.

in black and white. In plain writing, the paper being white and the ink black.

swear black is white. To persist in an obvious untruth.

Blacks. (1) Mutes at funerals. (2) An Italian faction of the 14th century.

Black and Tan. Member of the irregular force enlisted in 1920 for service in Ireland as auxiliaries to the Royal Irish Constabulary. So called because their original uniform was the army khaki with the black leather accoutrements of the R.I.C.

black art. The art practiced by conjurors, wizards, and others who professed to have dealings with the devil; so called from the idea that necromancy was connected with the Lat. niger, black.

Black Assize. July 6, 1577, when a putrid pestilence broke out at Oxford during the time of assize.

be in one's black books. In bad odor; in disgrace; out of favor. A black book is a book recording the names of those who are in disgrace or have merited punishment. Amherst, in his Terrae Filius, or the Secret History of the Universities of Oxford (1726), speaks of the Proctor's black book, and tells us that no one can proceed to a degree whose name is found there.

Black Code. Legislation regulating the treatment of Negroes in the southern part of the United States before the emancipation of the slaves. Properly, the Code Noir or Black Code, introduced by Bienville, the French governor of Louisiana, about 1723.

Black Death. A plague which ravaged Europe in 1348-1351; a putrid typhus, in which the body rapidly turned black.

black diamond. Coal. Coal and diamonds are both forms of carbon.

Black Douglas. William Douglas, lord of Nithsdale (d. 1390).

black flag. The banner of a pirate ship; hence a symbol of defiance to the law. The pirate flag was usually decorated with skull and cross-bones and known as the "Jolly Roger." The name Black Flag has been given to (1) Moslem soldiers, from the black banner of the Abbasides; (2) Chinese sea pirates who opposed the French in Tonquin.

Black Friars. The Dominican monks; so called from their black cloaks. The district of this name in the City of London is the site of a large monastery of Dominicans who used to possess rights of sanctuary, etc.

Black Friday. (1) May 11, 1866, the date of the failure of Overend and Gurney, the Glasgow bankers, which led to a financial panic.

(2) Dec. 6, 1745, the day on which the news reached London that the Young Pretender had reached Derby.

(3) In the United States Sept. 24, 1869, and Sept. 18, 1873, days of financial panic in New York.

(4) Good Friday, on account of the black vestments worn in the Roman Catholic Church.

black gown. A parson, collegian, or other learned man, in allusion to the uniform of the two former classes.

Black Hand. A secret organization, especially among Italians, with the object of blackmail or lawlessness. The name comes from a former society in Spain with anarchistic aims.

Black Hawk War (1831-1832). A war of the U.S. against the Sac and Fox Indians whose leader was Black Hawk.

black hole. The lock-up in military barracks. It was the official British term until 1868. The allusion is to the so-called Black Hole of Calcutta, a dark, small, suffocating cell into which Suraja Dowlah thrust 146 British prisoners (1756), only twenty-three of whom survived.

Black Jack. (1) A nickname given to the American general, John Alexander Logan (1826-1886), on account of his complexion and hair.

(2) A nickname of General John J. Pershing (1860-1948), commander-in-chief of the A.E.F. in World War I. See also BLACKJACK.

black letter. The heavy Gothic type used generally by the early printers in England. Hence, black-letter dogs are literary antiquaries who pry into every corner to find out black-letter copies of books.

black-letter day. An unlucky day; one to be recalled with regret. The Romans marked their unlucky days with a piece of black charcoal, and their lucky ones with white chalk.

black list. A list of persons in disgrace, or who have incurred censure or punishment; a list of bankrupts for the private guidance of the mercantile community.

black looks. Looks of displeasure. To look black. To look displeased. The figure is from black clouds indicative of foul weather.

Black Maria. The van which conveys prisoners from the police courts to jail. There is an unsupported tradition that the term originated in America. Maria Lee, a Negress of great size and strength, kept a sailors' boarding house in Boston, and when constables required help it was a common thing to send for "Black Maria," who soon collared the refractory men and led them to the lock-up.

During World War I Black Maria was one of the names given to large enemy shells that emitted dense smoke on bursting.

Black Man. The Evil One.

Black Monday. Easter Monday, April 14, 1360, was so called. Edward III was with his army lying before Paris, and the day was so dark, with mist and hail, so bitterly cold and so windy, that many of his horses and men died. Monday after Easter holidays is called "Black Monday," in allusion to this fatal day.

It was not for nothing that my nose fell a-bleeding on Black Monday last, at six o'clock i' the morning. Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice, ii. 5.

February 27, 1865, was so called in Melbourne from a terrible sirocco from the N.N.W., which produced dreadful havoc between Sandhurst and Castlemain; the schoolboys give the name to the first Monday after the holidays are over, when lessons begin again.

Black Prince. Edward, Prince of Wales (1330-1376), eldest son of Edward III. Froissart says he was "styled black by terror of his arms." The appellation is sometimes thought to refer to the color of his armor, but usually to his martial deeds.

Black Republic. Hayti; a West Indian state formed for the most part of Negroes.

Black Republicans. Republican opponents of slavery, during the period which preceded the American Civil War.

Black Rod. The short title of an English Court official, who is styled fully "Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod," so called from his staff of office—a black wand surmounted by a golden lion.

Black Saturday. Aug. 4, 1621; so called in Scotland, because a violent storm occurred at the very moment the Parliament was sitting to enforce episcopacy on the people.

black sheep. A disgrace to the family or community. Black sheep are looked on with dislike by some shepherds, and are not so valuable as white ones. See also BÊTE NOIRE.

Black Shirt. One of the Italian Fascisti under Mussolini. The black shirt was the distinctive part of their uniforms.

black swan. A very rare thing.

Black Thursday. Feb. 6, 1851, is so called in the colony of Victoria, from a terrible bush fire which occurred on that day.

Blackacre, Widow. In Wycherley's comedy, The Plain Dealer (1677), a masculine, litigious, pettifogging, headstrong woman. She is considered the best of Wycherley's comic characters.

blackamoor. A Negro, especially one from Africa. Hence the phrase wash the blackamoor white—i.e., be engaged upon a hopeless and useless task. The allusion is to one of Aesop's fables.

Black April. See PETERKIN, JULIA.

Black Armour. See WYLIE, ELINOR.

blackballed. Excluded from a club. In voting by ballot, those who accept the person proposed used to drop a white or red ball into the box, but those who would exclude the candidate a black one.

Black Bands (Fr. Bandes Noires). 16th century infantry distinguished by their famous leader, Giovanni delle Bande Nere, Italian General.

Black Beauty, his Grooms and Companions. An imaginary autobiography of the horse, Black Beauty, by Anna Sewall, pleading for kindness in the treatment of animals.

black bottom. A popular American dance of the jazz period (ca. 1925), violent and acrobatic, of Negro origin. See JAZZ. The title refers to the deposits of black soil on the banks of the Mississippi River.

Black Cat, The. A horror tale by Edgar Allan Poe, published in 1845.

Black Crook, The. A play with music and dancing, by Charles M. Barras, produced in 1866. It was the first successful American revue (produced at Niblo's Garden), and brought nearly a million dollars to its producer. Revived by Christopher Morley in Hoboken in a carefully planned mélange of all the versions from Barras to the version of 1891, the text was that of the original version "with some small mischievous editing." Harry Wagstaff Gribble directed this revival and Cleon Throckmorton made the sets.

Black Dwarf, The. A novel by Sir Walter Scott (1816). The Black Dwarf (see also DWARF) is called Elshander the Recluse or Cannie Elshie, the Wise Wight of Mucklestone Moor, but is in reality Sir Edward Mauley. Embittered by his deformity and his own experience, he lives a solitary existence, but gives help to many who seek him out and finally declares his identity in order to prevent a forced marriage between Isabella Vere and Sir Frederick Langley. The character of the Black Dwarf is said to have been drawn from David Ritchie, whose cottage was on Manor Water in the county of Peebles.

blackjack. (1) A large leather bottle tarred on the outside.

(2) A pirate flag.

Black Masters, The. An allegorical play by Leonid ANDREYEV, produced in 1908. The black masters are evil thoughts assailing and overwhelming the human soul.

Blackmore, Richard Doddridge (1825–1900). English novelist, author of LORNA DOONE.

Blackmur, Richard P. (1904–). American literary critic and poet, known for his interpretations and analyses of the work of such 20th-century poets as E. E. CUMMINGS, Hart CRANE, and Wallace STEVENS. His books include The Double Agent: Essays in Craft and Elucidation (1935); From Jordan's Delight (1937), poems; and The Expense of Greatness (1940), a collection of criticism.

Black Oxen. A novel by Gertrude ATHERTON (1923), built around a current fad of the time of rejuvenation by the transfer of animal glands to human bodies.

Black Riders, The, and Other Lines. A book of poetry in free verse by Stephen CRANE, published in 1895 and considered to be a forerunner of the IMAGIST style.

Blackstick, Fairy. The fairy of Thackeray's ROSE AND THE RING.

Blackstone, Sir William (1723–1780). An English jurist, author of the famous Commentaries bearing his name which are fundamental in any study of English law. Hence Blackstone is synonymous with the law.

Black Tulip, The. A historical romance by Alexander DUMAS (1895), dealing with 17th century Dutch history, particularly the struggle between the patriotic De Witt brothers and their enemies, who gained the support of William of Orange. The novel treats also of the famous Haarlem tulip craze; hence the name.

Black Watch. A Highland regiment, originating in the 18th century, now territorials known as the Royal Highlanders, wearing kilts of dark tartan.

Blackwell, Alice Stone (1857–). The daughter of Lucy STONE and a great organizer of woman suffrage. A translator of much foreign poetry.

Blackwood, Algernon (1869–). English novelist and short story writer of the supernatural and mystical. One of his best books is John Silence, a series of stories about a psychical detective.

Blackwood's Magazine. An English literary periodical, started in 1817. J. G. LOCKHART and James HOGG were members of its staff. Its political sympathies were Tory, and it was violently opposed to the "COCKNEY SCHOOL" of poets. Its attack on Keats in this connection was considered by some of his friends to have been responsible for his death.

Blair, Adam, see ADAM BLAIR.

Blake, George (1893-). Scottish editor and novelist.

Blake, Goody, see GOODY BLAKE.

Blake, Nicholas. Pseudonym of Cecil Day Lewis.

Blake, William (1757-1827). Famous English poet and engraver, known for his mysticism, humanitarianism, sentiment, and complex symbolism. His works, in which both text and illustrations were engraved, include Poetical Sketches (1783); Songs of Innocence (1787); Songs of Experience (1794); and the volumes in his series of so-called "Prophetic Books"—THE BOOK OF THEL (1787), THE MARRIAGE OF HEAVEN AND HELL (1790), The Gates of Paradise (1793), The Vision of the Daughters of Albion (1793), JERUSALEM (1804), The Emanation of the Giant Albion (1804), and MILTON (1804). For a discussion of Blake's symbolism, cf. William Blake: His Philosophy and Symbols, by S. Foster Damon.

Blake, William. Pseudonym and adaptation of William James Blech (1894-). American author, husband of Christina Stead. The World is Mine: The Story of a Modern Monte Cristo (1938); An American Looks at Karl Marx (1939); The Copperheads (1941), etc.

Blakelock, Ralph Albert (1847-1919). American landscape painter. After years of struggle and neglect, recognized by the National Academy.

Blanchard, Jenny and Emmy. The principal characters in Frank Swinnerton's NOC TURN.

Blancheflor. The heroine of the Old French metrical romance, Floris et Blancheflor, which was used by Boccaccio as the basis of his prose romance, Il Filocolo. The old story tells of a young Christian prince who falls in love with the Saracen slavegirl with whom he has been brought up. They are parted, but after many adventures he rescues her unharmed from the harem of the Emir of Babylon. It is a widespread story, and is substantially the same as that of Dorigen and Aurelius by CHAUCER, and that of Dianora and Ansaldo in the Decameron. See DORIGEN.

Blancove, Edward. The seducer of Dahlia Fleming in Meredith's novel, RHODA FLEMING.

Blandish, Serena. Title of a book by Enid Bagnold (Lady Jones).

Blane, Neil. The landlord of the Howf in Scott's OLD MORTALITY, also the town piper.

blank verse. Rhymeless verse. In English prosody the term refers to unrhymed iambic pentameter. Shakespeare and Milton wrote almost entirely in blank verse.

The qua | lity | of mē | cy is | not strained
It drop | peth as | the gen | tle dew | from heaven
Upon | the place | beneath; | it is | twice blessed.
Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.

blanket.

wet blanket. A discouragement; hence a marplot or spoil-sport. A person is a wet blanket who discourages a proposed scheme. "A wet blanket influence" etc. A wet blanket is used to smother fire, or to prevent one escaping from a fire from being burnt.

the wrong side of the blanket. An illegitimate child is said to come of the wrong side of the blanket.

He grew up to be a fine waule fallow, like mony ane that comes o' the wrang side o' the blanket.
Scott, The Antiquary, ch. xxiv.

Blanketeers. The name given to a body of some 5,000 working men out of employment who assembled on St. Peter's Field, Manchester, March 10, 1817, and provided themselves with blankets intending to march to London, to lay before the Prince Regent a petition of grievances. Only six got as far as Ashbourne Bridge, when the expedition collapsed.

In more recent times journalists have applied the name to similar bodies of unemployed, both in Great Britain and in America.

blarney. Soft, wheedling speeches to gain some end; flattery, or lying, with unblushing effrontery. Blarney is a village near Cork. Legend has it that Cormac McCarthy held its castle in 1602, and concluded an armistice with Carew, the Lord President, on condition of surrendering the fort to the English garrison. Day after day his lordship looked for the fulfillment of the terms, but received nothing but soft speeches, till he became the laughing-stock of Elizabeth's ministers, and the dupe of the Lord of Blarney.

Blarney Stone. In the wall of the castle at Blarney, about twenty feet from the top and difficult of access, is a triangular stone containing this inscription: "Cormac McCarthy fortis me fieri fecit, A.D. 1446." Tradition says that to whomever can kiss this is given the power of being able to obtain all his desires by cajolery. As it is almost impossible to reach, a substitute has been provided by the custodians of the castle, and it is said that this is in every way as efficacious as the original.

Blas, Gil, see GIL BLAS.

Blasco Ibáñez, Vicente (1867-1928). Spanish novelist, author of internationally best-selling books with life in Spain as a background for their melodramatic plots. Well known among the English-speaking public are: The Shadow of the Cathedral (La Catedral; 1903); Blood and Sand (Sangre y Arena; 1908); THE FOUR HORSEMEN OF THE APOCALYPSE (Los Cuatro Jinetes del Apocalipsis; 1916); MARE NOSTRUM (Our Sea; 1918). The last three were made into successful American motion pictures during the 1920's. As an ardent republican he finally fled to South America and died in exile at Mentone, France.

Blashfield, Edwin Howland (1848-1936). American painter, especially of murals. Decorated central dome in the Library of Congress, Washington, D.C.

Blatant Beast. In Spenser's Faerie Queene "a dreadful fiend of gods and men, ydrad"; the type of calumny or slander. He was begotten of Cerberus and Chimaera, and has a hundred tongues and a sting; with his tongues he speaks things "most shameful, most unrighteous, most untrue"; and with his sting "steeps them in poison." Sir Artegal pursues him and Sir Calidore muzzles the monster, and draws him with a chain to Faerie Land. The beast breaks his chain and regains his liberty. The word "blatant" seems to have been coined by Spenser, and he never uses it except as an epithet for this monster, who is not mentioned till the twelfth canto of the fifth book. It is probably derived from the provincial word blate, meaning to bellow or roar.

Blathers and Duff. In Dickens' OLIVER TWIST, detectives who investigate the burglary in which Bill Sikes had a hand.

Blaue Reiter. German school of painting, founded in 1912 and located near Munich. The name is derived from the title of a manifesto of the group, Der Blaue Reiter (The Blue Knight), published in 1912. The chief influence on the group came from folk art, the religious art of the Middle Ages, and children's drawings. Subjects were principally farm landscapes and animals. Vassily KANDINSKY, Franz Marc, and Heinrich Campendonck were among the members of the school. See also BRÜCKE.

Blavatsky, Helena Petrovna (1831-1891). A famous spiritualist and theosophist, who toured Europe, the U.S., Egypt, and India, preaching her doctrines and engaging in wild adventures. She is generally referred to as Mme. Blavatsky.

Bleak House. A novel by Dickens (1852). The heroine is Esther SUMMERSON or rather Esther Hawdon, the illegitimate child of Lady Dedlock and Captain Hawdon. Esther, whom Lady Dedlock believes dead, is the ward of Mr. Jarndyce of the interminable case of Jarndyce and JARNDYCE in Chancery Court, and lives with him at Bleak House. Lord Dedlock's lawyer, Mr. Tulkinghorn, gets wind of Lady Dedlock's secret past; and when Tulkinghorn is murdered, Lady Dedlock is suspected, disappears and is later found dead.

Blefuscu. In Swift's Gulliver's Travels, an island inhabited by pigmies. It is situated northeast of Lilliput, from which it is separated by a channel 800 yards wide. It is supposed to represent France.

Blenheim, Battle of. See under BATTLES, FIFTEEN DECISIVE. Robert SOUTHEY wrote a ballad of this title and on this event in 1798.

Blenheim Steps. There was an anatomical school, over which Sir Astley Cooper presided at Blenheim Steps, Bond Street. Here "resurrectionists" were sure to find a ready mart for their gruesome wares, for which they received sums of money varying from £3 to £10, and sometimes more. Hence, going to Blenheim Steps, going to be dissected, or unearthed from one's grave.

Blennerhassett (1901). A novel by Charles Felton Pidgin (1844-1923) concerning the wealthy ostracized Englishman, Harman Blennerhassett (1765-1831), who gave financial aid to Aaron Burr's conspiracy. Many other works have been written about Blennerhassett and the Burr conspiracy. Cf., e.g., Rupert Sargent Holland's (1878-) Secret of Blennerhassett (1941) and William Henry Venable's (1836-1920) A Dream of Empire.

Blessed Damozel, The. A poem by Dante Gabriel Rossetti (1850) giving expression to the longing of the "blessed damozel" in heaven for her lover on earth.

The blessed damozel leaned out
From the gold bar of Heaven;
Her eyes were deeper than the depth
Of waters stilled at even;
She had three lilies in her hand,
And the stars in her hair were seven.

Blessington, Countess of, née Marguerite Power (1789-1849). Irish woman of letters. Literary salon. Author of personal reminiscences, including Conversations with Lord Byron (1834). Subject of Michael Sadleir's The Strange Life of Lady Blessington (1933).

Bliffl. A noted character in Fielding's TOM JONES. He pretends to be Tom Jones' friend, but is in reality a hypocritical villain of the deepest dye.

Bligh, Captain. Captain of H.M.S. BOUNTY during the voyage when the famous mutiny took place in 1789. He was seized by Fletcher CHRISTIAN and others and set adrift in an open boat with 18 of the loyal crew. See HALL, JAMES NORMAN and NORDHOFF, CHARLES.

blighter. Slightly contemptuous but good-natured British slang for a man, a fellow; generally with the implication that he is a bit of a scamp or, at the moment, somewhat obnoxious.

Blighy. Soldiers' slang for the homeland. It came into popular use during World War I, but was well known to soldiers who had served in India long before. It is the Urdu Vilayati or Bilati, an adjective meaning provincial, removed at some distance; hence adopted by the military for England.

Blimber, Dr. In Dickens' novel DOMBEY AND SON, head of a school for the sons of gentlemen, at Brighton.

Cornelia Blimber. Daughter of Dr. Blimber, a slim young lady, who keeps her hair short and wears spectacles. Miss Blimber has "no nonsense about her," but has grown "dry and sandy with working in the graves of dead languages." She marries Mr. Feeder, B.A., Dr. Blimber's usher.

Blimp, Colonel. Imaginary British officer, fussy and mossbound.

Blind, The (Les Aveugles). A symbolic play by Maurice MAETERLINCK, produced in 1890. In the figures of blind men and women, guided by a returned dead priest, is represented confused mankind, led by outworn doctrines.

blind alley. A cul de sac, an alley with no outlet; hence a state or condition affording no opportunity for progress. Similar metaphors are blind nettle, blind siding, blind stitch, etc.

blind bard or poet, the. Homer. The tradition of Homer's blindness may be related to the fact that the precious stones which Greek sculptors used in their statues as eyes have generally been removed. Byron in his Bride of Abydos calls Homer the Blind old Man of Scio's rocky Isle.

Blind Beggar of Bethnal Green. See under BESSEE.

Blind Bow-Boy. A novel (1923) by Carl VAN VECHTEN.

Blind Boy. Cupid. Love is blind or supposed to be.

blind department. In British Post Office parlance, that department where letters with insufficient, or illegible addresses are examined. The clerk so employed is called "the blind man."

Blind Fireworks. See MACNEICE, LOUIS.

blind harper, the. John Parry, who died in 1739.

Blind Harry. A Scotch minstrel of the 15th century. His epic of Sir William Wallace runs to 11,861 lines.

blind leaders of the blind. An allusion to pharisees (Matt. xv. 14). Cf. Brueghel the Younger's painting of Blind Leaders of the Blind.

blindman's buff. A very old and well-known children's game. "Buff" here is short for "buffet," and is an allusion to the three buffs or pats which the "blind man" gets when he has caught a player.

blindman's holiday. The hour of dusk, when it is too dark to work, and too soon to light candles.

Blind Raftery. See DONN-BYRNE.

Bliss. One of the best known and most characteristic of the short stories of Katherine MANSFIELD, published in 1920. It depicts the sudden disintegration of a woman's happiness on discovering that her husband is unfaithful.

Blithedale Romance, The. A novel by Nathaniel HAWTHORNE, published in 1852 and based on the community of BROOK FARM. It tells of the relations among the people Miles COVERDALE, a writer, encounters at Blithedale, an experimental community near Boston. See ZENOBI; PRISCILLA; HOLLINGSWORTH.

Blitzstein, Marc (1905-). American playwright and composer, of proletarian sympathies, best known for The Cradle Will Rock (1937), an experimental play with music on a capital-vs.-labor theme.

Bliven, Bruce (1889-). American journalist. Member of editorial board of The New Republic, 1923-1946; editorial director from 1946. Author of Men Who Make the Future (1942).

Blixen, Karen Dinesen, Baroness. Pseudonym Isak Dinesen. (1883-). Seven Gothic Tales (1934), Winter's Tales (1942).

Blizzard State. South Dakota.

Bloch, Ernest (1880-). Swiss-born composer, living in the U.S., known for the Hebraic flavor of his music and his frequent use of ancient Hebrew themes. He wrote chamber music, symphonic poems, music for voice and orchestra, and five symphonies, including Israel (1912-1915) and one entitled America (1927).

Bloch, Jean-Richard (1884-1947). French novelist, playwright, poet, critic, and social thinker.

block book. A book printed from engraved wood blocks, in a technique in sporadic use before the time of the invention of movable letters by Gutenberg.

Blok, Aleksandr Aleksandrovich (1880-1921). Russian poet. Author, in The Twelve, of a poem reflecting the initial phase of the bolshevik revolution "with quintessential succinctness." One of the great post-revolutionary Russian poets.

Blondel de Nesle. A troubadour who appears in Scott's TALISMAN.

Blondie. Herbine of a popular series of newspaper comics, radio sketches, and motion pictures (ca. 1940). She and her husband Dagwood are typical in their lives and problems of young American married couples of the "white collar" class. Played in the movies by Penny Singleton, with Arthur Lake as Dagwood.

Blondin, Charles (1824-1897). Pseudonym for Jean François Gravelet, French tight-rope walker famous in his time. Crossed Niagara Falls on tight-rope in 1855, 1859, 1860.

blood. (1) Family descent. (2) A buck, an aristocratic rowdy. A term taken from blood horses.

blood is thicker than water. Relationship has a claim which is generally acknowledged.

a Prince of the Blood. One of the Royal Family.

bad blood. Anger, ill-feeling and contention.

blue blood. See under BLUE.

young blood. Fresh members; as, "To bring young blood into the concern."

in cold blood. Deliberately; not in the excitement of passion or of battle.

it makes one's blood boil. It provokes indignation and anger.

it runs in the blood. It is inherited or exists in the family race.

one's own flesh and blood. One's own children, brothers, sisters or other near kindred.

field of blood. ACELDAMA. Cf. Acts i, 19.

the Man of Blood. Charles I; so called by the Puritans on account of his armed opposition to them.

blood-and-iron policy. A relentless policy of war. The phrase was popularized though not coined by the German statesman, Otto von BISMARCK, in a speech before the Budget Commission of the Prussian House of Delegates in 1862. Hence Bismarck is known as the man of blood and iron.

blood and thunder. Cheap sensationalism and violence, such as characterizes melodrama.

blood brother. One who is bound by a blood bond, either by birth or as the result of a ceremonial mingling of blood. It is not customary to speak of blood sisters.

blood money. Money paid to a person for giving such evidence as shall lead to the conviction of another; money paid to the next of kin to induce him to forgo his "right" of seeking blood for blood, or (formerly) as compensation for the murder of his relative; money paid to a person for betraying another, as Judas was paid blood money for his betrayal of the Savior.

blood of the Grogams. Taffety gentility; make-believe aristocratic blood. Grogam is a coarse silk taffety stiffened with gum (Fr., gros-grain).

See also the FIVE BLOODS OF IRELAND.

Blood, Captain. Chivalrous pirate, in romance of that name by Rafael Sabatini (1922).

Blood, Captain Thomas. A villainous historical character (1628-1680) who appears in Scott's Peveril of the Peak. He was "a robber from his cradle, a murderer since he could hold a knife."

Blood, Lydia. Heroine of W. D. Howells' LADY OF THE AROOSTOOK.

Blood Council or Council of Blood. Supreme tribunal established 1567 in Netherlands by the Duke of ALVA to punish the enemies of Spanish rule and the Roman church.

blood pudding. A kind of sausage made of blood and flour, almost black in color. Fry it in lard.

Bloody Angle. A section of the battlefield of Spotsylvania Court House, Virginia, where on May 11 and 12, 1864, the armies of Grant and Lee fought one of the bloodiest battles of the American Civil War.

Fallen down like stairs to spangle

Earth, upon the Bloody Angle.

Elmer Wylie, Miranda's Supper.

Bloody Assizes. Conducted in 1685 by Lord Chief Justice JEFFREYS of hated memory, after the collapse of Monmouth's Rebellion. An example of relentless cruelty.

Bloody Brook. A brook near South Deerfield, Mass., in Franklin County. So called because it was the scene of an Indian massacre in 1675.

bloody hand. A term in old Forest Law denoting a man whose hand was bloody, and was therefore presumed to be the person guilty of killing the deer shot or otherwise slain. In heraldry, the "bloody hand" is the badge of a baronet, and the armorial device of Ulster.

Bloody Mary. Queen Mary of England, daughter of Henry VIII and elder half-sister of Queen Elizabeth. So called on account of the sanguinary persecutions carried on against the Protestants in her short reign (1553-1558).

bloody shirt. The blood-stained shirt of a slain man used to incite to vengeance. Hence any symbol used to inflame retaliation. Used after the Civil War in the phrase, "to wave the bloody shirt."

Bloody Tenent, The. A famous tract pleading for religious toleration, written by Roger Williams and published in 1644, as part of a controversy with John COTTON. Its full title is The Bloody Tenent of Persecution for Cause of Conscience Discussed in a Conference between Truth and Peace, and it urges freedom of belief for Catholics, Jews, pagans, and non-believers as well as for Christians. Cotton wrote an answer to it entitled The Bloody Tenent Washed and Made White in the Blood of the Lamb (1647), and Williams in turn wrote another tract, reaffirming the ideas of his first work, which he called The Bloody Tenent Yet More Bloody by Mr. Cotton's Endeavour to Wash It White in the Blood of the Lamb; this was published in 1652. Both writings are considered among the most forceful and eloquent prose written in the American colonies in the 17th century.

Bloody Wedding. The massacre of St. Bartholomew in 1572 is so called because it took place during the marriage feast of Henri (afterwards Henri IV) and Marguerite (daughter of Catherine de Medici).

Bloody Week. The week ending on Sunday, May 28, 1871, when Paris was set on fire by the Communists.

Bloom, Leopold. Chief character in James Joyce's novel ULYSSES, an advertising solicitor of Jewish origin, living in Dublin, whose thoughts, feelings, and sense perceptions while he engages in a typical day's activities constitute the principal subject of the book. He is the average man raised to mythological level—coarse, sensual, half-educated, sentimental, but possessed of a questing intelligence and a persistent, yearning love for his lost son Rudy, dead in infancy, whom he believes for a while he has found in the person of Stephen Dedalus. Various throughout the novel he is also made to symbolize figures in history, mythology, and religion with whom the situations of the day make him comparable—Ulysses, the Wandering Jew, and even Christ. Leopold Bloom is considered one of the greatest character creations in literature.

Bloom, Milly. In James Joyce's ULYSSES, the young daughter of Leopold and Molly Bloom.

Bloom, Molly. A character in James Joyce's novel ULYSSES, wife of Leopold Bloom, to whom she is unfaithful. A sardonic counterpart of Penelope, she is a sensual woman, direct, elemental, and devoid of complexity in personality, mythologized by the author to an even greater degree than her husband, until she becomes more a symbol of a universal feminine principle than an individual woman. Although often referred to throughout the book, she herself does not appear until the last section, which is a stream-of-consciousness soliloquy presenting her thoughts as she goes to sleep, written in a single, uninterrupted sentence.

bloomer. A female costume consisting of a short skirt and loose trousers gathered closely round the ankles, so called from Mrs. Amelia Bloomer, of New York, who tried in 1849 to introduce the fashion. In the plural form "bloomers," the term came to be applied only to the trousers portion of the outfit.

Bloor, Ella Reeve, called Mother Bloor (1862–). American Communist leader and writer. Active in many strikes for betterment of labor conditions. After the Russian Revolution of 1917, she became identified with international socialist workers.

Blot on the 'Scutcheon, A. A poetic drama by Robert Browning (1843). The chief character is Thorold, earl of Tresham, head of a noble family whose boast is that no blot has ever stained their 'scutcheon. Henry, earl of Mertoun, Thorold's neighbor, whose lands adjoin, asks permission to marry Thorold's young sister Mildred, and Thorold, unaware of the fact that Mertoun had seduced Mildred, consents. When he learns the truth, he is beside himself with fury and shame. He kills Mertoun and poisons himself, and Mildred dies soon after.

Blougram, Bishop Sylvester. See BISHOP BLOUGRAM'S APOLOGY.

blow.

blow the gaff. In sailors' slang, to let out a secret.

"blow the man down." Refrain of an anchor shanty.

Blowzelinda. A country maiden in Gay's pastoral called The Shepherd's Week.

B. L. T. The initials of Bert Leston Taylor (Am. 1866–1921) with which he signed his popular humorous column in the Chicago Tribune.

blubber. Fat of whales and other sea mammals. It is eaten by Eskimos and other connoisseurs.

blucher. A shoe named after the Prussian general Blücher.

Bludsoe, Jim, see Jim Bludsoe.

Bludyer, Mr. In Thackeray's PENDENNIS, a cruel literary critic who "had a certain notoriety in his profession and reputation for savage humor."

blue is the symbol of divine eternity and human immortality. Consequently, it is a mortuary color used in covering the coffins of young persons. When used for the garment of an angel, it signifies faith and fidelity. As the dress of the Virgin, it indicates modesty. In blazonry, it signifies chastity, loyalty, fidelity, and a spotless reputation, and seems frequently to represent silver; thus we have the Blue Boar of Richard III, the Blue Lion of the Earl of Mortimer, the Blue Swan of Henry IV, the Blue Dragon, etc.

The Covenanters wore blue as their badge, in opposition to the scarlet of royalty. They based their choice on Numb. xv. 38, "Speak unto the children of Israel, and bid them that they make them fringes in the borders of their garments . . . and that they put upon the fringe . . . a ribband of blue."

See also under COLORS.

a blue or a staunch blue descriptive of political opinions, for the most part means a Tory, for in most counties the Conservative color is blue. A blue is also a BLUE STOCKING.

a dark blue. An Oxford man or Harrow boy.

a light blue. A Cambridge man or Eton boy.

an old blue. One who has taken part in any of the English University athletic contests.

true blue. This is a Spanish phrase. See BLUE BLOOD.

true as Coventry blue. The reference is to a blue cloth and blue thread made at Coventry, noted for its permanent dye.

Presbyterian true blue. The allusion is to the blue apron which some of the Presbyterian preachers used to throw over their preaching-tub before they began to address the people.

blue-apron statesman. A lay politician, a tradesman who interferes with the affairs of the nation. The reference is to the blue apron once worn by almost all tradesmen.

hoist the blue flag. To turn publican or fishmonger, in allusion to the blue apron still worn to some extent by English tradesmen.

once in a blue moon. Very rarely indeed.

shout blue murder. An expression indicative more of terror or alarm than of real danger.

blue beans. Bullets, because lead is blue.

Bluebeard (Barbe Bleue). A famous ogre, hero of one of the Contes of Charles Perrault (1697). The Chevalier Raoul is a merciless tyrant, with a blue beard. His young wife is entrusted with all the keys of the castle, with strict injunctions on pain of death not to open one special room. During the absence of her lord the "forbidden fruit" is too tempting to be resisted, the door is opened, and the young wife finds the floor covered with the dead bodies of her husband's former wives. She drops the key in her terror, and can by no means obliterate from it the stain of blood. Bluebeard, on his return, commands her to prepare for death, but Sister Anne watches from the tower and at last, by the timely arrival of her brothers, her life is saved and Bluebeard put to death.

The Bluebeard story has been widely adapted into English literature. Among the burlesques and plays on the subject are those by George Colman, Jr. (1798), J. R. Planché (1839), H. J. Byron (1860), F. C. Burnand (1883). Maeterlinck made it the subject of his Ariane et Barbe Bleue.

Bluebeard's key. When the blood stain of this key was rubbed out on one side, it appeared on the opposite side; so prodigality being overcome will appear in the form of meanness; and friends, over-fond, will often become enemies.

Blue Bird, The (L'Oiseau bleu). A drama by Maurice MAETERLINCK (1909), dealing with the search for the Blue Bird of Happiness undertaken at the behest of the old Fairy Berylune by the woodcutter's children, Tyltyl and Mytyl. With the aid of a green cap with a magic diamond that can be turned at will, Tyltyl and his little sister bring to life the personalities of the familiar things about them, such as Fire, Water, the Hours and the animals, Cat and Dog; visit the Land of Memory, the Palace of Night, the Garden of Happiness, and the Kingdom of the Future, but return without the Blue Bird. Next morning they discover that their pet dove, which they are sending to a little sick friend, is blue, but when the child brings the bird back, it makes its escape.

Blue Birds. The junior organization of the Camp Fire Girls, for girls from eight to ten years of age.

blue blood. High or noble birth or descent; it is a Spanish phrase, and refers to the fact that the veins shown in the skin of the pure-blooded Spanish aristocrat, whose race had suffered no Moorish or other admixture, were more blue than those of persons of mixed, and therefore inferior, ancestry.

Blue Blouse. One who belongs to one of the numerous amateur theatrical groups in Soviet Russia which are organized for communistic education.

bluebottle. A beadsman, a policeman; so called from the color of his dress.

bluebonnets. The Highlanders of Scotland, or the Scots generally. So called from the blue woolen cap at one time in very general use in Scotland, and still far from uncommon.

blue books. In England, parliamentary reports and official publications presented by the Crown to both Houses of Parliament. Each volume is in folio, and is covered with a blue wrapper.

In America a Blue Book is a list of persons or places of special prestige. The New York Blue Book is an exclusive social register, and the Automobile Blue Book a list of specially recommended hotels and restaurants for tourists.

Blue Boy, The. A famous painting by Thomas Gainsborough (1728-1788).

blue devils, or a fit of the blues. A fit of spleen, low spirits.

Blue Eagle. Insignia, printed in red, white, and blue, and featuring an American eagle, given to merchants, industrialists, and the like, to testify their compliance with the provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act, first important legislation of the NEW DEAL program in the U.S.

Blue Flag in the Bog, The. Title of a poem by Edna St. Vincent MILLAY.

blue gown. (1) a harlot, from the blue gown worn in the English House of Correction.

(2) A Scottish bedesman or beggar licensed by the King, so called from his blue cloak.

Bluegrass State. Kentucky. See under STATES.

Blue Grotto. A beautiful cavern on the north shore of Capri, Italy, noted for the dazzling blue light inside. It is entered from the sea. It was discovered accidentally by the German poet, August Kopisch (1799-1853).

Blue Hen's Chickens. The nickname for inhabitants of the State of Delaware. It is said that in the Revolutionary War a certain Captain Caldwell commanded, and brought to a high state of efficiency, a Delaware regiment. He used to say that no cock could be truly game whose mother was not a blue hen. Hence the Delaware regiment became known as "Blue Hen's Chickens," and the name was transferred to the inhabitants of the State generally. Also title of book of poems by Vincent McHUGH (1947).

Blue Juniata. See COWLEY, MALCOLM.

blue laws. Puritanical laws from the extremely rigid codes passed at various times and places in the 17th and 18th centuries in America, especially those passed in 1732, at New Haven, Connecticut. Their object was to stamp out "heresy," enforce a strict observance of the Sunday, and regulate even kissing between husbands and wives. Connecticut is sometimes called the Blue Law State.

Connecticut blue laws of about 1650 included the following: "Common fowlers, tobacco-takers, and other persons who could give no good account of how they spent their time" were to be put in jail. No one was allowed to give lodging to a Quaker. It was forbidden to bring musical instruments into the colony, except drums, trumpets, and jew's harps.

Blue Monday. The Monday before Lent, spent in dissipation; the dreary Monday spent at work after a weekend devoted to pleasure.

Bluenoses. The Nova Scotians, supposedly from the name of a variety of potato.

"'Pray, sir,' said one of my fellow-passengers, 'can you tell me the reason why the Nova Scotians are called "Blue-noses"?"

"'It is the name of a potato,' said I, 'which they produce in the greatest perfection, and boast to be the best in the world. The Americans have in consequence, given them the nickname of Blue Noses.'" Haliburton, Sam Slick.

blue peter. A flag with a blue ground and white square in the center, hoisted as a signal that the ship is about to sail. Peter is a corruption of the French partir (leave or notice of departure). Hence, to hoist the blue peter, to leave.

In whist, blue peter is a "call for trumps"; that is, laying on your partner's card a higher one than is required.

blue ribbon. The Garter, the badge of the highest and most coveted Order of Knighthood in the gift of the British Crown; hence the term is used to denote the highest honor attainable in any profession, walk of life, etc. The blue ribbon of the turf, the Derby.

blue ribbon army. A total abstinence society founded in the early eighties of the last century by Richard Booth in the United States. The members were distinguished by wearing a piece of narrow blue ribbon in the button-hole of the coat. From this symbol the phrase blue ribbon army came in time to be applied to the body of teetotalers generally, whether connected with the original society or not.

blues. Songs expressing sorrow, usually for a lost lover or sweetheart, in pronounced rhythm. They were of Negro origin and were at the height of their popularity during the 1920's. The first of the cycle, and considered to be the most authentic, was St. Louis Blues (1914), by W. C. Handy. Other famous "blues" were Beale Street Blues, Limehouse Blues, Memphis Blues, and St. James Infirmary Blues. This popular jazz form was raised to the level of symphonic music in Rhapsody in Blue (1927), by George GERSHWIN.

Blue Saltire. The flag of Scotland. A cross on it is formed of a bend dexter and a bend sinister crossing in the middle. It is St. Andrew's cross.

Blues and Grays. In the American Civil War, the Union and Confederate forces respectively, from the color of their uniforms.

bluestocking, or bas bleu. A female pedant, a woman of pretentious intellectual or literary interests. The term Blue Stocking originated about 1750 in allusion to the frequenters of the salon of Mrs. Elizabeth Montagu in London. The usual derivation goes back to 1400 when a society of ladies and gentlemen was formed at Venice, distinguished by the color of their stockings and called della calza. In 1590 a similar movement was the rage among the lady savantes of Paris. Another theory has it that the term Blue Stocking was in allusion to Mr. Benjamin Stillingfleet, a prominent member of Mrs. Montagu's clique who always wore blue worsted stockings instead of the customary black silk.

Blue-Tailed Fly, The. An old American song.

Blue Voyage. See AIKEN, CONRAD.

Bluff, Captain Noll. In Congreve's Old Bachelor (1693), a swaggering bully and boaster. He says, "I think that fighting for fighting's sake is sufficient cause for fighting. Fighting, to me, is religion and the laws."

Bluff King Hal. Henry VIII of England (1491-1547).

Blum, Léon (1872-). French political leader of Socialist party, then of Popular Front. Premier of France (June 4, 1936-June 21, 1937); carried through radical reforms affecting banking, labor, agriculture. Arrested after defeat of France (1940), and imprisoned. Released by Allies.

Blumine. The "Rose Goddess," heroine of Carlyle's Sartor Resartus beloved by Teufelsdröckh, whom she makes "immortal by a kiss." She marries another and more eligible suitor and leaves him to despair.

Blunden, Edmund Charles (1896-). English poet and critic. Received Military Cross in World War I. Received Arthur Benson Medal of Royal Society of Literature (of which he was made a fellow) in 1930. Essentially a nature writer. Has a long list of books in verse and prose to his credit.

Blunderbore. A nursery-tale giant, brother of Cormoran, who puts Jack the Giant Killer to bed, intending to kill him. Jack thrusts a billet of wood into the bed, and creeps under the bedstead. Blunderbore comes with his club and breaks the billet to pieces, but is much amazed at seeing Jack next morning at breakfast-time.

Blunt, Sir James. In Shakespeare's Richard III.

Blunt, Sir Walter. In Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Blunt, Wilfrid Scawen (1840-1922). English poet, author, diplomat, and explorer, opposed to the 19th-century British policies of imperialism. His writings include The Future of Islam (1882); Ideas about India (1885); Atrocities of Justice under British Rule in Egypt (1907); Secret History of the English Occupation of Egypt (1907); India under Ripon (1909); Gordon at Khartoum (1911); The Land War in Ireland (1912); My Diaries, 1888-1914 (1919-1920). Wind and the Whirlwind (1883) and Satan Absolved (1899) are political poems. Blunt's translations of Oriental poetry, especially Persian, did much to arouse English interest in Eastern literature.

blurb. Any highly inflated publicity, particularly that got out by publishers with reference to new books and printed on the book jacket and elsewhere. The term was invented by Gelett BURGESS in his Burgess Unabridged (1914) and has become common usage. The French call it "juice," the Germans "laundry slip."

Bly, Nelly. A character in Grundy and Solomon's operetta, The Vicar of Bray (1882). Also the assumed name of a New York woman journalist who attracted note in 1890 by touring the world to rival the feat accomplished by Phileas Fogg in Jules Verne's romance, AROUND THE WORLD IN EIGHTY DAYS.

B'nai B'rith. From Hebrew, "the sons of the covenant." A Jewish fraternity founded in New York City in 1843, and since extended over the U.S., various countries of Europe, Palestine and Egypt. No dogma or ceremony.

Boadicea. In legendary British history, a queen contemporary with Nero who rebelled against Roman rule. See also BONDUCA.

Boanerges. A name given to James and John, the sons of Zebedee, because they wanted to call down "fire from heaven," to consume the Samaritans for not "receiving" the Lord Jesus. It is said in the Bible to signify "sons of thunder," but "sons of tumult" would probably be nearer its meaning (Luke ix. 54; see Mark iii. 17).

boar.

the bristled Baptist boar. So Dryden denominates the Anabaptists in his Hind and Panther.

*The bristled Baptist boar, impure as he [the ape],
But whitened with the foam of sanctity,
With fat pollutions filled the sacred place,
And mountains levelled in his furious race.*

Pt. i. 43.

the Calydonian boar. In Greek legend, Aeneas, king of Calydon, in Aetolia, having neglected to sacrifice to Artemis, was punished by the goddess sending a ferocious boar to ravage his lands. A band of heroes collected to hunt the boar, who was eventually slain by Meleager after he had been first wounded by Atalanta.

the wild boar of the Ardennes. Guillaume, Comte de la Marck (1485), so called because he was fierce as the wild boar, which he delighted to hunt. He is introduced by Scott in QUENTIN DURWARD.

Boar's Head. The Old English custom of serving this as a Christmas dish is said to derive from Scandinavian mythology. Freyr, the god of peace and plenty, used to ride on the boar Gullinbursti; his festival was held at Yuletide (winter solstice), when a boar was sacrificed to his honor.

The head was carried into the banquet hall, decked with bays and rosemary on a gold or silver dish, to a flourish of trumpets and the songs of the minstrels. Many of these carols are still extant and the following is the first verse of that sung before Prince Henry at St. John's College, Oxford, at Christmas, 1607:

The Boar is dead,
So, here is his head;
What man could have done more
Than his head off to strike,
Meleager like
And bring it as I do before?

the Boar's Head Tavern. Made immortal by Shakespeare, this used to stand in Eastcheap, on the site of the present statue of William IV. The sign was the cognizance of the Gordon clan, the progenitor of which slew in the forest of Huntley a wild boar, the terror of all the Merse (1093).

Boar, the. Richard III.

The wretched, bloody, and usurping boar
That spoiled your summer fields and fruitful vines:
... This foul swine . . . lies now . . .
Near to the town of Leicester, as we learn.
Shakespeare, Richard III, v. 3.

Boardman, Mabel Thorn (1861-1946). National secretary of the American Red Cross (from 1919); all in all, a leader (without pay) of that organization for more than forty years. During World War I she had a former German ship put into commission for the Red Cross for relief trips to Europe.

Boas, Franz (1858-1942). American anthropologist and scholar, born in Germany, best known for his studies of the American Indian. His books for the general public include The Mind of Primitive Man (1911); Primitive Art (1927); Anthropology and Modern Life (1932).

Boat, The Open. A story by Stephen CRANE.

Boat of Longing, The. See RÖLVAAG, O. E.

Boatswain. The name of Byron's favorite dog, buried in Newstead Abbey garden. According to Byron's inscription on the monument over his grave he "had all the Virtues of Man without his Vices."

To mark a friend's remains, these stones arise;
I never knew but one,—and here he lies.

Bobadil, Captain. A military braggart of the first water. He is a character in Ben Jonson's Every Man in his Humor (1598), an ignorant, clever, shallow bully, thoroughly cowardly, but thought by his dupes to be an amazing hero. The name was probably suggested by Bobadilla, first governor of Cuba, who sent Columbus home in chains.

bobby. An English policeman. This slang word is either derived from Sir Robert Peel, or became popular through his having in 1828 remodeled the London Metropolitan Police Force.

Bobby Shaftoe. Character in an old song.

Bobby Shaftoe's gone to sea,
Silver buckles on his knee,
He'll come back and marry me,
Pretty Bobby Shaftoe.

Bob, Son of Battle. A novel by Alfred Ollivant (Eng. 1898), the first novel of any note to have a dog for its hero.

Boccaccio, Giovanni (1313?-1375). Italian poet and humanist, friend of DANTE and PETRARCH in Florence. He is most famous for his DECAMERON (1471), which he repudiated in his old age for its licentiousness. In his youth, he wrote a number of romances and long poems in Italian which reflect events in his life at the time (see MARIA D'AQUINO). These include Il Filocolo (1472) (see BLANCHEFLEUR); IL FILOSTRATO (1480?), which was used by Chaucer for his version of the TROILUS story; Il Teseide (1475), which became Chaucer's KNIGHT'S TALE; Ameto (1478); L'Amorosa Visione (1521); L'Amorosa Fiammetta (1472) (see FIAMMETTA); Ninfae Fiesolano (1471); and Il Corbaccio (1487), a satire. He also wrote a "life" of Dante (1477) and a number of Latin encyclopedic works in his later days as a scholar. Among these are: De Casibus Virorum Illustrium, De Claris Mulieribus; De Genealogis Deorum. Boccaccio acted as benefactor to one of the first Greek scholars to come to Italy in the Renaissance, and sponsored him until he had finished a translation of a Greek manuscript of Homer.

boche. An insulting name for a German which came into use during World War I. It may be derived from German bursch, a lad, or from burschen, to shoot (with a rifle). Another derivation given is from les alboches, a contemptuous nickname given by French printers to Germans in the same trade in the sixties of the last century, and itself derived from the colloquial boche coined in France about 1860 to designate a worthless person.

A somewhat more appealing etymology bases the frequent combination les sales boches, "the dirty boches," on les allemands, "the Germans," which some punster may well have corrupted into les sales mands.

Still another derivation is from the French caboché, "head," implying in the new word something of the meaning of blockhead.

bodacious. American slang. A PORTMANTEAU contraction of bold and audacious.

Bodanzky, Artur (1877-1939). Conducted the Wagner repertoire at Metropolitan Opera Co., New York City, 1915-1939.

bodega. Spanish. A wine-shop or cellar. The same word as French boutique. Both are related to "apothecary." Title of novel by Vicente BLASCO IBÁÑEZ.

Bodenheim, Maxwell (1892-). American poet and novelist, known for the sardonic and iconoclastic nature of his writings and one of the most typical of the Bohemians of GREENWICH VILLAGE during the 1920's. His poetic works include Minna and Myself (1918); Introducing Irony (1922); Against This Age (1923); Returning to Emotion (1927); The King of Spain and Other Poems (1928); Bringing Jazz (1930). Among his novels are: Crazy Man (1924), Replenishing Jessica (1925); Sixty Seconds (1929); Naked on Roller Skates (1931). Lights in the Valley (1942) expresses his later proletarian sympathies.

bodhisattva or bodhisat. In Buddhism, one who has entered on the path of Buddhahood and will, in a future incarnation, become a Buddha.

bodies seven. In alchemy, the metals corresponding to the seven planets.

Sol gold is, and Luna silver we threpe [assert to be] Mars yren [iron], Mercurie quicksilver we clepe [call]
Saturnus lead, and Jupiter is tin, and Venus coper.
Chaucer.

Bodleian library. The celebrated library projected by Sir Thomas Bodly in 1598 and opened at Oxford in 1602. Full of rare books and valuable manuscripts.

Bodoni. From the name of the Italian printer, Giambattista Bodoni (1740-1813). A style of type.

Body of Liberties. A code of laws for the government of the Massachusetts colony, the first to be established in New England, adopted in 1641. It was a forerunner of the BILL OF RIGHTS and was prepared by a committee in which Nathaniel WARD was the most active.

Body of This Death. See BOGAN, LOUISE.

body-snatcher. One who snatches or purloins bodies, newly buried, to sell them to surgeons for dissection. The first instance on record was in 1777, when the body of Mrs. Jane Sainsbury was "resurrected" from the burial ground near Gray's Inn Lane. The "RESURRECTION MEN" were imprisoned for six months.

By a play on the words, a bumbailiff was so called, because his duty was to snatch or capture the body of a delinquent.

Boehme, Jakob, see BÖHME.

Boeotian. A rude, unlettered person, a dull blockhead. The ancient Boeotians loved agricultural and pastoral pursuits, so the Athenians used to say they were dull and thick as their own atmosphere; yet Hesiod, Pindar, Corinna, Plutarch, Pelopidas, and Epaminondas, were all Boeotians.

Boeotian ears. Ears unable to appreciate music or rhetoric.

Boer. A South African of Dutch or Huguenot descent. The word is Dutch and means "farmer."

Boethius, Anicius Manlius Severinus (470?-525). Roman philosopher, for a time a consul under Theodoric, the Ostrogothic king. He translated into Latin the Categories and On Interpretation of Aristotle, and an introduction to the Categories which had been written by the neo-Platonist philosopher PORPHYRY (see also NEO-PLATONISM). His translations supplied the form in which the Aristotelian treatises were known to centuries of medieval scholars, and in his commentary on the selection from Porphyry he first formulated the problem of universals, which was to prove so vexing in the endless medieval dispute between NOMINALISM and REALISM. He is best known, however, for his De Consolatione Philosophiae or CONSOLATION OF PHILOSOPHY, which was later translated by King ALFRED, Chaucer, and Queen Elizabeth, among others.

Bœuf, Front de, see FRONT DE BŒUF.

Boffin, Nicodemus. In Dickens' novel OUR MUTUAL FRIEND, "the golden dustman," foreman of old John Harmon, dustman and miser. Being residuary legatee of John Harmon, dustman, he comes in for £100,000.

Mrs. Boffin. Wife of Nicodemus Boffin, and the daughter of a cat's-meat man. After Mr. Boffin comes into his fortune she becomes "a high flyer at fashion," wears black velvet and sable, but retains her kindness of heart and love for her husband.

Bogan, Louise (1897-). American poet. Published volumes of her work are Body of This Death (1923); Dark Summer (1929); The Sleeping Fury (1937); Poems and New Poems (1941). Poetry reviewer for the New Yorker.

Bogart, Humphrey (1899-). American moving picture actor, chiefly appearing in "tough" rôles. Married Lauren Bacall, moving picture actress (1945). First wife was Helen Menken, actress.

bogey. A goblin, a bugbear. Sometimes called boggart or bogey-man. A Scotch bogle is more of a specter. The word bogey appeared only in the early 19th century.

Bogey or Colonel Bogey. A name given in golf to an imaginary player whose score for each hole is settled by the committee of the particular club and is supposed to be the lowest that a good average player could do it in. Beating Bogey or the Colonel, is playing the hole in a fewer number of strokes.

Boh Da Thone. The Ballad of Boh Da Thone by Rudyard KIPPLING relates the rather bloody story of how—during the Burma War (1883-1885)—Captain O'Neil of the Black Tyrone was finally brought the head of his old enemy, "a Pretender to Theebaw's Throne" and a warrior of India who raided and ravaged, and of how the "Boh" (as the raider was known) was accidentally done to death by Babu Harendra (Gomashta), Head Clerk of the Government Bullock Train. Like much of Kipling's work, the scales are heavily weighted on the side of the English, but in its climactic passages the ballad has the extraordinary vivacity and immediacy of Kipling at his best.

Bohème, La. An opera by Puccini (1896) based upon Henri Murger's Vie de Bohème (1848). The story deals with the love affair of Rudolph, a poet, and Mimi, a Paris flower girl; also with Rudolph's penniless Bohemian friends and the ups and downs of artist life in the Latin Quarter. Mimi is ill and finally dies.

Bohemia. Any locality frequented by journalists, artists, actors, opera-singers and other similar characters. See next entry.

Bohemian. A term applied to literary men and artists of loose and unconventional habits, living by what they can pick up by their wits. Originally the name was applied to the gypsies, from the belief that before they appeared in western Europe they had been denizens of Bohemia, or because the first that arrived in France came by way of Bohemia (1427). When they presented themselves before the gates of Paris they were not allowed to enter the city, but were lodged at La Chapelle, St. Denis. The French nickname for gypsies is cagoux (unsociables).

Bohemian Girl, The. A light opera by M. W. Balfe (1843), libretto by Bunn. The plot centers about the kidnaping of Arline, the little daughter of the Governor of Presburg, by Devilshoof and his gypsy band. With the gypsies is Thaddeus, a Polish exile from justice, who falls in love with Arline. The Gypsy Queen is jealous and makes trouble, but after many difficulties Arline is restored to her father and marries Thaddeus, whose identity is finally revealed.

Böhme, Jakob. Also Behmen (1575-1624). German shoemaker and mystic, a believer in the creative value of the conflict of opposites, which he saw producing a new unity, and in the will of God as a basic universal force. He also regarded the universe as the manifestation of God, and evil as God's wrath. Denounced as heretical by the clergy of his time, he wrote numerous treatises expounding his beliefs, including Aurora, oder die Morgenrote im Aufgang (Aurora, or Morning Redness) (1612) and Der Weg zu Christo (The Way to Christ) (1624). One of his best-known single works is The Signature of Things (Signatura Rerum), concerning symbolism. In England in the 17th century he had a number of followers, called Behmenists, who later became Quakers.

Bohn, Henry George (1796-1884). English publisher and translator of German extraction, whose "library" of republications of standard works at cheap prices has become famous.

Bohort, Sir. A knight of Arthur's Round Table, brother of Sir Lionel, and nephew of Launcelot of the Lake, also called Sir Bors.

Boiardo or Bojardo, Matteo Maria (1434-1494). Italian poet, famous for his epic, ORLANDO INNAMORATO.

Boileau, Nicolas (Despréaux) (1636-1711). French poet and critic, one of the earliest and most characteristic of the neo-Classicists, who urged always prudence, moderation, common sense, and obedience to authority in the writing of literature. In his Satires he imitated Horace and Juvenal and attacked the social and literary foibles of his day, while his Le Lutrin is a mock-epic in the manner of Pope's THE RAPE OF THE LOCK. His chief work is his Art poétique (1674), in which he formulated in verse the literary principles of neo-Classicism which were dominant throughout the 18th century. Boileau was called the législateur du Parnasse ("legislator of Parnassus"), and he greatly influenced RACINE, MOLIÈRE, and LA FONTAINE, his friends and literary associates.

Boisbrûlé (Fr. "burnt wood"). A Canadian halfbreed, particularly French and Indian, so called because of his dark complexion.

Bois de Boulogne. A large park containing the famous race tracks of Longchamp and Auteuil, west of Paris, France. Parisians call it simply le Bois.

Bois-Guilbert, Sir Brian de. In Scott's IVANHOE, a preceptor of the Knights Templars. He offers insult to Rebecca, and she threatens to cast herself from the battlements if he touches her. When the castle is set on fire by the sibyl, Sir Brian carries off Rebecca from the flames. Later, the Grand-Master of the Knights Templars charges Rebecca with sorcery, and she demands a trial by combat. Sir Brian de Bois-Guilbert is appointed to sustain the charge against her, and Ivanhoe is her champion. Sir Brian is found dead in the lists, and Rebecca is declared innocent.

Boissevain, Mrs. Eugen Jan. Married name of Edna St. Vincent MILLAY.

Bojer, Johan, (1872-). Norwegian novelist. Many works available in English, including his most widely known novel, The Great Hunger (1919). His French biographer has said, "Bojer is of the family of great writer-philosophers."

Bok, Edward William (1863-1930). Widely known American editor of the Ladies' Home Journal.

Bokardo. Name of a poem and character in it by Edwin Arlington ROBINSON.

Boker, George Henry (1823-1890). American playwright and diplomat, author of several verse dramas including Calaynos (1849); Leonor de Guzmán (1853); and Francesca da Rimini (1855). The last-named is his best-known work and deals with the PAOLO AND FRANCESCA theme.

bola, also bolas. Spanish. A missile consisting of two or three balls of stone or iron attached to a cord. The GAUCHOS of South America hurl the bola to entangle game.

boldface. Any "face" or type of type that is "bold" in the sense of thick, heavy.

Boldrewood, Rolf. Pseudonym of Thomas Alexander Browne (1826-1915). Australian novelist. His Robbery Under Arms is a tale of the bushranger.

Boldwood, William. A character in Hardy's FAR FROM THE MADDING CROWD.

Bolerium. In ancient geography, LAND'S END.

bolero. A Spanish dance, performed in triple time to the accompaniment of castanets. The best-known concert version is by RAVEL.

Boleyn, Anne (1507-1536). HENRY VIII's second queen. Secretly married 1533. Mother of Queen ELIZABETH. Beheaded for unfaithfulness.

Bolingbroke, Henry, Duke of Hertford, later Henry IV. Character in Shakespeare's Richard II, 1 Henry IV, 2 Henry IV. The name comes from the castle in which he was born.

Bolitho, William (1891-1930). Pen name of William Bolitho Ryall. British journalist and author. London correspondent for Manchester Guardian and New York World. Wrote, among other books, Twelve Against the Gods.

Bolívar, Simón (1783-1830). South American soldier, statesman, and revolutionary leader. Won victory for Venezuela, freed Peru from Spain, organized a new republic named after him, Bolivia. He is known as El Libertador, "The Liberator."

Bollweevil Song, the. An American folksong popularized by Carl Sandburg.

Bolshevik or Bolshevik. Properly, a member of the Russian revolutionary party that seized power under LENIN in 1917, declared war on capitalism and the bourgeoisie in all lands, and aimed at the establishment of supreme rule by the proletariat. The history of the term goes back to the congress of the Russian Social Democratic Labor Party in London (1903) where it was adopted by the faction, headed by Lenin, which professed to act in the name of the majority (bolshe is the comparative of the adjective bolshoi, big, large). In 1918, when the Menshevik group, representing the 1903 minority, was finally liquidated, the party of the Bolsheviks assumed the name of the Communist party. In England, America, and elsewhere the name Bolshevik came to be applied to those suspected of wishing to overthrow the status quo. The form "Bolsheviki" is the Russian plural.

Bolton, Fanny. In Thackeray's PENDENNIS, the pretty sentimental daughter of a London porter, with whom Pen is madly in love for a short time.

Bolton, Guy (1884-). Playwright, especially musical comedy, Sally, Lady Be Good, etc., and moving picture scenarios. Collaborated on Polly with a Past, Rio Rita, etc.

Boltrope. A seaman in Cooper's PILOT.

Bombastes Furioso. One who talks big or in an ultra-bombastic way. From the hero of a burlesque opera so called by William Barnes Rhodes, produced in 1810 in parody of ORLANDO FURIOSO. Bombastes Furioso is the general of Artaxaminous, king of Utopia. He is plighted to Distaffina, but Artaxaminous promises her "half-a-crown" if she will forsake the general for the King. When Bombastes sees himself flouted, he goes mad, and hangs his boots on a tree, with this label duly displayed:

Who dares this pair of boots displace,
Must meet Bombastes face to face.

The King, coming up, cuts down the boots, and Bombastes "kills him." Fusbos, seeing the King fallen, "kills" the general; but at the close of the farce the dead men rise one by one, and join the dance, promising, if the audience likes, "to die again to-morrow."

In ORLANDO FURIOSO, the hero, Orlando, goes mad, and hangs up his armor on a tree, with this distich attached thereto:

Orlando's arms let none displace,
But such who'll meet him face to face.

Bonacieux, Constance. In DUMAS' The Three Musketeers, the young wife of the aged landlord, whose protector d'Artagnan became.

Bona Dea. An ancient Roman goddess of fertility, fruitfulness and chastity of women. Sister of Faunus; also called Fauna.

bona fide (Lat.). In good faith; hence without subterfuge or deception; really and truly. To produce one's bona fides is to produce one's credentials, to give proof that one is what he appears to be or can perform that which he says he can.

bonanza. A stroke of luck, from the Bonanza silver-mine in Nevada which was at first considered a failure and produced suddenly immense wealth. The Spanish word bonanza, which explains the name of the Bonanza mine, means 'calm, fair weather, prosperity.'

Bonanza State. Montana. See under STATES.

Bonaparte. See NAPOLEON; BONEY.

Bonaventura, St. See under SAINT.

bonaventure. The sail hoisted on the fourth mast of a vessel in the Middle Ages. The word means 'good luck.'

Bond, Carrie Jacobs (1862-1946). Popular American song writer (A Perfect Day, etc.). Also wrote books for children and an autobiography.

Bonduca. One of the many forms of the name of the British Queen, which in Latin was frequently (and in English is now usually) written BOADICEA, but which should properly be Bonduca. Fletcher wrote a fine tragedy with this name (1616), the principal characters being Caractacus and Bonduca.

bone.

have a bone to pick with one. To have an unpleasant matter to discuss and settle. Two dogs and one bone invariably forms an excellent basis for a fight. Hence a bone of contention.

make no bones about it. To do it, say it, etc., without hesitation; to offer no opposition, present no difficulty or scruple. Dice are called "bones," and the Fr. flatter le dé (to mince the matter) is the opposite of our expression. To make no bones of a thing is not to flatter, or "make much of," or humor the dice in order to show favor. Hence, without more bones. Without further scruple or objection.

Bone, Sir Muirhead (1876-). Scottish etcher and painter. His brother, David William Bone (1874-), is a master mariner and novelist. A third brother is an editor of the Manchester Guardian.

Boney. A familiar contradiction of BONAPARTE used by the English in the early part of the 19th century by way of depreciation. Thus Thomas Moore speaks of "the infidel Boney."

Bon Gaultier Ballads. Parodies of contemporary poetry by W. E. Aytoun and Sir Theodore Martin. They first appeared in Tait's, Fraser's, and Blackwood's Magazines in the 'forties, and were published in volume form in 1855.

Bonheur, Rosa (1822-1899). French painter, known for her popular studies of horses.

Bonhomme. A French peasant. See JACQUES BONHOMME.

Bonhomme Richard. The French form of Benjamin Franklin's pseudonym, Richard Saunders. Also the name of Paul Jones's famous man-of-war in naval battles off England (1779).

Boniface, Father. In Scott's novel THE MONASTERY, the successor of the Abbot Ingelram, as Superior of St. Mary's Convent. In its sequel THE ABBOT he has retired, still in search of the peace and quiet which, due to the pressure of contemporary events, he has failed to find in the cloister. In this second novel he first appears under the name of Blinkhoodie in the character of gardener at Kinross, and afterwards as the old gardener at Dundrennan.

Boniface, St. See under SAINTS.

Boniface, Will. A famous character in Farquhar's comedy The Beaux' Stratagem (1707), landlord of the inn at Lichfield, in league with the highwaymen. This sleek, jolly publican is fond of the cant phrase, "as the saying is." Thus, "I'm old Will Boniface; pretty well known upon this road, as the saying is." He has lived at Lichfield "man and boy above eight and fifty years, and not consumed eight and fifty ounces of meat," for, says he, "I have fed purely upon ale. I have eat my ale, drank my ale, and I always sleep upon my ale." Hence Boniface has become a common term for a publican or tavern keeper.

Bon Marché. A noted department store in Paris. The phrase bon marché means "good bargain." Cf. à bon marché "inexpensive(ly)."

bon mot (Fr.). A good or witty saying; a pun; a clever repartee.

Bonnard, Abel (1883-). French poet and novelist. His two volumes of travel sketches En Chine (1923) won him the Grand Prix de Littérature from the French Academy (1924).

Bonnard, Sylvestre. Hero of THE CRIME OF SYLVESTRE BONNARD by Anatole FRANCE.

Bonnet, Kate. Novel about a female pirate by Frank R. STOCKTON.

bonnet rouge. The red cap of liberty worn by the leaders of the French revolution. It is the emblem of Red Republicanism.

Bonneville, Adventures of Captain, by Washington Irving, concerned with the actual Benjamin L. E. Bonneville, who explored the northwest (1832-1835).

Bonnycastle, Arthur. Hero of J. G. HOLLAND's Arthur Bonnicastle.

Bonnie Dundee. John Graham of Claverhouse, Viscount Dundee. Born about 1649, he became a noted soldier in the Stuart cause, and was killed at the Battle of Killiecrankie in 1689.

Bonnie Lesley. A lyric by Robert Burns: The heroine of this song, in real life, was Miss Leslie Baillie.

O saw ye bonnie Lesley
As she gaed o'er the border?
She's gane like Alexander,
To spread her conquests farther.

Bonnivard, François de. A historical character (1495-1570) who appears in idealized form as the hero of Byron's Prisoner of Chillon. See CHILLON.

Bonsels, Waldemar (1881-). German author of somewhat precious novels and nature stories. Best known for The Adventures of Maya the Bee.

Bontemps, Roger. A fat, cheery, optimistic companion, the personification of "Never say die." The character is from a famous popular song by Pierre Jean de BÉRANGER (1814).

bonus. A grant of money in excess of stipulated pay, particularly prominent during the 1920's and early 1930's in connection with the demands of the American veterans of World War I for additional compensation for their services abroad. A World War Adjusted Compensation Act was passed in 1925, with payment promised in 1945. It was made in 1936 as a result of pressure by veterans' groups, including the AMERICAN LEGION, which had acted as a powerful lobby in obtaining passage of the bill. See also BONUS ARMY.

Bonus Army or Bonus Expeditionary Force. Journalistic term used to describe an "army" of American veterans of World War I who came to Washington, in the spring of 1932, to try to persuade Congress to vote them immediate payment of the promised "BONUS." These men, many with wives and children, camped in shacks near the Capitol, picketed the Congressional buildings, and were finally dispersed with tear-gas bombs.

bon vivant (Fr.). A free liver; one who indulges in the "good things of the table." Bon viveur means much the same, but is rather stronger, suggesting one who makes a pursuit of other pleasures besides those of the table.

bonze. The name given by Europeans to the Buddhist clergy of the Far East, particularly of Japan. In China the name is given to the priests of the Fohists.

Booby, Lady. In Fielding's novel, JOSEPH ANDREWS, a vulgar upstart who tries to seduce her footman, Joseph Andrews. Parson ADAMS reproves her for laughing in church. Lady Booby is a caricature of Richardson's Pamela.

Boojum. In Lewis Carroll's Hunting of the Snark, a kind of snark whose hunters "softly and silently vanish away."

book.

the Book of Books. The Bible; also called simply "the Book," or "the good Book."

the book of life, or of fate. In Bible language, a register of the names of those who are to inherit eternal life (Phil. iv. 3; Rev. xx. 12).

For black, blue, red and yellow book, see under respective colors.

Battle of the Books. See under BATTLE.

bell, book and candle. See under BELL.

Book of Americans, A. See BENÉT, STEPHEN VINCENT.

Book of Kells. A famous Irish illuminated manuscript of the four Gospels, considered to have been written in the 8th century and to be one of the best examples of the art of manuscript illumination. It was named for a monastery famed for its scholarship.

Book of Marriage, The. A symposium on the subject of marriage with Count Hermann Alexander KEYSERLING as editor and chief contributor (1926). George Bernard Shaw declined to participate because he felt that no man can tell the truth about marriage while his wife is alive.

Book of Martyrs, The, see ACTS AND MONUMENTS.

Book of Mormon. The sacred scriptures of the Mormon church, first published in 1830.

Book of Nonsense. A well-known volume of humorous verse by Edward LEAR (1846). See LIMERICK.

Book of Snobs, The. A series of papers by Thackeray (1846-1847) portraying a variety of typical English snobs.

Book of the Dead. A collection of magic incantations, used in the religion of ancient Egypt as a guide for liberated souls on their journey to the land of the dead.

Book of the Duchess, The. An allegorical poem by CHAUCER (1369), mourning the death of Blanche, first wife of John of GAUNT, who was the author's patron. It is in the form of a dream-vision.

Book of Thel, The. The first of William Blake's mystical writings known as his Prophetic Books, published in 1787. Its theme is death, redemption, and eternity.

Book-of-the-Month Club. See SUBSCRIPTION BOOK.

bookworm. One always poring over books; so called in allusion to the maggot that eats holes in books, and lives both in and on its leaves. Modern book cloth protects books against the latter kind of worm.

Boone, Daniel (1734-1820). American frontiersman, known for his exploration and settlement of Kentucky and celebrated by a number of American and English writers, including AUDUBON, and Byron in DON JUAN, as well as in American folklore.

Boötes. Greek for "the ploughman"; the name of the constellation which contains the bright star, Arcturus. See also ICARIUS. According to ancient mythology, Boötes invented the plough, to which he yoked two oxen, and at death, being taken to heaven with his plough and oxen, was made a constellation. Homer calls it "the wagoner," i.e. the wagoner of "Charles' Wain," the Great Bear.

Booth, Amelia. Heroine of Fielding's novel AMELIA.

Booth, Captain. In Fielding's novel AMELIA, the husband of Amelia, said to be a drawing of the author's own character and experiences. He has all the vices of Tom Jones, with an additional share of meanness.

Booth, Edwin Thomas (1833-1893). American actor, son of Junius Brutus BOOTH and one of the most noted of Shakespearean performers.

Booth, John Wilkes (1838-1865). American actor, son of Junius Brutus BOOTH and brother of Edwin BOOTH, who assassinated Abraham Lincoln, April 14, 1865, in Ford's Theatre, Washington, D.C.

Booth, Junius Brutus (1796-1852). English actor, most famous for his performances in the U.S.

Booth, William (1829-1912). English Methodist preacher, founder of the SALVATION ARMY in 1865. He is the subject of a well-known poem by Vachel LINDSAY, GENERAL WILLIAM BOOTH ENTERS INTO HEAVEN.

Boothe, Clare (1903-). American playwright and journalist, wife of Henry LUCE and the author of popular plays of malicious wit as well as magazine articles on travel and World War II. Her plays are The Women (1937); Kiss the Boys Goodbye (1938); and Margin for Error (1939). The first two are merciless satires on the foibles and deceptions of women. She also wrote Stuffed Shirts (1933) and Europe in the Spring (1940), the latter an account of the invasion of France, Holland, and Belgium by Germany in World War II. Member of Congress, 1943-1947.

bootleggers. In American slang, traders in legally prohibited liquor, especially during the Prohibition era in the U.S. during the 1920's. See PROHIBITION. GANGSTERS and racketeers organized bootlegging as a great industry at this time, became wealthy and powerful, and often terrorized the communities where they operated. Traders in other prohibited goods, such as products under rationing restrictions during wartime, are also called bootleggers. The word bootleg meant originally to carry something concealed in the leg of one's boots.

Boots at the Holly-tree Inn. A story by Charles Dickens (1855). The "boots" in his own picturesque language glibly tells the story of a boy, eight years old, eloping to Gretna Green with a girl of seven.

Bopeep. The heroine of a nursery rhyme:

Little Bopeep has lost her sheep
And can't tell where to find them
Leave them alone and they'll come home,
Bringing their tails behind them.

Bor. See BORR.

Bor, General. Assumed name of Lieutenant General Tadeusz Komorowski, who led Polish patriots and held Warsaw for 63 days in World War II.

Borachio. In Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing, a follower of Don John of Aragon. He is a great villain, engaged to Margaret, the waiting-woman of Hero.

Borah, William Edgar (1865-1940). U.S. Senator from Idaho who strongly opposed World Court and entrance of United States into League of Nations; advocated disarmament conference (1920-1921).

Borak or Al Borak (the lightning). The animal brought by Gabriel to carry Mahomet to the seventh heaven, and itself received into Paradise. It had the face of a man, but the cheeks of a horse; its eyes were like jacinths, but brilliant as the stars; it had the wings of an eagle, spoke with the voice of a man, and glittered all over with radiant light.

Bordeaux, Henry (1870-). French novelist and member of the French Academy since 1919. He has published 100 volumes in all, including travel books, biographies, and dramatic criticism.

Borden, Lizzie (Andrew). Principal in a celebrated murder case in the U.S. in 1892, in which she was accused of having killed her father and stepmother with an axe. She became the heroine of many popular ballads of the time, and attracted the interest of a number of literary men in the 1920's and 1930's, notably Edmund PEARSON and Alexander WOOLLCOTT.

Borden, Mary (1886-). Anglo-American novelist, born in Chicago but for long an English subject. Her novels reveal a quiet but devastating wit.

Border, the. The frontier of England and Scotland, which, from the 11th to the 15th century, was the field of constant forays, and a most fertile source of ill blood between North and South Britain.

Border minstrel. Sir Walter Scott (1771-1832) because he sang of the Border.

Border-thief school. A term applied by Thomas CARLYLE, in his Sartor Resartus, to Walter Scott and others, who celebrated the achievements of free-booters, etc., like Rob Roy.

Border Eagle State. Mississippi. See STATES.

Border State. See under STATE.

Borderers, The. A drama by William WORDSWORTH, written in 1795-1796. It is set in the time of Henry III.

border ruffian. A pro-slavery Missourian who would cross the border into Kansas and Nebraska to vote illegally or intimidate anti-slavery settlers.

Boreas. In Greek mythology, the god of the north wind, and the north wind itself. He was the son of Astraeus, a Titan, and Eos, the morning, and lived in a cave of Mount Haemus, in Thrace. He loved the nymph Orithyia and tried to be gentle with her. Since he could not speak soothingly or sigh softly, he carried her off true to his real character. He was by her the father of Zetes and Calais who both took part in the Argonauts' expedition.

Borgese, Giuseppe Antonio (1882-). Italo-American novelist, scholar, and critic. The March of Fascism (1937).

Borgia, Cesare (1476-1507). Notorious Italian military leader, son of Pope Alexander VI (see BORGIA, RODRIGO) and known for his ruthlessness and his crimes. He sought to unify Italy into a single, sovereign state and is considered to be the model of the ideal leader depicted in MACHIAVELLI's Il Principe (The Prince).

Borgia, Lucrezia. A famous or rather infamous historical personage (1480-1519), daughter of Pope Alexander VI, and sister of Cesare BORGIA. She was thrice married, her last husband being Alfonso, duke of Ferrara. Another, Alfonso of Aragon, was murdered by her brother. She had a natural son named Gennaro, who was brought up by a Neapolitan fisherman. When grown to manhood, Gennaro had a commission given him in the army, and in the battle of Rimini he saved the life of Orsini. In Venice he declaimed freely against the vices of Lucrezia di Borgia, and on one occasion he mutilated the escutcheon of the Duke by knocking off the B, thus converting Borgia into Orgia. Lucrezia insisted that the perpetrator of this insult should suffer death by poison, but when she discovered that the offender was her own son, she gave him an antidote, and released him from jail. Scarcely, however, was he liberated, than he was poisoned at a banquet given by the Princess Negroni. Lucrezia now told Gennaro that he was her own son, and died as he breathed his last. Victor Hugo's drama Lucrèce Borgia, which embodies this story, is the basis of Donizetti's opera, Lucrezia Borgia (1834).

Borgia, Rodrigo (1431-1503). Father of Cesare and Lucrezia BORGIA who, as the Spanish-born Pope Alexander VI, devoted most of his efforts to extending the power of his family. The crimes of the Borgias have become legendary.

Borglum, John Gutzon de la Mothe (1871-1941). American sculptor, whose work is represented in a number of public buildings and monuments in the U.S. His most famous undertaking was the carving of the faces of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt in gigantic scale on Mount Rushmore, South Dakota.

Bori, Lucrezia (1888-). Spanish lyric soprano; with Metropolitan Opera Co., N.Y. 1913-1936.

Boris Godounoff. An opera by MUSORGSKI (1874) based on Pushkin's historical drama of the same title. The action is laid in Russia and deals with the last years of Boris Godounoff (c. 1551-1605), czar of Russia. He was suspected of having murdered the Czarevitch Dimitri, son of Ivan the Terrible, in order to secure the throne. A pretender, a monk named Gregory who claimed to be Dimitri, headed an uprising against him and was acclaimed by the people. Boris, half insane, died in the midst of the excitement.

Borkman, John Gabriel. See John Gabriel Borkman.

Borodin, Alexander Porphyrievich (1833-1887). Russian composer, with a reputation also as a chemist, one of "The Five." He made use of Russian folk-themes in much of his music and is considered to have influenced Debussy, Ravel, Stravinsky, and Sibelius. He wrote operas, symphonies, chamber music, and numerous songs. His best-known works are: In the Steppes of Central Asia (1880), a tone poem, and the Polovtsian Dances from Prince Igor, an unfinished opera later completed by RIMSKI-KORSAKOV and Alexander Glazunov.

Borr. In Scandinavian mythology, the son of Buri (see AUDHUMLA) and father of Odin, Ville, Ve, and Hertha or Earth. The priests claimed descent from him.

Borrioboola-Gha. In Bleak House by Dickens, an imaginary place in Africa, the subject of Mrs. Jellyby's missionary zeal.

Borrow, George (1803-1881). English author of books on travel and adventure, based on his own experiences while touring Europe as a Bible agent and a newspaper correspondent. His best-known works, part autobiography and part fiction, are THE BIBLE IN SPAIN (1843); LAVENGRO (1851); and THE ROMANY RYE (1857).

Bors. In Arthurian legend, a King of Gaul and uncle of Lancelot.

Boru, Brian, see BRIAN.

Bosch, Jerome or Bos, Hieronymus (1450?-1516). Dutch painter born in Hertogenbosch. Hence his traditional name. His real name is Hieronymus van Aeken or Aken. He is best known for his scenes of fantastic and nightmarish tortures in hell at the hands of weird monsters. He also did religious pictures, allegories, and satirical genre pieces.

Bosinney, Philip. An architect in Galsworthy's FORSYTE SAGA.

boss (Dut. baas, head of the household). Hence the great man, chief, overseer. The word has been widely applied in business and in the political field. In the latter case it generally has a derogatory meaning, implying the use of dubious methods of control. Hence boss-rule and the verb to boss. See next entry.

Boss, The. A drama of politics and business by Edward Sheldon (Am. 1886-1945).

Bossuet, Jacques-Bénigne (1627-1704). French churchman, attached to the court of King Louis XIV as tutor to the Dauphin. He was famous for his sermon oratory and his controversies with Protestants and heretics of his day. The most important of his writings is Discours sur l'histoire universelle (1679), a treatise on history from the standpoint of religion.

Boston. A novel by Upton SINCLAIR (1928), dealing with the SACCO-VANZETTI case.

Boston Evening Transcript. An American newspaper, founded in 1830 and suspended in 1941, representing conservative aristocratic opinion in New England. T. S. ELIOT wrote a poem named for the newspaper and satirizing what he regarded as the withered, empty lives of its readers.

Bostonians, The. A novel by Henry JAMES (1886), a study of the New England temperament and feminism as combined in the strong-minded but none too lovable heroine, Olive Chancellor.

Boston News-Letter. The first newspaper published in the American colonies to have a permanent life. The first issue appeared on April 20, 1704. See also BOSTON PUBLIC OCCURRENCES.

Boston Public Occurrences. The first newspaper to be published in the American colonies, appearing in 1690. It lasted only one day. See also BOSTON NEWS-LETTER.

Boston Tea Party, the. The destruction in Boston Harbor (Dec. 16th, 1773) of a number of chests of tea by disguised citizens as a protest against the British proposal to tax the American colonists.

Boswell, James (1740-1795). The biographer of Dr. Samuel JOHNSON. His work, Life of Samuel Johnson (1791), is considered one of the greatest of all biographies. Boswell's tirelessness in gathering intimate first-hand material during Dr. Johnson's lifetime and his unbounded admiration for Johnson are proverbial; hence, Boswellian.

Bosworth, Battle of. The concluding battle of the Wars of the Roses, 1485, in which RICHARD III was killed by the Earl of Richmond, later Henry VII.

Botany Bay. Harbor on east coast of Australia; proposed site of English convict settlement. So called from the number of new plants found there in 1770 by Captain Cook.

Bothwell, Francis Stewart, Earl of. A historic character, known as the Bastard Earl (d. 1624). He appears in Scott's FORTUNES OF NIGEL.

Bothwell, James Hepburn, Earl of (ca. 1536-1578). The husband of MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS. He is the hero of Swinburne's tragedy Bothwell (1874), one of a trilogy on the unhappy Queen.

Bothwell, Sergeant, alias Francis Stewart. An officer in the royal army in Scott's Old Mortality.

Both Your Houses. See ANDERSON. MAXWELL.

bo tree. The pipal tree, or Ficus religiosa, of India, allied to the banyan, and so called from Pali Bodhi, perfect knowledge, because it is under one of these trees that Gautama attained enlightenment and so became the Buddha.

Botticelli, Sandro (Alessandro di Mariano Filipepi) (1444-1510). Famous Italian painter, pupil of FRA LIPPO LIPPI. He is known for the freshness, charm, and sentiment of his studies of classical and religious subjects. His most celebrated works are Spring (ca. 1477) and The Birth of Venus (ca. 1485). He painted for the famous MEDICI family, and was a follower of the religious reformer SAVONAROLA.

Bottle, Oracle of the Holy. See under ORACLE.

Bottle Imp, The. A story by Robert Louis STEVENSON.

bottle-washer. Chief agent; the principal man employed by another; a factotum. The full phrase—which usually is applied more or less sarcastically—is “chief cook and bottle-washer.”

Bottom, the Weaver. A character in Shakespeare's MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, a man who fancies he can do everything, and do it better than anyone else. Shakespeare has drawn him as profoundly ignorant, brawny, mock heroic, and with an overflow of self-conceit. When the play of Pyramus and Thisbe is cast, Bottom covets every part; the lion, Thisbe, Pyramus, all have charms for him. He is in one part of the drama represented with an ass' head, and Titania, queen of the fairies, under a spell, caresses him as an Adonis.

Bottome, Phyllis (1884-). English novelist. Her The Mortal Storm deals with the workings of the Nazi régime.

bottomless pit, The. Hell is so called in the book of Revelation. The expression had previously been used by Coverdale in his translation of Job xxxvi. 16.

William Pitt was humorously called the bottomless Pitt, in allusion to his remarkable thinness.

Bottomley, Gordon (1874-). English poet and poetic dramatist. He revived English verse drama.

Bottomley, Horatio William (1860-1933). Established the rabidly patriotic weekly, John Bull. Imprisoned for five years for misappropriation of funds.

Boucher, François (1703-1770). French painter, best known for his decorative panels and tapestries on classical subjects, which he designed for the royal buildings at Versailles and elsewhere.

Boucicault, Dion Lardner (1822-1890). Irish author of plays, especially melodrama. He is best known for THE OCTOON, OR LIFE IN LOUISIANA (1859), The Colleen Bawn (1859), Airah-na-Pogue (1864), and The Shaughraun (1875).

Bouguereau, Adolphe William (1825-1905). Popular French decorative and religious painter.

bouillabaisse. A French fish chowder. Thackeray extols it in The Ballad of Bouillabaisse which is quoted from in Du Maurier's Trilby.

Boulangism. The principles of a French political movement (1886-1890). Identified with General Georges Ernest Jean Marie Boulanger (1837-1891) who advocated militarism and revenge on Germany. He was called "Man on Horseback" because he often appeared mounted before Paris crowds. He is the subject of a biography called Brave General (1942) by Herbert S. GORMAN.

Boule de Suif (Fr. "Suet Ball"). The heroine of De MAUPASSANT's first novelette, with that title, 1880. A prostitute who patriotically plies her trade in the Franco-Prussian War of 1870.

Boule or Boule, Charles André (in English Buhle) (1642-1732). Established in Louvre palace as cabinet-maker to Louis XIV. Is famous for furniture inlaid with metals, tortoiseshell, and mother-of-pearl, on ebony, a style called buhlwork.

Bound East for Cardiff. A one-act play by Eugene O'NEILL, produced in 1916 and concerned with tragedy among seamen on a tramp steamer.

bounds, beating the. An old custom, still kept up in many English parishes, of going round the parish boundaries on Holy Thursday, or Ascension Day. The schoolchildren, accompanied by the clergymen and parish officers, walked through their parish from end to end; the boys were switched with willow wands all along the lines of boundary, the idea being to teach them to know the bounds of their parish.

Many practical jokes were played even during the first quarter of the nineteenth century, to make the boys remember the delimitations such as "pumping them," pouring water clandestinely on them from house windows, beating them with thin rods, etc.

Beating the bounds was called in Scotland riding the marches (bounds), and in England the day is sometimes called gang-day.

Bountiful, Lady. A famous character in Farquhar's comedy The Beaux' Stratagem (1705), the widow of Sir Charles Bountiful. Her delight is curing the parish sick and relieving the indigent. Hence a Lady Bountiful is a gracious dispenser of charity.

Bounty, H.M.S. The ship in a famous English case of mutiny during a voyage from Tahiti to the West Indies in 1789. It was first celebrated by Sir J. Barrow in his The Mutiny and Pinnatical Seizure of H.M.S. Bounty, published in 1831. Byron's poem The Island was based on events following the mutiny, and a best-selling trilogy of novels (see MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY) was written on the case by the American authors Charles Nordhoff and James Norman Hall in the 1930's. See also BLIGH, CAPTAIN; CHRISTIAN, FLETCHER; PITCAIRN ISLAND.

bounty jumper. In the latter part of the American Civil War, one who enlisted to get a money gift from the government and then deserted.

Bourbon. The Bourbon Kings of France were Henry IV, Louis XIII, XIV, XV and XVI (1589-1793). This royal family, it was said, "learned nothing and forgot nothing"; hence a Bourbon is anyone who fails to learn by experience. The name was given to the American Democratic party by its opponents.

Bourgeois Gentilhomme, Le. A comedy by Molière (1670). The hero is M. Jourdain, a rich tradesman who sets up as a gentleman.

bourgeoisie (Fr.). The merchants, manufacturers, and entrepreneurs considered as a class. The term came into special prominence in the economic theories of Karl MARX and his disciples in the 19th and 20th centuries, which presented the bourgeoisie as the ruling class under the capitalist system of society, from whose hands ownership of the means of production and distribution must be removed in order that socialism might be established. The Russian revolution in 1917 transferred ownership of capital property in that country from the bourgeoisie to the state, which was professedly acting in the interests of the PROLETARIAT. In the ideology and the governmental policies of both Fascism and NAZISM, the bourgeoisie was also subject to taxation and gradual expropriation, although in their early years both movements were encouraged and financed by large industrialists who hoped to protect themselves thereby against Communist revolution. Originally, the bourgeoisie belonged to the THIRD ESTATE of feudalism, and are considered to have furnished the direction for the French Revolution.

The term bourgeois is often used as a synonym of Philistine. Hence the French phrase, dear to Latin Quarter geniuses, épater le bourgeois "bowl over the bourgeois."

Bourget, Paul Charles Joseph (1852-1935). French novelist and critic, who developed from the society and psychological novel, the latter of which he helped popularize, to political conservatism and an interest in Catholicism. His criticism was marked by psychological analysis. Among his novels are Cruelle Enigme (1885); Le Disciple (1889); Cosmopolis (1893); L'Etape (1902); Le Démon de Midi (1914). His critical works include Etudes et Portraits (1888) and Pages de Doctrine et de Critique (1912).

Bourgh, Lady Catherine de. A patronizing and overbearing "great lady" in Jane Austen's PRIDE AND PREJUDICE.

Bourke, Chevalier. An Irish character in Stevenson's MASTER OF BALLANTRAE, devoted to the Master.

Bourke-White, Margaret (1906-). American photographer, former wife of Erskine CALDWELL and known for her photographic studies of industry, social and economic conditions, news personalities, foreign countries, and the like. Her work includes Eyes on Russia (1931) and Red Republic (1934), motion-picture travelogues; U.S.S.R.: A Portfolio of Photographs (1934); You HAVE SEEN THEIR FACES (1937); North of the Danube (1939), and Say! Is This the U.S.A.? (1941), books of text and photographs prepared in collaboration with her husband; and Shooting the Russian War (1942). She was associated with FORTUNE, LIFE, and PM as editor and photographer.

Bourne, Randolph Silliman (1886-1918). American literary critic and essayist, a radical in political thought and a pacifist during World War I. He contributed to the leading "advanced" periodicals of the day, including THE DIAL, THE NEW REPUBLIC, THE MASSES, and SEVEN ARTS. Chief among his collections of essays are Youth and Life (1913); Towards an Enduring Peace (1916); Untimely Papers (1919); and The History of a Literary Radical (1920). The last two books were brought out posthumously.

Bourne, Reuben. The chief character in Hawthorne's ROGER MALVIN'S FUNERAL.

Bourrienne, Louis Antoine Fauvelet de (1769-1834). French diplomat. Author of Mémoires sur Napoléon (1829).

Boutet de Monvel, Louis Maurice (1851-1913). French painter and illustrator. Known for his illustrations of children's books, Chansons de France, Jeanne d'Arc, etc.

bouts-rimés (Fr. rhymed-endings). A parlor game which, in the 18th century, had a considerable vogue in literary circles as a test of skill. A list of words that rhyme with one another is drawn up; this is handed to the competitors, and they must make a poem to the rhymes, each rhyme-word being kept in its place on the list.

Bovary, Charles. In Flaubert's MADAME BOVARY, the husband of the heroine, Emma BOVARY. He is a conscientious but slow-moving, crude, and unimaginative provincial doctor.

Bovary, Emma. The heroine of Flaubert's MADAME BOVARY, a young country woman whose wistful dreams of romantic love are frustrated in her relations with her husband, Charles BOVARY, and who tries to realize them in extra-marital love-affairs. Hence bovaryism, when a woman is possessed by a romantic conception of herself.

Bow bells. The bells of Bow Church. Hence born within the sound of Bow bells, born in the vicinity of Bow Church or St. Mary-le-bow, nearly in the center of London. See COCKNEY.

Bow-boy, The Blind. See VAN VECHTEN, CARL.

bowdlerize. To expurgate a book. Thomas Bowdler, in 1818, gave to the world an edition of Shakespeare's works "in which nothing is added to the original text; but those words and expressions are omitted which cannot with propriety be read aloud in a family." This was in ten volumes. Bowdler subsequently treated Gibbon's Decline and Fall in the same way. Hence the words bowdlerist, bowdlerizer, bowdlerism, bowdlerization, etc.

Bowen, Elizabeth (1899-). Distinguished Anglo-Irish novelist. Writes of the upper middle class. One of her best books is The Hotel.

Bowen, Marjorie. See under LONG, GABRIELLE MARGARET VERE.

Bower, Bertha Muzzy (1871-1940). American woman writer of "Westerns." Her first and best-liked romance of this type was Chip of the Flying U.

Bower of Bliss. A beautiful and enchanting place of temptation. (1) In Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED, a garden belonging to the enchantress ARMIDA. It abounds in everything that can contribute to earthly pleasure. Here

Rinaldo spends some time with ARMIDA but he ultimately breaks from the enchantress and rejoins the war.

(2) In Spenser's Faërie Queene the residence of the witch ACRASIA, a beautiful and most fascinating woman. This lovely garden is situated on a floating island filled with everything to enchant the senses and "wrap the spirit in forgetfulness."

Bowers, Claude Gernade (1878-). American journalist, historian, diplomat. Jefferson and Hamilton (1925), The Tragic Era (1929); etc.

Bowery. The "tough" district of New York City; the slums. Bowery or bouwerij is the old Dutch word for farm; and Bowery Lane received its name because it led out to the farm of Peter Stuyvesant, one of the Dutch governors of colonial days. It was for a long time the height of fashion to live on Bowery Lane, but with the growth of the city the character of the district underwent a radical change, becoming the site of dance halls and gambling resorts. The Bowery, a popular song by Charles H. Hoyt, gives an indication of the reputation of the district at the close of the 19th century. Hence Bowery boy, a toughie of the neighborhood.

Bowes, Major Edward (1874-1946). Master of ceremonies of an extremely popular American radio program, Major Bowes' Amateur Hour (ca. 1935), which featured the introduction and supposedly extemporaneous performance of talented "amateur" singers, musicians, impersonators, and the like, accompanied by "human-interest" biographies.

Bowes-Lyon. Family name of Queen ELIZABETH of England (b. 1900).

Bowie State. Arkansas.

Bowling, Lt. Tom. The immortal type of a brave and hardy sailor; from the character of that name in Smollett's RODERICK RANDOM. He is the uncle of Random; a man too frankly the product of the sea to be anything but ill at ease and careless of the niceties of life ashore.

In a famous sea-song Captain Thomas Dibdin is commemorated by his brother Charles Dibdin under the name of Tom Bowling.

Here a sheer hulk lies poor Tom Bowling
The darling of the crew.

Bowman, Isaiah (1878-). American geographer. Authority on physiography and political geography. President of Johns Hopkins University.

Bow Street. A street near Covent Garden in London which contains the principal police court. Bow Street Runners were early police officers.

bowwow theory. A theory, now abandoned, going back to the philologist MAX

MÜLLER, according to which language originated in the sounds made by animals. The poohpooh theory had language originate in interjections and the dingdong theory in acoustic reflexes.

Box and Cox. A farce by J. M. Morton (1847) the principal characters of which are Box and Cox. It has been called "the best farce for three characters in the English language." The third character is the thrifty landlady who rents the same rooms to Box and Cox (one of whom is employed by night, the other by day) in the vain hope that her two tenants will remain ignorant of each other's existence. Hence a Box and Cox arrangement.

Boxers. A secret society in China which took a prominent part in the rising against foreigners in 1900 which was suppressed by joint European action. The Chinese name was gee ho chuan, signifying "righteousness, harmony, and fists," and implying training as in athletics, for the purpose of developing righteousness and harmony.

Boxing Day. In England the first weekday after Christmas, a legal holiday on which Christmas boxes are given to postmen, etc.

box the compass. To name the 32 points of the compass in their order. Figuratively speaking, to make a complete turnabout or reversal.

Boy and the Mantle. A ballad in Percy's Reliques. See MANTLE OF FIDELITY.

Boy Bishop. St. Nicholas of Bari was called "the Boy Bishop" because from his cradle he manifested marvelous indications of piety. The custom of choosing a boy from the cathedral choir, etc., on his day (December 6th), as a mock bishop, is very ancient. The boy possessed episcopal honor for three weeks, and the rest of the choir were his prebendaries. If he died during his time of office he was buried in pontificalibus. Probably the reference is to Jesus Christ sitting in the Temple among the doctors while He was a boy. The custom was abolished in the reign of Henry VIII.

boycott. To refuse to deal with a person, to take any notice of him, or even to sell to him. The term arose in 1881, when Captain Boycott, an Irish landlord, was thus ostracized by the Irish agrarian insurgents.

Boyd, Ernest (1887-1946). Irish literary critic, who lived in the U.S. His chief critical works are Appreciations and Depreciations (1918); Ireland's Literary Renaissance (1922); Portraits, Real and Imaginary (1924); Literary Blasphemies (1927).

Boyd, James (1888-1944). American novelist, living for many years at Southern Pines, North Carolina. Author of Drums (1925), Marching On (1927), Long Hunt (1930), etc.

His poems were published posthumously. His novels all deal with different periods in American history.

Boyd, Nancy. Pseudonym of Edna St. Vincent MILLAY as a writer of short stories in the early years of her career.

Boyd, Thomas (1898-1935). American novelist and short story writer. First came into prominence by writing a novel about World War I, Through the Wheat, at the age of 25, after his discharge from the Army where he had won the Croix de Guerre. His historical studies deal with such American characters as Simon Girty, the White Savage, Mad Anthony Wayne, and John Fitch, inventor of the steamboat.

Boyg, The. A mysterious and invisible but powerful force, an animistic representation of Norwegian folklore found in Ibsen's Peer Gynt.

Boy in the Bush, The. See LAWRENCE, DAVID HERBERT.

Boylan, "Blazes." A character in James Joyce's Ulysses, lover of Molly Bloom at the time of the novel's action.

Boyle, Elizabeth. Wife of Edmund Spenser. See AMORETTI.

Boyle, Kay (1903-). American novelist and short-story writer, an expatriate resident of France for many years until World War II, known for the stylistic precision of her work and her penetrating psychological studies of character. Her published collections of short stories are Wedding Day (1930); First Lover (1933); The White Horses of Vienna (1936); THE CRAZY HUNTER (1940). Her novels include Plagued by the Nightingale (1931); Year Before Last (1932); Gentlemen, I Address You Privately (1933); My Next Bride (1934); Death of a Man (1936); Monday Night (1938); The Youngest Camel (1939). A Glad Day (1938) is a volume of poetry.

Boyle, Robert (1627-1691). Famous British physicist and chemist. Boyle's law states that when a gas is subjected to compression, and kept at a constant temperature, the product of the pressure and the volume is a constant quality, the volume is inversely proportioned to the pressure.

Boyle controversy. A book-battle between Charles Boyle, fourth Earl of Orrery, and the famous Bentley, respecting the Epistles of Phalaris, which were edited by Boyle in 1695. Swift's BATTLE OF THE BOOKS was one result of the controversy.

Boylesse, René (1867-1926). French novelist. A master of irony. Member of the French Academy since 1919.

Boynton, Dr. A leading character in Howells' UNDISCOVERED COUNTRY. His daughter Egeria is also prominent.

Boynton, Henry Walcott (1869-1947). American critic and biographer. Author of lives of Washington Irving, Bret Harte, and James Fenimore Cooper.

Boynton, Percy Holmes (1875-1946). Brother of the above. American scholar and critic. America in Contemporary Fiction (1940).

Boy Orator or Boy Orator of the Platte. William Jennings BRYAN of Nebraska.

Boys from Syracuse, The. An American musical comedy adapted freely from Shakespeare's A COMEDY OF ERRORS, with music by Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart, produced in 1938.

Boy Scouts. An organization of boys for civic duty, camping, etc., founded in England in 1908 by Sir Robert Stephenson Smyth (later Baron) Baden-Powell.

Boythorn, Laurence. In Dickens' BLEAK HOUSE, a robust gentleman with the voice of a Stentor, a friend of Mr. Jarndyce. He would utter the most ferocious sentiments, while at the same time he fondled a pet canary on his finger. Once on a time he had been in love with Miss Barbary, Lady Dedlock's sister. The character is supposed to have been drawn from Walter Savage Landor, the noted poet.

Boyville, The Court of. A book by William Allen WHITE.

Boz. Charles Dickens (1812-1870). His Sketches by Boz (two series) appeared in 1836. "Boz, my signature in the Morning Chronicle," he tells us, "was the nickname of a pet child, a younger brother, whom I had dubbed Moses, in honor of the Vicar of Wakefield, which, being pronounced Bozes, got shortened into Boz."

Bozzaris, Marco. See MARCO BOZZARIS.

Bozzy. James Boswell, the biographer of Dr. Johnson (1740-1795).

Brabançonne. The national anthem of Belgium, composed by Van Campenhout in the revolution of 1830, and so named from Brabant, of which Brussels is the chief city.

Brabantio. In Shakespeare's Othello, a senator of Venice, father of Desdemona. He thought the "insolence" of Othello in marrying his daughter unpardonable, and that Desdemona must have been drugged with love-potions so to degrade herself.

Braccio. In Browning's poetical drama, LURIA, the commissary of the republic of Florence, employed in picking up every item of scandal he could find against Luria.

Bracebridge Hall. A volume of sketches by Washington IRVING (1822). Many of them deal with the comfortable country home and the family concerns of Squire Bracebridge, a delightfully typical old English gentleman whose whims and customs give Irving opportunity for some of his most pertinent comments on English life.

Bracegirdle, Anne (1663?-1748). English actress closely associated with plays of Congreve.

Brackenridge, Hugh Henry (1748-1816). American novelist, one of the first to seek to write of the native American scene as valid literature. He collaborated with Philip FRENEAU on The Rising Glory of America (1772), a commencement oration at Princeton, and also wrote The Battle of Bunker's Hill (1776) and The Death of General Montgomery (1777), blank verse dramas in the 18th-century style. His most important work is MODERN CHIVALRY, OR THE ADVENTURES OF CAPTAIN JOHN FARRAGO AND TEAGUE O'REGAN HIS SERVANT (1792-1815).

Bracy, Sir Maurice de. In Scott's IVANHOE, a follower of Prince John. He sues the Lady Rowena to become his bride, and threatens to kill both Cedric and Ivanhoe if she refuses. The interview is intercepted, and at the close of the novel Rowena marries Ivanhoe.

Bradamant. In Carolingian legend, a celebrated female warrior, prominent in both Boiardo's Orlando Innamorato and Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO. She is the sister of Rinaldo and niece of Charlemagne and is known as the "Virgin Knight." She wears white armor and a white plume and possesses an irresistible spear which unhorses any knight at a touch. Although she is in love with Rogero the Moor, she refuses to marry him until he is baptized. Her marriage and Rogero's victory over Rodomont form the subject of the last book of ORLANDO FURIOSO.

Braddock, Edward (1695-1755). British General, leader of ill-fated expedition against Fort Duquesne. Lost half his force from obstinacy, against the French and Indians. Died of wounds a few days after a surprise attack. Washington was one of his junior officers.

Braddon, Mary Elizabeth (1837-1915). Author of Lady Audley's Secret (1862) and some 80 other novels. She was, says G. B. Shaw, "what we now call a lowbrow; but . . . her style would overawe us now as classical." Mother of W. B. MAXWELL, also a novelist.

Bradford, Andrew (1686-1742). American printer and publisher. Brought out the first newspaper of Pennsylvania: American Weekly Mercury (Philadelphia, from December 1719). For eleven years (1712-1723) Bradford was the only printer in Pennsylvania.

Bradford, Gamaliel (1863-1932). American biographer, known for his psychological studies of literary and historical figures. DAMAGED SOULS (1923) is his best known work. Others are Confederate Portraits (1914); Portraits of Women (1916); American Portraits (1922); Wives (1925); Daughters of Eve (1930); and The Quick and the Dead (1931). Life and I (1928) is autobiographical. His Journal was published posthumously in 1933.

Bradford, Roark (1896-1948). American author of books of pseudo-Negro folklore, especially stories of the Bible. The best-known are Ol' Man Adam an' His Chillun (1928), from which the play THE GREEN PASTURES was adapted; This Side Jordan (1929); Ol' King David an' the Philistine Boys (1930); John Henry (1931).

Bradford, William (1588-1657). Leader in the founding of Plymouth, governor of the colony from 1621 to his death, except for five years during which he refused election. He was one of the authors of an account of the settlement of Plymouth known as MOURT'S RELATION, published in 1622, and is best known for his History of Plymouth Plantation, a chronicle of events in the colony from 1620 to 1646, which was not discovered and published until 1856.

Bradlaugh, Charles (1833-1891). English social and political reformer. Free-thought lecturer. When prosecuted with Mrs. Annie BESANT in 1876 for republishing Malthusian Fruits of Philosophy, his acquittal helped remove existing restrictions on freedom of the press. Barred from Parliament, though elected M.P. for six years, because as a free-thinker he refused to swear on the Bible and instead wished to affirm. Finally championed a bill that made such affirmation legal.

Bradley, Edward. Pseudonym Cuthbert Bede (1827-1889). English clergyman, author and illustrator of Adventures of Mr. Verdant Green, an Oxford Freshman (1853-1856); Little Mr. Bouncer, etc. Illustrated his own verse and prose.

Bradley, Francis Herbert (1846-1924). English philosopher of the school of Idealism, his thought being related particularly to that of Hegel. In ethics, he attacked Herbert SPENCER and the Utilitarians (see UTILITARIANISM), asserting that the individual must integrate his efforts with a larger whole in order to attain self-realization. In metaphysics, he maintained that nature is only appearance, an imperfect manifestation of the Absolute, which is a self-sufficient spirit, requiring nothing outside itself for its completion. His chief work is Appearance and Reality (1893), which aroused a great deal of discussion. Other works include Ethi- cal Studies (1876); The Principles of Logic (1883); Essays on Truth and Reality (1914).

Bradley, Omar Nelson (1893–). American general in World War II. In command of U.S. Second Corps in Tunisia and of the Allied Twelfth Army Group in Western Europe. After the war in charge of the Veterans' Administration. Attacked by commander of American Legion but vigorously defended by President Truman, General Eisenhower, and others. Highly praised in Top Secret (1946) by Ralph Ingersoll. Appointed Chief of Staff in November 1947.

Bradstreet, Anne (1612?–1672). American poet of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, writing of religious subjects according to the Puritan outlook and under the general influence of George HERBERT, Francis QUARLES, and Guillaume DU BARTAS. THE TENTH MUSE LATELY SPRUNG UP IN AMERICA is a collection of her poems, published in 1650 and the first volume of original verse to be written in New England. She also wrote Religious Experiences, an autobiographical sketch, and Meditations Divine and Moral, a collection of aphorisms for the instruction of her son.

Bradwardine, Como Cosmyne, Baron of. One of Scott's most famous characters, described by him in WAVERLEY as "the very model of the old Scottish cavalier, with all his excellencies and peculiarities." He is a scholar, full of pedantry and vanity, but very gallant and lovable.

In Thackeray's Book of Snobs ii, the Baron of Bradwardine, described as "the most famous man in Haggisland," is meant for Sir Walter Scott.

Bradwardine, Rose. Daughter of Baron BRADWARDINE and heroine of WAVERLEY.

Brady, Cyrus Townsend (1861–1920). American clergyman and author of many books for boys and historical stories, biographies of Paul Jones, Andrew Jackson, etc.

Brady, Mathew B. (ca. 1823–1896). American photographer, the first significant representative of his profession in the U.S. He is best known for his record of the Civil War in photographs, National Photographic Collection of War Views (1869).

Brady, William A. (1863–). American theatrical producer and manager. Also managed the prizefighters, James J. Corbett and James J. Jeffries. Married the actress Grace George. The daughter of a former marriage, the late Alice Brady, became a star of stage and screen.

Braes of Yarrow, see YARROW.

Brag, Jack, see JACK BRAG.

Bragdon, Claude (1866–1946). American theosophist and architect. Author of books on both theosophy and architecture.

Bragelonne, The Vicomte de. See THREE MUSKETEERS.

Bragg, Braxton (1817–1876). U.S.M.A. 1837. Confederate general in U.S. Civil War. Won battle of Chickamauga.

Braggadocchio. A braggart; one who is valiant with his tongue but a great coward at heart. The character is from Spenser's Faerie Queene, and a type of the "Intemperance of the Tongue." After a time, like the jackdaw in borrowed plumes, Braggadocchio is stripped of all his glories: his shield is claimed by Sir Marinell; his lady is proved by the golden girdle to be the false Florimel; his horse is claimed by Sir Guyon; Talus shaves off his beard and scourges his squire; and the pretender sneaks off amidst the jeers of everyone. It is thought that the poet had the Duke d'Alençon, a suitor of Queen Elizabeth, in his eye when he drew this character. Others believe it was drawn from Philip II of Spain.

Bragi. In Scandinavian mythology the son of Odin and Frigga, and the god of poetry; represented as an old man with a long white beard. His wife was Iduna.

Bragi's apples were an instant cure of weariness, decay of power, ill temper, and failing health; the supply was inexhaustible, for immediately one was eaten another took its place.

Bragi's cup. To each new king before he ascended the high-seat of his fathers Bragi's cup was handed, and he had to make a pledge by it and drain it.

Bragi's story. A lengthy but interesting tale.

Bragmardo, Janotus de. In Rabelais' Gargantua, a sophister who seeks to recover from Gargantua the great bells of Notre Dame and windily exhorts him.

Brahe, Tycho (1546–1601). Danish astronomer, who tried to establish a middle ground between the PROLEMAIC and COPERNICAN systems of astronomy, maintaining that the earth was motionless, but that the five planets revolved around the sun, which circled the earth once every year. He also discovered the celebrated "new star" in Cassiopeia, the first in a world previously considered fixed for eternity, on November 11, 1572. His account of it, De Nova Stella, was published in 1573. He wrote a number of treatises on astronomy in Latin, the most important being Astronomiae Instauratae Progymnasmata (1602–1603), edited by KEPLER.

Brahma. In Hinduism, Brahma, properly speaking, is the Absolute, or God conceived as entirely impersonal. The theological abstraction was endowed with personality, and became the Creator of the universe, the first in the divine Triad, of which the other partners were Vishnu, the Maintainer, and Siva (or Shiva), the Destroyer. The Brahmins claim Brahma as the founder of their religious system.

Brahmin. A worshiper of Brahma, a member of the highest caste in the system of Hinduism, and of the priestly order. Also a satirical term for a member of the New England aristocracy, a group known for its emphasis on class differences. See CASTE.

Brahmo Samaj (Sans., the Society of Believers in the One God). A monotheistic sect of Brahmins, founded in 1818 in Calcutta by Ramohun Roy (1744-1833), a wealthy and well educated Brahmin who wished to purify his religion and found a National Church which should be free from idolatry and superstition. In 1844 the Church was reorganized by Debendro Nath Tagore, and since that time its reforming zeal and influence have gained it many adherents. The Brahmo Samaj became more and more political, until it was looked upon as one of the chief factors in the movement for complete nationalization and autonomy.

Brahms, Johannes (1833-1897). German composer, known for the combined strength and sentiment of his music and regarded by many as the heir and successor or again a mere epigonus of BEETHOVEN. A pet abomination of Romain ROLLAND. His works include four symphonies, concertos, chamber music, and numerous lieder. The First (1876) and the Fourth (1885) are the most popular of Brahms' symphonies.

Braid, James (1870-). Famous professional golfer. Born in Fifeshire not far from St. Andrews, the great Mecca of the game. Three times Open Champion (1901, 1905, 1906). With Taylor and Harry Vardon, one of the great names in golf. Author of Advanced Golf, etc.

Braille. An alphabetic system of raised points by which the blind are enabled to read and write, invented by Louis Braille (1809-1852), a Frenchman, in 1829.

Brailsford, Henry Noel (1873-). British journalist. Author of Shelley, Godwin, and their Circle (1913), How the Soviet Works (1927), Rebel India (1932), Voltaire (1935).

Brainworm. In Ben Jonson's comedy Every Man in His Humor (1598), the servant of Knowell, a man of infinite shifts, and a veritable Proteus in his metamorphoses. He appears first as Brainworm; afterwards as Fitz-Sword; then as a reformed soldier whom Knowell takes into his service; then as Justice Clement's man; and lastly as valet to the courts of law, by which devices he plays upon the same clique of some half-dozen men of average intelligence.

Braithwaite, William Stanley (1878-). Negro poet and compiler for many years of the Anthology of Magazine Verse and Year Book of American Poetry, in seventeen volumes.

Bramble, Matthew. The chief character of Smollett's Expedition of HUMPHRY CLINKER, an "odd kind of humorist," "always on the fret," dyspeptic, and afflicted with the gout, but benevolent, generous, and kind-hearted. With his sister Tabitha and her maid he goes on a "family tour" which furnishes the chief interest of the book.

Miss Tabitha Bramble. In the same book, the maiden sister of Matthew Bramble, of some forty-five years of age, noted for her bad spelling. She is starch, vain, prim, and ridiculous; soured in temper, prying and uncharitable. She contrives at last to marry Captain Lismahago, who is content to take her for the sake of her £4000.

Bramine and Bramin. Mrs. Elizabeth Draper and the English novelist Laurence Sterne. Ten of Sterne's letters to Mrs. Draper are published, and called Letters to Eliza. The fact that Sterne was a clergyman and that Mrs. Draper had been born in India suggested the names.

Bran. In MACPHERSON's poem Temora, Fingal's dog, a mighty favorite. Hence the phrase, if not Bran, it is Bran's brother. If not the real "Simon Pure," it is just as good. A complimentary expression.

Bran, son of Febal. Hero of THE VOYAGE OF BRAN, an early Irish tale.

Branch, Anna Hempstead (1874-1937). American lyric and mystical poet. Among her works are The Heart of the Road (1901); The Shoes that Danced (1906); Rose of the Wind (1910); Rose of the Lock Box (1929); Last Poems, edited with a Foreword by Ridgely Torrence (1944). Her long poem Nimrod is one of the most extraordinarily sustained poems written by a woman.

Brancusi, Constantin (1876-). Roumanian sculptor, known for his use of abstract forms, executed in wood, glass, steel, stone, bronze, etc. His best-known single work is Bird in Space (1925).

Brand. A drama by Henrik IBSEN (Nor. 1866). The hero is an idealistic peasant priest in violent revolt against the pettiness and evil of conventional society. He perishes at last in the ruins of his ice-church under an avalanche.

The dramatist wrote of him "Brand is myself in my best moments."

Brand, Ethan, see ETHAN BRAND.

Brand, Max (1892-1944). Pseudonym of Frederick Faust, tremendously successful American writer of Western stories. He was also the author of the "Dr. Kildare" motion pictures. He began as a poet, but none of his listed eighty-five books is of poetry.

Brand, Millen (1906-). American novelist. One of the successful The Outward Room.

Brandan or Brendan, St. See under SAINT.

Brandeis, Louis Dembitz (1856-1941). Distinguished American jurist and legal light. Up to his retirement, associate justice of the U.S. Supreme Court (1916-1939).

Brandenburg Concertos. A series of six concertos, written by J. S. BACH and sent to the Margrave of Brandenburg in 1721, whose name has been given to them. They are among the most widely played of the composer's works.

Brandes, Georg Morris (1842-1927). Danish literary critic. Chief Scandinavian advocate of the non-historicity theory of Jesus. Introduced feminism into Denmark. Took all literature for his province. His original surname was Cohen.

Brandon, Charles, Duke of Suffolk. The hero of Major's historical romance, WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER.

Brandt, Margaret. The heroine of Reade's historical novel, The Cloister and the Hearth, the mother of Erasmus. Her father, Peter Brandt, is a prominent character.

Branghtons. Vulgar, malicious, jealous people, from a family of that name in Fanny Burney's EVELINA. They are cousins of the heroine, Evelina, and put her to endless embarrassment and shame by their vulgarity and their habit of making use of her friends for their own purposes, but she is too well bred to make them feel their own lack of breeding.

Brangwaine. In the TRISTAN legend, the maid of Iseult.

Brangwyn, Sir Frank (1867-). Famous British painter and mural decorator. Known for richness of color.

Brann, William Cowper (1855-1898). Known as Brann the Iconoclast. Founded The Iconoclast (1891; Waco, Tex.) Killed in a pistol fight on streets of Waco.

Brant, Joseph (1742-1807). Mohawk Indian Chief, with Tories under the Butlers and Johnsons ravaged the Mohawk Valley.

Brant, Sebastian (1457-1521). German humanist and satirist, author of the allegory Das Narienschiff (SHIP OF FOOLS, 1494), a modern American translation of which was published by Prof. Zeydel in 1944.

Bran the Blessed. In Celtic mythology, god of the underworld and son of LLYR.

Brantôme, Pierre de Bourdeilles, Seigneur de (1535?-1614). French chronicler. His Mémoires, published in 1665-1666, are full of interesting gossip about important people of the times.

Branwen. In Welsh legend, the daughter of King Llyr of Britain and wife of Matholch, king of Ireland.

Braque, Georges (1882-). French painter, associated with Pablo PICASSO in founding the school of CUBISM. He was influenced by CÉZANNE and his subjects were chiefly still lifes.

Brass. See NORRIS, CHARLES G.

Brass Check, The. A book by Upton SINCLAIR, published in 1919 and attacking abuses in the newspapers of the time.

Brass, Sampson. In Dickens' OLD CURIOSITY SHOP, a knavish, servile attorney, affecting great sympathy with his clients but in reality fleeing them without mercy.

Sally Brass. Sampson's sister, and an exaggerated edition of her brother.

Brassbound, Captain. Hero of Shaw's CAPTAIN BRASSBOUND'S CONVERSION.

Brassboulder, The. A nautical novel by David W. BONE.

Brave New World. A novel by Aldous HUXLEY, published in 1932, which gives a satirical picture of a future world in which science has solved all human problems.

Braves. In American baseball parlance, a nickname for the Boston Nationals. See BASEBALL TEAMS.

Bravo, The. A novel by James Fenimore COOPER (1831), dealing with the intrigues of 16th-century Venice. The "bravo," Jacopo, revolts against his trade of spying and murdering and assists a pair of young lovers to escape their enemies, but pays for his act with his life.

brazen age. The age of war and violence. See also under age.

Brazen Head. The legend of the wonderful head of brass that could speak and was omniscient is common property to early romances, and is of Eastern origin. In Valentine and Orson, for instance, we hear of a gigantic head kept in the castle of the giant FERRAGUS, of Portugal. It told those who consulted it whatever they required to know, past, present, or to come; but the most famous in English legend is that fabled to have been made by the great Roger BACON.

It was said if Bacon heard it speak he would succeed in his projects; if not, he would fail. His familiar, Miles, was set to watch, and while Bacon slept the Head spoke thrice: "Time is"; half an hour later it said, "Time was." In another half-hour it said, "Time's past," fell down, and was broken to atoms. Byron refers to this legend.

Like Friar Bacon's brazen head, I've spoken, "Time is," "Time was," "Time's past."
Don Juan, i. 217.

References to Bacon's Brazen Head are frequent in literature; among them may be mentioned:

Bacon trembled for his brazen head.
Pope, Dunciad, iii, 104.
Quoth he, "My head's not made of brass,
As Friar Bacon's noddle was."
Butler, Hudibras, ii. 2.

Brazenhead the Great. A novel by Maurice HEWLETT.

Bread. See NORRIS, CHARLES G.

Breadwinners, The. A novel by John HAY (1883) dealing with labor problems and presenting an unsympathetic portrait of a union organizer, Offitt. The hero, Alfred Farnham, organizes a body of volunteer policemen to preserve order during a strike. The novel, which was first published anonymously, aroused much discussion.

Break, Break, Break. A poem by TENNYSON (1842), one of those inspired by the death of his friend Arthur HALLAM. See also IN MEMORIAM.

Breasted, James Henry (1865-1935). American orientalist, archaeologist, and historian. Also university professor. Wrote A History of Egypt (1905), Ancient Times: A History of the Early World (1916). In 1919 he became director of the New Oriental Institute at the University of Chicago. Member National Academy of Sciences. Did much exploration on the Nile.

Breath of Life, The. See BURROUGHS, JOHN.

Brebœuf and His Brethren. A narrative poem by E. J. Pratt, leading Canadian poet, dealing with the Jesuit missionaries in Canada in the 17th century. Brebœuf was killed by the Iroquois. He was beatified in 1925 by the Church.

Brecht, Bertold (1898-). German revolutionary poet, playwright and novelist. Left Germany in 1935. In the U.S. since 1941. The most significant of his short dramas is the one-act, Señora Carrar's Rifles (1938), dealing with the Spanish war.

Breck, Alan. An adventurer in Stevenson's KIDNAPPED and DAVID BALFOUR, whose full name is Alan Breck Stewart.

Brechtes Bible, the. See under BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Breen, Grace. The heroine of Howells' novel, DR. BREEN'S PROFESSION.

Breitmann, Hans. A "Pennsylvania Dutchman" of picturesque speech and jovial habits, created by Charles Godfrey Leland. He first appeared in Hans Breitmann's Party in 1856, and in 1868 his adventures were collected into book form in the Breitmann Ballads. He is typical of the German immigrants of 1848 and thereabouts.

Bremond, Henri (1855-1933). French literary critic and historian.

Brandan or Brandan, St. See under SAINT.

Brenn or Brenhin. See under RULERS, TITLES OF.

Brenner Pass. Lowest pass over the Tyrolean Alps. The route from Central Germany to Italy where, following the formation of the Rome-Berlin Axis, the two dictators, Hitler and Mussolini, frequently met.

Brentano, Clemens Maria (1778-1842). German romantic poet, brother of BETTINA. With his friend and brother-in-law Achim von Arnim he tried to do in Des Knaben Wunderhorn for the German folksong what the GRIMM brothers did for the folktale. Brentano's work is voluminous and includes a record of the nun Anna Katharina Emmerich's visions, written after his return to the Church.

Brentano, Lujo (1844-1931). German political economist, nephew of Clemens Brentano. Championed working class. Winner of Nobel peace prize in 1927.

Brentford, the two kings of. In the Duke of Buckingham's farce called The Rehearsal (1671), the two kings of Brentford enter hand-in-hand, dance together, sing together, walk arm-in-arm, and to heighten the absurdity, the actors represent them as smelling at the same nosegay (Act ii. 2). Some say this was a skit on Charles II and James (afterwards James II). Others think the persons meant were Boabdilin and Abdalla, the two contending kings of Granada in Dryden's tragedy, The Conquest of Granada. See ALMANZOR AND ALMAHIDE.

Brer Rabbit, Brer Fox, etc. Animal characters, heroes of the stories in UNCLE REMUS by Joel Chandler Harris.

Breshkovsky, Catherine. Russian Ekaterina Breshko-Breskovskaya (1844-1934). Called "Babushka" and "Grandmother of the Russian Revolution." Of a wealthy and noble family, devoted her life to the welfare of the Russian peasants. Imprisoned, exiled, released several times. Forced to flee after Bolsheviks came to power. Lectured in U.S. 1919. Spent last years in Czechoslovakia.

Brest-Litovsk. Former Polish town 100 miles east of Warsaw. The Treaty of Brest-Litovsk, ending Russian participation in World War I, was signed there March 3, 1918. In 1919 the Treaty of Versailles recognized the Republic of Poland, and Brest-Litovsk became a Polish city. In 1939 it was captured by Germany and later in that year, when Poland was partitioned for the fourth time, became a part of Russia.

Brethren, Plymouth. Members of a Calvinistic sect which arose at Plymouth, England, about 1830.

Brethren Church. Conservative branch of the Dunkers or Dunkards, German Baptist Brethren in Pennsylvania.

Brethren of the Coast. French, English, and Dutch marauders in the West Indies late in the 16th century.

Brethren of the Common Life. A group of mystics in Germany and the Low Countries during the 14th and 15th centuries, founded by Gerard Groot (1340-1389), a Dutchman. The Brethren lived together communally and through their schools assisted greatly in establishing reforms in education and religion. ERASMUS and MARTIN LUTHER were at one time their pupils, and the IMITATION OF CHRIST was one of the products of the influence of the sect's brand of mysticism.

Breton, André (1896-). French poet and critic, one of the founders and leaders of the movement of SURREALISM and its predecessor, DADAISM, living in the U.S. after the defeat of France by Germany in World War II. His works, consisting of both examples of Surrealism and expositions of it, include Manifeste du surréalisme: Poisson soluble (1924); Point du jour (1934), essays; Position politique du surréalisme (1935); Qu'est-ce que le surréalisme? (1934), translated as What Is Surrealism? (1936); L'Amour fou (1937). Fata Morgana (1942), a long poem, was forbidden publication in France in 1940 by the censors of the Vichy government. It appears in NEW DIRECTIONS, 1941 edition.

Breton, Nicholas (1545?-1626). English poet, author of numerous prose pamphlets, moral, religious, and lyric verse. He is best known as a pastoral poet, and is represented in THE ARBOR OF AMOROUS DEVICES (1597) and ENGLAND'S HELICON (1600). Breton's name is to be found on the title page of the former work, and Breton's Bower of Delights (1591), another collection of lyrics, was also assigned to him by the printers of the book, although other authors are represented.

Breton's Bower of Delights. See BRETON, NICHOLAS.

Brett, Dorothy. A friend of Katherine MANSFIELD and D. H. LAWRENCE, author of a book about the latter. She is mentioned frequently in Lawrence's correspondence.

Bretwalda. See under RULERS, TITLES OF.

Breugnon, Colas, see COLAS BREUGNON.

brevet rank. Titular rank without the pay that usually goes with it. A brevet major has the title of major, but the pay of captain, or whatever his substantive rank happens to be. (Fr. brevet, dim. of bref, a letter, a document.)

Brewster, Margaret. The heroine of Whittier's poem In the Old South Church, versifying an incident of July, 1677, when the Quaker, Margaret Brewster, came to church in Puritan Boston in sackcloth and ashes. She was whipped through the town by way of punishment.

Brian Boru (926-1014). King of Ireland. Son of the King of Munster. Broke the Danish power in Ireland for all time at Clontarf (April 23, 1014), and was slain in the battle.

Briand-Kellogg Pact, see PACT OF PARIS.

Briareus, or Aegeon. In Greek mythology a giant with fifty heads and a hundred hands. Homer says the gods called him Briareus, but men called him Aegeon (Iliad, i. 403). He was the offspring of Heaven and Earth and was of the race of the Titans, with whom he fought in the war against Zeus.

Brice, Stephen. The hero of Winston Churchill's THE CRISIS.

Brice. Bishop of Tours, died in 444. St. Brice's day is November 13. In Arthurian legend, he is the sustainer of Arthur when elected king.

brick.

a regular brick. A jolly good fellow; perhaps because a brick is solid, four-square, plain, and reliable.

make bricks without straw. To attempt to do something without having the necessary material supplied. The allusion is to the Israelites in Egypt, who were commanded by their taskmasters so to do (Ex. v. 7).

Brick, Jefferson. In Dickens' MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT, a very weak, pale young man, the war correspondent of the New York Rowdy Journal, of which Colonel Diver is editor.

Bricklayer, the. A nickname for Ben JONSON from his stepfather's trade.

Bricks Without Straw. A novel by Albion W. TOURGEE, published in 1880 and dealing with the period of Reconstruction and the early freedom of the Negro in the South after the Civil War.

Brideau, Philippe. An unscrupulous villain who appears in several of the novels of Balzac's COMÉDIE HUMAINE, notably Scenes from a Courtesan's Life (Les Splendeurs et misères des courtisanes). He was originally in the army, but was forced to find other means of livelihood after being involved in a military plot. He then became a ruthless plunderer, robbed his aunt, his brother and his mother, and even disowned the latter, in spite of her unfailing devotion, because he thought she stood in the way of his social success.

Joseph Brideau. Philippe's brother, a talented artist and one of the members of the club known as the Cénacle.

Agatha Brideau. The affectionate, devoted mother of the scoundrel Philippe and his brother.

Bridehead, Sue. The chief female character in Hardy's novel, JUDE THE OBSCURE.

Bride of Abydos, The. A poem by Byron (1813). The heroine is Zuleika, daughter of Giaffer, pasha of Abydos. She is the trothplight bride of Selim; but Giaffer shoots the lover, and Zuleika dies of a broken heart.

Bride of Lammermoor. A historical novel by Sir Walter Scott (1819), laid in the time of William III. The titular heroine is Lucy Ashton, daughter of Sir William Ashton, lord-keeper of Scotland. She is in love with Edgar, master of Ravenswood. The lovers plight their troth at the "Mermaid's Fountain," but Lucy is compelled to marry Frank Hayston, laird of Bucklaw. In a fit of insanity, the bride attempts to murder the bridegroom, and dies in convulsions. Bucklaw recovers, and goes abroad. Colonel Ashton appoints a hostile meeting with Edgar; but on his way to the place appointed young Ravenswood is lost in the quicksands of Kelpies Flow, in accordance with an ancient prophecy.

In Donizetti's opera of LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR, Bucklaw dies of the wound inflicted by the bride, and Edgar, heartbroken, comes on the stage and kills himself.

Bride of the Sea. Venice; so called from the ancient ceremony of the wedding of the sea by the doge, who threw a ring into the Adriatic, saying, "We wed thee, O sea, in token of perpetual domination." This took place each year on Ascension Day, and was enjoined upon the Venetians in 1177 by Pope Alexander III, who gave the doge a gold ring from his own finger in token of the victory achieved by the Venetian fleet at Istria over Frederick Barbarossa, in defense of the pope's quarrel. See BUCENTAUR.

Bridewell. A generic term for a house of correction, or prison, so called from the London Bridewell, Bridge Street, Blackfriars, which was built as a hospital on the site of a former royal palace over a holy well of medicinal water, called St. Bride's (Bridget's) Well.

Bridge, The. Most important work of the American poet Hart CRANE, published in 1930, in which he attempted to synthesize a picture of modern America by the use of symbols from its past and present, centered about BROOKLYN BRIDGE as chief symbol of man's aspiration and achievement.

Bridge of San Luis Rey, The. A novel by Thornton WILDER, published in 1927 and a Pulitzer Prize winner. It deals with the collapse of a bridge near Lima, Peru, in the early 18th century, and the lives of the five people killed thereby: the Marquesa de Montemayor; Pepita, her companion-maid; Uncle Pio; his young charge, Jaime, son of a famous actress, La Périhole; and Esteban, grief-stricken by the recent death of his twin brother, Manuel. Brother Juniper, a friar, is the supposed author of the account of the accident. In structure this novel is reminiscent of the Italian novelle.

Bridge of Sighs. Over this bridge, which connects the palace of the doge with the state prisons of Venice, prisoners were conveyed from the judgment hall to the place of execution.

I stood in Venice on the Bridge of Sighs,
A palace and a prison on each hand.
Byron, Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, iv. 1.

Waterloo Bridge, in London, used, some years ago, when suicides were frequent there, to be called the Bridge of Sighs, and Thomas Hood gave the name to one of his most pathetic poems.

Bridger, James (1806-1881). American trader and explorer. Known as the "Daniel Boone of the Rocky Mountains."

Bridges, Harry Renton (1900-). American labor leader on Pacific Coast. Native of Australia. Subject to long wrangles and various decisions as to deportation. Cf. Men Who Lead Labor and Harry Bridges on Trial (Modern Age books).

Bridges, Robert Seymour (1844-1930). English poet, appointed poet laureate in 1913 and best known for his work in metrics. In addition to a number of short lyrics, his works include: Prometheus, the Firegiver (1884); Eros and Psyche (1894); Eden (1891), an oratorio; The Testament of Beauty (1929). He also wrote plays, chiefly on classical subjects, was the author of critical essays on such figures as Milton and Keats, was interested in church music, spelling and phonetics, and edited several volumes, including the poetry of Gerard Manley HOPKINS.

Bridget Allworthy. In Fielding's Tom Jones. See ALLWORTHY.

Bridlegoose, Judge. The anglicized form given to Tiel de Bridoisson (or Juge Bridois), a judge in Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, who decided the causes brought before him, not by weighing the merits of the case, but by the more simple process of throwing dice. BEAUMARCHAIS, in his Marriage of Figaro (1784), has introduced this judge under the name of "Bridoisson." The person satirized by Rabelais is said to be Chancellor Poyet (1474-1548) who served as chancellor of France under Francis I.

Bridlegoose, The Verdict of. Essays by T. F. POWYS.

Bridoisson. See BRIDLEGOOSE, JUDGE.

Brie cheese. A soft French cheese, from the district of Brie in France, ripened by mold. Connoisseurs claim that there is something poetic about it.

Brief Candles. See HUXLEY, ALDOUS.

Brief Moment. See BEHRMAN, S. N.

Brieux, Eugène (1858-1932). French playwright, sponsored by Bernard Shaw. Famous for Damaged Goods. Commander of the Legion of Honor and member of the French Academy.

Briffault, Robert Stephen (1876-1948). English surgeon, anthropologist, philosopher and novelist. The Mothers probably the most notable work in its field since Sir James Frazer's The Golden Bough. His novel Europa was widely read.

brig. Place of confinement aboard ship in the U.S. Navy. The word has nothing to do with brig, a two-masted, square-rigged vessel.

brigantine. A word used variously for a piratical vessel or a specific sailing vessel differing from a brig in not carrying a square mainsail.

Brigard, Gilberte. The heroine of Frou-Frou, a drama by Meilhac and Halévy.

Briggs, Clare A. (1875-1930). American cartoonist. Among his creations Skin-nay, The Days of Real Sport, When a Feller Needs a Friend, Mr. and Mrs., etc.

Briggs, Le Baron Russell (1855-1934). Dean of Harvard (1902-1925). Trained in his select composition course many well-known poets and authors.

Briggs, Mr. An ardent but very poor amateur sportsman whose blundering adventures at hunting and fishing were depicted in the London Punch in serial form. Mr. Briggs was the invention of John Leech.

Bright, John (1811-1889). English orator, member of Parliament and official in the governments under Gladstone, an outstanding spokesman for the industrialists of Great Britain and opponent of the CORN LAWS.

Bright Shawl, The. See HERGESHEIMER, JOSEPH.

Bright Star! Would I Were Steadfast as Thou Art. A sonnet by Keats (1820), the last before his death, written in a volume of poems by Shakespeare and presented to his friend Severn on his departure to Italy.

Brigit. The Vesta or Minerva of the heathen Irish, inspirer of poetry and wisdom. Christian saint of same name called the Patroness of Ireland and the Mary of the Gael.

Brigliadaro. In Boiardo's ORLANDO INNAMORATO, the name of Orlando's horse. It means literally "golden bridle."

Brillat-Savarin, Anthelme (1755-1826). French politician and gourmet. His Physiologie du goût is a famous work on gastronomy.

Brimming Cup, The. A novel by Dorothy Canfield FISHER (1921), the story of how the heroine, Marise, chose to resist the attractions of an ardent, sophisticated and wealthy lover from the great world outside and remain in her little Vermont village, faithful to her husband and children. Rough Hewn (1922) relates the early life and love affair of Marise and her husband Neale.

Brinig, Myron (1900-). American novelist, best known for The Sisters (1937), author also of Madonna Without Child (1929), Out of Life (1935), All of Their Lives (1941), The Family Way (1942).

Brinvilliers, Marquise Marie Madeleine de (1630?-1676). Notorious French poisoner much written about; beheaded.

Brisbane, Arthur (1864-1936). Sensational American journalist and editorial writer for Hearst. The son of a radical economist. He was called "a master of the commonplace" and said to have written "down to the mass mind."

Briseida. Heroine of the Roman de Troie by BENOÎT DE SAINTE-MAURE. In the hands of BOCCACCIO this character became Criseida and was adopted by Chaucer in his Middle English version of the legend of TROILUS and CRESSIDA. The name Briseida is similar to BRISEIS, but the characters themselves are unlike.

Briseis. The patronymic name of Hippodamia, daughter of Briseus. She was the cause of the quarrel in the Iliad between Agamemnon and Achilles, and when the former robbed Achilles of her, Achilles refused any longer to go to battle, and the Greeks lost ground daily.

Brisingamen. In Norse mythology, the necklace of Freya. Brisingr means "fire" and men "necklace."

Bristol Boy, the. THOMAS CHATTERTON, the poet (1752-1770).

*The marvellous boy,
The sleepless soul that perished in his pride.*
Wordsworth, Resolution and Independence.

Britannia. A personification of the British Empire. The first known representation of Britannia as a female figure sitting on a globe, leaning with one arm on a shield, and grasping a spear in the other hand, is on a Roman coin of Antoninus Pius, who died 161 A. D. The figure reappeared on the English copper coin in the reign of Charles II, 1665, and the model was Frances Stewart, afterwards created Duchess of Richmond. The engraver was Philip Roetier, 1665.

Britannicus (41-55 A. D.). Son of Emperor Claudius and Messalina. Set aside by Agrippina in favor of her son, Nero. Poisoned by Nero. Subject of a tragedy by RACINE.

British Broadcasting Corporation (B.B.C.). Government-owned radio broadcasting body of Great Britain, established in 1927.

British Commonwealth of Nations. Great Britain and the British Dominions, with reference to the greater autonomy (self-government) of the dominions resulting from the Imperial Conferences, particularly in 1926, and from the Statute of Westminster in 1931. There are advocates of an expansion of the British Commonwealth of Nations to make it include the countries of Western Europe and others.

British lion, the. The pugnacity of the British nation, as opposed to the John Bull, which symbolizes the substantiality, solidity, and obstinacy of the people, with all their prejudices and national peculiarities. "Never," said an inspired broadcaster, "will the British lion be forced to retire into its shell and pull in its horns."

to rouse the British lion is to flourish a red flag in the face of John Bull; to provoke him to resistance even to the point of war.

to twist the tail of the British lion used to be a favorite phrase in America for attempting to annoy the British people and government by abuse and vituperation.

British Museum in London, containing science, literature, and art. Originally in Montague House in Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury. Opened to the public in 1759. During 1823-1847 the present building erected. The library contains over four million printed volumes. In the museum proper are the Elgin Marbles, the Egyptian Book of the Dead, and the Rosetta Stone. The Museum was badly damaged by air attack September 1940.

Britling, Mr. See MR. BRITLING SEES IT THROUGH.

Britomart. In Spenser's Faerie Queene, a female knight, daughter of King Ryence of Wales. She is the impersonation of chastity and purity; encounters the "savage, fierce bandit and mountaineer," without injury, and is assailed by "hag and unlaid ghost, goblin, and swart fairy of the mine," but "dashes their brute violence into sudden adoration and blank awe." She finally marries Artegal.

Spenser got the name, which means "sweet maiden," from Britomartis, a Cretan nymph of Greek mythology, who was very fond of the chase. King Minos fell in love with her, and persisted in his advances for nine months. She finally threw herself into the sea.

Brittain, Vera Mary (1893?-). English essayist and novelist. The Dark Tide (1923); etc. Her autobiographical Testament of Youth (1933) was very popular. Her Testament of Friendship (1940) is a tribute to Winifred Holtby.

Broad Highway, The. A historical novel by Jeffrey Farnol (Am. 1911) concerning the England of the early 18th century.

broadhorn. A kind of flatboat used especially on the Mississippi. An immense oar placed on roof, or on either side near bow making it look as though the boat had horns.

Broadhurst, George H. (1866-). Anglo-American dramatist. His The Man of the Hour (1907), a play about corrupt politics, and his Bought and Paid For (1913) were both successes.

broadside ballads. Popular songs and poems, written in doggerel, which were printed in BLACK LETTER on a single sheet of paper, decorated with woodcuts, with the name of the tune to which the ballads in question were to be sung, and sold for a penny or two on the street-corners of England in the late 16th and early 17th centuries. Their subject-matter was taken from political events, battles or wars, murders, strange happenings, executions, freakish births, domestic quarrels, and the like, and also included moral exhortations and religious propaganda during the Protestant-Catholic controversies. Thomas DELONEY was a ballad-writer, and peddlers of broadside ballads are introduced in Jonson's BARTHOLOMEW FAIR and in Shakespeare's character of AUTOLYCUS.

Broadway. A term synonymous with the American theater, from Broadway, the street on or near which the theaters of New York City are to be found. In a more general sense it denotes the gay night life of the American metropolis in an almost legendary conception.

Broadwood and Sons, John. Cooperated with Americus Bockers, Dutch piano maker, in manufacturing the first grand piano in England. See Kipling's reference to this make of piano in "The Song of the Banjo."

Brobdignag. In Swift's GULLIVER'S TRAVELS the country of gigantic giants, to whom Gulliver is a pigmy "not half so big as a round little worm plucked from the lazy finger of a maid." Hence the adjective, Brobdignagian, colossal, gigantic.

Broceliande. In Arthurian legend a magic forest in Brittany, where Merlin was enchanted by Vivian. Poem by Alan SEGER.

Broch, Hermann (1886-). Austrian novelist, connected with Princeton University. Known as the author of The Sleepwalker until publication of Der Tod des Vergil (Death of Virgil) (1945), a work which aroused a good deal of controversy in that some held it to outdo Joyce and Thomas Mann in a positive sense while others interpreted the comparison as a crushing verdict of artificiality and mannerism.

Brocken. The highest peak of the Harz range in Saxony. On the eve of May Day, i.e., the feast of Walburga (Walpurgis) or Walpurgis Night the Brocken was the scene of a witches' Sabbath.

the specter of the Brocken is an optical illusion, first observed on the Brocken, in which shadows of the spectators, greatly magnified, are projected on the mists about the summit of the mountain opposite. In one of DE QUINCEY's opium-dreams there is a powerful description of the Brocken specter.

Brocken, Henry. A novel by Walter DE LA MARE.

Brodie, Steve. American celebrity of the saloons and dance halls of New York City during the 1880's, reputed to have jumped from BROOKLYN BRIDGE into the East River in 1886.

Broken Stowage. A collection of sea sketches (1915) by David Bone.

Broken Tower, The. A poem by Hart CRANE, written in 1932, the last important work before his death by suicide. It uses bells and a bell-tower to symbolize the destruction of the physical body by the imagination.

Brom Bones. The nickname of Brom Van Brunt, Ichabod Crane's rival in Irving's LEGEND OF SLEEPY HOLLOW. "He was always ready for either a fight or a frolic."

Brome, Alexander (1620-1666). English poet, of Royalist sympathies during the English civil war, who wrote rousing songs for the Cavaliers. He is believed to be the author of Rump Songs (1662), a book of Royalist lyrics.

Bromfield, Louis (1896-). American novelist and short-story writer. Chief among his books are The Green Bay Tree (1924); Possession (1925); Early Autumn (1926), winner of the Pulitzer Prize; A Good Woman (1927); THE STRANGE CASE OF MISS ANNIE SPRAGG (1928); Twenty-Four Hours (1930); Awake and Rehearse (1929); A Modern Hero (1932); The Farm (1933); The Rains Came (1937); Night in Bombay (1940); Wild Is the River (1941); Until the Day Break (1942).

bromide and sulphite. Words coined by Gelett BURGESS in his humorous essay, Are You a Bromide, or The Sulphitic Theory (1906), which explain "the terms 'bromide' and 'sulphite' as applied to psychological rather than chemical analysis." The bromide, according to Burgess, "does his thinking by syndicate. He follows the main-traveled roads, he goes with the crowd." The sulphite, on the other hand, is unconventional, original, everything that the bromide is not.

Broncho, The, that would not be broken of Dancing. Poem by Vachel LINDSAY.

Bronstein, Lev Davidovitch. See TROTSKY, LEON.

Brontë, Anne (1820-1849). Sister of Charlotte and Emily BRONTË, author with them of poems and novels under the pseudonym of BELL. Her novels were Agnes Grey (1847) and The Tenant of Wildfell Hall (1848), which she published under the name of Acton Bell. See also BRONTË, PATRICK BRANWELL.

Brontë, Charlotte (1816-1855). English novelist, most famous of the three Brontë sisters (see BRONTË, ANNE and BRONTË, EMILY) and author with her sisters of poems and novels under the name of BELL. Her best-known and most successful novel is JANE EYRE (1847). Her other works are SHIRLEY (1849); Villette (1853); and Emma, a fragment published in 1860. She wrote under the pseudonym of Currer Bell. See also BRONTË, PATRICK BRANWELL.

Brontë, Emily (1818-1848). English novelist and poet, sister of Anne and Charlotte BRONTË, with whom she wrote poems and novels under the name of BELL, her pseudonym being Ellis Bell. The best of the poetry in Poems by Currer, Ellis, and Acton Bell (1846) was admitted to be hers. She is most famous for her novel Wuthering Heights (1848). Her work is notable for the spirit of passion and rebellion that it reveals. See also BRONTË, PATRICK BRANWELL.

Brontë, Patrick Branwell (1817-1848). Brother of Anne, Charlotte, and Emily BRONTË and tutor to them, shown to have been neurotic, tubercular, and addicted to opium.

Bronx, the. A borough of New York City, mainly residential and middle class, with a large Jewish population, frequently chosen as the scene of action by proletarian and humorous authors, among whom are Clifford ODETS and Arthur KOBER. Bronx and Manhattan are also cocktails.

Brook, Alexander (1898-). Distinguished American painter. Married Peggy Bacon 1920. Divorced 1940. Member National Institute of Arts and Letters, etc.

Brook Farm. A famous literary and economic community of a somewhat Utopian nature, more formally known as the Brook Farm Institute of Agriculture and Education, which was established in 1841 at West Roxbury, nine miles from Boston. Its members shared equally in work, benefits, and remuneration. It was disbanded in 1846. Its founder was the Rev. George Ripley and among its interested visitors of note were Emerson, Alcott, Theodore Parker, Margaret Fuller, and other Transcendentalists. Hawthorne's BLITHEDALE ROMANCE gives a picture of Brook Farm.

Brook Kerith, The. A historical novel by George Moore (1915), a presentation of the life of Jesus. The author follows the customary account as far as the Crucifixion, but later, according to the novel, JOSEPH OF ARIMATHEA finds Jesus still alive. For thirty years afterward he lives as a shepherd by the Brook Kerith. He is utterly disillusioned concerning his early belief in himself, which he considers blasphemy, and when finally he meets Paul the Apostle and hears his version of the story, he is horrified and plans to go to Jerusalem to confess. Paul, however, considers him mad, and he is forced to admit that his story would not be believed.

The ravens fed Elijah by this brook of Palestine, called in the Biblical narrative Cherith.

Brook, Master. In Shakespeare's MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR, the name assumed by Ford when Sir John Falstaff makes love to his wife. Sir John, not knowing him, confides to him every item of his amour.

Brooke, Dorothea. The heroine of George Eliot's MIDDLEMARCH. Her sister Celia and their uncle, Squire Brooke, with whom they live, are also prominent characters.

Brooke, Rupert (1887-1915). English poet. His best-known poems are Granichester, The Great Lover and his series of war sonnets entitled 1914. He died of sunstroke in service in the World War. ST. JOHN ERVINE is said to have drawn the hero of his novel Changing Winds from Rupert Brooke.

Brookfield, Jack. A professional gambler, one of the chief characters in the play, THE WITCHING HOUR by Augustus Thomas.

Brooklyn. A borough of New York City, manufacturing and residential, located on Long Island and separated from Manhattan by the East River. It was an independent city until 1898. WALT WHITMAN, HART CRANE, and Thomas WOLFE are among the literary men who have written of Brooklyn. See A TREE GROWS IN BROOKLYN, THE BRIDGE, and ONLY THE DEAD KNOW BROOKLYN.

Brooklyn Bridge. The first bridge built to connect BROOKLYN with Manhattan Island, started in 1869 and finished in 1883. Its designer was J. A. Roebling. Brooklyn Bridge is used as a symbol of man's achievement in Hart Crane's poem THE BRIDGE.

Brooklyn Dodgers. A local baseball club of the borough of BROOKLYN, popularized among the rest of the nation by the enthusiasm of its fans. It participated in the World Series of 1941 and 1947, in which it was defeated by the New York Yankees. See BASEBALL TEAMS.

Brooks, Cleanth (1906-). American literary critic, associated with the Southern group of poets and critics, including John Crowe RANSOM, Allen TATE, and Robert Penn WARREN, who in the late 1930's and the 1940's sought to give 20th-century literature the status in scholarship occupied by the older and better-established literatures. In Modern Poetry and the Tradition (1939) Brooks emphasizes the technical continuity between traditional English poetry and the poetry of the 20th century.

Brooks, Phillips (1835-1893). American Episcopal bishop. Author of the hymn O Little Town of Bethlehem.

Brooks, Van Wyck (1886-). American critic, best known for his interpretations of New England literature and literary figures. In his early critical writings he attacked the narrowness and insularity of the Puritan tradition and urged a broader, more unified cultural ideal for the nation. Chief among his works are The Wine of the Puritans (1909); America's Coming of Age (1915); The Ordeal of Mark Twain (1920); The Pilgrimage of Henry James (1925); Sketches in Criticism (1932); The Life of Emerson (1932); Three Essays on America (1934); THE FLOWERING OF NEW ENGLAND (1936); NEW ENGLAND: INDIAN SUMMER (1940); Opinions of Oliver Allston (1941); The World of Washington Irving (1944); The Times of Melville and Whitman (1947).

Brooks of Sheffield. A name used in place of that of an actual person, from an imaginary individual mentioned in David Copperfield to put little David off the scent that he was being referred to:

"Quinnion," said Mr. Murdstone, "take care, if you please. Somebody's sharp."
"Who is?" asked the gentleman, laughing.
"I looked up quickly; being curious to know."
"Only Brooks of Sheffield," said Mr. Murdstone.
"I was quite relieved to find it was only Brooks of Sheffield; for, at first, I really thought it was I." (Ch. ii.)

See HARRIS, MRS.

Brother, Can You Spare a Dime? American popular song of 1932, expressing an appeal for charity and testifying to the poverty and unemployment that followed the stock market crash of 1929 and the depression years of the early 1930's.

Brother Jonathan. Generic name for a New Englander, hence for Americans and America. One account of its origin tells how, when Washington was in want of ammunition, he called a council of officers, but no practical suggestion could be offered. "We must consult Brother Jonathan," said the general, meaning His Excellency Jonathan Trumbull, governor of the State of Connecticut. This was done, and the difficulty was remedied. "To consult Brother Jonathan" then became a set phrase, and Brother Jonathan became a name for the typical shrewd Yankee. He appears as a character in THE CONTRAST (1787), a play by Royall TYLER.

Brother Juniper. (1) See BRIDGE OF SAN LUIS REY, THE.

(2) One of St. Francis' early disciples.

Brothers' Bible. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Brothers Karamazov, The. A novel by Fyodor DOSTOYEVSKY (1879-1880), a story of three brothers. The oldest, Dmitri, quarrels violently with his father over money matters and over a woman, and when the father is found murdered, he is accused of the crime. In reality the old man has been killed by Smerdyakov, a fourth and illegitimate son who is a servant, subject to epilepsy. Ivan, the second son, discovers he has all unconsciously suggested the crime to Smerdyakov by his cynical philosophy. Smerdyakov commits suicide and Ivan tries in vain to save his brother Dmitri. There is a third brother, Alyosha, who also plays a prominent part in the novel. This is the author's best-known work, marked by the passionate introspection, argumentation, and intense social, political, and psychological analysis of all of Dostoyevsky's books. The three brothers represent three distinct types of the Russian national character during the 19th century—the soldier, the intellectual, and the religious mystic. See entries under KARAMAZOV.

Brown, (Matthew) Heywood Campbell (1888-1939). American newspaperman, known for his liberal sympathies and his firm opposition to social injustice. He wrote columns, articles, and dramatic criticism for the New York Tribune, World, and World-Telegram, the Scripps-Howard newspaper chain, THE NATION, and THE NEW REPUBLIC, was a radio commentator for a time, and once ran unsuccessfully for election as Congressman from New York City. Among his books are The A. E. F. (1918), an account of his service as a correspondent during World War I; Seeing Things at Night (1921), dramatic criticism; Pieces of Hate, And Other Enthusiasms (1922) and Sitting on the World (1924), both collections of pieces from his columns; An- thony Comstock (1927), a biography with Margaret Leech; and Christians Only (1931), dealing with ANTI-SEMITISM and written in collaboration with George Britt. In 1941 a posthumous volume of his collected writings was published. Mr. Brown liked to have his name pronounced Brown and not Broun.

Browdie, John. In Dickens' NICHOLAS NICKLEBY, a brawny, big-made Yorkshire corn-factor, bluff, honest, and kind-hearted. He befriends poor Smike, and is much attached to Nicholas Nickleby. John Browdie marries Matilda Price, a miller's daughter.

Brown, Alice (1857-1948). American novelist and dramatist. In 1914 won the Winthrop Ames prize for her play Children of Earth. The last of the traditional New England story writers. A poet and friend of Louise Imogen Guiney.

Brown, Buster, see BUSTER BROWN.

Brown, Captain. A likable character in Mrs. Gaskell's CRANFORD.

Brown, Charles Brockden (1771-1810). American novelist, writing in the tradition of the GOthic NOVEL. His works include: WIELAND, OR THE TRANSFORMATION (1798); Ormond, Or the Secret Witness (1799); Arthur Mervyn, Or Memoirs of the Year 1793 (1799-1800); Edgar Huntley, Or Memoirs of a Sleep Walker (1799); Clara Howard, in a Series of Letters (1801); and Jane Talbot (1801). He also wrote political tracts under the influence of the writings of William GODWIN.

Brown, Ford Madox (1821-1893). English painter, Romantic in tendency, who specialized in historical, religious, and literary subjects. His work served as inspiration to the PRE-RAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD.

Brown, John (1800-1859). Famous American abolitionist, fanatically devoted to his cause and known for his attack on Harpers Ferry in Virginia, October 16, 1859, when he and his men captured an armory and planned to free the Negro slaves by force. He was seized, tried, and hanged, and became a martyr in the eyes of his fellow abolitionists. The famous Union song of the Civil War, JOHN BROWN'S BODY, made him a legend. A number of authors, including WHITTIER, THOREAU, Edmund Clarence STEDMAN, and Stephen Vincent BENÉT, have written of John Brown and his exploit.

Brown, John (1810-1882). Scottish physician and friend of Thackeray and Ruskin. Wrote an immortal essay on the ten-year-old prodigy and pet of Sir Walter Scott, Marjorie Fleming.

Brown, John Mason (1900-). American dramatic critic. Served in Navy in World War II and wrote To All Hands: An Amphib- ious Adventure, foreword by Rear Admiral Alan G. Kirk, USN (1943), and Many a Watchful Night (1944). Among his other books are Upstage: The American Theater in Performance (1930); The Art of Playgoing (1936); Two On The Aisle (1938); Broadway in Review (1940). Cf. also his weekly dramatic department, "Seeing Things," in the Saturday Review of Literature.

Brown, Jones, and Robinson. The typification of middle-class Englishmen; from the adventures of three Continental tourists of these names which were told and illustrated in Punch in the 1870's by Richard Doyle. They hold up to ridicule the gaucherie, insular ideas, vulgarity, extravagance, conceit, and snobism that too often characterize the class.

Brown, Rollo Walter (1880-). American novelist and essayist. Has traveled widely as a lecturer.

Brown, Tom, see TOM BROWN.

Brown, Vanbeest. In Scott's GUY MANNERING, lieutenant of Dirk Hatteraick, the smuggler and mate of his vessel. Under this same name of Vanbeest Brown, the young Harry Bertram, the missing heir of Ellangowan, grows up believing that the "lieutenant" is his father.

Brown, Mrs. Zenith Jones, pseudonyms Leslie Ford, David Frome (1898-). Popular American writer of detective fiction.

brown Bess. The early British flintlock smoothbore musket with bronzed barrel.

Browne, Charles Farrar. See WARD, ARTEMUS.

Browne, Lewis (1897-1949). Popular historian and biographer. Wrote This Believing World, That Man Heine, and edited The Graphic Bible.

Browne, Sir Thomas (1605-1682). English physician, scholar, and author, famous for his wide and eccentric learning and his quaint, exotic prose style. His works are RELIGIO MEDICI (1643); Pseudodoxia Epidemica (1646), which was also called Vulgar Errors; Hydrotophia or Urn Burial, published with The Garden of Cyrus in 1658; and Christian Morals, edited in 1756 by Samuel JOHNSON.

Browne, William (ca. 1591-1643?). English poet, one of the Spenserian pastoral school of the early 17th century which also included George WITHER and John DAVIES of Hereford. He was the author of Two Elegies on the death of Prince Henry (1613) and Britannia's Pastorals (1613 and 1616). His poems were also published in The Shepherd's Pipe (1614), a book of eclogues in which Wither and Davies of Hereford were also represented.

Brownell, William Crary (1851-1928). American literary critic, writing in the tradition of Matthew ARNOLD. Among his works are French Traits (1889); Victorian Prose Masters (1901); Standards (1917); The Genius of Style (1924); Democratic Distinction in America (1927).

brownie. The house spirit in Scottish superstition. At night he is supposed to busy himself in doing little jobs for the family over which he presides. Farms are his favorite abode. Brownies are brown or tawny spirits, in opposition to fairies, which are fair ones. In America the adventures of the Brownies were popularized by a series of Brownie Books by Palmer Cox.

Browning, Edward W. ("Daddy"). New York real estate man, involved in a sensational suit for separation in the 1920's, brought by his wife, Frances Heenan ("Peaches") Browning, who at one time had been adopted by him. It achieved unsavory notoriety in the tabloid newspapers of the time. The case is considered to be satirically referred to in James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE, part I, third section:

... Old grum has his gel number two (bravevow, our Grum!) and he would like to canoodle her too some part of the time for he is downright fond of his number one but O he's fair mashed on peaches number two ...

Browning, Elizabeth Barrett (1806-1861). English poet, wife of Robert BROWNING, who was unknown when she was at the height of her popularity. Her work is marked by scholarship and humanitarian sympathies. She is best known for her SONNETS FROM THE PORTUGUESE (1850), a sequence of love sonnets addressed to her husband. Her other works are Essay on Mind, With Other Poems (1826); a translation of Prometheus Bound (1833), the drama by Aeschylus; The Seraphim And Other Poems (1838); Poems (1844); Casa Guidi Windows (1851); AURORA LEIGH (1857), a romance in blank verse; Poems Before Congress (1860); and Last Poems (1862). The Brownings were among the most celebrated of literary lovers. See also THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN, LADY GERALDINE'S COURTSHIP, and THE BARRETT'S OF WIMPOLE STREET.

Browning, John Moses (1855-1926). American designer of firearms. Son of a gunsmith. Inventor of Browning automatic pistol, model of 1911; Browning machine gun, model of 1917; Browning automatic rifle, model of 1918, used in World War I.

Browning, Robert (1812-1889). English poet, husband of Elizabeth Barrett BROWNING. His poetry is distinguished by its learning, its psychological analyses of character, and its use of the dramatic monologue; at the time of its first publication, much of it was considered obscure and "difficult." THE RING AND THE BOOK (1868-1869) is his most famous and most ambitious work. His other works include PARACELSUS (1835); STRAFFORD (1836), a play; SORDELLO (1840); BELLS AND POMEGRANATES (1841-1846); Christmas Eve and Easter Day (1850); Colombe's Birthday (1853); MEN AND WOMEN (1855); BALAUSTION'S ADVENTURE (1871); Dramatic Idylls (1879-1880); JOCOSERIA (1883); and Asolando (1889), published on the day he died. Among the poetic drama for which he is best known are PIPPA PASSES; A BLOT IN THE 'SCUTCHEON. His better-known poems are MY LAST DUCHESS; HOW THEY BROUGHT THE GOOD NEWS FROM GHENT TO AIX; THE LOST LEADER; SAUL; CALIBAN UPON SETEBOS; FRA LIPPO LIPPI; THE PIED PIPER OF HAMELIN; THE GLOVE; ANDREA DEL SARTO; A GRAMMARIAN'S FUNERAL. Browning was particularly fond of Italian Renaissance subjects.

Brownism. The teachings of Robert Browne (1550?-1633), an English divine, who first formulated the principles of Congregationalism.

Browns, the. In American baseball parlance, a nickname for the St. Louis Americans. See under BASEBALL TEAMS.

brown study. Absence of mind; apparent thought, but real vacuity. The corresponding French expression explains it—sombre rêverie. Sombre "somber" and brun "brown" both mean sad, melancholy, gloomy, dull.

Brownyn. One of the names given to the bear in Caxton's version of REYNARD THE FOX. See also BRUIN.

Broz, Josip. Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia.

Bruce. The Scottish national hero, Robert Bruce, who became king in 1306, is a prominent character in Jane Porter's SCOTTISH CHIEFS.

Bruce and the Spider, see under SPIDER.

Brücke. A German school of painting, founded in 1906 and located near Dresden. It was influenced by the art of Africa and the South Seas, primitive German religious art, and the drawings of children. Characteristic paintings were violent and melodramatic scenes from the theater and religion. Outstanding members of the group were Emil Nolde, Otto Mueller, Maurice Vlaminck, Heckel, and Pechstein. See BLAUE REITER.

Bruckner, Anton (1824-1896). Austrian composer of church and symphonic music, a friend of Richard WAGNER. His best-known composition is his Fourth, or "Romantic," Symphony. His work is considered to be rich in spiritual content.

Brueghel, also Bruegel or Breughel, Pieter the Elder (1525-1569). Flemish painter, known for his fresh and humorous scenes of robust peasant life, executed in brilliant colors.

He also painted religious pictures, amusing, moralizing subjects, and scenes of fantasy and witchcraft. He had two sons who were also painters: Pieter the Younger (1564?-1638), known as "Hell Brueghel" because of his fondness for painting scenes of devils, hell, and purgatory; and Jan, called "Velvet Brueghel" (1568-1625).

Bruere, Robert Walther (1876-) and Martha Bensley, his wife. American industrial researchers, joint authors of Increasing Home Efficiency.

Bruin. In Butler's HUDIBRAS, one of the leaders arrayed against the hero. His prototype in real life was Talgol, a Newgate butcher who obtained a captaincy for valor at Naseby. He marched next Orsin (Joshua Gosling, landlord of the bear-gardens at Southwark).

Sir Bruin. The bear in the famous German beast-epic, REYNARD THE FOX. See also BROWNNG.

Brumaire. The month in the French Republican Calendar from October 23rd to November 21st. It was named from brume fog (Lat. bruma, winter). The celebrated 18th Brumaire (November 9th, 1799) was the day on which the Directory was overthrown and Napoleon established his supremacy.

Brummagem. Worthless or very inferior metallic articles made in imitation of better ones. The word is a local form of the name Birmingham, England, the great mart and manufactory of gilt toys, cheap jewelry, imitation gems, and the like.

Brummel, Beau, see BEAU BRUMMEL.

Brunelleschi (Filippo di Ser Brunellesco) (1377-1446). Florentine architect, sculptor, and engineer, friend of DONATELLO. Among the edifices that he built are: the great dome of the Cathedral of Florence (1420-1434); the Pazzi Chapel (1429); the Ospedale dei Innocenti (1419); and San Lorenzo, the church of the MEDICI family. He is said to have been the first artist of the Renaissance to rediscover perspective.

Brunetière, Vincent de Paul Marie Ferdinand (1849-1906). French literary critic, conservative and neoclassical in his tastes, known for his attempts to apply the principles of Darwinian evolution to the interpretation of literature and for his strong opposition to the school of NATURALISM. Among his most important works are: Le Roman Naturaliste (1883); Études critiques sur la littérature française (1880-1907); Évolution des genres (1890-1894); and Histoire de la littérature française classique (1904-), left incomplete at the time of his death.

Brunetto Latini (1212?-1294). Florentine scholar, called "master" by DANTE Alighieri but nevertheless, because of his vices, placed among the tortured in Dante's Inferno (Canto XV), in the region reserved for those who have been violent against themselves, against art, against life, or against God and man. Brunetto Latini was the author of the Liure du trésor (1265), a work written in French.

Brunhild. A heroine of Teutonic and Scandinavian legend. In the NIBELUNGENLIED she is the Queen of Issland, who makes a vow that none shall win her who cannot surpass her in three trials of skill and strength: (1) hurling a spear; (2) throwing a stone; and (3) jumping. Gunther, king of Burgundy, undertakes the three contests, and by the aid of Siegfried, who is clad in his invisible cloak, succeeds in winning the martial Queen. After marriage Brunhild is so obstreperous that the King again applied to Siegfried, who succeeds in depriving her of her ring and girdle, after which she became a very submissive wife. In the VOLSUNGA SAGA, the Scandinavian version of the Nibelungenlied, Brunhild is a Valkyrie who becomes a mortal, and Wagner follows this version in his Nibelungen Ring. Brunhild plays a leading rôle in Die Walküre, Siegfried and Götterdämmerung, three of the four operas of the Ring. For the story, see NIBELUNGEN RING.

Bruno, Giordano (ca. 1548-1600). Italian philosopher, a lecturer in Switzerland, Germany, France, and England. He was a critic of the Christianity of his day, and in his thought upheld a mystical philosophy of pantheism, derived largely from NEO-PLATONISM, which saw God as the unifying force in an infinite, varied, and complex universe, itself a manifestation of God, and the soul of man as a self-existent universe in miniature, contemplating divine unity. For these beliefs and for his support of the COPERNICAN system of astronomy, Bruno was imprisoned, excommunicated, and burned at the stake by the Inquisition. He wrote a number of metaphysical treatises in Latin and Italian, including Della Causa, Principio, ed Uno; Del' Infinito, Universo, e Mondi; De Triplici Minimo et Mensura; De Monade, Numero, et Figura; De Immenso et Innumerabilibus. The first two were written in 1583; the latter three were published in 1590. Among his other works are Il Candelaio, a satirical comedy; Cena de la Ceneri, containing a criticism of English life as he observed it during his stay at Oxford in 1583; Gli Heroici Furori, Cabala del Cavallo Pegaseo, and Spaccio della Bestia Trionfante, mystical and allegorical poems. Edmund Spenser's FOUR HYMNS TO LOVE AND BEAUTY are considered by some critics to show the influence of Bruno. James Joyce was another admirer of the Italian and his philosophy, and Bruno is alluded to throughout FINNEGANS WAKE under a number of epithets, including "Nolan," which refers to his birthplace near Nola, in Italy.

Brush, George de Forest (1855-1941). American figure and portrait painter.

Brush, Katherine (1902-). American author of best-selling books of love, marriage, and adultery, often in an atmosphere of metropolitan "glamor." These include Young Man of Manhattan (1930); Red-Headed Woman (1931); Other Women (1933). Several were made into successful motion pictures.

Brushwood Boy, The. A famous dream story by RUDYARD KIPLING (1898).

Brut. A chronicle of British history beginning with the mythical BRUT, and so named from him. Wace's Le Roman de Brut, or Brut d'Angleterre, written in French about 1150, is a rhythmical version of GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH's Historia Regum Britanniae with additional legends. It is here that first mention is made of Arthur's Round Table. Wace's work formed the basis of Layamon's Brut (early 13th century), a history of England from the fall of Troy to 689 A.D. Layamon's poem, written in alliterative verse with occasional rhymes, contains 32,250 lines: Wace's has over 14,000. See also ARTHUR.

Brut or Brutus. In the mythological history of England, the first king of the Britons, son of Sylvius (grandson of Ascanius and great-grandson of Aeneas). Having inadvertently killed his father, he first takes refuge in Greece and then in Britain. In remembrance of Troy, he calls the capital of his kingdom TROYNOVANT, the later London. His tale is told at length in the Chronicles of Geoffrey of Monmouth, in the first song of Drayton's Polyolbion, and in Spenser's Faerie Queene, ii.

Brutus, Lucius Junius. In legend, the first consul of Rome, fabled to have held office about 509 B.C. He condemned to death his own two sons for joining a conspiracy to restore to the throne the banished Tarquin. He was—

The public father who the private quelled,
And on the dread tribunal sternly sat.
Thomson, Winter.

This subject was dramatized by N. Lee (1679) and John H. Payne, under the title of Brutus, or The Fall of Tarquin (1820). Alfieri, in 1783, wrote an Italian tragedy on the same subject. In French we have the tragedies of Arnault (1792) and Ponsard (1843) both entitled Lucrèce. See LUCRETIA.

The Spanish Brutus. Alonso Pérez de Guzmán (1258-1320?). While he was governor, Castile was besieged by Don Juan, who had revolted from his brother, Sancho IV. Juan, who held in captivity one of the sons of Guzmán, threatened to cut his throat unless Guzmán surrendered the city. Guzmán replied, "Sooner than be a traitor, I would myself lend you a sword to slay him," and he threw a sword over the city wall. The son, we are told, was slain by the father's sword before his eyes.

Brutus, Marcus (85-42 B.C.) Caesar's friend, who joined the conspirators to murder him because he made himself a dictator. This Brutus is the real hero of Shakespeare's tragedy of Julius Caesar, and the poet endows him with every quality of a true patriot. He loves Caesar much, but he loves Rome more.

et tu, Brute. What! Does my own familiar friend lift up his hand against me? The reference is to the exclamation of Julius Caesar when he saw that his old friend was one of the conspirators against him.

Bruyère, Jean de La, see LA BRUYÈRE.

Bryan, Bryan, Bryan, Bryan! A poem by Vachel LINDSAY.

Bryan, William Jennings (1860-1925). American lawyer, Democratic candidate for the presidency of the U.S. in 1896, 1900, and 1908, Secretary of State in the Cabinet of Woodrow Wilson from 1913 to 1915. He was famous for his "Cross of Gold" speech in 1896 (see CROSS OF GOLD, THE), and was a prominent CHAUTAUQUA lecturer and a leader in the PROHIBITION movement. He was last in the public eye in 1925, when he took part in the notorious SCOPES TRIAL. See also DARWINISM and DARROW, CLARENCE.

Bryant, William Cullen (1794-1878). American poet, among the first of any genuine talent to be produced by the U.S., author mainly of nature poetry, in which he was influenced by WORDSWORTH. He is best known for THANATOPSIS (1817), considered by some critics to be the first great poem written by an American. Other well-known single poems are To a Waterfowl; To the Fringed Gentian; A Forest Hymn; Rizpah. Published volumes of his poems include Poems (1821); Poems (1832); The Fountain (1842); Thirty Poems (1864); The Little People of the Snow (1873); and The Flood of Years (1878). Bryant also wrote essays and speeches, represented in Letters of a Traveler (1850, 1859), and was editor of the New York EVENING POST from 1829 until his death.

Bryce, James (1838-1922). English author and statesman, ambassador to the U.S. from 1907 to 1913. He is best known for The Holy Roman Empire (1864) and The American Commonwealth (1888), both studies in history and political science. He wrote a number of other books also, on travel, biography, jurisprudence, and political science.

Brynhild. The Valkyrie awakened by Sigurd in the Scandinavian VOLSUNGA SAGA. See BRUNHILD.

B's, three. In music, BACH, BEETHOVEN, and BRAHMS, so designated by many critics as a trinity of great composers. In French literature, also, this term has been applied to the writers BARRÈS, BOURGET, and BRUNETIÈRE, who became Catholics or Conservatives in reaction against the school of NATURALISM.

B.S. degree. Bachelor of science; the degree conferred upon the completion of a four years' college course or its equivalent, with major work in scientific studies. See also ARTS.

Bubastis. (1) Greek name of Bast, or Pasht, the Diana of Egyptian mythology. She was daughter of Isis and sister of Horus, and her sacred animal was the cat.

(2) An ancient Egyptian city.

bubble, or bubble scheme. A project or scheme of no sterling worth and of very ephemeral duration—as worthless and frail as a bubble. See MISSISSIPPI; SOUTH SEA.

Bubble Act. An Act of George I, passed in 1719, its object being to punish the promoters of bubble schemes. It was repealed in 1825.

bucentaur. A gaily ornamented ship or barge, from the name of the Venetian state-galley employed by the Doge when he went on Ascension Day to wed the Adriatic. The word is Gr. bous, ox, and centauros, centaur; and the original galley was probably ornamented with a man-headed ox. It. bucentoro.

Bucephalus (Gr. boukephalos "bull-headed"). A horse. Strictly speaking, the favorite charger of Alexander the Great. By taming him Alexander fulfilled an oracle as to the succession to the throne of Macedon.

Buchan, John, 1st Baron Tweedsmuir (1875-1940). Scottish novelist, biographer, historian, diplomat, in 1935 Governor-General of Canada. His Cromwell is a fine biography. His romantic fiction, of which The Thirty-Nine Steps became an outstanding motion picture, is above average. He wrote A History of the Great War in four volumes.

Buchanan, James (1791-1868). Fifteenth President of the U.S. during years just preceding Civil War (1857-1861).

Buchanan, Robert Williams (1841-1901). British poet and novelist. Attacked Swinburne in Spectator (1866), and Pre-Raphaelites in The Fleshly School of Poetry; Contemporary Review (1871).

Buck. The dog hero of Jack London's CALL OF THE WILD, the offspring of a St. Bernard father and a Scotch shepherd dog.

Buck, Paul Herman (1899-). American historian and university professor. Received the Pulitzer Prize for History (1938) for his book on post-Civil War reconstruction, The Road to Reunion: 1865-1900.

Buck, Pearl Sydenstricker (1892-). American novelist, raised in China and best known for her books on Chinese life, for which she won the Nobel Prize in 1938. Her most famous novel is THE GOOD EARTH (1931), awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1932 and made into a play and a motion picture. Among her other books are East Wind: West Wind (1930); The Young Revolutionist (1932); Sons (1932); The First Wife, And Other Stories (1933); The Mother (1934); A House Divided (1935), which, with The Good Earth and Sons, was published as a trilogy, The House of Earth (1935); The Exile (1936); This Proud Heart (1938); The Patriot (1939); Other Gods (1940); Today and Forever (1941), short stories. She also translated the Chinese classic, Shui Hu Chuan, a picaresque novel, as All Men Are Brothers (1933).

Bucket, Mr. In Dickens' Bleak House, a shrewd detective officer, who cleverly discovers that Hortense, the French maidservant of Lady Dedlock, was the murderer of Mr. Tulkinghorn, and not Lady Dedlock who was charged with the deed by Hortense. Swinburne, speaking of the detectives of fiction, calls Bucket "that matchless master of them all," and "the incomparable Mr. Bucket."

Buck-eye State. Ohio. See under STATES.

Buckingham, George Villiers, 1st Duke of (1592-1628). The profligate favorite of James I, who because of his beauty called him "Steenie," a pet corruption of Stephen, whose face at martyrdom was "as the face of an angel." This was the duke who was assassinated by Fenton (1592-1628). He is introduced by Walter Scott in THE FORTUNES OF NIGEL and by Dumas in his THREE MUSKETEERS.

George Villiers, second duke of Buckingham. Son of the preceding, and favorite of Charles II. He made the "whole body of vice his study." His name furnishes the third letter of the famous anagram "Cabal." This was the Duke who wrote The Rehearsal. He is introduced by Walter Scott in WOODSTOCK and PEVERIL OF THE PEAK, and by Dryden in his ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, where he is called ZIMRI.

Off with his head! so much for Buckingham! A famous line, often searched for in vain in Shakespeare's Richard III. It is not to be found there, but is in Act iv, Sc. iii, of Colley Cibber's The Tragical History of Richard III, altered from Shakespeare (1700).

Buck in the Snow, The. A volume of poems by Edna St. Vincent MILLAY.

Bucklaw, Laird of. Frank Hayston. Lucy's suitor in Scott's BRIDE OF LAMMERMOOR.

Buckle, Henry Thomas (1821-1862). English historian, known for his theories of the influence of climate and soil on history and civilization. He planned a large work on this subject, but only the first two volumes, History of Civilization in England (1857, 1861), which were intended as an introduction, were completed at the time of his death.

Buck-tail. A member of the American Democratic-Republican Party. It originally referred to TAMMANY.

bucolic. A term referring to shepherds or herdsmen. Virgil's pastoral poems are called Bucolics. See IDYLL.

Buddenbrook, Hanno. In BUDDENBROOKS, by Thomas Mann, the son of Thomas Buddenbrooks and the last of the declining family. He is frail and sickly, fond of the music of Richard WAGNER and possessed of an aesthetic yearning which is considered to be symbolic of the family's material decay, since in Mann's novels pure aestheticism is often synonymous with death. See TONIO KRÖGER.

Buddenbrooks. An early novel by Thomas MANN, first published as Buddenbrooks: Verfall einer Familie (1901) and brought out in an American translation in 1924. It deals with the decline and dissolution of a prosperous, conservative, and honored German family of merchants in the 18th and 19th centuries. The family's loss of money and commercial power is paralleled by an increase in its members' interest in art and learning and a growing dominance of the Swiss and French strains in its blood. The leading characters include Johann Buddenbrook, patriarch of the family at the time the novel opens; Consul Buddenbrook, his son; Antonie, Christian, and Thomas, children of the Consul; and Hanno Buddenbrook, Thomas' son.

Buddha (Sans. "the enlightened"). The title given to Prince Siddhartha or GAUTAMA, also called (from the name of his tribe, the Sakhyas) Sakya muni, the founder of Buddhism, who lived in the 6th century B. C.

Buddhism. The system of religion inaugurated by the Buddha in India in the 6th century B. C.

The four sublime verities of Buddhism, i.e., the "Four Aryan or Noble Truths," are as follows:

- (1) Pain exists.
- (2) The cause of pain is "birth sin." The Buddhist supposes that man has passed through many previous existences, and all the heaped-up sins accumulated in these previous states constitute man's "birth sin."
- (3) Pain is ended only by Nirvana.

(4) The way that leads to Nirvana is the "Eightfold Path"—right faith, right judgment, right language, right purpose, right practice, right obedience, right memory, and right meditation (eight in all).

The abstract nature of the religion, together with the overgrowth of its monastic system and the superior vitality and energy of Brahminism, caused it to decline in India itself; but it spread rapidly in the surrounding countries and took so permanent a hold that it is computed that at the present time it has some 140,000,000 adherents, of whom ten and three-fourths millions are in India, and the rest principally in Ceylon, Tibet, China, and Japan.

Esoteric Buddhism. See THEOSOPHY.

Budënný, Semën Mikhailovich (1883–). Russian general. Active in Revolution of 1917; joined Red Army 1918; cavalry leader against Denikin and Wrangel; marshal of Soviet Union from 1935; member of Central Committee of Communist Party from 1939; first vice-commissar of defense 1940; in command of southern front July–November 1941.

Bufano, Remo. American puppeteer. Pinnocchio for the Stage in Four Short Plays (1929); The Show Book of Remo Bufano: Seven Plays for Marionettes and People (1929); Be a Puppet Showman (1933); Magic Strings, Marionette Plays (1939).

Buffalo Bill. A venturesome pony-express rider and scout, the name under which the daredevil exploits of Col. William F. Cody attained dime-novel fame.

buffalo soldiers. Colored soldiers serving in the west. The Indians called them so because their woolly heads looked like the matted wool between a bison's horns.

buffer state. A small, self-governing state separating two larger states, and thus tending to prevent hostilities between the two. The term seems to have originated on the northwest frontiers of India.

Buffon, Georges-Louis Leclerc, Comte de (1707–1788). French naturalist, best known for his Histoire naturelle (1749–1788), Époques de la nature, appearing after 1774, and his Théorie de la terre. These works deal with the earth, minerals, the animals, and man. Buffon helped lay the foundations for 19th-century work in natural science, especially zoology, and was the first to write a history of the earth as a series of successive geological stages. His style is vivid and eloquent.

Buford, Chad. The hero of THE LITTLE SHEPHERD OF KINGDOM COME by John Fox.

bug. An old word for goblin, sprite, bogey; probably from Welsh bug, a ghost. The word is used in Coverdale's Bible, which was afterwards known as the "Bug Bible" (see BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED), and survives in bogle, bogy, and in bugaboo, a monster or goblin, introduced into the tales of the old Italian romancers, and bugbear, a scarecrow, or sort of hobgoblin in the form of a bear.

big bug. A person of importance—especially in his own eyes; a swell; a pompous or conceited man. There is an old adjective bug, meaning pompous, proud.

buhlwork. See BOULLE.

Builders, The. See GLASGOW, ELLEN.

Building of the Ship, The. Poem (1870) by Longfellow. Quoted from by Franklin D. Roosevelt to Winston Churchill during World War II.

Bukharin, Nikolai Ivanovich (1888–1938). Russian Communist leader and editor. Edited 1916 Novy Mir (The New World) in New York City. Head of Third International (1926–1929); expelled from Communist Party, again admitted, suspected of support of Trotsky; arrested, tried, executed with other Bolshevik leaders (1938); wrote several works on Communism.

Bulba, Taras, see TARAS BULBA.

Bulbo, Prince. A character in Thackeray's ROSE AND THE RING.

Bulfinch, Thomas (1796–1867). American scholar and popularizer of mythology, author of The Age of Fable (1855), The Age of Chivalry, Legends of Charlemagne, etc., based upon classical, Oriental and medieval legends.

bull. A blunder, or inadvertent contradiction of terms, for which the Irish are proverbial.

In astronomy, the English name of the northern constellation (Lat. Taurus) which contains Aldebaran and the Pleiades; also the sign of the zodiac that the sun enters about April 22nd and leaves a month later. It is between Aries and Gemini. The time for ploughing, which in the East was performed by oxen or bulls.

Papal bull. An edict or mandate issued by the Pope, so called from the heavy laden seal (Lat. bulla) appended to the document. See GOLDEN BULL.

a bull in a china shop. A maladroit hand interfering with a delicate business; one who produces reckless destruction.

take the bull by the horns. To attack or encounter a threatened danger fearlessly; to go forth boldly to meet a difficulty.

John Bull, see JOHN BULL.

Bull, Ole Bornemann (1810–1880). Norwegian violinist. Toured as virtuoso through Europe and five times through North America. Spent last years of life in Cambridge, Mass.

bulla. In Roman antiquity, a small case of metal or leather containing amulets and suspended by a cord around the neck.

it is long
 Since Time was first a fledgeling;
 Yet thou may'st be but as a pendant bulla
 Against his stripling bosom swung.
 Francis Thompson, Anthem of Earth.

Bullard, Arthur. Pseudonym Albert Edwards (1879-1929). American foreign correspondent; in State Department's Russian division. Wrote Comrade Yetta, a novel of Socialism, etc.

bulldozer. One who bulldozes, i.e., intimidates by threats of violence. Hence, in World War II a heavy wheeled machine with a driver used to flatten the terrain.

Bullen, Frank Thomas (1857-1915). English writer of sea stories. Wrote The Cruise of the "Cachalot" (1898).

Bullion State. Missouri. See under STATES.

Bullitt, William Christian (1891-). American diplomat. U.S. ambassador to Russia (1933-1936), to France (1936-1940). Special assistant to Secretary of Navy, June 1942.

Bull Moose Party. Formed by Theodore Roosevelt in presidential campaign of 1912. Said to have originated from a remark made by him that he "felt like a bull moose." The Progressive Party.

Bülów, Hans Guido, Freiherr von (1830-1894). Celebrated German pianist and orchestral conductor. His wife, Cosima Liszt, after a divorce, became the wife of Richard WAGNER.

Bulwer-Lytton, see LYTTON.

Bumble. In Dickens' Oliver Twist, beadle of the workhouse where Oliver Twist was born and brought up, stout, consequential, hard-hearted, fussy official, with mighty ideas of his own importance. This character has given to the language the word bumbledom, the officious arrogance and bumptious conceit of a parish authority or petty dignitary. After marriage with Mrs. Corney, the high and mighty beadle is sadly henpecked and reduced to a Jerry Sneak.

Bumboat Woman, The. Heroine of one of the most popular of Sir William Gilbert's BAB BALLADS. Her name is Poll Pineapple, and she sails in seaman's clothes with Lieutenant Belaye in the Hot Cross-Bun. Jack tars generally greet each other with "Messmate, ho! what cheer?" but the greeting on the Hot Cross-Bun is always, "How do you do, my dear?" and never is any oath more naughty than "Dear me!" One day, Lieutenant Belaye comes on board and says to his crew, "Here, messmates, is my wife, for I have just come from church." Thereupon they all faint and it is found that the crew consists of young women only, who have dressed like sailors to follow the fate of the handsome lieutenant. ...

bumping race. An English rowing race in which boats start at a fixed distance from each other and each tries to overtake and bump the boat ahead of it, taking its place in the next race if it does so.

Bumppo, Natty. The central figure of Cooper's Leatherstocking series, better known as LEATHERSTOCKING.

Bunch, Mother. A noted London alewife of the late Elizabethan period, on whose name have been fathered many jests and anecdotes, and who is mentioned more than once in Elizabethan drama, e.g.:

Now, now, mother Bunch, how dost thou? What, dost frowne, Queene Gwyniver, dost wrinkle?
 Dekker, Satromastix, III. 1.

In 1604 was published Pasquil's Jestes, mixed with Mother Bunches Merriments and in the "Epistle to the Merrie Reader" is given a humorous description of her:

... She spent most of her time in telling of tales, and when she laughed, she was heard from Aldgate to the Monuments at Westminster, and all Southwaik stood in amazement, the Lyons in the Tower, and the Bulls and Beares of Parish Garden roar'd louder than the great roaring Megge . . . She dwelt in Cornhill, neere the Exchange, and sold strong Ale . . . and lived an hundreth, seventy and five yeares, two dayes and a quarter, and halfe a minute.

Other books were named after her, such, for instance, as Mother Bunch's Closet newly Broke Open, "containing rare secrets of art and nature, tried and experienced by learned philosophers, and recommended to all ingenious young men and maids, teaching them how to get good wives and husbands."

Buncombe, bunkum. Claptrap. The story is that a representative at Washington being asked why he made such a flowery speech, so wholly uncalled for, made answer, "I was not speaking to the House, but to Buncombe," the county in North Carolina which he represented.

bundling. Occupying the same bed without undressing—a custom prevailing in courtship in the less sophisticated portions of New England, New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania. Probably a survival from pioneering days when the importance of courtship was recognized but could not lay claim to a heated room.

Bungay. In Thackeray's Pendennis, bookseller and publisher of the Pall Mall Gazette, edited by Captain Shannon. He publishes Arthur's novel.

Bungay or Bongay, Friar. A famous necromancer of the 15th century, whose story is much overlaid with legend. It is said that he "raised mists and vapors which befriended Edward IV at the battle of Barnet." In the old prose romance, The Famous History of Friar Bacon, and in Greene's Honourable History of Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay (acted 1591), he appears as the assistant to Roger Bacon (d. 1292) in his diabolical scientific experiments, and he is also in Bulwer-Lytton's LAST OF THE BARONS.

Bunin, Ivan Alexeyevich (1870–). Russian poet and novelist who won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1933. Reported destitute in Unoccupied France in 1941.

Bunker Hill, Bunker Hill Day. See under CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

Bunner, Henry Cuyler (1855–1896). American journalist and short-story writer, one of the first to write of simple people in the great cities of the nation, a forerunner of O. HENRY. Among the collections of his stories are Short Sixes (1890); The Runaway Browns (1892); More Short Sixes (1894); Love in Old Clothes (1896).

Bunsby, Captain John or Jack. In Dickens' DOMBEY AND SON, the owner of the Cautious Clara. Captain Cuttle considers him "a philosopher, and quite an oracle." Captain Bunsby has one "stationary and one revolving eye," and a very red face, and is extremely taciturn. The Captain is trapped by Mrs. McStinger, the termagant landlady of his friend, Captain Cuttle, into marrying her.

Bunsen burner. Used for heating purposes in every chemical laboratory. Invented by Robert Wilhelm Eberhard Bunsen, German chemist (1811–1899).

Bunthorne, Reginald. The hero of Gilbert and Sullivan's comic opera PATIENCE, the subtitle of which is Bunthorne's Bride. He is reputed to be a caricature of Oscar WILDE.

Buntline, Ned. Pseudonym of Edward Z. C. JUDSON.

Bunyan, John (1628–1688). English prose writer, a non-conformist lay preacher, twice imprisoned under the Stuart restoration for his beliefs, who became famous for his religious allegories. The most celebrated of his works, in many quarters almost as widely read as the Bible, is THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS FROM THIS WORLD TO THAT WHICH IS TO COME (1678), written during an imprisonment of six months. His other writings, all religious in character, most of them allegorical, are: The Holy City, Or the New Jerusalem (1665); Grace Abounding to the Chief of Sinners (1666); A Confession of My Faith and a Reason of My Practice (1672); The Life and Death of Mr. Badman (1680); The Holy War (1682). (See separate entries.) Bunyan's only literary influence was the Bible, and his style is simple, vigorous, and concrete, highly praised by critics.

Bunyan, Paul. A legendary hero of the lumber camps of the American Northwest. Many tales are told of his feats in a sort of chapbook called Paul Bunyan Comes West.

The dragging of his pick behind him cuts out the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. When he builds a hotel he has "the last seven stories put on hinges so's they could be swung back for to let the moon go by." Innumerable stories of the prowess of this remarkable Paul Bunyan have been invented by the lumbermen for their own amusement.

Burbage, James (d. 1597). English actor, who, in 1576, built the first theatre in England specifically intended for stage performances. Moved to a different site, the building became the Globe Theatre in 1598, later the scene of the presentation of many of Shakespeare's plays. See also BURBAGE, RICHARD.

Burbage, Richard (1567?–1619). English actor, son of James BURBAGE. He performed in plays by Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, and Beaumont and Fletcher, being particularly celebrated for his rôles in tragedy. He was a member of the Lord Chamberlain's Men, and was also a painter of some note. The Felton portrait of Shakespeare has been attributed to him.

Burbank, Luther (1849–1926). American scientist, known for his experiments in plant-breeding. He improved a number of varieties of plants, including the potato, citrus fruits, corn, tomatoes, berries, cacti, and the like.

Burbon. In Spenser's Faerie Queene (Bk. v) the lover of Fleurdelis (France), typifying Henry of Navarre. He is assailed by a rabble rout, who batter his shield to pieces, and compel him to cast it aside. The rabble rout is the Roman Catholic party that tried to throw him off; the shield he is compelled to abandon is Protestantism; his carrying off Fleurdelis is his obtaining the kingdom by a coup after his renunciation of the Protestant cause.

Burchell, Mr. The name assumed by Sir William THORNHILL in Goldsmith's VICAR OF WAKEFIELD.

Burckhardt, Jakob Christoph (1818–1897). Swiss historian of art and culture, best known for his monumental work, Die Kultur der Renaissance in Italien (The Civilization of the Renaissance in Italy) (1885). Teacher of NIETZSCHE.

Burchfield, Charles Ephraim (1893–). American landscape painter.

Burd, Helen, see HELEN BURD.

Bureau of Internal Revenue. A bureau of the Treasury Department, collecting taxes and revenue levied within the country.

Bureau of Standards. A bureau of the Commerce Department. In its care are all standards of weights and measures used in the U.S. burgee. A swallow-tailed or triangular flag used as a pennant by yachts and merchant vessels.

Burgess, Frank Gelett (1866-). American humorist, author of Goops and How to Be Them (1900), Are you a Bromide (1906), etc. See GOOP; BROMIDE; BLURB.

Burgess, Thornton Waldo (1874-). American author of Bedtime Stories, a syndicated series of animal stories for children, beginning in 1912 and appearing daily in numerous newspapers throughout the U.S. He also published a large number of his stories in book-form.

Burglar of the Zodiac, The. See BENÉT, WILLIAM ROSE.

Burgoyne, John (1722-1792). British army officer and dramatist. Forced to surrender to the Americans at Saratoga in 1777. Participated in impeachment of Warren HASTINGS. Garrick produced his The Maid of the Oaks (1775) and The Heiress was played in 1786.

Burgundy, Charles the Bold, duke of. A historical personage introduced by Scott in his Quentin Durward and in Anne of Geierstein. The latter novel contains an account of the Duke's defeat at Nancy, and his death.

Buridan's ass. A man of indecision; like one "on double business bound, who stands in pause where he should first begin and both neglects." Buridan is reputed by differing authorities to be either a Greek sophist or a French scholastic philosopher who died about 1360. He is credited with inventing the well-known sophism:

If a hungry ass were placed exactly between two haystacks in every respect equal, it would starve to death, because there would be no motive why it should go to one rather than to the other.

Buried Alive. See BENNETT, ENOCH ARNOLD.

Burke, Edmund (1729-1797). English statesman and author, born in Ireland, known for his orations as a member of Parliament. He was sympathetic toward the American colonies and the Irish Catholics, and was a strong enemy of the French Revolution. Among his most famous speeches are ON AMERICAN TAXATION (1774); ON CONCILIATION WITH THE COLONIES (1775); On the Nabob of Arcot's Private Debts (1785). His published works include: A Vindication of Natural Society (1756); A PHILOSOPHICAL INQUIRY INTO THE ORIGIN OF OUR IDEAS OF THE SUBLIME AND BEAUTIFUL (1756), his most ambitious work; Observations on the Present State of the Nation (1769); Letter to the Sheriffs of Bristol (1777); REFLECTIONS ON THE FRENCH REVOLUTION (1790); Letters on a Regicide Peace (1795-1797). He was associated with the literary groups of the 18th century. His influence on early 19th century German national economists is particularly pronounced.

Burke, Kenneth Duva (1897-). American literary critic and author. His works include The White Oxen (1924), short stories; Counterstatement (1931), criticism; Permanence and Change (1935), a study of the evolution of ethics; Attitudes toward History (1937), a psychological study of history; The Philosophy of Literary Form (1941), aesthetics.

Burke, Tom, see TOM BURKE.

Burke, Thomas (1886-1945). English novelist and essayist. He told exciting melodramatic stories of the Limehouse district of London, the best-known of which, perhaps, is Broken Blossoms.

burlesque. Stage entertainment featuring low comedy, obscene humor, lewd dancing, and an exploitation of nakedness. It was introduced in the U.S. during the 1860's, after the first appearance of women's tights in the performances of Lydia Thompson, Adah Isaacs Menken, and THE BLACK CROOK. During the latter part of the 19th century, attendance at burlesque shows was often surreptitious and under the threat of a police raid, and was considered an exciting adventure. By the 1930's, however, burlesque had declined greatly in popularity because of competition by the musical-comedy and revue stage and the motion pictures, and because its increasing license had brought about legal restrictions against it. The word comes ultimately from Italian burla "joke, jest."

Burlingame, William Roger (1889-). Author, grandson of Anson Burlingame, American lawyer and diplomat. Wrote March of the Iron Men (1938), Engines of Democracy (1940).

Burman, Ben Lucien (1895-). American author. Wrote Steamboat Round the Bend (1933), filmed with Will Rogers as star (1935).

Burnand, Sir Francis Cowley (1836-1917). English playwright and editor of Punch (1880-1906). Author of many burlesques including Cox and Box with music by Sir Arthur Sullivan (1867). Happy Thoughts, originally a series in Punch has been widely read.

Burne-Jones, Sir Edward Coley (1833-1898). English painter, member of the PRERAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD, accorded wide public adulation. He painted classical, religious, medieval, literary, and symbolic scenes, marked by mysticism, emotion, and exotic decoration.

Burnet, Gilbert (1643-1715). English bishop and historian. Counseled William and Mary. Author of a History of the Reformation in three volumes (1679-1714) and the History of my Own Times in two volumes (1723-1734).

Burnett, Frances Eliza Hodgson (1849-1924). English-born American author of popular romances and books for children, including LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY (1886); Sara Crewe (1888); and The Secret Garden (1911).

Burnett, Whit (1899-). With Martha Foley, founded and edited the magazine Story for the discovery of new short-story talent. Has edited the anthologies This is my Best and The Seas of God.

Burnett, William Riley (1899-). Author of fast-paced fiction with mature technique of the hard-boiled school. His Little Caesar was his first published work and made a star of Edward G. Robinson in the movie hit.

Burney, Fanny (Madame d'Arblay) (1752-1840). English author known for her diaries and letters and her two novels EVELINA (1778) and CECILIA (1782). She was one of the first novelists to deal with the experiences of a young girl coming in contact with the social world.

Burning Babe, The. A mystical religious poem by Robert SOUTHWELL.

burning bush. A bush out of which the voice of God spoke to Moses, "and behold the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed."

Burning Bush, The. See UNDSET, SIGRID.

Burning Cactus. See SPENDER, STEPHEN.

Burning City. See BENÉT, STEPHEN VINCENT.

burning ghat. Hindu cremation place.

Burning Wheel, The. See HUXLEY, ALDOUS.

Burns, Helen. A character in Charlotte Brontë's novel, JANE EYRE.

Burns, Robert (1759-1796). Scotch poet, the greatest of his nation, a plowboy who became a social and literary sensation. He is best known for his dialect lyrics on nature, love, patriotism, humanitarianism, and humble peasant life. Among the most famous of these are "To a Mouse"; "To a Mountain Daisy"; "Sweet Afton"; "My Luve Is Like a Red, Red Rose"; SCOTS, WHA HAE; JOHN ANDERSON, MY JO; "A Man's a Man for a' That"; TO MARY IN HEAVEN; AULD LANG SYNE. THE COTTER'S SATURDAY NIGHT (1787), TAM O' SHANTER (1791), and THE JOLLY BEGGARS (1799) are longer poems. Editions of Burns's poetry were published in 1786 and 1787.

Burnside, Ambrose Everett (1824-1881). American army commander. West Point 1847. In command of Army of Potomac Oct. 1862. Unsuccessful in Fredericksburg and Petersburg campaigns and resigned commission in 1865. Governor of Rhode Island and then

U.S. Senator 1875-1881. His type of side whiskers gave us the word "burnsides," now often amusingly inverted as "sideburns."

Burnt Njal. Hero of one of the best known of the early Icelandic sagas, The Story of Burnt Njal. The plot concerns the grim blood-feud between the families of two well-to-do landowners, Njal and Gunnar, who are personal friends. Hallgerda, the spiteful and selfish wife of Gunnar, is the instigator of the feud, which progresses with a regular alternation of murders between the two sides, until it culminates in the firing of Njal's home and the burning to death of Njal within it.

Burnt Norton. See ELIOT, THOMAS STEARNS.

Burr, Aaron (1756-1836). American politician, once New York State Attorney General, U.S. Senator, defeated candidate for governor of New York State, and Vice President of the U.S. under Thomas Jefferson, by whom he was defeated in the presidential election of 1800. Burr is best known for his enmity with Alexander HAMILTON, whom he killed in a famous duel. He was later tried on a charge of treason in connection with an alleged plot to set up an empire in the Southwest. A number of romantic novels have appropriated Burr as a character, including Gertrude Atherton's THE CONQUEROR.

Burroughs, Edgar Rice (1875-). See TARZAN.

Burroughs, John (1837-1921). American scientist and essayist on nature subjects. His books include Wake-Robin (1871); Birds and Poets (1877); Locusts and Wild Honey (1879); Squirrels and Other Fur-Bearers (1900); The Breath of Life (1915); Accepting the Universe (1920). He was influenced by EMERSON and THOREAU and was a friend of Walt Whitman, and his later thoughts tend toward their mysticism.

Burt, Maxwell Struthers (1882-). American novelist and short-story writer. His books include The Interpreter's House (1924); The Diary of a Dude Wrangler (1924), autobiographical; The Delectable Mountains (1927); and Festival (1931). His wife, Katharine Newlin Burt, is a novelist in her own right, having eighteen books to her credit, most of them "Westerns."

Burton, Sir Richard Francis (1821-1890). English traveler and author, best known for his translation of the ARABIAN NIGHTS (1885-1888). He also published books on travel in Africa, India, and America, and was one of the first Englishmen to visit MECCA.

Burton, Robert (1577-1640). English churchman and prose writer, known for his wide and curious learning as represented in his most famous work, THE ANATOMY OF MELANCHOLY (1621).

Burwell Papers. Accounts of BACON'S REBELLION, named for the Burwell family of Virginia, which released them publicly a century after the events they describe. They consist of three separate accounts The Beginning, Progress, and Conclusion of Bacon's Rebellion in Virginia in the Years 1675 and 1676, by "T. M."; An Account of Our Late Troubles in Virginia, by "Mrs. An. Cotton of Q. Creek"; and A Narrative of the Indian and Civil Wars in Virginia, by an anonymous author. "T. M." identifies himself in his work as a planter and a member of the Virginia Assembly in 1676, but nothing is known of the other two authors.

Bury Me Not on the Lone Prairie. An American folk-ballad of the West, better known in its more popular version of Carry Me Back to the Lone Prairie.

Bury the Dead. A one-act play by Irwin SHAW, produced in 1936, a re-written version of an earlier drama, Miracle at Verdun (1931), by Hans Chlumberg, Austrian playwright. In it, soldiers killed during one of the catastrophic wars of the 20th century refuse to be buried, resist all attempts to persuade them to become passive, and incite the living army to rebellion.

busby. A tall headdress worn in British army by hussars, artillerymen, engineers. Of fur, with a bag of same color as facings of the regiment hanging from the top on the right.

Busch, Wilhelm (1832-1908). German humorous illustrator and poet. His bitter satire against bourgeois pettiness is generally missed by the bourgeois himself who adores Busch's work. Max und Moritz is available in Pennsylvania Dutch. From 1859-1871 Busch worked for the Munich Fliegende Blätter.

bush. Rural districts as opposed to town or city; the "sticks," as in the baseball term "bush league." In Australia, large tracts of scrub-covered country as distinguished from cultivated areas.

Bush, Ishmael. A rough, ferocious squatter in Cooper's novel THE PRAIRIE, whose story, with that of his family, comprises much of the action of the novel.

bushel. The expression, to put one's light under a bushel, is an allusion to Matthew v. 15; Mark iv. 21; Luke xi. 33.

business. A.S. bisigness, from bisigian, to occupy, to worry, to fatigue. In theatrical parlance "business" or "biz" means by-play. Thus, Hamlet trifling with Ophelia's fan, Lord Dunderbary's hop, and so on, are the special "business" of the actor of the part. As a rule, the "business" is invented by the actor who creates the part, or by the director or producer, and it is handed down by tradition.

business to-morrow. When the Spartans seized upon Thebes they placed Archias over the garrison. Pelopidas, with eleven others, banded together to put Archias to the sword. A letter containing full details of the plot was given to the Spartan polemarch at the banquet table; but Archias thrust the letter under his cushion, saying, "Business to-morrow." But long ere that sun arose he was numbered with the dead.

business as usual. An expression meaning that the everyday routine must be carried on as usual to preserve morale in a crisis. It was much in use during World War I. During World War II it came to have in the U.S. a derogatory meaning, in reproach to those manufacturers who neglected to devote their total plant facilities to aiding in the war effort but tried to continue their peacetime consumer production.

mean business. To be determined to carry out one's project; to be in earnest.

Busirane. An enchanter bound by Britomart in Spenser's Faerie Queene (Bk. iii). He is the typification of unrestrained amorous passion.

Busiris. A mythical king of Egypt who, in order to avert a famine, used to sacrifice to the gods all strangers who set foot on his shores. Hercules was seized by him; and would have fallen a victim, but he broke his chain, and slew the inhospitable king. He is the titular hero of a blood-and-thunder tragedy by Edward Young (1719).

buskin. A sort of half-boot. The Greek tragic actors used to wear a sandal some two or three inches thick, to elevate their stature. To this sole was attached a very elegant buskin, and the whole was called cothurnus. Hence buskin-cothurnus.

Busqueue, Lord. In Rabelais' Gargantua and Pantagruel, plaintiff in the great Pantagruelian lawsuit known as "Lord Busqueue vs. Lord Suckfist." See SUCKFIST.

Bussy D'Ambois. A historical tragedy by George Chapman (1607). The hero wins for himself a position of influence at the French court of Henry III, but his downfall is brought about by his enemies through their exposure of his clandestine love affair with the Countess Tamyra.

Buster Brown. A young imp of the American comic supplement, the invention of R. F. Outcault. He was very popular as the titular hero of a comedy, and Buster Brown suits, dresses and collars, so named from his mode of dress, were fashionable for children in the early years of the 20th century. Only Buster Brown shoes have survived.

Butler, Ellis Parker (1869-1937). American humorist. Creator of the classic Pigs Is Pigs.

Butler, Nicholas Murray (1862-1947). American educator, president of Columbia University in New York City 1902-1945, and active in public affairs. Among his writings are Education in the United States (1910); A World in Ferment (1918); The Faith of a Liberal (1924); The Path to Peace (1930); and Across the Busy Years (1939, 1940), volumes one and two of an autobiography.

Butler, Rhett. Leading character in GONE WITH THE WIND, hero to Scarlett O'HARA.

Butler, Samuel (1612-1680). English poet, most famous for HUDIBRAS (1663, 1664, 1678), a mock-epic satirizing the Puritans. He also wrote a set of Characters in the manner of THEOPHRASTUS and THE ELEPHANT IN THE MOON, a satire in verse on the ROYAL SOCIETY. Butler's Genuine Remains in Verse and Prose were published in 1759.

Butler, Samuel (1835-1902). English author, best known for his novel THE WAY OF ALL FLESH (1903), a bitter and realistic study of bigotry, narrowness, and hypocrisy in the Victorian PONTIFEX family. He wrote also EREWHON (1872), a satire on the England of his day in the manner of SWIFT, and a number of controversial scientific studies attacking Darwinism. The latter include Life and Habit (1877); God the Known and God the Unknown (1879); Unconscious Memory (1880); Luck or Cunning (1887). The remainder of his works consists of satires on religious orthodoxy, books of travel, literary studies, and translations of the ODYSSEY and the ILIAD. Erewhon Revisited was published in 1901, and The Notebooks of Samuel Butler, in 1912.

Buttercup, Little. In Gilbert and Sullivan's comic opera, H. M. S. Pinafore (1877), a "bumboat woman." She interchanged the babies who afterwards became Ralph Rackstraw and the Captain of the Pinafore.

Butterfly, Madame, see MADAME BUTTERFLY.

Butterworth, Elias Baptist. The hero of George Eliot's poem A Minor Prophet; an American "vegetarian seer."

button-molder, the. In Ibsen's Peer Gynt, the appearance of Destiny or Death.

Buzfuz, Serjeant. In Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS, the pleader retained by Dodson and Fogg for the plaintiff in the celebrated case of "Bardell v. Pickwick." Serjeant Buzfuz is an able orator, who proves that Mr. Pickwick's note about "chops and tomato sauce" is a declaration of love; and that his reminder "not to forget the warming-pan" is only a flimsy cover to express the ardor of his affection.

Buzzards. The inhabitants of Georgia, so called from the wild turkeys in that state.

bwana. In African stories, master or boss. The word comes from the African trade language Swahili.

Bycorne, see BICORNE.

Byliny. Epic poems of the Russian peasantry in song form. A number of specific heroes reappear throughout these songs, among the best known of whom are Mikula, Ilya of Murom, Dobrynya, Alyosha Popovich, Churilo Plenkovich, and Dyuk Stepanovich. Their feats are fantastic and often engagingly ingenious. Many of the byliny are divided into cycles, such as the cycle of Kiev, the cycle of Novgorod, the cycle of Ivan the Terrible, etc., and they range in time from the earliest mythological periods to the 18th century.

Bynner, (Harold) Witter (1881-). American poet, author of Grenstone Poems (1917); A Canticle of Pan (1920); The Jade Mountain (1929), a translation of Chinese poetry; Indian Earth (1929); and Against the Cold (1940).

Byrd, Richard Evelyn (1888-). American aviator and explorer, a descendant of the Virginia planter William BYRD. He made an airplane flight across the North Pole in 1926 and the Atlantic Ocean in 1927, and led two expeditions to the Antarctic region in 1929 and 1934. Books in which he describes his adventures are Skyward (1928); Little America (1930); and Alone (1938).

Byrd, William (1543?-1623). English composer, known at home and in 16th-century Europe as the "Father of Music." He wrote much church music, including three masses, chamber and instrumental music, and a number of songs and madrigals on texts by Sir Philip Sidney, Ovid, Ariosto, and other famous poets. He is considered to have originated the solo song with string accompaniment. Although he wrote music for the Anglican Church, Byrd remained a devout Catholic.

Byrd, William (1674-1744). American historian of the Virginia colony, scholar, explorer, and member of the English ROYAL SOCIETY. His best-known works are The History of the Dividing Line, which concerns the dispute over the boundary between Virginia and North Carolina; A Journey to the Land of Eden; A Progress to the Mines; and An Essay on Balk Tobacco. They are included in collections of his papers, known as the Westover Manuscripts, which were published in 1841, 1866, and 1901. A diary which Byrd kept in shorthand as a hobby for several years was discovered nearly two hundred years after his death and published as The Secret Diary of William Byrd of Westover in 1940.

Byrne, Donn (1889-1928). Irish-American novelist. Born Brian Oswald Donn-Byrne. Married Dorothea Cadogan, co-author of the successful play, Enter Madame. In 1921 his Messer Marco Polo was a succès d'estime. See DONN-BYRNE, Brian Oswald.

Byron, George Noel Gordon, Lord (1788-1824). English poet, internationally the most famous of the English Romantic writers and the one who exerted the widest influence. He created the "Byronic hero," who reappears throughout his work—a sad and melancholy young man, brooding in a melodramatic manner upon something mysterious and evil in his background which he never explains. Byron's poetry is marked by fluent and rhetorical verse, frequent satire in the manner of the 18th century, and a choice of exotic and adventurous Oriental subjects in his narrative poems. The latter include CHILDE HAROLD (1812, 1816, 1817) the poem which made him famous; THE GIAOUR (1813); THE BRIDE OF ABYDOS (1813); THE CORSAIR (1814); LARA (1814); THE SIEGE OF CORINTH (1816); PARISINA (1816); THE PRISONER OF CHILLON. Among his poetic dramas are MANFRED (1817); CAIN, A MYSTERY (1821); MARINO FALIERO (1820); HEAVEN AND EARTH (1822); WERNER (1823); and THE DEFORMED TRANSFORMED (1824), left unfinished at the time of his death. His satires are ENGLISH BARDS AND SCOTCH REVIEWERS (1809); BEPPA (1818); THE VISION OF JUDGMENT (1822); THE AGE OF BRONZE (1823); and DON JUAN, his most important work, begun in 1818 and left incomplete at his death. Byron was a constant rebel against convention and encouraged the legend of wildness, evil, and debauchery that grew up about his name, to which his wife, Anne MILBANKE, contributed by her suspicions of incest. See also Teresa GUICCIOLI, Augusta LEIGH.

the French Byron. Alfred de MUSSET (1810-1857).

the Oregon Byron. Joaquin Miller.

the Polish Byron. Adam Mickiewicz (1798-1855).

the Russian Byron. Alexander Sergeivitch PUSHKIN (1799-1837).

Byron, Harriet. In Richardson's Sir Charles Grandison, a beautiful and accomplished woman of high rank, devotedly attached to Sir Charles Grandison, whom ultimately she marries.

Byrsa. The citadel of Carthage, built, according to legend, by Dido, on the basis of a bargain with the natives, within the limits of a piece of land that could be enclosed with a bull's hide. The bull's hide, which had been cut up into strips, gave the place its name (Gr. byrsa, "hide"). Historically, the name comes from a Phoenician word meaning "citadel."

Byzantine (from Byzantium, the ancient name of Constantinople). In art, the symbolic system which was developed by the early Greek or Byzantine artists out of the Christian symbolism. Its chief features are the circle, dome, and round arch; and its chief symbols the lily, cross, vesica, and nimbus. St. Sophia, at Constantinople, and St. Mark, at Venice, are excellent examples of Byzantine architecture and decoration, and the Roman Catholic Cathedral at Westminster is a development of the same.

Byzantine Empire. The Eastern or Greek Empire, which lasted from the separation of the Eastern and Western Empires on the death of Theodosius in 395 A. D., till the capture of Constantinople by the Turks in 1453.

C

Caaba, al Caaba, see KAABA.

cabal. A JUNTO or council of intriguers. One of the Ministries of Charles II was called a "cabal" (1670), because the initial letters of its members formed the word: Clifford, Ashley, Buckingham, Arlington, and Lauderdale. This accident may have popularized the word, but it was in use in England many years before this, and is the Hebrew qabbalah. See CABALA.

These ministers were emphatically called the Cabal, and they soon made the appellation so infamous that it has never since . . . been used except as a term of reproach.—Macaulay, England, I, ii.

Conway Cabal. A faction organized by Gen. Thomas Conway, of the American Revolutionary army, to supersede Washington and make Gen. Gates commander-in-chief. This was in 1777-1778.

cabala. The oral traditions of the Jews, said to have been delivered by Moses to the rabbis and from them handed down through the centuries from father to son by word of mouth. In medieval times the term included the occult philosophy of the rabbis, and the cabala and its guardians, the cabalists, were feared as possessing secrets of magical power. The word is the Heb. qabbalah, accepted tradition.

Cabala, The. See WILDER, THORNTON.

Caballero, Francisco Largo, see LARGO CABALLERO.

cabaret. A restaurant where customers are entertained by performers. The French and generally continental equivalent of the American night club.

Cabbages and Kings. A volume of short stories by O. Henry (1862-1910). The title is taken from Lewis Carroll's ballad on the Walrus and the Carpenter in Through the Looking-Glass.

The time has come, the walrus said,
To talk of many things,
Of shoes, and ships and sealing wax
And cabbages and kings.

Cabell, James Branch (1879-). American novelist, known for his series of novels collectively entitled Biography of Manuel, dealing with the history of the family of Dom MANUEL, imaginary medieval count of an imaginary medieval country called POICTESME, from the Middle Ages to 20th-century America. The characters are often symbolic and satiric. Cabell's works include Gallantry (1907); Chivalry (1909); THE CORDS OF VANITY (1909); The Soul of Melicent (1913); The River in Grandfather's Neck: A Comedy of Limitations (1915); THE CREAM OF THE JEST: A COMEDY OF EVASIONS (1917); BEYOND LIFE (1919); JURGEN: A COM- EDY OF JUSTICE (1919); DOMNEI: A COMEDY OF WOMAN-WORSHIP (1920); FIGURES OF EARTH: A COMEDY OF APPEARANCES (1921); The High Place: A Comedy of Disenchantment (1923); The Eagle's Shadow: A Comedy of Purse-Strings (1923); The Music from Behind the Moon (1926); THE SILVER STALLION: A COMEDY OF REDEMPTION (1926); Something about Eve: A Comedy of Fig Leaves (1927); The White Robe (1928); Way of Eben (1929); Smirt: An Urbane Nightmare (1934); Smith: A Sylvan Interlude (1935); Ladies and Gentlemen (1936), essays; Smire: An Acceptance in the Third Person (1937); The King Was in His Counting-House: A Comedy of Common Sense (1938); Hamlet Had an Uncle: A Comedy of Honor (1940); The First Gentleman of America: A Comedy of Conquest (1942). Cabell's novels were the subject of considerable literary controversy during the early 1920's, and the suppression of Jurgen for a time caused a sensation. Mr. Cabell's name is pronounced to rhyme with rabble.

Cabestaing, or Cabestan, Guillaume de. Late 12th-century Provençal troubadour. According to legend loved Marguerite, wife of Raymond of Château Roussillon, slain by the husband who cooked Cabestaing's heart and served it to his wife, who when she learned she had eaten it committed suicide by starvation. Richard Aldington wrote a poem about this, The Eaten Heart.

Cabeza de Vaca, Álvar Núñez (1490?-1557). Spanish explorer of northern Mexico and Brazil, anticipating the expedition of Coronado (1540-1542).

Cable, George Washington (1844-1925). American author of stories and romances of the Creoles (see Creole) of Louisiana, including Old Creole Days (1879); THE GRANDISIMES (1880); Madame Delphine (1881); The Creoles of Louisiana (1884); DR. SEVIER (1885); Bonaventure (1888); Strong Hearts (1899); The Cavalier (1901); Posson Jone and Père Raphael (1909); Lovers of Louisiana (1918).

Cabot, John (1450-1498) and Sebastian (1476?-1557) his son. Italian navigators and explorers. The former reached Baffin Land and Newfoundland, explored coast south to 38th parallel; the latter founded, and was made governor of, Company of Merchant Adventurers of London (1551) and searched for northeast passage. The Italian form of their name is Caboto.

ca' canny. A Scots expression meaning "go easily," "don't exert yourself." It is used in trade union slang, and the method of "ca' canny" is adopted by workmen for the purpose of bringing pressure on the employers when, in the workmen's opinion, a strike would be hardly justifiable, expedient, or possible. Ca' is Scots caw, to drive or impel. Cf. the more modern slowdown strike.

cachet (Fr.). Literally a seal, as of a letter. Hence lettre de cachet, a sealed letter, especially from a sovereign. Before the French Revolution arbitrary orders of arrest were often issued in the form of royal lettres de cachet.

Cacique. See RULERS, TITLES OF.

cadodaemon. An evil spirit (Gr. κακός δαίμων). Astrologers give this name to the Twelfth House of Heaven, from which only evil prognostics proceed.

Hie thee to hell for shame, and leave the world,
Thou cadodemon.

Shakespeare, Richard III, i. 3.

Cacus. In classical mythology, a famous robber, represented as three-headed, and vomiting flames. He lived in Italy, and was strangled by Hercules.

caddie, caddy. An 18th-century Edinburgh attendant. Today one who carries a golf-player's clubs. From cadet.

Cade, Jack. An Irishman, who headed about 20,000 armed men, chiefly of Kent, "to procure redress of grievances" (1450). One of the most successful dramas of the American stage of the 19th century was Conrad's Jack Cade (1832). See also CADE'S REBELLION.

Cadenus. A name for Dean Swift in Cadenus and Vanessa, a poem. The word is simply de-ca-nus ("a dean") with the first two syllables transposed (ca-de-nus). See VANESSA.

Cade's Rebellion. Uprising of the men of Kent in 1450 under Jack Cade, in protest against heavy taxation and other abuses. London was seized but the insurgents were soon dispersed and Cade was killed.

Cadi. Arabic for a town magistrate or inferior judge.

Cadignan, Diane de. The Duchess of Maufrigneuse, afterwards Princess of Cadignan, one of Balzac's most heartless, brilliant and accomplished women, the mistress in turn of many of the men who appear in the novels of his Comédie Humaine. Her great achievement is perhaps her affair with the high-minded Daniel d'Arthez who was the best friend of her dead lover. Diane considers herself the friend of the Marquise d'Espard and her rival in social leadership. She is the heroine of The Secrets of a Princess (Les Secrets de la Princesse de Cadignan) (1839).

Cadman, Charles Wakefield (1881-1946). American composer, best known for his songs and instrumental and orchestral pieces on American Indian themes. One of the most popular of his songs in this vein is From the Land of the Sky-Blue Water, from Four Indian Songs (1909).

Cadmus. In Greek mythology, the son of Agenor, king of Phoenicia, and Telephassa; founder of Thebes (Boeotia) and the introducer of the alphabet into Greece. The name is Semitic for "the man of the East." Legend says that, having slain the dragon which guarded the fountain of Dirce, in Boeotia, he sowed its teeth, and a number of armed men sprang up surrounding Cadmus with intent to kill him. By the counsel of Minerva, he threw a precious stone among the men, who, striving for it, killed one another.

Cadmean letters. The Greek alphabet.

Cadmean victory. A very costly victory.

caduceus. A white wand carried by Roman heralds when they went to treat for peace; the wand placed in the hands of Mercury, the herald of the gods, of which poets feign that he could therewith give sleep to whomsoever he chose; wherefore Milton styles it "his opiate rod" in Paradise Lost, xi, 133. It is generally pictured with two serpents twined about it (a symbol thought to have originated in Egypt), and—with reference to the serpents of Aesculapius—it was adopted as the badge of the Royal Army Medical Corps and later of the Medical Corps of the U.S. Army.

So with his dread caduceus Hermes led
From the dark regions of the imprisoned dead;
Or drove in silent shoals the lingering train
To Night's dull shore and Pluto's dreary reign.

Darwin, Loves of the Plants, ii. 291.

Cadwal. In Shakespeare's CYMBELINE, Arviragus, son of Cymbeline, was so called while he lived in the woods with Belarius.

Cadwallader, Rev. Mr. and Mrs. The rector and his wife in George Eliot's Middlemarch. The rector was kindly disposed toward everyone, but his wife had a sharp tongue on occasion.

Cadwallon. In Scott's novel, THE BETROTHED, the favorite bard of Prince Gwynwyn. He enters the service of Sir Hugo de Lacy, disguised, under the assumed name of Renault Vidal.

Cady, (Walter) Harrison (1877-). American artist and illustrator. For years did comic drawings for J. A. Mitchell's Life and other magazines. Illustrated books by Frances Hodgson Burnett, Robert W. Chambers, Thornton W. Burgess; generally known for his regular Sunday feature of Peter Rabbit in the New York Herald Tribune. Has exhibited paintings in many exhibitions and won several awards. Author of The Bug Book (1913); Caleb Cottontail (1921); etc.

Caedmon (fl. 675). Anglo-Saxon poet of conjectural existence. A series of Christian epics, called the "Caedmonian cycle," have been attributed to him or to followers of him, and are found in a single manuscript but in several handwritings. They consist of the poems Genesis, Exodus, Daniel, and Christ and Satan. See CYNEWULF. According to Bede, Caedmon was an ignorant man and knew nothing of poetry until one night, when sleeping in the byre, he was miraculously commanded by an angel to sing the Creation and the beginning of created things. His metrical paraphrase of Genesis some regard as the germ of Milton's PARADISE LOST.

Caerleon (literally, "the city of legions," from caer, Welsh for "city," and leon, a Welsh contraction of "legion"). A town in Monmouthshire, England, on the river Usk, the seat of King Arthur's court. It was also his habitual residence where he lived in splendid state, surrounded by the knights of his ROUND TABLE. See also CAMELOT.

Caesar, Caius Julius (100–44 B. C.). Roman general and administrator. He made himself master of the Roman world by defeating Pompey and ruled supreme until he was assassinated by a group of conspirators headed by Brutus and Cassius. Caesar appears in many historical dramas, notably in Shakespeare's Julius Caesar (ca. 1601) and G. B. Shaw's Caesar and Cleopatra (1898). In JULIUS CAESAR, although he plays the title rôle, Caesar is in reality a subordinate figure and something of a weakling and braggart, and the characterization has often been criticized as untrue to history. Shaw, who is quoted as saying that Shakespeare's character is "the reductio ad absurdum of the real Julius Caesar," wrote his Caesar and Cleopatra as "a simple return to nature and history." Caesar's own account of his Gallie Wars is still regarded as a Latin classic. The name Caesar survives in the words Kaiser and Czar.

Caesar's famous despatch, "Veni, vidi, vici (I came, I saw, I conquered)," was written to the senate to announce his overthrow of Pharnaces, king of Pontus.

Caesar's wife must be above suspicion. The name of Pompeia having been mixed up with an accusation against P. Clodius, Caesar divorced her; not because he believed her guilty, but because the wife of Caesar must not even be suspected of crime.

aut Caesar aut nullus (Lat. either Caesar or no one), everything or nothing; all or not at all.

the City of the Caesars. Rome.

Caesar, Irving (1895–). American librettist. Wrote lyrics for George White's Scandals and for musical comedies.

Caesarean operation. Also Caesarian section. Delivery of a child by cutting through the walls of abdomen and uterus. Caesar was believed to have been so delivered.

Caesura. In modern, especially English prosody a rhythmic break or pause which occurs naturally about the middle of a line of any length, but may be varied with different effects. It is usually a sense pause. The classical caesura was the division of a foot between two words.

Caf. See Kaf.

café-au-lait. Like the color of coffee with milk. From French café au lait, hot coffee and hot milk poured in equal portions simultaneously from two pots.

café chantant (Fr.). A café where singers or musicians entertain patrons. Note that the expression means literally "a singing café."

café dansant. A café where the patrons can dance.

café parfait. A coffee-flavored frozen dessert of whipped cream and eggs.

cafeteria. With a stress on the "i," the word came from Mexico, where it meant "coffee shop," to the Western U.S., where the stress moved up one syllable. After the American self-service feature had been added, the thing and the word spread all over the U.S. and also back to Mexico.

caftan. A Levantine garment. Long gown with extra long sleeves. The word comes from Turkish. Its association with the Jews took place in Western minds.

Cagliostro, Count Alessandro Di. Real name Giuseppe Balsamo (1743–1795). Famous Italian impostor who posed as alchemist and was the founder of a kind of freemasonry. Traveled all over Europe. Was involved in the famous affair of the DIAMOND NECKLACE in France. Modern students feel that the complete story of Cagliostro remains to be cleared up. GOETHE was greatly interested in his case and visited his family at Palermo.

Cagots. A sort of gipsy race living in the Middle Ages in Gascony and Bearne, supposed to be descendants of the Visigoths, and shunned as something loathsome. In modern French, a hypocrite or an ultra-devout person is called a cagot.

Cagoulard. A member of the French secret terroristic organization, the Comité Secret d'Action Révolutionnaire. From cagoule "a sort of hood."

Cahan, Abraham (1860–). Russian-American novelist. Editor of Jewish Daily Forward, New York City. Best-known novel, The Rise of David Levinsky.

Cahill, Marie (1874-1933). American actress. Starred in The Wild Rose (1902); Sally in Our Alley (1902); Nancy Brown (1903), etc.

Caiaphas. In the New Testament, a high priest, before whom Jesus was brought for trial.

Caillaux, Joseph (1863-1945). Premier of France (1911-1912) and twice minister of finance. Editor of Le Figaro. Gaston Calmette accused him of peculation and Caillaux's wife afterward shot and killed Calmette (1914).

Cain. In the Old Testament, the son of Adam and Eve and murderer of his brother Abel. After the murder, which was committed out of jealousy because Abel's sacrifice was more acceptable to Jehovah than Cain's, Jehovah cursed Cain and made him "a fugitive and a wanderer in the earth." Cain and Abel are called in the Koran "Kabil and Habil."

The Mohammedan tradition is this: Cain was born with a twin sister who was named Aclima, and Abel with a twin sister named Jumella. Adam wished Cain to marry Abel's twin sister, and Abel to marry Cain's. Cain would not consent to this arrangement, and Adam proposed to refer the question to God by means of a sacrifice. God rejected Cain's sacrifice to signify his disapproval of his marriage with Aclima, his twin sister, and Cain slew his brother in a fit of jealousy.

Byron's dramatic poem Cain, a Mystery (1821) is based largely on the Biblical narrative. Cain's wife he calls Adah, and Abel's wife he calls Zillah. Coleridge wrote a prose poem called The Wanderings of Cain (1798).

brand of Cain. The stigma of an outlaw from society (Gen. iv. 15).

curse of Cain. Continual wandering.

Cain-colored beard. Yellowish, or sandy red, symbolic of treason. In the ancient tapestries Cain and Judas are represented with yellow beards; but it is well to note that in the extract below the word, in some editions, is printed "cane-colored."

He hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard, a Cain-coloured beard.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor, i. 4.

Cain, James Mallahan (1892-). American novelist of the hard-boiled school, known for The Postman Always Rings Twice, Serenade, etc.

Caine, Sir Hall (1853-1931). Manx novelist. A vigorous Christian Socialist. Friend and guest (until 1882) of D. G. Rossetti. After early poverty his books attained sales comparable with those of Marie Corelli. Several of his most widely read novels were The Deemster (1887); The Christian (1897); The Eternal City (1901); The Woman Thou Gavest Me (1913); etc.

Cainites. An heretical sect of the 2nd century. They renounced the New Testament in favor of The Gospel of Judas, which justified the false disciple and the crucifixion of Jesus; and they maintained that heaven and earth were created by the evil principle, and that Cain with his descendants were the persecuted party.

Ça Ira (Fr. it will go). The name, and refrain, of a popular patriotic song in France which became the Carillon National of the French Revolution (1790). It went to the tune of the Carillon National, which Marie Antoinette was for ever strumming on her harpsichord.

The rallying cry was borrowed from Benjamin Franklin of America, who used to say, in reference to the American revolution, "Ah! ah! ça ira, ça ira!" ('twill be sure to do).

The refrain of the French revolutionary version was:

Ah! ça ira, ça ira, ça ira,
Les aristocrates à la lanterne.

Caissons, The, Go Rolling Along. Artillery song. Caisson, a four-wheeled ammunition or gun carriage, consisting of two parts, body and limber, joined together.

Caius. (1) In Shakespeare's KING LEAR, the assumed name of the Earl of Kent when he attended on King Lear, after Goneril and Regan refused to entertain their aged father with his suite.

(2) In Shakespeare's MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR, Dr. Caius is a French physician, whose servants are Rugby and Mrs. Quickly.

cake.

take the cake. To carry off the prize. The allusion is to the CAKE-WALK of the Southern Negroes of the United States, but cakes were prizes for competitions even in ancient times. Cf. the expression, bring home the bacon. See under BACON.

you cannot eat your cake and have it too. You cannot spend your money and yet keep it. You cannot serve God and Mammon.

my cake is dough. My project has failed.

cakes and ale. Luxuries.

Land of Cakes. Scotland, from its oatmeal cakes.

why don't they eat cake? A question Marie Antoinette is supposed to have asked when she was told that the poor had no bread.

Cake. A play by Witter Bynner (1926).

Cakes and Ale. A novel by W. Somerset MAUGHAM, published in 1930, considered to be a satirical presentation of Thomas HARDY and Hugh WALPOLE.

cake-walk. A popular American dance (ca. 1900), involving strutting and prancing, solo or in couples. This was the first dance of Negro origin to become popular in the ballroom. See also JAZZ.

Calainos. The most ancient of Spanish ballads. Calainos the Moor asks a damsel to be his wife; she consents, on condition that he bring her the heads of the three paladins of Charlemagne—Rinaldo, Roland, and Olivier. Calainos goes to Paris and challenges the paladins. First Sir Baldwin, the youngest knight, accepts the challenge and is overthrown; then his uncle, Roland, goes against the Moor and smites him.

Calamus. A section in the 2nd Edition of Walt Whitman's Leaves of Grass which contains the remarkable, "I Saw in Louisiana a Live-Oak Growing." Not capitalized, also a root, the sweet flag, used as a medicine, frequently mentioned in the stories of Uncle Remus by Joel Chandler HARRIS. The word means reed and in association with classical antiquity it stands for a writing tool, a pen.

Calamity Jane. One who is always predicting misfortune; one who puts the worst possible interpretation on any turn of events. Sobriquet of Martha Jane Burke (1852?-1903), frontier character, portrayed in Deadwood Dick on Deck, or Calamity Jane the Heroine of Whoop Up, a popular dime novel by Edward J. Wheeler.

Calandrino. A typical simpleton frequently introduced in Boccaccio's DECAMERON; expressly made to be befooled and played upon.

Calas. One wrongly condemned. The reference is to Jean Calas (1698-1762), a Calvinist of Toulouse who was cruelly executed on a false charge of murder.

Calaveras County, The Celebrated Jumping Frog of. See CELEBRATED JUMPING FROG.

Calaynos. See BOKER, GEORGE HENRY.

Calchas. In Greek mythology, a celebrated soothsayer among the Greeks at Troy. In some versions of the TROILUS legend he is the father of Cressida.

calculus. From Latin. Literally, a pebble. Hence a medical term for "stone," as in "biliary calculi." As a mathematical term, calculus owes its use to the fact that reckoning was done by means of pebbles. Differential calculus and integral calculus are methods of mathematical exploration.

Caldecott, Randolph (1846-1886). English artist and illustrator. Illustrated Washington Irving and many books for children; contributed to Punch. See also under GREENAWAY, CATHERINE.

Calderón de la Barca, Pedro (1600-1681). Famous early Spanish dramatist. His best-known work is La Vida Es Sueño (Life Is a Dream). He wrote approximately 120 plays and numerous AUTOS, or dramatic religious ceremonials concerning the Mystery of the Eucharist. A number of English writers, including DRYDEN and SHELLEY admired his works and wrote dramas under his influence.

Caldwell, Erskine Preston (1903-). American novelist and short-story writer, noted for his realistic studies, either earthy or starkly tragic, of life among the Southern SHARECROPPERS and of Negro-white conflicts in the South. Several of his books were attacked as immoral, and he was denounced by Southern critics. His best-known novel is TOBACCO ROAD (1932), dramatized as a phenomenally successful play in 1933 (3182 performances). Other novels are God's Little Acre (1933); Journeyman (1935); Trouble in July (1940). Collections of his short stories include American Earth (1931); We Are the Living (1933); Kneel to the Rising Sun (1935); Southways (1938); Jackpot (1940). Some American People (1935) is a documentary study of various sections of the U.S. You HAVE SEEN THEIR FACES (1937), North of the Danube (1939), dealing with a trip through Czechoslovakia, and Say! Is This the U.S.A.? (1941), another documentary account of America, are books of photographs and running commentary, done in collaboration with Margaret BOURKE-WHITE, Caldwell's wife (now divorced). All Out on the Road to Smolensk (1942) is a book describing the Russian resistance to invasion by Germany during World War II.

Caleb. (1) In the Old Testament, one of the twelve spies who were sent by the Israelites to investigate the land of Canaan. He and JOSHUA were the only ones who reported favorably; hence they were the only ones of their generation permitted to enter the Promised Land.

(2) In Dryden's satire of Absalom and Achitophel, Caleb is meant for Lord Grey of Wark (Northumberland), one of the adherents of the Duke of Monmouth.

And, therefore, in the name of dulness, be
The well-hung Balaam [Earl of Huntingdon] and old Caleb free. Lines 512-513.

Caleb Williams. A novel by William GODWIN (1794). The central character is Falkland, an aristocrat who values his good name above everything else. Under great provocation, he is goaded on to commit murder, but is honorably acquitted, and another person is executed for the crime. Caleb Williams, a lad in Falkland's service, accidentally becomes acquainted with these secret facts and is made to swear a solemn oath of secrecy. Finally unable to live in the house under the suspicious eyes of Falkland, he runs away. Falkland tracks him from place to place, like a bloodhound, and at length arrests him for robbery. The true statement now comes out, and Falkland dies of shame and a broken spirit. This tale was dramatized by G. Colman, under the title of The Iron Chest; Falkland is called Sir Edward Mortimer, and Caleb Williams is called Wilford.

Caledonia. Scotland; the ancient Roman name, now used only in poetry and in a few special connections, such as the Caledonian Railway, the Caledonian Canal, etc.

Calendar.

Julian Calendar. See JULIAN.

Gregorian Calendar. A modification of the Julian, introduced in 1582 by Pope Gregory XIII, and adopted in Great Britain in 1752. This is called "the New Style." See Gregorian Year.

Mohammedan calendar, used in Mohammedan countries, dates from July 16, 622, the day of the HEGIRA. It consists of 12 lunar months of 29 days 12 hours, 44 minutes each; consequently the Mohammedan year consists of only 354 or 355 days. A cycle is 30 years.

French Revolutionary calendar, adopted on October 5, 1793, retrospectively as from September 22, 1792, and in force in France till January 1, 1806, consisted of 12 months of 30 days each, with 5 intercalary days, called Sansculotides at the end. It was devised by Gilbert Romme (1750-1795), the names of the months having been given by the poet, Fabre d'Eglantine (1755-1794).

Newgate Calendar. See NEWGATE.

calendar (From Persian galandar). A member of a begging order of dervishes, founded in the 13th century by Qalandar Yusuf al-Andalusi, a native of Spain, with the obligation on its members of perpetual wandering. This feature has made the calendars prominent in Eastern romance; the story of the Three Calenders in the Arabian Nights is well known. They are three royal princes, disguised as begging dervishes, each of whom has lost his right eye.

Tale of the First Calender. No names are given. This calender was the son of a king, and nephew of another king. While on a visit to his uncle, his father died, and the vizier usurped the throne. When the prince returned, he was seized, and the usurper pulled out his right eye. The uncle died, and the usurping vizier made himself master of this kingdom also. So the hapless young prince assumed the garb of a calender, wandered to Bagdad, and being received into the house of "the three sisters," tells his tale in the hearing of the Caliph Haroun al Raschid.

Tale of the Second Calender. No names given. This calender, like the first, was the son of a king. On his way to India he was attacked by robbers, and though he contrived to escape, he lost all his effects. In his flight he came to a large city, where he encountered a tailor, who gave him food and lodging. In order to earn a living, he turned woodman for the nonce, and accidentally discovered an underground palace, in which lived a beautiful lady, confined there by an evil genius. With a view of liberating her, he kicked down the talisman; the genius killed the lady and turned the prince into an ape. As an ape he was taken on board ship, and transported to a large commercial city, where his penmanship recommended him to the sultan, who made him his vizier. The sultan's daughter undertook to disenchant him and restore him to his proper form; but to accomplish this she had to fight with the malignant genius. She succeeded in killing the genius, and restoring the enchanted prince; but received such severe injuries in the struggle that she died, and a spark of fire which flew into the right eye of the prince, destroyed it. The sultan was so heart-broken at the death of his only child, that he insisted on the prince's quitting the kingdom without delay. So he assumed the garb of a calender, and being received into the hospitable house of "the three sisters," tells his tale in the hearing of the Caliph Haroun al Raschid.

Tale of the Third Calender. This calender, King Agib, was wrecked on the loadstone mountain, which drew all the nails and iron bolts from his ship; but he overthrew the bronze statue on the mountaintop, the cause of the mischief. Agib then visited ten young men, each of whom had lost his right eye, and was carried by a roc to the palace of forty princesses, with whom he tarried a year. The princesses were then obliged to leave for forty days, but entrusted him with the keys of the palace, with free permission to enter every room but one. On the fortieth day curiosity finally induced him to open this room, where he saw a horse, which he mounted, and was carried through the air to Bagdad. The horse then deposited him, and knocked out his right eye with a whisk of its tail, as it had done the ten young men whom he had previously met.

calends. The first day of the Roman month. Varro says the term originated in the practice of calling together or assembling the people on the first day of the month, when the pontifex informed them of the time of the new moon, the day of the nones, with the festivals and sacred days to be observed. The custom continued till A.U.C. 450, when the fasti or calendar was posted in public places.

Greek calends. Never; because there are no Greek Calends.

calf.

kill the fatted calf. To welcome with the best of everything. The phrase is taken from the parable of the prodigal son (Luke xv. 30). the golden calf. We all worship the golden calf, i.e., money. The reference is to the golden calf made by Aaron when Moses was absent on Mount Sinai. (Exod. xxxii.)

calf-love. Youthful fancy as opposed to lasting attachment.

calf-skin. Fools and jesters used to wear a calf-skin coat buttoned down the back; hence a fool.

Calhoun, John Caldwell (1782-1850). South Carolinian, Vice-President U.S. (1825-1832). U.S. Senator and Secretary of State. Orator and champion of slavery and Southern cause in Senate debates.

Caliban. Rude, uncouth, unknown; as a Caliban style, a Caliban language. The allusion is to Shakespeare's Caliban in THE TEMPEST, the deformed, half-human son of a devil and a witch, slave to Prospero. Browning's poem Caliban upon Setebos, or Natural Theology in the Island is an attempt to express for such a creature as Caliban his crude philosophy of God and the universe. Percy MacKaye wrote a poetic drama called Caliban (Am. 1916), showing the regeneration of Caliban through love for Miranda.

Caliburn. Same as EXCALIBUR, the famous sword of King Arthur.

Calico Cat. See GINGHAM DOG AND CALICO CAT.

Calidore, Sir. In Spenser's Faërie Queene (Bk. vi) the type of courtesy, and the lover of "fair Pastorella." He is described as the most courteous of all knights, and is entitled the "all-beloved." It is said that he typifies Sir Philip Sidney. His adventure is against the Blatant Beast, whom he muzzles, chains, and drags to Faërie Land. Calidore is also the name of a poetical fragment by KEATS.

California widow, see under WIDOW.

Caligula. The Roman Emperor Gaius Caesar (37-41), called Caligula from wearing in his youth the caligae, that is, the heavy military shoes worn by soldiers of all ranks up to the centurions. He was a cruel tyrant and incestuous epileptic.

calipash and calipee. The carapace and the plastron of a turtle. Both contain a substance which is considered a delicacy by those who care for that sort of thing.

Calista. The heroine of Rowe's tragedy The Fair Penitent (1703), the fierce and haughty daughter of Sciolto, a proud Genoese nobleman. She yields to the seduction of Lothario, but promises to marry Altamont, a young lord who loves her dearly. On the wedding day a letter is picked up which proves her guilt, and she is subsequently seen by Altamont conversing with Lothario. A duel ensues, in which Lothario falls. In a street-row Sciolto receives his death-wound, and Calista stabs herself.

Calkins, (Marion) Clinch. American woman sociologist, poet, dramatist and story writer. Spy Overhead (1937).

Callaghan, Morley (1903-). Canadian novelist and short-story writer, known for his realism and his studies of human experience. Collections of his short stories are A Native Argosy (1929); No Man's Meat (1931); Now That April's Here (1936). His novels, dealing with such people as bootleggers, the relatives of a murderer, ex-prisoners, and average men and women beset by the depression, are Strange Fugitive (1928); It's Never Over (1930); A Broken Journey (1932); Such Is My Beloved (1934); They Shall Inherit the Earth (1935); More Joy in Heaven (1937).

Calligrames. See Apollinaire, Guillaume.

Callimachus. (1) Greek sculptor of 5th century B.C., reputed to have been the first to use a running drill in order to cut drapery folds and other depressions in marble. See also CORINTHIAN ORDER.

(2) Greek scholar of 3rd century B.C., head of a school in Alexandria, and chief librarian at Alexandria. Of about 800 works ascribed to him there are only 6 hymns, 64 epigrams, and a few fragments extant.

Calliope (Gr. beautiful voice). Chief of the nine Muses; the muse of epic or heroic poetry, and of poetic inspiration and eloquence. Her emblems are a stylus and wax tablets. Also a musical instrument made up of whistles.

Callirrhoe. The lady-love of Chaereas, in Chariton's Greek romance entitled the Loves of Chaereas and Callirrhoe, probably written in the 6th century A.D.

Callista, a Sketch of the Third Century. A historical romance by Cardinal NEWMAN (1855). The Greek heroine, Callista, is loved by the Christian Agellius, becomes converted, and suffers martyrdom.

Callisto and Arcas. Callisto was an Arcadian nymph metamorphosed into a she-bear by Jupiter. Her son Arcas having met her in the chase, would have killed her, but Jupiter converted him into a he-bear, and placed them both in the heavens, where they are recognized as the Great and Little Bear.

Call of the Wild, The. A novel by Jack LONDON (1903), usually considered his best. The dog hero, Buck, is stolen from his comfortable home and pressed into service as a sledge dog in the Klondike. At first he is abused by both men and dogs, but he learns to fight ruthlessly and finally finds in John Thornton a master whom he can respect and love. When Thornton is murdered, he breaks away to the wilds and becomes the leader of a pack of wolves.

Calmette, Gaston (1858-1914). See under CAILLAUX, JOSEPH.

Calpe. Gibraltar, one of the Pillars of Hercules, the other, the opposite promontory in Africa (modern Jebel Musa, or Apes' Hill), being anciently called Abyla. According to one account, these two were originally one mountain, which Hercules tore asunder; but some say he piled up each mountain separately, and poured the sea between them.

Calpurnia. Wife of Julius Caesar (from 59 B.C.). Tried to dissuade him from attending the senate the day he was assassinated.

calumet. This name for the tobacco-pipe of the North American Indians, used as a symbol of peace and amity, is the Norman form of Fr. chalumeau (from Lat. calamus, a reed), and was given by the French-Canadians to certain plants used by the natives as pipe-stems, and hence to the pipe itself.

The calumet, or "pipe of peace," is about two and a half feet long, the bowl is made of highly polished red marble, and the stem of a reed, which is decorated with eagles' quills, women's hair, and so on.

To present the calumet to a stranger is a mark of hospitality and good will; to refuse the offer is an act of hostile defiance.

Calvary. The Latin translation of the Gr. GOLGOTHA, which is a transliteration of the Hebrew word for "a skull." The name given to the place of Jesus' crucifixion; hence a place of martyrdom. Legend has it that the skull of Adam was preserved here, but the name is probably due to some real or fancied resemblance in the configuration of the ground to the shape of a skull.

Calvé, Emma. Stage name of Emma de Roquer (1862?-1942). French operatic soprano. Sang in many countries. Especially successful in Cavalleria Rusticana, Sapho, and Carmen.

Calverley, Charles Stuart (1831-1884). English author of light verse and parodies, including Verses and Translations (1862); Theocritus Translated into English Verse (1869); and Fly Leaves (1872).

Calverley's. A poem by Edwin Arlington ROBINSON.

Calverton, Victor Francis (1900-1940). American editor and literary critic of Marxist persuasion, author of books on social problems, anthropology, and literature as viewed from a sociological standpoint. His works include The Newer Spirit: A Sociological Criticism of Literature (1925); The Bankruptcy of Marriage (1928); Sex in Civilization (1929), of which he was editor; The New Generation (1930); Three Strange Lovers (1930), stories; For Revolution (1932); The Liberation of the Gods (1934), on religion and sociology; The Man Inside: Being the Record of the Strange Adventures of Allen Steele Among the Xulus (1936); The Awakening of America (1939); Where Angels Dared to Tread (1941), a study of Socialist and Communist Utopian colonies established in the U.S. Calverton was editor of The Modern Quarterly: A Journal of Radical Opinion, which was founded in 1923 and later became The Modern Monthly.

Calvin, John. Adapted form of Jean CAUVIN (1509-1564). French Protestant reformer, whose theological doctrines had tremendous influence, particularly through their incorporation in the Puritan religion of England and later America. Calvin had an early background of HUMANISM, being a student of Latin and Greek and familiar with the writings of Plato, Seneca, and St. Augustine. His great work is Institution de la religion chrétienne (INSTITUTES OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION), published in an early Latin version in 1536 and in the complete, better-known version in French in 1541; it was the first theological treatise to be published in French. Because of the radical Protestant views expressed in a public speech he wrote in 1533 to be delivered at an inaugural ceremony at the University of Paris, Calvin was forced to flee the capital and soon France as well. He took up headquarters in Geneva, where eventually he became an absolute dictator, strictly enforcing his theological doctrines and rules of conduct.

Calvinism as a religious system recognized only the Bible as a source of knowledge and an authority in questions of belief. Its chief principles were: (1) the total depravity of mankind as a result of Adam's fall; (2) the absolute power of the will of God; (3) the superiority of faith to good works, since man has no free will of his own; (4) salvation by grace from God rather than by any act of the will of man; and (5) the divine predestination of those to be saved, or the Elect, although, since no one can tell whether he is a member of the Elect, all must lead holy and pious lives, acknowledging God's supreme power and obeying His commands. Outstanding exponents of the doctrines of Calvinism were John MILTON, John BUNYAN, and Jonathan EDWARDS.

Calvo, Baldassare. In George Eliot's ROMOLA, the wealthy scholar who brings up Tito Melema as a son.

Calydonian boar. In Greek legend, Oeneus, king of Calydon, in Aetolia, having neglected to sacrifice to Artemis, was punished by the goddess' sending a ferocious boar to ravage his lands. A band of heroes collected to hunt the boar, who was eventually slain by Meleager after he had been first wounded by Atalanta. A dispute over the boar's head led to a war between the Curetes and the Calydonians.

Calypso. (1) In classical mythology, the queen of the island Ogygia on which Ulysses was wrecked. She kept him there for seven years, and promised him perpetual youth and immortality if he would remain with her for ever. Ogygia is generally identified with Gozo, near Malta. In TÉLÉMAQUE, a prose epic by Fénelon, Calypso is said to be meant for Mme de Montespan. In ULYSSES by James Joyce, she is represented by Martha CLIFFORD.

(2) A long, rambling, topical song, originated by Trinidad Negroes.

Cam and Isis. The universities of Cambridge and Oxford; so called from the rivers on which they stand.

May you, my Cam and Isis, preach it long,
"The right divine of kings to govern wrong."
Pope, Dunciad, iv. 187.

Cama, see KAMA.

Camacho. In Cervantes' Don Quixote, the "richest of men," who makes grand preparations for this wedding with Quiteria, "fairest of women"; but as the bridal party are on their way, Basilius cheats him of his bride. Hence Camacho's wedding has become a byword for vast but futile expenditures of time or money.

Camalzaman, Prince. In the Arabian Nights, the lover of BADOURA.

Camargue, Horses of the. A poem by Roy Campbell. La Camargue is a marshy delta of the Rhone River in France, where wild horses run.

Camarina. A lake in Sicily. It was a source of malaria to the inhabitants, who, when they consulted Apollo about draining it, received the reply, "Do not disturb it." Nevertheless, they drained it, and ere long the enemy marched over the bed of the lake and plundered the city. The proverb Ne moveas Camarinam (Don't meddle with Camarina) is applied to those who remove one evil, but thus give place to a greater—leave well alone. The application is very extensive, as: Don't kill the small birds, or you will be devoured by insects; one pest may be a safeguard against a greater one.

A similar Latin phrase is Anagyrin movere.

When the laird of Ellangowan drove the gipsies from the neighbourhood, though they had been allowed to remain there undisturbed hitherto, Dominie Sampson warned him of the danger by quoting the proverb "Ne moveas Camarinam."
Scott, Guy Mannering, ch. vii.

Cambalo's Ring. Cambalo was the second son of CAMBUSCAN in Chaucer's unfinished Squire's Tale. He is introduced, as CAMBEL, in Spenser's Faerie Queene (Bk. iv). The ring, which was given him by his sister CANACE, had the virtue of healing wounds.

Well mote ye wonder, how that noble knight,
After he had so often wounded been,
Could stand on foot now to renew the fight . . .
All was through virtue of the ring he wore;
The which, not only did not from him let
One drop of blood to fall, but did restore
His weakened powers, and dulled spirits whet.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, IV. iii. 23-24.

Cambalu. The chief city of Cathay, described in the Voyages of MARCO POLO. It is identified with Peking.

Cambel. The name given by Spenser in his sequel to Chaucer's Squire's Tale (Faerie Queene, Bk. iv) to Cambalo, brother of CANACE. He challenges every suitor to his sister's hand, and overthrows all except Triamond, who marries her.

Camber. In British legend, the second son of BRUTE. Wales fell to his portion; this may be one source of its ancient name of CAMBRIA.

Cambremer, Mme de. In Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, a fashionable lady who frequents the Wednesday evening salons of the VERDURINS and who makes an elaborate fetish of her interests in literature, art, and music.

Cambria. The ancient name of Wales, the land of the Cimbri or Cymry. Cf. Camber.

Cambuscan. In Chaucer's unfinished Squire's Tale, the King of Sarra, in Tartary, model of all royal virtues. His wife is Elfeta; his two sons, ALGARSIFE and Cambalo; and his daughter, CANACE. On her birthday (October 15) the King of Arabia and India send Cambuscan a "steed of brass, which, between sunrise and sunset, would carry its rider to any spot on the earth." All that is required is to whisper the name of the place in the horse's ear, mount upon his back, and turn a pin set in his ear. When the rider has arrived at the place required, he must turn another pin. The horse instantly descends, and, with another screw of the pin, vanishes till it is again required. Milton refers to the story in Il Penseroso.

Cambyses. King of Persia (529-522 B.C.). In drama he appears as a pompous, ranting character in Preston's tragedy, Cambyses, King of Persia (1569); and his name has become proverbial for bombastic language, because of Falstaff's speech (1 Henry IV. ii. 4).

Give me a cup of sack, to make mine eyes look red;
for I must speak in passion, and I will do it in King Cambyses' vein.

camel.

break the camel's back. To pile on one thing after another till at last the limit is reached and a catastrophe or break-down caused. The proverb is, "It is the last straw that breaks the camel's back."

the Camel Driver of Mecca. Mahomet.

Camel, The Song of the. In The Admiral's Caravan by Charles E. Carryl.

Camelot. In British fable, the legendary spot where King Arthur held his court. It has been tentatively located at various places—in Somerset, near Winchester, in Wales, and even in Scotland.

Camembert. A soft unpressed cheese, originally made in Camembert, France. In its felt-like rind it ripens toward the center and should not be eaten before it is soft all the way through.

camera eye. The device used by John Dos Passos in his trilogy U.S.A. to give perspective to his kaleidoscopic narrative. In contrast to the NEWSREEL, the camera eye makes use of the subjective sense impressions, memories of childhood, random thoughts, etc., of a spectator with whom the reader may identify himself. It is an outgrowth of James Joyce's "STREAM-OF-CONSCIOUSNESS" technique.

Cameron, Margaret (1867-). American writer; A Sporting Chance (1926), etc.

Camilla. (1) In Roman legend a virgin queen of the Volscians. Virgil (Aeneid, vii. 809) says she was so swift that she could run over a field of corn without bending a single blade, or make her way over the sea without even wetting her feet. She aided Turnus against Aeneas.

(2) One of the principal characters of The Fatal Curiosity, an episode in Cervantes' DON QUIXOTE.

Camille. (1) The name under which the French Dame aux Camélias (The Lady of the Camellias), a novel and later a drama by Alexandre DUMAS fils, was produced on the American stage. The play was enormously successful, both in France (1852) and in its various American adaptations which appeared in 1853, 1857 and 1874. Its heroine is a beautiful courtesan who gives up the one man she has come to love genuinely because she does not want to ruin his life, and goes back to her old round of frivolity. The character was drawn from the French courtesan, Madeleine du Plessis. In the French novel and drama she is known as Marguerite Gauthier, in the American versions as Camille and in Verdi's opera, La Traviata, founded on the story, she becomes Violetta Valery.

(2) In Corneille's historical tragedy, Les Horaces, the name of the daughter of HORATIUS, heroine of the drama.

Camillo. In Shakespeare's WINTER'S TALE, a lord in the Sicilian court, and a very good man. Being commanded by King Leontes to poison Polixenes, instead of doing so he gave him warning, and fled with him to Bohemia.

Camisards. In French history, the Protestant insurgents of the Cevennes, who resisted the violence of the dragonnades, after the revocation of the edict of Nantes (1685), and so called from the white shirts (camisards) worn by the peasants. Their leader was Cavalier, afterwards governor of Jersey.

Camlan, Battle of. In Arthurian legend the battle which put an end to the Knights of the Round Table, and at which Arthur received his death wound from the hand of his nephew Modred, who was also slain. It took place about 537 A. D., but its site (traditionally placed in Cornwall) is as conjectural as that of CAMELOT.

Cammaerts, Émile (1878-). Belgian poet and patriot. Settled in England (1908) but remained a Belgian subject. His volumes of poetry written during World War I and translated from the French into English by his wife include Belgian Poems; Messines and Other Poems and Through the Iron Bars.

Camões, Luis de (1524-1579). The most famous of Portuguese poets. His masterpiece is the epic poem THE LUSIAD.

Camorra. A lawless, secret society of Naples, Italy, organized early in the 19th century. It claimed the right of settling disputes, etc., and was so named from the blouse (Ital. camorra) worn by its members, the Camorristi. The term came to be used for any secret society with lawless or revolutionary aims.

camouflage (Fr.). Disguise. The term was introduced during World War I in connection with military disguise and was popularized by application to blinds and disguises of every sort.

Campagna. In full Campagna di Roma. Territory of Old Latium surrounding Rome, about thirty by one hundred miles in extent.

Campagna, Two in the. A poem by Robert Browning.

Campaign, The. A poem by Joseph Addison, written in 1704 and praising the Duke of Marlborough, who had become a hero as the result of his victories during the War of the Spanish Succession.

Campaigner, The old. Mrs. Mackenzie, mother of Rosa, in Thackeray's novel, The Newcomes (1855).

Campaspe. A beautiful woman, the favorite concubine of Alexander the Great. Apelles, it is said, modeled his Venus Anadyomene from her. According to Pliny, Alexander gave her up to Apelles, who had fallen in love with her while painting her likeness.

John Lyly produced, in 1583, a drama, Alex- ander and Campaspe, in which is the well-known lyric—

Cupid and my Campaspe played
At cards for kisses: Cupid paid.

Campbell, Joseph (1881–). Irish poet. Under his Gaelic name, Seosamh MacCathmhaoil, published The Rushlight, 1906, and The Mountainy Singer, 1909, etc.

Campbell, Mary. One of the women loved by Robert Burns. She died of fever in 1788, and the poem To Mary in Heaven was written on the anniversary of her death.

Campbell, Mrs. Patrick. Née Beatrice Stella Tanner (1865–1940). English actress who played important rôles beginning with title rôle in Pinero's The Second Mrs. Tanqueray (1893).

Campbell, Roy (1901–). Brilliant South African poet. Wrote The Flaming Ter-rapin in a fisherman's cabin in Wild Wales after marrying on nothing a year. About 1935 Campbell became a Roman Catholic convert and fought for Franco in Spain. His first youthful volume remains his masterpiece.

Campbell, Thomas (1777–1844). Scotch poet, best known for his literary ballads, the most popular of which was GERTRUDE OF WYOMING (1809). Others include Hohen-linden (1802); LORD ULLIN'S DAUGHTER (1809); The Battle of the Baltic (1809).

Campbell, Viola. One of the chief characters in THE WITCHING HOUR by Augustus Thomas.

Campbell, William Wilfred (1860–1919). Canadian poet, edited Oxford Book of Canadian Verse (1906).

Campbeller. Religious follower of Rev. Alex Campbell (1788–1866), a Baptist minister of Bethany, Va. Cf. the poem by Vachel Lindsay.

Campbells are coming, The. A famous song composed in 1715, when the Earl of Mar raised the standard for the Stuarts against George I. John Campbell was commander-in-chief of his Majesty's forces and the rebellion was quashed.

Campeachy wood. Logwood from Campeche on S.W. part of Gulf of Mexico. It is used for dyeing. Cf. the poem by John Massfield, Campeachy Picture.

Campeador (Sp. "Champion"). Surname of the Cid.

Campendonck, Heinrich. See under Blaue Reiter.

Camperdown, Ballad of the, by Rudyard Kipling.

Camp Fire Girls of America, The. An organization for girls (aged 12–20) founded in 1912 by Dr. and Mrs. Luther H. Gulick. It corresponds to the Boy Scout organization in idea and ideal.

Campion, Thomas (1567–1620). English poet and musician. A Book of Airs (1601), Two Books of Airs (ca. 1613), and The Third and Fourth Books of Airs (ca. 1617) are volumes of lyrics, both words and music of which were written by Campion. He was also the author of Observations in the Art of English Poesy (1602), a critical treatise in which he argued for the use of classical, quantitative meters in English verse. There had long been a controversy at Cambridge University as to whether the classical meter or rimed and accentual verse were better suited for the English language, and Samuel DANIEL wrote an answer to Campion.

Campus Esquilinus. The burial place for the lowest classes just outside the Servian Wall of Rome.

Campus Martius. The field of Mars. A grassy plain along the east bank of the Tiber in ancient Rome, used for elections, martial exercises, public games, etc. Cf. the Champs de Mars in Paris.

Camus. Personification of the river Cam. Cf. Milton's Lycidas, line 103.

Camus, Albert (1913–). Ship broker, journalist, and social reformer in Algiers, who moved to France in 1940, when many Frenchmen were leaving for North Africa. Founded the clandestine newspaper Combat to counter-check the Nazi and Vichy censors. Wrote clear and forceful editorials. After the liberation his newspaper became the most vigorous in Paris. Camus was spokesman for the "pure résistance" group. Although a friend of Sartre, he was an independent who stood against "EXISTENTIALISM" and represented the recognition of the absurdity of human life, which nevertheless did not affect his drive for a better world. His novel L'Étranger (1942), translated (1946) as The Stranger, is reminiscent of KAFKA. His philosophical essay, Le Mythe de Sisyphe (1942), holds his concept of the absurd, recommending living lucidly within it. He published two plays (1944), illustrating the same point of view of the absurd. His Caligula appeared in 1938, and a series of letters to German friends and an essay on revolt in 1945. In the latter he summarizes his views in the statement: "I am pessimistic in everything that concerns the nature of man, but obstinately optimistic in all that concerns human action."

Canaan. The Biblical "Promised Land"; hence any land of promise.

The Conquest of Canaan. See under CONQUEST, also TARKINGTON, BOOTH.

Canace. In Chaucer's Squire's Tale, a paragon of women, daughter of CAMBUSCAN, to whom the King of Arabia and India sends as a present a mirror and a ring. The mirror will tell the lady if any man on whom she sets her heart will prove true or false, and the ring (which is to be worn on her thumb) will enable her to understand the language of birds and to converse with them. It will also give the wearer perfect knowledge of the medicinal properties of all roots.

Chaucer never finished the tale. Spenser, however, continued it in the Faerie Queene (Bk. iv), and here Canace is courted by a crowd of suitors, but her brother Cambel (see Cambalo) insists that anyone who pretends to her hand must encounter him in single combat and overthrow him. She ultimately marries Triamond, son of the fairy Agape.

Canal Boy. James A. Garfield (1831-1881), president of the United States, so called from his early occupation on a canal boat.

Canale, Antonio, see CANALETTO.

Canaletto, Antonio. Originally Canale (1697-1768). Venetian painter, known for his paintings of scenes in Venice and his effects of mists and sunlight.

Canallers, Mostly. See Walter D. EDMONDS.

Canal Zone. Strip of territory extending 5 miles on each side of the Panama Canal, leased in perpetuity to the U.S. by the Republic of Panama 1903.

canard. A fabricated statement or story designed to delude; a hoax. Generally in connection with newspapers. The word means "duck" but the connection is obscure.

canary-bird. A jail-bird. At one time certain desperate convicts were dressed in yellow; and jail was the cage of these "canaries."

Canby, Henry Seidel (1878-). American literary critic, college professor, and chairman, editorial board, SATURDAY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, which he founded with Christopher MORLEY and William Rose BENÉT in 1924. Thoreau: A Biography (1939); Walt Whitman (1943); American Memoir (autobiography, 1947), etc.

cancan (Fr.). A type of dance, popular in France in the latter half of the 19th century, and once considered both daring and vulgar. Jacques OFFENBACH made use of it in his light opera Orpheus in the Underworld (Orphée aux Enfers) (1874). His music and the dance itself were revived by the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo in the popular ballet Gaité Parisienne (Parisian Gaiety) (1938).

Cancer. One of the twelve signs of the zodiac (the Crab). It appears when the sun has reached its highest northern limit, and begins to go backward towards the south; but, like a crab, the return is sideways (June 21st to July 23rd).

According to fable, Juno sent Cancer against Hercules when he combated the Hydra of Lerne. It bit the hero's foot, but Hercules killed the creature, and Juno took it up to heaven.

Candace. (1) A title applied to several queens of Ethiopia.

(2) Title of a poem by Herbert S. GORMAN.

Candaules. King of Lydia about 710-668 B.C. Legend relates that he exposed the charms of his wife to Gyges, whereupon the queen compelled him to assassinate her husband, after which she married the murderer, who became king, and reigned twenty-eight years.

Candelajo, II. A satirical comedy by Giordano BRUNO.

Candida. A drama by George Bernard SHAW (1897). The heroine, Candida, is the wife of the Rev. James Morell, but is loved by Eugene Marchbanks, a sensitive and visionary young poet who thinks Morell nothing but a "moralist and windbag." According to agreement between the two men, Candida is to make her choice, and when she demands that they bid for her, Morell offers his strength, Eugene his weakness. She chooses Morell, not, however, because of his strength but because of his need for her love.

Candide. The hero of Voltaire's philosophical novel, Candide, ou L'Optimisme (1759), written to satirize the optimistic creed that "All is for the best in this best of all possible worlds." Candide's tutor, the philosophic Dr. Pangloss, is the embodiment of this theory, maintaining it through thick and thin, in spite of the most blatant evidences to the contrary. He is considered to satirize the philosopher LEIBNITZ. Misadventures begin when the young Candide is kicked out of the castle of Thunder-ten-tronckh for making love to the Baron's daughter, Cunégonde; and thereafter he and Pangloss and Cunégonde embark on what develops into a long series of adventures. Sometimes together, more often apart, in various far quarters of the earth, they endure a long succession of the most unfair and appalling calamities conceivable. Eventually they settle down together on a little farm. Candide marries Cunégonde, now alas grown ugly, and tells himself often, "Il faut cultiver notre jardin," "We must cultivate our garden."

candle.

he is not fit to hold the candle to him. He is very inferior. The allusion is to link-boys who held candles in theaters and other places of night amusement.

the game is not worth the candle. The effort is not worth making; the result will not pay for the trouble, even the cost of the candle that lights the players.

burn the candle at both ends. To overdo in expenditure of either time or money; also to waste time or energy.

vow a candle to the devil. To propitiate the devil by a bribe, as some seek to propitiate the saints in glory by a votive candle.

bell, book and candle. See under BELL.

candle-holder. An abettor. The reference is to the practice of holding a candle in the Catholic Church for the reader, and in ordinary life to light a workman when he requires more light.

Candle in the Wilderness, A. See BACHELER, IRVING.

Candlemas Day. February 2nd, the feast of the Purification of the Virgin Mary, when Christ was presented by her in the Temple; one of the quarter days in Scotland. In Roman Catholic churches all the candles which will be needed in the church during the year are consecrated on this day; they symbolize Jesus Christ, called "the light of the world," and "a light to lighten the Gentiles." The Romans had a custom of burning candles to scare away evil spirits. There is also a weather-legend associated with Candlemas Day. See GROUND-HOG DAY.

If Candlemas Day be dry and fair,
The half o' winter's come and mair;
If Candlemas Day be wet and foul,
The half o' winter was gane at Youl.

Scotch Proverb.

The badger peeps out of his hole on Candlemas Day, and, if he finds snow, walks abroad; but if he sees the sun shining he draws back into his hole.

German Proverb.

Candle of Vision, The. See A. E.

Candour, Mrs. In Sheridan's SCHOOL FOR SCANDAL, the beau idéal of female backbiters.

Canfield, Dorothy. See FISHER, DOROTHY CANFIELD.

Can Grande's Castle. See LOWELL, AMY; also SCALA.

Canidia. A Neapolitan, beloved by the poet Horace. When she deserted him, he held her up to contempt in certain of his Epodes as an old sorceress who could by a rhomb unsphere the moon. Hence any witch.

Canio. The showman in Leoncavallo's opera, I PAGLIACCI.

Cannae. The place where Hannibal defeated the Romans under Varro and L. Aemilius Paulus with great slaughter in 216 B. C. Any fatal battle that is the turning point of a great general's prosperity may be called his Cannae. Thus Moscow was the Cannae of Napoleon.

Cannan, Gilbert (1884-). English novelist. Translated Rolland's Jean Christophe.

Love of his life really the drama. Wrote many books.

Canning, George (1770-1827). British statesman. Fostered liberal and nationalist movements in Europe. Prime Minister of England. Shielded Greece against Turkish aggression (1825-1827).

Cannon, George. In Arnold Bennett's CLAYHANGER, the bigamist to whom Hilda Lessways believes she is married.

Cannon, Joseph Gurney (1836-1926). Called "Uncle Joe." American politician. Leader of reactionary Republicans. Autocratic Speaker of the House for many years.

Cano, Juan Sebastián del (1460?-1526). Spanish navigator. Commander of the Concepción on MAGELLAN's expedition. Succeeded Magellan as first in command after the latter's death (1521) and completed the first circumnavigation of the globe by sailing westward. Died during a second voyage along the same route.

canon. From Lat. and Gr., a carpenter's rule, a rule, hence a standard (as "the canons of criticism"), a model, an ordinance, as in Shakespeare's—

Or that the Everlasting had not fixed
His canon 'gainst self-slaughter.

Hamlet, i. 2.

In sculpture, a canon signifies the "correct," i.e., the conventionally accepted proportions of a statue, as those of an athlete embodied in the DORYPHORUS by POLYCLITES.

In music, a canon is a type of vocal FUGUE, named from its 16th-century Latin designation of fuga per canonem (fugue according to the rule). In it, one voice, called the subject, dux (leader), or vox antecedens (antecedent voice), starts to sing a melody and is imitated note for note by a second voice, called the answer, comes (companion), or vox consequens (consequent voice). If more than two voices are required, two may be "in canon," or exactly imitating each other, while the others may make use of free counterpoint. See COUNTERPOINT. Rounds, of the sort represented by Three Blind Mice, are canons known as "circular" or "infinite" canons, because they return to their starting-point without breaking off. Sumer Is Icumen In is an example of a 13th-century canon.

the canon. Canon law. Also, the body of the books in the Bible which are accepted by the Christian Church generally as genuine and inspired; the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation, excluding the Apocrypha. Called also the sacred canon and the canonical books.

Canon law. A collection of ecclesiastical laws which serve as the rule of church government. The professors or students of canon law are known as canonists.

Canongate. The lower part of the Royal Mile in Edinburgh, running from Holyrood Palace to the Castle.

Canon Yeoman's Tale, The. One of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales (1388), known in the old spelling as The Chanouns Yemannes Tale, that is, a yeman's tale about a chanoun or canon. (A "yeman" is a bailiff.) This is a tale in ridicule of alchemy. A canon deceives a priest by pretending to convert rubbish into gold. With a film of wax he conceals in a stick a small lot of thin gold. The priest stirs the boiling water with the stick, and the thin pieces of gold, as the wax melts, drops into the pot. The priest gives the canon a large sum for the recipe; and the crafty alchemist is never seen by him afterwards.

Canossa. Canossa, in the duchy of Modena, is where, in January, 1077, the Emperor, Henry IV, went to humble himself before Pope GREGORY VII (Hildebrand). Hence, go to Canossa means to eat humble pie; to submit oneself to a superior after having refused to do so.

Canova Antonio (1757-1822). Italian sculptor. Marks transition from baroque to the classicism of THORVALDSEN.

Can Such Things Be? See BIERCE, AMBROSE.

cantata (Ital.). A musical work, dramatic or narrative, sung by a chorus and soloists, with orchestral accompaniment and without scenery or costumes. The cantata began as a concert form, the cantata da camera, and in the 17th century developed into a form for church performance as well, the cantata da chiesa. J. S. BACH is the best-known composer of cantatas, having written 295 in his lifetime. Among the most familiar of these are the Coffee Cantata and the Peasant Cantata. Scarlatti, Couperin, Handel, Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven also wrote cantatas.

canteen. Sutler's shop in U.S. Army. Now called Post Exchange. Also places for meals and entertainment for service men opened in large cities during World War II.

cante hondo. Literally, "deep song." An Andalusian form of folk singing. See under GARCÍA LORCA, FEDERIGO.

Canterbury Pilgrims, The. A drama by Percy MacKAYE (Am. 1909), based on Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES, and later produced as an opera with music by Reginald De Koven. The plot centers about a rivalry between the shy, gentle PRIORESS and the WIFE OF BATH over the attentions of Chaucer, the poet. The Wife of Bath makes a bet that she will get a certain bracelet from the Prioress, and Chaucer is to become her much-desired sixth husband if she does. She wins by trickery, but King Richard rules that she must marry the Miller instead.

Canterbury Tales, The. The great work of the poet CHAUCER (1388) consisting of twenty-four tales told by a company of pilgrims going to visit the shrine of St. Thomas à Becket at Canterbury. The party first assembles at the Tabard, an inn in Southwark, and there agrees to tell one tale each both going and returning; the person who tells the best tale is to be treated by the rest to a supper at the Tabard on the homeward journey. The party consists of twenty-nine pilgrims, so that the whole budget of tales should have been fifty-eight; but only twenty-three and the fragment of another (Sir Thopas) were told. In the Prologue Chaucer aptly and wittily describes each of his fellow pilgrims. As individual characters the most celebrated of these are probably the Clerk, Knight, Man of Law, Parson, Prioress, Squire and Wife of Bath. See under those entries.

Among the tales almost all the types of narrative of the Middle Ages are represented: romance, fabliau, Saint's life, beast epic, exemplum, etc. The tales are as follows:

Canon Yeoman's Tale (Chanouns Yemannes Tale). The transmutation of metals. See under CANON.

Clerk's Tale (Cleikes Tale). Patient Griselda.

Cook's Tale (Cokes Tale). GAMELYN.

Franklin's Tale (Frankleyns Tale). DORIGEN and Arviragus.

Friar's Tale (Freres Tale). A compact with the devil. See under FRIAR.

Host's Tale. MELIBOEUS.

Knight's Tale (Knightes Tale). PALAMON and Arcite.

Man of Law's Tale (Mannes Tale of Lawe). King Ella and CUNSTANCE.

Manciple's Tale (Maunciples Tale). The tell-tale crow turned black. See under MANCIPLE.

Merchant's Tale (Marchantes Tale). JANUARY and May.

Miller's Tale (Milleres Tale). NICHOLAS and Alison.

Monk's Tale (Monkes Tale). The mutability of fortune. See under MONK.

Nun's Priest's Tale (Nonne Prestes Tale). CHANTICLEER and the Fox.

Pardoner's Tale (Pardoneres Tale). The devil and the proctor. See under PARDONER.

Parson's Tale (Persones Tale). A kind of Pilgrim's Progress. See under PARSON.

Physician's Tale (Phisiciens Tale). VIRGINIA.

Prioress' Tale (Prioresses Tale). The singing boy. See under PRIORESS.

Reeve's Tale (Reves Tale). Simon and the Miller of Trompington. See under REEVE.

Second Nun's Tale (Seconde Nonnes Tale). St. Cecily. See under SECOND.

Shipman's Tale (Shipmannes Tale). The merchant and the monk. See under Shipman.

Squire's Tale (Squyeres Tale). Cambuscan.

Summoner's Tale (Somnours Tale). The begging friar. See under SUMMONER.

Thopas, Sir. Told by Chaucer, but cut short by the host. See THOPAS.

Wife of Bath's Tale (Wyf of Bathes Tale). What a woman likes best. See under WIFE.

Canticle of Pan, A. See BYNNER, HAROLD WITTER.

Canton, William (1846-1926). English poet and journalist. Author of a series of books for his daughter, Winifred Vida, including the charming W. V. Her Book.

cantonment. Military term used for a district where troops are quartered. Large camp in World War I. From French cantonnement.

Cantor, Eddie (1893-). American comedian, real name Israel Iskowitz. In vaudeville, burlesque, musical comedy, motion pictures, radio. Interested in charitable causes as the fight against tuberculosis, racial intolerance, etc.

Cantos. Fragments of a proposed long poem by Ezra POUND, published in separate volumes: A Draft of XXX Cantos (1930); Eleven New Cantos (1934); The Fifth Decad of Cantos (1937). Composed of quotations from a wide selection of literary and historical documents, especially of the ancient Greeks, the medieval Provençal poets, the Italian Renaissance, and the U.S. of the Jeffersonian period, these poems present a vivid and immediate, impressionistic picture of mankind throughout the ages. For a fuller analysis and critical discussion, cf. The Double Agent, by R. P. Blackmur.

Cantwell, Dr. In Bickerstaffe's comedy The Hypocrite (1768), the English representative of Molière's TARTUFFE. He makes religious cant the instrument of gain, luxurious living and sensual indulgence. His dishonorable conduct towards Lady Lambert and her daughter is thoroughly exposed, and at last he is arrested as a swindler. The Hypocrite was adapted from Colley Cibber's Non-Juror (1717) which was in turn founded very largely on Molière's TARTUFFE.

Cantwell, Robert (1908-). American novelist of the "proletarian" school. His short stories have appeared in several editions of American Caravan. Since 1938 an associate editor of Time.

Canty, Tom. The beggar boy who changes places with Prince Edward in Mark Twain's PRINCE AND THE PAUPER.

Canucks. The name given in the United States to Canadians generally, but in Canada itself to Canadians of French descent. The origin is uncertain.

Canute, or Knut. Danish king, a leader of the regular Norse invading forces of England, who actually reigned as king of England (1016-1035). He is the Canute of ancient legend who is reported to have commanded the waves to stand still as a proof of his power.

cap.

cap and bells. The insignia of a professional fool or jester.

cap and feather days. The time of childhood.

cap and gown. The full academical costume of a university student or professor.

cap of liberty. The sign of freedom. When a slave was manumitted by the Romans, a small Phrygian cap, usually of red felt, called pileus, was placed on his head, he was termed libertinus (a freedman), and his name was registered in the city tribes. When Saturninus, in 100 B.C., possessed himself of the Capitol, he hoisted a similar cap on the top of his spear, to indicate that all slaves who joined his standard should be free; Marius employed the same symbol against Sulla; and when Caesar was murdered, the conspirators marched forth in a body, with a cap elevated on a spear, in token of liberty.

In the French Revolution the cap of liberty (bonnet rouge) was adopted by the revolutionists as an emblem of their freedom from royal authority.

cap of maintenance. A cap of dignity anciently belonging to the rank of duke; the fur cap of the Lord Mayor of London, worn on days of state; a cap carried before the British sovereigns at their coronation.

a feather in one's cap. An achievement to be proud of; something creditable.

I must put on my considering cap. I must think about the matter before I give a final answer. The allusion is to the official cap of a judge, formerly donned when passing any sentence, but now only when passing sentence of death.

if the cap fits, wear it. If the remark applies to you, apply it yourself.

setting her cap for him. Trying to catch him for a sweetheart or a husband. In the days when ladies habitually wore caps they would naturally put on the most becoming, to attract the attention and admiration of the favored gentleman.

Capablanca y Granperra, José Raoul (1888–1942). Cuban chess master. First place in masters' tournament of 1911.

Capaneus. In Greek mythology, one of the seven heroes who marched against Thebes. He was struck dead by a thunderbolt for declaring that not Jupiter himself should prevent his scaling the city walls. Evadne, his wife, threw herself into the flames while his body was burning.

Capatez de Cargadores. See NOSTROMO.

Cape-Horner. A vessel that has sailed around Cape Horn. Cf., for instance, Two Years Before the Mast by Richard Henry Dana.

Čapek, Karel (1890–1938). Czechoslovakian playwright, best known for his play R. U. R. (1923). His other plays include The Makropulos Secret (1925), dealing with the scientific prolongation of life; Adam the Creator (1930); The Life of the Insects (produced in New York as The World We Live In) (1922), a satire; Power and Glory (1938); The Mother (1939) Money and Other Stories (1929) is a collection of short stories; The First Rescue Party (1939) and The Cheat (1941) are novels.

Capes, the. (1) Cape Charles and Cape Henry, Virginia.

(2) Cape Ann and Cape Cod, Mass.

Capet. A famous ruling family of France, which furnished the kings of France from 987 to 1328. Odo, the first Capetian king, was elected in 888, while Hugh Capet, crowned in 987, began the uninterrupted succession. The feudal domain of the Capetian family was Ile de France, compact and centrally located, which assisted consolidation of power and administration. The Valois and Bourbon dynasties of France were descendants of the Capetians.

capital. (1) In architecture, the upper part of a column, supporting the weight of the arch or roof. It may be a simple slab, or an ornate piece of sculpture. In ancient Egypt the capital was often in the shape of a lotus flower. In Persia, it was sometimes adorned with crouching bulls, while in Greece the Corinthian capital (see CORINTHIAN ORDER) was based on the design of the acanthus leaf. See also DORIC ORDER; IONIC ORDER.

(2) In economics, wealth which is used to produce more wealth, such as money, machinery, buildings, tools, raw materials, etc.

Capital (Das Kapital). Famous economic treatise by Karl MARX. The first volume was published in 1869 and 1873, and the second and third volumes, edited by Friedrich ENGELS from unpublished manuscripts, were published between 1885 and 1894. The work contains the author's analysis of economics and the formulation of his own economic theories, based on modifications of the theories of Adam SMITH and RICARDO by the German Idealistic philosophy of HEGEL and the writings of revolutionary thinkers of the 19th century, including Bruno Bauer, Arnold Ruge, and Ludwig Feuerbach. It is considered one of the most influential books of all time.

capitalism. Economic system whose characteristics are: a money exchange; private ownership of the means of industrial production (or CAPITAL); production for the purpose of obtaining a profit; competition among private manufacturers or "businessmen" in the sale of goods or services, at prices set by the producers to bring in a profit over the original investment; and private control over the return from the sale of goods or services. Capitalism came into being at the end of the Middle Ages, with the break-up of the system of FEUDALISM. Typical capitalists are bankers, industrial manufacturers, merchants, and "businessmen" of various sorts. The earliest period of capitalism, during the Renaissance and early part of the 17th century, is considered to have been marked by an accumulation of capital, and the next stage, during the 18th century, by the development of large industries held in individual hands. From the 19th century to the World Wars of the 20th century, capitalism came to be distinguished more and more by a development from individual to corporate ownership, reduction in competition through monopoly and centralized control, and separation of ownership and management.

capital punishment. Punishment by death for crime. The word capital signifies here "main, supreme," but it is interesting to connect it with its ultimate origin in Latin caput, the head.

Capitoline. The smallest of the seven hills of Rome.

capitulation. Special agreement under which Westerners in certain non-Christian countries are exempted from local jurisdiction and held subject instead to their own consuls. Basically a capitulation is the drawing up of an agreement under specific heads (Lat. caput, head). The military use of the term is not very old.

capon. A cock castrated to improve its flesh. Also a castrated rabbit and, in archaic or humorous usage, a eunuch.

Caponsacchi, Giuseppe. In Browning's RING AND THE BOOK, the young priest under whose protection Pompilia flees from her husband to Rome.

Caporetto. Scene of a military disaster sustained by the Italians under General Cadorna (Oct. 24–Nov. 9, 1917), at the hands of Germans and Austrians under Otto von Buelow. North of Gorizia a general retreat was forced to the Piave. It is graphically described in Hemingway's A Farewell to Arms.

Capote, Truman (1924-). American novelist. Other Voices, Other Rooms (1948).

Capra, Frank (1897-). Moving picture director. It Happened One Night (1934); Mr. Deeds Goes to Town (1936); Lost Horizon (1938); etc. Received Motion Picture Academy award for 1934, 1936, 1938.

Capricorn. Called by James Thomson, in his Winter, "the centaur archer." Anciently, the winter solstice occurred on the entry of the sun into Capricorn, i.e. the Goat: but the stars, having advanced a whole sign to the east, the winter solstice now falls at the sun's entrance into Sagittarius (the centaur archer), so that the poet is exactly right, though we commonly retain the ancient classical manner of speaking. Capricorn is the tenth, or, strictly speaking, the eleventh, sign of the zodiac (December 21-January 20). According to classic mythology, Capricorn was Pan, who, from fear of the great Typhon, changed himself into a goat, and was made by Jupiter one of the signs of the zodiac.

Caproni, Gianni (1886-). Italian airplane builder. Constructed biplane bomber during World War I. Developed bombers used in World War II.

captain. For captains in fiction and drama, see under their respective names; also below for titles beginning with Captain.

the Great Captain (El Gran Capitano). (1) Gonzalvo di Cordova (1453-1515).

(2) Manuel Comnenus of Trebizond (1120, 1143-1180).

Captain Cauf's tail. The commander-in-chief of the mummers of Plough Monday.

Captain Copperthorne's crew. All masters and no men.

Captain Podd. A showman. So called from "Captain" Podd, a famous puppet-showman in the time of Ben Jonson.

Captain Rock. A fictitious name assumed by the leader of certain Irish insurgents in 1822, etc. All notices, summonses, and so on, were signed by this name.

come Captain Stiff over one. To treat one with cold formality.

Captain Blood. The title of a romantic novel by Rafael SABATINI.

Captain Brassbound's Conversion. A comedy by George Bernard SHAW (1900). Captain Brassbound is a pirate, out for revenge at any cost and feeling quite justified until the heroine, Lady Cicely Waynflete, disarms and "converts" him by a unique method.

Captain Craig. A book of poems by Edwin Arlington ROBINSON.

Captain Fracasse (Le Capitaine Fracasse). A novel by Théophile GAUTIER (1863), presenting a picture of Bohemian life in the France of Louis XIII. The young and poverty-stricken Baron de Sicognac entertains a group of vagabond players, falls in love with Isabella, one of their number, and for a time joins them as Captain Fracasse, a member of the troupe.

Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines. A ballad written by T. MacLagan and brought into vogue by William Lingard, an overwhelmingly popular music hall singer, in 1869. It recalls the play of the same title by Clyde Fitch in which the remarkable American actress, Ethel BARRYMORE, made her début. The refrain of the song is:

I'm Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines,
I give my horse good corn and beans;
Of course, 'tis quite beyond my means,
Though a Captain in the army.

Captain, My Captain, O. A short and very well-known poem by Walt WHITMAN (1865) on the death of Abraham Lincoln.

Captains Courageous. A story by Rudyard KIPLING (1897). The boy hero is an American millionaire's son, Harvey Cheyne. This spoiled youngster falls overboard, is picked up by a fishing dory and against his will is hired by Disko Troop, the skipper, at ten dollars a month. By the time the fishing season is over, he has a different and much more healthy attitude toward life.

Captain's Doll, The. See LAWRENCE, DAVID HERBERT.

Captain Singleton. See DEFOE, DANIEL.

Captain Traprock, see CHAPPELL, GEORGE S. caption. The heading or title of a document, section, chapter, etc. Also the legend or title of a picture or illustration. The word stood originally for that which captivates one's attention but got associated with the idea of Latin caput "head, heading."

Captures. See GALSWORTHY, JOHN.

Capua. Once the most luxurious city in Italy.

Capua corrupted Hannibal. Luxury and self-indulgence will ruin anyone. Hannibal was everywhere victorious over the Romans till he took up his winter quarters at Capua. When he left Capua, his star began to wane, and, ere long, Carthage was in ruins and himself an exile.

Capulet. A noble house in Verona, the rival of that of Montague. In Shakespeare's ROMEO AND JULIET, Juliet is of the former, and Romeo of the latter. Lady Capulet is the beau idéal of a proud Italian matron of the 15th century. The expression, "the tomb of all the Capulets," is from Burke; he uses it in his

Reflections on the Revolution in France (vol. iii. p. 349), and again in his Letter to Matthew Smith, where he says:

I would rather sleep in the southern corner of a country churchyard than in the tomb of the Capulets.

caput mortuum (Lat. dead head). An alchemist's term, used to designate the residuum left after exhaustive distillation or sublimation; hence, anything from which all that rendered it valuable has been taken away. Thus, a learned scholar paralyzed is a mere caput mortuum of his former self. The French Directory, towards its close, was a mere caput mortuum of a governing body.

Carabas, Marquis de. (1) An ultra-conservative nobleman, of unbounded pretensions and vanity, who would restore the slavish foolery of the reign of Louis XIV; one with Fortunatus' purse, which was never empty. The character is taken from Perrault's tale of Puss in Boots, where he is Puss's master; but it is BÉRANGER's song (1816) which has given the word its present meaning.

Prêtres que nous vengeons
Levez la dime et partageons;
Et toi, peuple animal,
Porte encor le bât féodal. . . .
Chapeau bas! Chapeau bas!
Gloire au marquis de Carabas!

(2) The Marquis of Carabas in Disraeli's VIVIAN GREY is said to be intended for the Marquis of Clanricarde.

Caracalla. Real name Marcus Aurelius Antoninus (188-217). Roman emperor nicknamed from a long hooded tunic worn by Gauls which he introduced. Cruel and treacherous. The Baths (Thermae) of Caracalla and the Arch of Septimius Severus (his father) erected by Roman senate (205-207) in his honor. He was assassinated.

Caractacus or Caradoc. In legendary history, a king of the Silures in Britain who withstood the Roman arms for nine years, but was finally betrayed by Carthismandu, queen of the Brigantes, and led captive to Rome 51 A.D. He is a prominent figure in the Welsh Triads and in Drayton's POLYOLBION.

Caravaggio, Michelangelo Amerighi da (1569-1609). Italian painter of the reaction against mannerism. He painted religious subjects in a dramatic and realistic manner, and is known best for his lighting effects, in which light and shadow are violently contrasted. See CHIAROSCURO.

Caravan. See GALSWORDTHY, JOHN; also AMERICAN CARAVAN.

caravel. The type of vessel Columbus sailed to the New World. Small, with broad bows, high narrow poop, three or four masts, and lateen sails on two or three of them. Columbus' caravels were the Niña, the Pinta, and the Santa Maria. A faithful reconstruction of the last-named was built by the North German Lloyd at the time of the launching of the liner Columbus.

Carbonari. This name, assumed by a secret political society in Italy (organized 1808-1814), means charcoal burners. The singular is hardly in use. It would be Carbonaro. The Carbonari called their place of muster a "hut"; its inside "the place for selling charcoal"; and the outside, the "forest." Their political opponents they called "wolves." Their object was to convert the kingdom of Naples into a republic.

Carco, Francis (1886-). French poet and novelist. Grand Prix of the French Academy for L'Homme Traqué (1927; The Hounded Man). Received into the Académie Goncourt (1937).

Cárdenas, Lázaro (1895-). President of Mexico (1934-1940). Expropriation (1938) of foreign-owned oil properties. Succeeded 1940 by General Ávila Camacho. Placed in command of all Mexican forces on Pacific Coast in 1941.

cardigan. A warm jacket of knit worsted, named after the 7th Earl of CARDIGAN.

Cardigan, 7th Earl of. James Thomas Brudenell (1797-1868). Commander of cavalry, led the "Six Hundred" in the famous charge of the Light Brigade at Balaclava in Crimean War (1854). Cf. Tennyson's poem.

cardinal. The Lat. cardo means a hinge; its adjective, cardinalis (from which we get cardinal), meant originally "pertaining to a hinge," hence "that on which something turns or depends," hence "the principal, the chief." Hence, in Christian Rome, a "cardinal church" (ecclesia cardinalis) was a principal or parish church as distinguished from an oratory attached to such, and the chief priest (presbyter cardinalis) was the "cardinal," the body (or "College") of cardinals forming the Council of the Pope, and electing the Pope from their own number. This did not become a stabilized regulation until after the third Lateran Council (1173); since then the College of Cardinals consisted of six cardinal bishops, fifty cardinal priests, and fourteen cardinal deacons. From the thirteenth century on the majority of the cardinals were Italians. In 1945 this tradition was broken by the Pope's nomination of a number of additional cardinals.

The cardinals' "red hat" was made part of the official vestments by Innocent IV (1245) "in token of their being ready to lay down their life for the gospel."

cardinal humors. An obsolete medical term for the four principal humors or liquids of the body: blood, phlegm, yellow bile and black bile. In the old conception these correspond to the four principal temperaments: the sanguine, the phlegmatic, the choleric, and the melancholic. Albrecht DÜRER is said to have thought of the four temperaments and humors in connection with his paintings of the four evangelists.

cardinal numbers. The natural, primitive numbers, which answer the question "how many?", such as 1, 2, 3, etc. 1st, 2nd, 3rd, etc., are ordinal numbers.

cardinal points of the compass. Due north, west, east, and south. So called because they are the points on which the intermediate ones, such as N.E., N.W., N.N.E., etc., hinge or hang. (Lat. cardo, a hinge.)

The poles, being the points upon which the earth turns, were called in Latin cardines (cardo, a hinge, see CARDINAL above), and the cardinal points are those which lie in the direction of the poles and of the sunrise and sunset. Thus, also, the winds that blow due East, West, North, and South are known as the cardinal winds. It is probably from the fact that the cardinal points are four in number that the cardinal humors, virtues, etc., are also four.

cardinal signs (of the zodiac). The two equinoctial and the two solstitial signs, Aries and Libra, Cancer and Capricorn.

cardinal virtues. Justice, prudence, temperance, and fortitude, on which all other virtues hang or depend. A term of the Schoolmen, to distinguish the "natural" virtues from the "theological" virtues (faith, hope, and charity).

cardinal winds. See CARDINAL POINTS above.

Cardinals. In American baseball parlance, the nickname of the St. Louis Nationals. Cf. BASEBALL TEAMS.

Carducci, Giosuè (1835-1907). Italian poet, awarded Nobel prize for literature (1906). Considered national poet of modern Italy. Also author of historical studies in literary criticism.

Cardozo, Benjamin Nathan (1870-1938). Eminent American jurist. Associate justice of the U.S. Supreme Court (1932). Author of several books on law.

Carew, Thomas (1594 or 1595-1639?). English poet, one of the "sons of Ben," or poets influenced by the style of Ben JONSON. He was a courtier for Charles I, and was noted for his tact. An anecdote tells of one occasion when, as Gentleman of the Privy Chamber, he was lighting the King to bed and found the Queen in a compromising situation with another courtier. Carew is reported to have stumbled and extinguished the light so that the King saw nothing. Carew wrote love poems, epitaphs and elegies in the style of Jonson and also of John DONNE. His Poems were published in 1640.

Carey, Henry (d. 1743). English poet and composer; wrote farces, burlesques, songs, and often the accompanying music for the stage, as for instance "Sally in our Alley." There was a rumor that he was also the author of "God Save the King."

Carey, Matthew (1760-1839). English-born American editor and author, founder of the American Museum (1787) which, together with the COLUMBIAN MAGAZINE, also edited for a time by Carey, was the first successful American magazine. He is best known for his A Plum Pudding for the Humane, Chaste, and Enlightened Peter Porcupine (1799), which is a bitter and violent attack upon William COBBETT for the latter's criticism of America. The Porcupiad (1799) is a satiric poem in the same vein as the Plum Pudding. Carey also wrote a History of the Yellow Fever (1793), Miscellaneous Trifles (1796), a collection of short stories, and a number of political articles.

Carey, Mother. See MOTHER CAREY'S CHICKENS.

Carey, Philip. Hero of W. Somerset Maugham's novel OF HUMAN BONDAGE. He is a sensitive young English lad of more than average intelligence and talent, living in the care of an uncle and aunt, his loneliness as an orphan aggravated by the self-consciousness and sense of isolation he feels because of a club-foot. He aspires to a career as a painter and to a true love, but is ironically frustrated by his passion for a waitress named Mildred.

Carey, Rosa Nouchette (1840-1909). English writer of stories for girls.

Cargadores, Capatez de. A powerful Italian, nicknamed "NOSTROMO" in Joseph Conrad's novel of that title.

Cargill, Rev. Josiah. In Scott's ST. RONAN'S WELL, minister of St. Ronan's Well, tutor of the Hon. Augustus Bidmore and the suitor of Miss Augusta Bidmore, his pupil's sister.

Cargoes. A popular poem by John MASEFIELD.

carillon. A set or chime of fixed bells originally four, hence the name, now normally tuned to the chromatic scale.

Carinthia Jane Kirby. In Meredith's AMAZING MARRIAGE.

Carker, James. In Dickens' DOMBEY AND SON, manager in the house of Mr. Dombey, merchant. Carker is a man of forty of a florid complexion, with very glistening white teeth, which show conspicuously when he speaks. His smile is like "the snarl of a cat." He is the Alastor of the house of Dombey, for he not only brings the firm to bankruptcy, but he seduces Alice Marwood (cousin of Edith, Dombey's second wife) and also induces Edith to elope with him. Edith leaves him at Dijon, and Carker, returning to England, is run over by a railway train and killed.

John Carker. The elder brother, a junior clerk in the same firm. He twice robs it and is forgiven.

Harriet Carker. A gentle, beautiful young woman, who marries Mr. Morfin, one of the employes in the house of Mr. Dombey, merchant. When her elder brother John falls into disgrace by robbing his employer, Harriet leaves the house of her brother James to live with and cheer her disgraced brother John.

Carleton, Will (1843-1912). Homespun American poet. Author of Farm Ballads (1873), City Ballads (1875). Best-known poem "Over the Hill to the Poor House."

carline. An old woman, used disparagingly. Scotch. The word is related to churl.

As he rode down the sanctified bends of the Bow, Ilka carline was flyting and shaking her pow.

Sir Walter Scott, "The Bonnets of Bonnie Dundee."

Carlisle, Lady. In Browning's historical tragedy, STRAFFORD, a character introduced to supply a love element. She is not a historical personage.

Carlson, Evans Fordyce (1896-1947). American officer and writer. Traveled two thousand miles with the Chinese Eighth Route Army (1937-1939). Resigned from U.S. army and wrote Twin Stars of China and The Chinese Army (1940). In 1941 he was commissioned in the marines, and, as a lieutenant colonel, organized and led a guerrilla unit called "Carlson's Raiders" which scored brilliant successes against the Japanese.

Carlyle, Thomas (1795-1881). Scotch-born English prose writer, known for his explosive attacks on sham, hypocrisy, and excessive materialism, his distrust of democracy, and his belief in the power of the individual, especially a strong, heroic leader. He was influenced in his early career by German literature and thought, being a particular admirer of SCHILLER and GOETHE. His best-known book is his History of the French Revolution (1837). Of his public lectures, the most famous and those best expressing his particular cult of the leader are ON HEROES, HERO-WORSHIP, AND THE HEROIC IN HISTORY, which were delivered in 1840 and published in 1841. Carlyle's views on economics, including a hatred of LAISSEZ-FAIRE policies, attacks on the destruction of human personality by the machines of industrialism, and a distrust of social legislation, are to be found in the essays Chartism (1839), Past and Present (1843), and Latter Day

Pamphlets (1850). Among his biographies are Life of Schiller (1823-1824); Cromwell (1845); The Life of Sterling (1851); History of Frederick II of Prussia, Called Frederick the Great (1858-1865). SARTOR RESARTUS (1833-1834), called a "spiritual biography," is one of the author's most characteristic works and aroused a storm of violent protest when it was published. Carlyle's style is savage, violent, and apocalyptic, marked by unusual words and figures of speech and expressions influenced by the German language. See also BLUMINE; CRAIGENPUTTOCK; WELSH, JANE.

carmagnole. (1) Costume of French Revolutionists: wide-collared jacket, wide black pantaloons, red cap, and scarlet or tricolored waistcoat (adopted from workmen of Carmagnola in the Piedmont).

(2) A Red Republican song and dance of the time of the first French Revolution with the refrain

Dansons la Carmagnole,—Vive le son, vive le son,— Dansons la Carmagnole,—Vive le son du canon!

Carman, William Bliss (1861-1929). Canadian poet and journalist, founder of the magazine The Chap-Book. He is best known as collaborator with Richard Hovey on Songs from Vagabondia (1894), More Songs from Vagabondia (1896), and Last Songs from Vagabondia (1900), extremely popular books of verse on the joys of travel and the outdoors. He also wrote Pipes of Pan I (1902); Pipes of Pan II (1903); The Poetry of Life (1904); The Rough Rider (1909); Echoes from Vagabondia (1912); Far Horizons (1925). See GENTLE TRADITION.

Carmelites. Order of mendicant friars, founded at Mt. Carmel by the Crusader Berthold in the 12th Century. Expelled from Holy Land by Saracens in the 13th Century, came to Europe. The order of Carmelite nuns dates from 15th Century, the greatest of these being the Spanish mystic, Saint Teresa of Ávila, who organized the austere branch of the discalced Carmelites in contrast to the traditional Carmelites of the mitigated rule.

Carmen. An opera by Georges BIZET (1875) based on Mérimée's novel of the same name. Carmen, a gypsy coquette, piqued at the indifference of the young Spanish officer Don José, succeeds in winning his interest, and a moment later, when she has stabbed another girl in the cigarette factory where she is employed, he allows her to escape her bonds. She now persuades him to desert and cast in his lot with the gypsies. His love grows stronger as hers cools; she soon has eyes only for Escamillo, the famous toreador. José allows himself to be led home to the bedside of his dying mother by Michaela, a peasant girl who loves him, but returns to find Carmen entering the arena for the bull fight. She refuses to return to him, and he stabs her.

Carmen Deo Nostro (Song to Our Lord). See CRASHAW, RICHARD.

Carmen Sylva. Pseudonym of the poetess Elizabeth, Queen of Rumania, née Pauline Elisabeth Ottilie Luise, princess of Wied (1843-1916). She was a patroness of arts and letters and wrote practically all her own works (some 20 books) in German.

Carnier, Carl Lamson (1893-). American poet, novelist, and folklorist. Taught at Hamilton College, Univ. of Rochester, Univ. of Alabama. First success Stars Fell on Alabama (1934). Wrote Listen for a Lonesome Drum (1936), The Hurricane's Children, Genesee Fever (1941), and The Hudson (1939).

Carmilhan. A legendary phantom ship of the Baltic. The captain of this ship swore he would double the Cape, whether God willed it or not. For this impious vow he was doomed to abide for ever and ever captain in the same vessel, which always appears near the Cape, but never doubles it. The kobold of the phantom ship, named Klaboterman, helps sailors at their work, but beats those who are idle. When a vessel is doomed, the kobold appears smoking a short pipe, dressed in yellow, and wearing a night-cap. See also FLYING DUTCHMAN.

Carnal, Grandma Called It. A book of reminiscences by Bertha Foster Damon.

Carnegie, Andrew (1835-1919). American steelmaster from Dunfermline, Scotland. Worked up from bobbin-boy at Pittsburgh and amassed one of the great American fortunes. Adopted the Bessemer process for his mills. Bought up or crowded out his rivals. His labor policy was stern. He devoted his later years to redispersing his wealth by making many public benefactions, including the endowment of public libraries and the Carnegie Institute of Technology.

Carnegie, Dale (1888-). American teacher of public-speaking, lecturer, and author of inspirational "self-help" books. He is best known for How to Win Friends and Influence People (1937), a book of phenomenal sales purporting to give rules for the achievement of professional and personal success. Its title became a national catch-phrase.

Caroline. Queen-consort of George II, introduced by Walter Scott in THE HEART OF MIDLOTHIAN. Jeanie Deans has an interview with her in the gardens at Richmond, and Her Majesty promises to intercede with the King for Effie Deans' pardon.

Carolingians. The early ruling family of France and Germany to which CHARLEMAGNE belonged and which was named for him. The first important members of the family were Pepin of Landen and Pepin of Heristal, Austrasian counts who became mayors of the palace under the feeble Merovingian kings. Charles MARTEL (Charles the Hammer) was the true founder of the Carolingian house, serving as mayor of the palace for the whole kingdom of the Franks and consolidating his power against the feudal nobles. His son Pepin the Short was elected king in 751, and his grandson Charlemagne (Carolus Magnus, or Charles the Great), Pepin's son, came to the throne in 771, ruling until 814. Charlemagne fought wars constantly and gradually enlarged the Frankish state until, on Christmas Day, 800, he was crowned Emperor of the Romans by Pope Leo III, and the Holy Roman Empire came into being. Upon his death his realm was divided and in course of time gave rise to the distinct kingdoms of Germany and France.

The Carolingian Renaissance was a revival of interest in scholarship, education, literature, and philosophy, which took place under Charlemagne's empire, when the threat of Mohammedan and Norse invasions was over for awhile. Monastic schools and libraries were established, an effort was made to determine correct and authoritative texts of known works, a reform in manuscript handwriting was made with the introduction of the clear minuscule hand, which is that used in the best manuscripts that have been preserved, and a school was conducted at the palace itself by leading scholars. Connected with the palace school were ALCUIN of York, the most important single figure of the Carolingian Renaissance; Einhard, Charlemagne's biographer; Theodulf, the leading poet of the group; and later, the Irish philosopher Johannes Scotus ERIGENA.

Caron, Pierre Augustin, see BEAUMARCHAIS.

Carpaccio, Vittore (1460?-1526?). Venetian painter who influenced Bellini. Noted for dramatic representations of sacred subjects.

Carpenter, John Alden (1876-). American composer, best known for his orchestral suite Adventures in a Perambulator (1915), portraying the impressions of a baby as it is wheeled along the street by its nurse. His ballet KRAZY KAT (1922), based on the popular comic strip of that name, is an attempt to make use of jazz in serious music. Sky-scrapers (1926) is another ballet, presenting impressions in sound of a great American city.

Carpenter, Edward (1844-1929). English writer, interested in socialist movements. Lecturer on socialism. His most famous book is Love's Coming of Age (1896).

Carpentier, Georges (1894-). Famous French pugilist, light-heavyweight champion of the world (1920); defeated by Dempsey for heavyweight championship (1921). In 1922 lost light-heavyweight crown to Battling Siki.

carpet.

magic carpet. The carpet which, to all appearances, is worthless, but which, if anyone sits thereon, will transport him instantaneously to the place he wishes to go, is one of the stock properties of Eastern wonder-tales and romance. It is sometimes termed Prince Hou-sain's carpet, because of the popularity of the Story of Prince Ahmed in The Arabian Nights, where it supplies one of the principal incidents; but the chief magic carpet is that of King Solomon, which, according to the Mohammedan legend related in the Koran, was of green silk. His throne was placed on it when he traveled, and it was large enough for all his forces to stand upon, the men and women on his right hand, and the spirits on his left. When all were arranged in order, Solomon told the wind where he wished to go, and the carpet, with all its contents, rose in the air and alighted at the place indicated. In order to screen the party from the sun, the birds of the air with outspread wings formed a canopy over the whole party.

be on the carpet, or be carpeted. To be reprimanded.

bring a question on the carpet. To bring it up for consideration: a translation of Fr. sur le tapis (on the tablecloth)—i.e. before the House, under consideration.

carpetbagger. The name given in the United States to the Northern political adventurers, who sought a career in the southern states after the Civil War of 1865. Their only "property qualification" was in the personal baggage they brought with them, and they were looked upon with great suspicion.

carpet knight. One dubbed at Court by favor, not having won his spurs by military service in the field. Perhaps because mayors, lawyers, and civilians generally are knighted as they kneel on a carpet before their sovereign in contradistinction to those knighthoods that used to be conferred on the actual field of battle; but more probably with allusion to the preference shown by non-martial knights for the carpeted drawing-room over the tented field.

Carpio, Bernardo del, see BERNARDO DEL CARPIO.

Carr, John Dickson (1905-). American-English writer of detective fiction, also known under the pseudonyms of Carter Dickson and Carr Dickson. J. B. Priestley finds his work above average.

Carr, Private. In James Joyce's ULYSSES the English soldier who, with his companion Private Compton, starts a fight with Stephen Dedalus at the establishment of Bella COHEN. The incident is believed to be a personal satirical attack directed by the author against one Carr, an attaché at the British Consulate at Zurich during World War I, with whom Joyce had an argument and litigation over a pair of trousers for an amateur performance of THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST.

Carraci. A famous Italian family of painters of the late 16th and early 17th centuries. It consisted of Agostino (1557?-1602) and Annibale (1560?-1609), brothers; Antonio (1583-1618), son of Agostino; and Ludovico (1555-1619), cousin of Agostino and Annibale. Ludovico led his cousins in a movement of revolt against mannerism, establishing the Carraci Academy in 1585, called "Accademia dei Desiderosi" or "Accademia degli Incamminati." Here an eclectic style was taught which sought to combine the best elements of the individual styles of the great artists of the Italian Renaissance. The movement became known as Eclecticism. Ludovico, Annibale, and Agostino often collaborated in painting pictures for churches and for secular palaces, although the brothers together and singly had a better professional reputation than Ludovico.

Carranza, Venustiano (1859-1920). Mexican president. Associate of Francisco Madero in the revolution of 1910. Embroiled with U.S. in 1916 over border raids of Pancho Villa. In April 1920 he was driven out and slain by his own followers.

Carrel, Alexis (1873-1944). French scientist, best known for his experiments in keeping organs alive outside the bodies of animals. Man, the Unknown (1935) is a book by Carrel on the contributions and social potentialities of science, written for the layman.

Carrie, Sister, see SISTER CARRIE.

Carrión Crow, Old Adam the. Song by Thomas Lovell Beddoes in Death's Jest Book. There is also a nursery rhyme, "The Carrión Crow."

Carroll, Charles, of Carrollton (1737-1832). A signer of the Declaration of Independence. The Carrolls are a famous Maryland family.

Carroll, Gladys Hasty (1904-). New England novelist whose work carries on the New England tradition of Sarah Orne Jewett and Mary E. Wilkins Freeman and supplements the novels of the Maine seacoast by Mary Ellen CHASE and Rachel FIELD.

Carroll, Lewis. Pseudonym of Charles Lutwidge Dodgson (1832-1898). English mathematician, famous for his whimsical fantasies, ALICE IN WONDERLAND (1865) and its sequel, Through the Looking-Glass (1871). These were written for a child, Alice Liddell, but became popular among adult readers; theorists of SURREALISM in the 20th century seriously interpreted Carroll's works as early embodiments of their own principles. Other examples of Carroll's fantasy, together with satires and parodies on a number of respected and popular English writers of his day, are The Hunting of the Snark (1876) and Sylvie and Bruno (1889-1893). Under his own name of Dodgson he wrote An Elementary Treatise on Determinants (1867) and Symbolic Logic (1896). See also FATHER WILLIAM; JABBER-WOCKY.

Carroll, Paul Vincent (1900-). Irish dramatist. Received the Drama Critics' Circle award for best foreign play of 1938 for his Shadow and Substance. The Abbey Theatre refused his The White Steed but it was produced in America.

Carryl, Charles Edward (1842-1920). New York financier and writer of children's books of a type reminiscent of Lewis CARROLL, as Davy and the Goblin (1886); The Admiral's Caravan (1892). They are now classics and contain some brilliant nonsense verse.

Carryl, Guy Wetmore (1873-1904). Son of Charles Edward CARRYL. Writer of brilliant humorous verse, serious poetry, short stories and novels. Fables for the Frivolous (1899), a book of verse; Mother Goose for Grown-Ups (1900) and Grimm Tales Made Gay (1903), two more books of verse; Zut and Other Parisians (1903), a volume of short stories; The Lieutenant-Governor (1903), a novel.

Carson, Kit (1809-1868). A famous trapper and guide of the American West. In his poem Kit Carson's Ride, Joaquin Miller tells how the scout and his bride and his friend Revels ride desperately before a prairie fire on his wedding day and finally come to safety. Kit Carson attained additional fame through the dime novels of the Beadle Library in such thrillers as Kit Carson, King of the Guides.

Carstone, Richard. In Dickens' BLEAK HOUSE, cousin of Ada Clare, both being wards in chancery, interested in the great suit of "Jarndyce v. Jarndyce." Richard Carstone is a "handsome youth, about nineteen, of ingenuous face, and with a most engaging laugh." He marries his cousin Ada, and lives in hope that the suit will soon terminate and make him rich.

Carswell, Mrs. Catherine (1879-). Her biography of D. H. Lawrence (1932), a close friend who had encouraged her work, was called a libel by J. Middleton Murry, and suppressed, but is said to be "the most illuminating book about Lawrence."

Cartaphilus. One of the names of the WANDERING JEW. The story of Cartaphilus is taken from the Book of the Chronicles of the Abbey of St. Albans, which contains the earliest account of the Wandering Jew (1228).

Carte, Richard D'Oyly (1844-1901). English stage producer, known for his productions of GILBERT AND SULLIVAN operas at his Savoy Theater in London. The D'Oyly Carte companies became those most closely associated with performances of Gilbert and Sullivan works.

carte blanche (Fr. white card). A paper with only the signature written on it, so that the person to whom it is given may write his terms knowing that they will be accepted. It was originally a military phrase, referring to capitulation at discretion; but it is now used entirely in a figurative sense, conferring absolute freedom of action on one to whom it is given.

cartel. An association of business competitors in the same field, formed with the object of controlling the market and creating a monopoly. From German Kartell, corresponding to the American pool.

Carter, Colonel George Fairfax, see COLONEL CARTER OF CARTERSVILLE.

Carter, Hodding (1907-). Editor of the Delta Democrat-Times of Greenville, Mississippi. Associated with Stars and Stripes in World War II. Author of The Winds of Fear and Lower Mississippi. In 1946 he received the Pulitzer Prize for editorial writing.

Carter, Howard (1873-1939). Famous English Egyptologist. Discovered the tomb of Tutankhamen (ca. 1350 B.C.).

Carter, John Franklin (1897-). American political journalist and writer of detective fiction. Better known under the pseudonyms of "Jay Franklin" and "Diplomat."

Carter, Nick. The pseudonym under which Frederick Van Rensselaer Dey (1861-1922) produced his popular dime novels. The character of Nick Carter was reputedly invented by John R. Coryell (1848-1924), American writer of popular fiction and turned over by him to Dey and to Thomas Chalmers Harbaugh (1849-1924). The first Nick Carter novel appeared in 1890 with the title Nick Carter, Detective, by "a Celebrated Author." The series was continued as The Nick Carter Weekly by Nick Carter. It is said that Dey wrote no less than 1076 stories, or about forty million words, in the person of the adventurous Nick. Together with Harbaugh he is also said to have written some of the novels appearing under the pseudonym of Bertha M. CLAY.

Carteret, Philip (1639-1682). Colonial governor of America: of New Jersey (1664-1676), of East New Jersey (1676-1682). In conflict with Andros, governor of New York, over collection of customs.

Cartesianism. The philosophical system of René DESCARTES, Latinized as Cartesius. See also COGITO ERGO SUM.

Carthage. Famous city of the ancient world in North Africa.

delenda est Carthago. Lat. "Carthage must be destroyed." These are the words with which Cato the Elder concluded every speech in the Senate when Carthage was a menace to the power of Rome. They are now proverbial, and mean, "That which stands in the way of our greatness must be removed at all hazards."

Carthage of the north. Lubeck was so called when head of the Hanseatic League.

Carthaginian faith. Treachery.

Carthaginian peace. A peace treaty implying the virtual annihilation of the vanquished.

Carthon: A Poem. One of the supposed translations from the poetry of OSSIAN by James MACPHERSON, published in Fragments of Ancient Poetry Collected in the Highlands (1760). It is written in highly poetic prose and tells of Carthon, a Celtic hero, who is unknowingly killed in single combat by his father Clessamor. Clessamor had been forced to flee for his life, leaving his wife Moina, and so was not aware of his son's name or existence. The theme is of the frequent and ancient SOHRAB AND RUSTUM type.

Carthusians. From Chartreuse, near Grenoble in France. Order of monks founded in 1084 by St. Bruno. Vowed to perpetual silence, continuous wearing of hair shirts, and eating of only one meal a day.

Cartier, Jacques (1494-1557). French navigator. Discovered St. Lawrence River in 1536.

Carton, Sydney. The hero of Dickens' TALE OF TWO CITIES, a dissipated young man whose temperament is in distinct contrast to that of Charles Darnay, whom he personally resembles. Sydney Carton loves Lucie Manette, but, knowing of her attachment to Darnay, never attempts to win her. Her friendship, however, calls out his good qualities, and he dies on the guillotine instead of Darnay.

cartouche. In Egyptology, an oval or oblong figure as on monuments, containing a sovereign's name.

Cartwright, William (1611-1643). English scholar, teacher of metaphysics at Oxford, poet, and author of plays successfully presented at the university. He was one of the "sons of Ben," or poets influenced by Ben JONSON. Comedies, Tragi-Comedies, with Other Poems was published in 1651.

Carus, Paul (1852-1919). German-American philosopher. Editor of Open Court and The Monist. Translated and edited Kant.

Caruso, Enrico (1873-1921). Italian operatic tenor of world-wide popularity, best known for his performances in AIDA, PAGLIACCI, and RIGOLETTO.

Carvel, Richard, see RICHARD CARVEL.

Carvel, Virginia. The heroine of Churchill's CRISIS.

Carver, George Washington (1864-1943). American Negro botanist. Teacher at Tuskegee Institute from 1896. Bureau of Plant Industry, U.S. Dept. of Agriculture from 1895. Known for researches on industrial uses of the peanut, sweet potato and soy-bean. Subject of a widely sold biography by Rackham Holt.

Carver, John (1575-1621). First governor of Plymouth Colony.

caryatids. Figures of women in Greek costume, used in architecture to support entablatures. Caryae, in Laconia, sided with the Persians at Thermopylae, in consequence of which the victorious Greeks destroyed the city, slew the men, and made the women slaves. Praxiteles, to perpetuate the disgrace, employed figures of these women, instead of columns. See ATLANTES.

Casabianca. A well-known poem by Felicia Hemans (1794-1835) celebrating the heroic death of Giacomo Jocante Casabianca, the little son of a French naval captain. The boy was set by his father on watch. The ship caught fire, and his father was burnt to death. As the flames spread, the boy called to his father, but stood by his post until the ship blew up.

Casablanca Conference. Meeting of Churchill and Roosevelt, January 14-26, 1943, together with their Chiefs of Staff. Premier Stalin and Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek did not attend but were kept informed of progress of discussions. General de Gaulle of the Fighting French and General Giraud, High Commissioner of French Africa, were brought together to unite France against Hitler. The entire field of war was surveyed.

Casa Guidi Windows. A long poem by Elizabeth Barrett Browning (1851), written on behalf of the national aspirations of the Florentines.

Casamassima, Princess, see PRINCESS CASAMASSIMA.

Casanova de Seingalt, Giovanni Jacopo (1725-1798). Italian adventurer, whose Memoirs—a record of rogueries and amours—are of great value and interest—not only for the historian.

Casas, Bartolomé de las, see LAS CASAS.

Casaubon, Isaac (1559-1614). French theologian, and with Scaliger and Lipsius, member of renowned triumvirate of the 16th century classical scholars.

Casaubon, Rev. Mr. In George Eliot's MIDDLEMARCH, the elderly scholar whom Dorothea Brooke marries.

Casca. In Shakespeare's Julius Caesar, a blunt, violent conspirator, in the faction of Brutus. When Caesar is slain, Antony says, "See what a rent the envious Casca made!"

case knife. A knife carried in a sheath or case. Such knives were formerly used at table. Hence the occasional use of the word for "table knife."

Casey, Mr. In James Joyce's A PORTRAIT OF THE ARTIST AS A YOUNG MAN, a friend of the family of Stephen Dedalus. He figures prominently in a childhood incident remembered by Stephen, a quarrel during a Christmas dinner with Mrs. Riordan about Parnell, of whom he is an admirer.

Casey Jones. The prototype of this character of American folk song is said to be the renowned engineer of the "Cannonball" on the Illinois Central railroad, John Luther Jones, who was killed in a train wreck in Mississippi during the early 1900's. To a Negro engine wiper, Wallace Saunders, is attributed the ballad, known for its serio-comic ending. In the ballad the wreck occurred on Reno Hill, on the road to San Francisco. The town of Cayce, Kentucky, near which Jones was born, may have supplied his famous nickname. A play entitled Casey Jones was produced by the Group Theater in New York.

Casket Letters, The. Letters supposed to have been written between Mary Queen of Scots and Bothwell, at least one of which was held to prove the complicity of the Queen in the murder of her husband, Darnley. They were kept in a casket which fell into the hands of the Earl of Morton (1567); they were examined and used as evidence, though denounced as forgeries by the Queen, who was never allowed to see them. They disappeared after the execution of the Regent, the Earl of Gowrie (1584), in whose custody they had last been. They have never been recovered, and their authenticity is still a matter of dispute.

Caslon, William (1692-1766). English type-founder. Designed a highly legible type called after him.

Casper Milquetoast. A character, created by the American cartoonist H. T. Webster, of a painfully timid man.

Cass, Godfrey and Dunstan. Two brothers who play an important part in George Eliot's SILAS MARNER.

Cassandra. A prophetess. In Greek legend the daughter of Priam and Hecuba, gifted with the power of prophecy; but Apollo, whose advances she had refused, brought it to pass that no one believed her predictions, although they were invariably correct. She appears in Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida. See under TROILUS.

Cassatt, Mary (1845-1926). American painter, resident most of her life in France, where she was associated with the Impressionists. See IMPRESSIONISM. She is known for her numerous mother-and-child studies, in which she is considered to have been influenced by Degas. Sister of American railroad executive and president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, Alexander Johnston Cassatt (1839-1906).

Casseres, Benjamin de, see DE CASSERES.

Cassibelan. Uncle to Cymbeline, mentioned in Shakespeare's play of that name. He is the historical Cassivellaunus, a British prince who ruled over the Catrivellauni (in Herts, Bucks, and Berks), about 50 B. C., and was conquered by Caesar.

When Julius Caesar . . . was in this Britain And conquer'd it, Cassibelan, thine uncle, . . . for him
And his succession granted Rome a tribute,
Yearly three thousand pounds, which by thee lately
Is left untender'd. Cymbeline, iii. 1.

Shakespeare drew his particulars from HOLINSHED, where it is Guiderius, not Cymbeline, who refuses to pay the tribute.

Cassim Baba, see BABA.

Cassino. In World War II a key position in the German Gustav line in Italy. In 1944 the Allies tried to land at Anzio in order to turn the Gustav Line and also to cut through it beyond Cassino with a view of taking Rome. The battle for Cassino itself began February 1. It was not taken until May 17. In the process the Benedictine Monastery of Monte Cassino was finally destroyed by bombing.

Cassio, Michael. In Shakespeare's OTHELLO, a Florentine, lieutenant in the Venetian army under the command of Othello. He engages in a street-brawl, for which he is suspended by Othello, but Desdemona pleads for his restoration. Iago makes capital of this intercession to rouse the jealousy of the Moor.

Cassiopeia. In Greek mythology, the wife of Cepheus, king of Ethiopia, and mother of ANDROMEDA. In consequence of her boasting of the beauty of her daughter, she was sent to the heavens as the constellation Cassiopeia, the chief stars of which form the outline of a lady seated in a chair and holding up both arms in supplication.

Cassius. In Shakespeare's JULIUS CAESAR, a Roman general, the instigator of the conspiracy against Julius Caesar, and friend of Brutus.

Brutus. The last of all the Romans, fare thee well!
It is impossible that ever Rome
Should breed thy fellow. Friends, I owe more tears
To this dead man than you shall see me pay.
I shall find time, Cassius, I shall find time.

Act v. Sc. 3.

Castaigne, André (1861-). Illustrator and author. Did much work in early days for Century magazine; many historical drawings. Wrote Fata Morgana (1904); The Bill-Toppers (1909).

Castalia, or Castaly. A fountain of Parnassus sacred to the Muses. Its waters had the power of inspiring with the gift of poetry those who drank of them.

castanets. Span. castañeta. Spoon-shaped shells of wood or ivory looped to the thumb and beaten together by middle finger as accompaniment to dance. So called for their resemblance to chestnuts.

Castaway, The. The last poem by William COWPER, written in 1799 and published in 1803. It was based on an incident described in A Voyage Round the World (1748), by Admiral George Anson (1697-1762), a celebrated English seaman of the 18th century. It tells of a lonely death at sea and compares this with the poet's own in a mood of despairing prophecy.

caste (Port. casta, race). One of the hereditary classes of society in India; hence any hereditary or exclusive class, or the class system generally. The four great Hindu castes are Brahmins (the priestly order), Shatryia or Kshatryia (soldiers and rulers), Vaisya (husbandmen and merchants), Sudra (agricultural laborers and mechanics). The first issued from the mouth of Brahma, the second from his arms, the third from his thighs, and the fourth from his feet. Below these come the Outcastes to whom the Vedas are sealed, and who are held cursed in this world and without hope.

lose caste. To lose position in society. To get degraded from one caste to an inferior one.

Castiglione, Baldassare de (1478-1529). Italian humanist, best known for Il Libro d'Oro, popularly known as Il Cortegiano (The Courtier; 1528), a prose dialogue which establishes the characteristics of the ideal aristocratic gentleman in dress, bearing, pastimes, conversation, behavior, ethics, culture, intellectual attainments, and the like. This work was translated into English in 1561 by Sir Thomas Hoby and had a wide influence in Elizabethan England, particularly in the life and personality of Sir Philip SIDNEY and the concepts embodied in Spenser's Faerie Queene. Many of the attributes of the ideal courtier are considered similar to those grouped under the term Magnificence in Aristotle's Nicomachean Ethics.

Castle, The (Das Schloss). A symbolic novel by Franz KAFKA, published in the U.S. in 1931. The hero, known as K., the Land Surveyor, comes to the little peasant village of Madeleinegasse in the Bohemian countryside. His aim is to enter the great, lonely castle of the Count West-West that stands on the side of a hill outside the town, but he discovers that entrance is forbidden him. Although he solicits the aid of the townspeople, seeking out the ostracized family of Amalia because her brother Barnabas serves as a messenger from the Castle, and ingratiating himself with the mistress of one of the administrative officials, the bureaucracy attached to the Castle frustrates his efforts at every turn. He is, however, permitted to use the local schoolroom as living-quarters, and the Assistants, a strange, pathetic pair of men who do absurd and comical things, are assigned to serve him in any way he wishes. He fills out a questionnaire supplied by the village secretary as the only means of approach to Klammm, an official of the Castle whom he is particularly anxious to see, but is assured that in spite of this he will never gain an interview with Klammm. The novel was left incomplete. In the author's plan of the final chapters, however, K. receives permission at last to live and work in the village, if not to enter the Castle, although the permission comes while he is on his deathbed, after having already lived in the village for a number of years!

The Castle contains the ideas on the relationship between God and man which occur in nearly all of Kafka's writings. It has been interpreted as the symbol of divine grace, sought by average mankind (represented by K.); the bureaucracy which frustrates the seeker's efforts has in its turn been interpreted as the body of religious tradition, ritual, and law which, with conflicting interpretations and misapprehensions of it on the part of the human mind itself, intervenes between God and man. In this novel, as in his other writings on the same theme, the author could see only misery, frustration, and ironic defeat for man. Cf. THE TRIAL. See also OLGA; SOR-TINI.

Castle, Egerton (1858-1920). Wrote in collaboration with his wife Agnes (d. 1922) a series of popular romantic novels, The Pride of Jennico being perhaps best remembered.

Castle, Vernon and Irene. American team of ballroom dancers, famous in the U.S. (ca. 1914) for their performances of popular dances of the time, especially the tango.

Castle Dangerous. A novel by Scott (1831). "Castle Dangerous" or "the Perilous Castle of Douglas" was so called because it was taken from the English three times between 1306 and 1307. In the novel Black Douglas promises to release his prisoner, Lady Augusta, if the castle is surrendered to him. Sir John de Walton consents, gives up the castle and marries the lady.

Castle Garden. Large circular building at the Battery, New York City, built as a fort in 1807. Later a concert hall where Jenny Lind sang. Then an immigrant station; last an aquarium. Now torn down.

Castlemaine. See Duchess of CLEVELAND.

Castlemon, Harry. Pseudonym of Charles Austin Fosdick (1842-1915), who wrote boys' books, including Frank on the Lower Mississippi (1869) and Frank Nelson in the Forecastle (1904).

Castle Number Nine. See BEMELMANS, LUDWIG.

Castle of Indolence. In Thomson's poem of this name (1748), the Castle is situated in the land of Drowsiness, where every sense is steeped in enervating delights. The owner is an enchanter, who deprives all who enter his domains of their energy and free will.

Castle of Otranto. A famous novel of the mystery and terror school, by Horace WALPOLE (1764). After his son Conrad, who has been on the point of marrying Isabella, daughter of the Marquis of Vicenza, is found dead by mysterious means in the castle court, Manfred, prince of Otranto, decides to marry Isabella himself. His grandfather's portrait descends from the wall for an interview with Manfred, and meantime Isabella escapes, aided by the peasant Theodore. One supernatural horror now follows another, until finally the castle falls and the statue of an ancestor, towering out of the ruins, cries "Behold in Theodore the true heir of Alphonse."

Castle Perilous, see PERILOUS CASTLE.

Castle Rackrent. An Irish story by Maria EDGEWORTH (1799), illustrating the evils of absenteeism. The old steward, Thady Quirk, tells of the various masters he has served under in the old castle—Sir Patrick, Sir Murtagh, Sir Kit and Sir Condy—and of the decline of the family fortunes.

Castles in the Air. Visionary projects, daydreams, splendid imaginings which have no real existence. In fairy tales we often have these castles built at a word, and vanishing as soon, like that built for Aladdin by the Genius of the Lamp. These air-castles are called by the French châteaux d'Espagne or châteaux en Asie.

Castlewood, Lady. In Thackeray's HENRY ESMOND, Rachel Esmond, the wife of Francis Esmond (Lord Castlewood), and later of Henry Esmond.

Castor and Pollux. In Roman mythology, the twin sons of Jupiter and Leda. Jupiter is said to have visited Leda in the form of a swan. She produced two eggs, from one of which sprang Castor and Clytemnestra, and from the other Pollux and Helen. Castor and Pollux, also known as the Dioscuri, had many adventures, were worshiped as gods, and were finally placed among the constellations.

Their name used to be given by sailors to the St. ELMO'S FIRE or Corposant. If only one flame showed itself, the Romans called it Helen, and said that it portended that the worst of the storm was yet to come; but two or more luminous flames they called Castor and Pollux, and said that they boded the termination of the storm.

Castorp, Hans. Hero of THE MAGIC MOUNTAIN by Thomas MANN. He is a young engineer of mediocre mind and talents, the son of a Hamburg merchant family. His only original aesthetic tendency is a dreamy susceptibility to music, but his fascination by the atmosphere of disease and death of the mountain sanatorium, the recondite conversations with SETTEMBRINI, and the voluptuous beauty of Clavdia CHAUCHAT, and his final contraction of tuberculosis himself, have been interpreted as symbolic of a gradual yielding to the excesses of pure aestheticism. Castorp himself is considered by many critics to symbolize the artist, especially the German Romantic artist, torn by a conflict between the insidiously dreamy lassitude of pure art, always perilously close to death, and the necessity for social action. His dreamy singing of a Schubert song as he goes into battle at the end of the novel ironically symbolizes the imperfect compromise he has made. Hans Castorp is akin to numerous other characters of Mann's who symbolize the artist, including Gustave Aschenbach, TONIO KRÖGER, and the Biblical JOSEPH.

Castriota, George. See Scanderbeg, hero of a poem by Longfellow with that title, in which he is also called Castriot.

Castruccio Castracani's sword. See under SWORD.

Casuals of the Sea. A novel by William McFEE (1916), dealing with the Goodrich family, chiefly Minnie Goodrich, the hard, selfish daughter who becomes a courtesan because she can achieve her own ambitions best in that fashion, and her brother Hannibal, a blundering dreamer, whose sense of achievement, such as it is, comes from leaving the tobacconist's counter for the more rigorous life of a trimmer on a steamship.

Casuarina Tree, The. A story by W. Somerset MAUGHAM (1926), dramatized with wide success as The Letter (1927).

cat. Called a "familiar," from the medieval superstition that Satan's favorite form was a black cat. Hence witches were said to have a cat as their familiar.

In ancient Rome the cat was a symbol of liberty. The goddess of Liberty was represented as holding a cup in one hand, a broken scepter in the other, and with a cat lying at her feet. No animal is so great an enemy to all constraint as a cat.

In Egypt the cat was sacred to Isis, or the moon. It was held in great veneration, and was worshiped with great ceremony as a symbol of the moon, not only because it is more active after sunset, but from the dilation and contraction of its pupil, symbolical of waxing and waning. The goddess Bast (Bubastis), representative of the life-giving solar heat, was portrayed as having the head of a cat, probably because that animal likes to bask in the sun. Diodorus tells us that whoever killed a cat, even by accident, was by the Egyptians punished by death, and according to Egyptian tradition, Drana assumed the form of a cat, and thus excited the fury of the giants.

grin like a Cheshire cat. An old simile, popularized by Lewis CARROLL—

"Please would you tell me," said Alice a little timidly, . . . "why your cat grins like that?" "It's a Cheshire cat," said the Duchess, "and that's why."—Alice in Wonderland (1865).

The phrase is applied to persons who show their teeth and gums when they laugh.

let the cat out of the bag. To disclose a secret. It was formerly a trick among country folk to substitute a cat for a sucking-pig, and bring it in a bag to market.

live a cat and dog life. To be always snarling and quarreling, as a cat and dog, whose aversion to each other is intense.

play cat and mouse with one. "To have him on a string"; while he is in your power to pretend constantly to let him go, but not actually to do so.

be made a cat's paw of, i.e. the tool of another, the medium of doing another's dirty work. The allusion is to the fable of the monkey who wanted to get some roasted chestnuts from the fire, and used the paw of his friend, the cat, for the purpose.

bell the cat. See under BELL.

fight like Kilkenny cats. To fight till both sides have lost their all; to fight with the utmost determination and pertinacity. The story is that during the Irish rebellion of 1798 Kilkenny was garrisoned by a troop of Hessian soldiers, who amused themselves by tying two cats together by their tails and throwing them across a clothes-line to fight. The authorities resolved to put a stop to the "sport," but, on the officer on duty approaching, one of the troopers cut the two tails with a sword, and the cats made off. When the officer inquired the meaning of the bleeding tails, he was told that two cats had been fighting and had devoured each other all but the tails.

waitin' for the cat to die. Waiting for a rope swing to come to a gradual standstill. James Whitcomb RILEY wrote a poem so entitled.

catachresis. Wrong use of one word for another, or a forced trope or mixed metaphor—the latter very popular with modern poets. Example. the British lion will never pull in its horns.

catacomb. A subterranean gallery for the burial of the dead, especially at Rome. The origin of the word is unknown. It is found on a very early calendar which appoints a feast at San Sebastian in Catacumbas. Here it is still part of a proper name, that of the cemetery of St. Sebastian on the Appian Way. From about the 5th century on, the term seems to have been in general use in the modern meaning.

Cataian. A native of Cathay or China; hence, a thief, liar, or scoundrel, because the Chinese had the reputation of being such.

I will not believe such a Cataian, though the priest of the town commended him for a true man.

Shakespeare, Merry Wives, ii. 1

Catalan. A native of Catalonia in Spain. The Catalan language, spoken in Catalonia, adjacent parts of Southern France, and by immigration in Cuba and Argentina, is a Romance language related to Provençal and Spanish.

catch.

first catch your hare. It is generally believed that "Mrs. Glasse," in the Art of Cookery, gave this direction; but the exact words are, "Take your hare when it is cased, and make a pudding . . . etc." To "case" means to take off the skin, as in All's Well, iii. 6, "We'll make you some sport with the fox ere we case him." "First catch your hare," however, is a very old phrase, and in the 13th century Bracton (Bk. iv. tit. i. ch. xx. sec. 4) has these words:

Vulgariter dicitur, quod primo oportet cervum capere, et postea, cum captus fuerit, illum excoiare (it is vulgarly said that you must first catch your deer, and then, when it is caught, skin it)

"Mrs. Glasse" was the pen-name of Dr. John Hill (1716-1775), who published The Art of Cookery Made Plain and Easy in 1747 as by a Lady; the pseudonym was added later.

catch a crab. In rowing, to be struck with the handle of one's oar; to fall backwards. This occurs when the rower leaves his oar too long in the water before repeating the stroke.

catch a Tartar. Said of the bitter bit. Grose says an Irish soldier in the Imperial service, in a battle against the Turks, shouted to his comrade that he had caught a Tartar. "Bring him along, then," said his mate. "But he won't come," cried Paddy. "Then come along yourself," said his comrade. "Arrah!" replied Paddy, "I wish I could, but he won't let me."

catchword. A cue word, or a phrase used as significant by one having really little knowledge of a subject. Technically, a catchword is a word so placed in print that it "catches" the reader's attention, as in dictionaries over the columns, or formerly in many books at the foot of every page taking up the first word of the following page.

Câteau-Cambrésis, Treaty of. See DISASTROUS PEACE.

categorical imperative. In the philosophy of KANT, a universal rule for ethical conduct: "Act only on that maxim whereby thou canst at the same time will that it should become a universal law." In non-philosophical language, the categorical imperative corresponds to the GOLDEN RULE.

catharsis. Purification of the emotions through artistic expression. Aristotle used it in a phrase about tragedy purging the emotions through pity and terror. The problem is analyzed in detail in Lessing's Laocoon.

Cathay. Marco Polo's name for a country in eastern Asia, roughly identical with northern China; from Ki-tah, the name of the ruling race in those parts in the 10th century.

Cathay, Merchants from. See BENÉT, William Rose.

Cathédrale, la. See HUYSMANS, JORIS-KARL.

Cather, Willa Sibert (1876-1947). American novelist and short-story writer, editor of McClure's Magazine (1906-1912), known for her studies of character and her stories of life in the Middle West. Her best-known novels are O PIONEERS! (1913); My Ántonia (1918); and DEATH COMES FOR THE ARCHBISHOP (1927). Among her other novels are Alexander's Bridge (1912); THE SONG OF THE LARK (1915); One of Ours (1922), winner of the Pulitzer prize; A Lost Lady (1923); The Professor's House (1925); My Mortal Enemy (1926); SHADOWS ON THE ROCK (1931); Lucy Gayheart (1935); Sapphira and the Slave Girl (1940). Her collections of short stories include The Troll Garden (1905); Youth and the Bright Medusa (1920); Obscure Destinies (1932). April Twilights (1903) is a book of poems, and Not Under Forty (1936) is a volume of essays.

Catherine. A story by Thackeray, written as a satire on the then popular romances idealizing criminals. The heroine, Catherine Hall (after her marriage, Catherine Hayes), is an unscrupulous murderess and is portrayed in anything but ideal terms.

Catherick, Anne. "THE WOMAN IN WHITE" in Wilkie Collins' novel of that title.

Catherine, St. See under SAINT.

Catherine de Médicis (1519-1589). Italian name Caterina de' Medici. Daughter of Lorenzo de' Medici, Queen of France, mother of three kings. Provoked civil and religious wars and is held responsible for the Massacre of St. Bartholomew (1572).

Catherine of Russia. The heroine of Shaw's historical drama Great Catherine (1913) which presents a picture of the 18th century Russian court.

Catherine wheel, Catherine tresses, etc. See under SAINTS.

Catholic League. A confederacy of Catholics formed in 1614 to counterbalance the Evangelic League of Bohemia. The two Leagues kept Germany in perpetual disturbance, and ultimately led to the Thirty Years' War (1618-1648).

Catholic Majesty. In Spanish, Católica Majestad. The special title of the Kings of Spain. It was first given to King Recared (590) in the third Council of Toledo, for his zeal in rooting out the "Arian heresy." But it was not until 1500 when Pope Alexander VI gave the title to Ferdinand V, king of Aragon and Castile, that it became annexed to the Spanish crown.

Cathos. One of the two titular heroines of Molière's comedy, LES PRÉCIEUSES RIDICULES.

Catiline. A Roman patrician, who headed a conspiracy to overthrow the government, and obtain for himself and his followers all places of power and trust. The conspiracy was discovered by Cicero, who exposed it in his four eloquent orations In Catilinum, which have become classics of oratory. Catiline escaped and put himself at the head of his army, but fell in battle 62 B. C. Voltaire, in his Rome sauvée (1752), introduced the conspiracy and death of Catiline.

Catlin, George (1796-1872). American artist who devoted himself to the study of American Indians. A series of his Indian portraits are in the National Museum, Washington, D.C. Author of Life Among the Indians (1867) etc.

Cato. (1) A man of simple life, severe morals, blunt speech, but undoubted patriotism, like the Roman censor of that name (234-149 B. C.). Cato the Censor, also known as Cato the Elder, is the man who concluded all his speeches in the Senate by insisting Ceterum censeo Carthaginem esse delendam, "For the rest I vote that Carthage should be destroyed."

(2) Grandson of Cato the censor, the titular hero of a tragedy by Addison (1713). Disgusted with Caesar, Cato retires to Utica, where he sets up a small republic; but Caesar resolves to reduce Utica as he has done the rest of Africa, and Cato, finding resistance hopeless, falls on his own sword.

cat-o'-nine-tails. A whip with nine lashes, used for punishing offenders, briefly called a cat, probably so called because it can be said to "scratch" the back as a cat might.

Catt, Carrie Chapman (1859-1947). American feminist leader.

cattle kingdom. The grasslands of the American West from the Rio Grande to the northern frontier and from Kansas and Nebraska into the Rocky Mountains. Here millions of buffaloes became extinct in two decades, their place being taken by Texas longhorns and Montana steers. The cowmen's commonwealth was a romantic phase of American life. For an account of this time and the coming of the "nesters," cf. The Sea of Grass by Conrad Richter (1937).

Catullus, Gaius Valerius (84?-54 B.C.). One of the greatest Roman lyric poets. Many of his poems are addressed to "Lesbia," identified as the sister of Clodius.

Caudine Forks. A narrow pass in the mountains near Capua, now called the Valley of Arpaia. It was here that the Roman army, under the consuls T. Veturius Calvinus and Sp. Postumius, fell into the hands of the Samnites (321 B.C.), and were made to pass under the yoke. Hence, the term means an ignominious defeat.

Caudle lecture. A curtain lecture. The term is derived from a series of papers by Douglas Jerrold, which were published in Punch (1846). These papers represent Job Caudle as a patient sufferer of the lectures of his nagging wife, Margaret, after they had gone to bed and the curtains were drawn. If he replied, she pronounced him insufferably rude, and if he did not, he was insufferably sulky.

caul. An investing membrane. Specifically, the membrane covering the fetus. A child "born with a caul," that is, with part of the fetal membrane covering its head, is supposed to be lucky, or to possess second-sight.

Cauld-lad, The, of Hilton Hall. A house-spirit, who moved about the furniture during the night. Being resolved to banish him, the inmates left for him a green cloak and hood, before the kitchen-fire, which so delighted him that he never troubled the house any more; but sometimes he might be heard singing—

Here's a cloak, and here's a hood,
The cauld-lad of Hilton will do no more good.

Cauline or Cawline, Sir. The hero of one of the ballads in Percy's Reliques. He lives in the palace of the king of Ireland, and "used to serve the wine." He falls in love with Christabelle, the King's daughter, who secretly plights her troth to him, but the King discovers the lovers in a bower, and banishes Sir Cauline. He, however, returns just in time to slay a "Soldain" who is seeking the lady's hand, but dies of the wounds received in the combat; and the fair Christabelle dies of grief, having "burst her gentle heart in twayne."

Cautionary Tales. Verses by Hilaire Belloc.

Cauvin, Jean, see CALVIN, JOHN.

Cavalcade. See COWARD, NOEL PIERCE.

Cavalcanti, Guido (ca. 1250-1300). Leading Florentine poet before Dante who called him his "first friend."

Cavalier Poets. English lyric poets associated with the court of Charles I, chief of whom were HERRICK, CAREW, SUCKLING, LOVELACE.

Cavaliere, Lina (1874-1944). Italian operatic soprano. Sang in many leading European cities and in U.S. Killed in a bombing raid in World War II.

Cavalleria Rusticana (Rustic Chivalry). An opera by Mascagni (1890) based on a story by Giovanni Verga. The characters are all simple village folk. Turiddu's old love, Lola, has married Alfio, a carrier, but Turiddu, after dallying with the affections of the too-willing Santuzza, returns to Lola. Santuzza arouses Alfio's suspicions, a duel is fought and Turiddu is killed.

Cavallini, Madame. The heroine of Edward Sheldon's drama, ROMANCE.

Cavaradosi, Mario. Tosca's artist lover in Puccini's opera, LA TOSCA.

cave of Adullam, see ADULLAM.

caveat. (Lat., let him beware). A notice directing the recipient to refrain from some act pending the decision of the Court. Hence, enter a caveat. To give legal notice that the opponent is not to proceed with the suit in hand until the party giving the notice has been heard; to give a warning or admonition.

caveat emptor. Lat., "let the purchaser beware"; i.e. the buyer must keep his eyes open, for the bargain he agrees to is binding.

Cavell, Edith Louisa (1872-1915). Heroic English nurse. Enabled many Allied soldiers to escape to Holland. Executed by the Germans Oct. 12, 1915. Cf. the painting by George Bellows.

Cavender's House. See ROBINSON, EDWIN ARLINGTON.

Cavendish, Margaret, Duchess of Newcastle (ca. 1625-1673). English noblewoman, one of the few outstanding writers of her sex in the 17th century, known for her eccentricity of dress and behavior. She wrote prolifically on a variety of subjects and in a variety of forms, producing thirteen printed books. Her best-known work is her Sociable Letters (1664), presenting a vivid picture of her times. She also wrote a biography of her husband, the Duke of Newcastle, who had been a devoted follower of Charles I and Charles II. In his celebrated diary, Samuel PEPYS refers to the Duchess as "a mad, conceited, ridiculous woman."

Cavendish, Thomas (1555?-1592). Third circumnavigator of the globe. Died at sea.

caviar. The roe of the sturgeon, pickled, salted, and prepared for use as a relish. Caviar is an acquired taste; hence, Shakespeare's caviar to the general (Hamlet, ii. 2) which means, above the taste or comprehension of ordinary people.

Cavour, Conte Camillo Benso di (1810-1861). Famous Italian statesman. Founded with Count Cesare Balbo Il Risorgimento, organ for Italian National Movement (1847). Aided Garibaldi (1860). Secured union of Central and Southern Italy to Piedmont through plebiscites.

Cawdor. See JEFFERS, ROBINSON.

Cawein, Madison Julius (1865-1914). American southern poet. Kentucky Poems (1902), etc.

Caxton, William (1422-1491). The first English printer, also a well-known translator. While in the household of the Duchess of Burgundy, a sister of Edward IV of England, (1471-1476), Caxton learned the art of printing. In 1474 he printed his own translation of a French romance, Le Recueil des histories de Troyes, as Recuyell of the Histories of Troy, and in 1475, another translation from the French, The Game and Playe of Chess. When he returned to England, he set up a press at Westminster and from 1477 to 1491 printed nearly eighty books, many of which were translations he himself had made from the French.

Caxtons, The. A novel by BULWER-LYTTON (1849) which with its sequels My Novel (1853) and What Will He Do with It (1858), narrates the history of an upper middle-class English family. The story is supposed to be written by Pisistratus Caxton. His father, Austin Caxton, is an impractical philosopher and scholar, lost in vague dreams and plans for his proposed masterpiece on "The History of Human Error." The launching of this magnum opus is finally made possible by the money which Pisistratus brings back from Australia. Other of the Caxtons are the gay, irresponsible Uncle Jack, who is an inveterate and not too lucky promoter; the fine old soldier, Captain Roland, also an uncle of Pisistratus, and Roland's son Herbert a wild young man with gypsy blood in his veins, who dies a heroic death in India.

Cayley, Charles. The man with whom Christina ROSSETTI was in love but whom she was reported by her brother, W. M. Rossetti, to have refused to marry because of his liberal attitude in matters of religion.

Cazamian, Louis (1877-). French scholar and authority on English literature. His Histoire de la littérature anglaise (1924), written in collaboration with Émile Legouis, is in many respects superior to English books of a comparable scope.

Cazique. See RULERS, TITLES OF.

Ceca to Mecca, from. From one end of the world to the other; from pillar to post. Ceca and Mecca are two places visited by Mohammedan pilgrims. Cf. Dan to Beersheba; and Land's End to John o' Groat's.

Čech, Svatopluk (1846-1908). Czech epic and satiric national poet.

Cecil. English family from which have come many famous statesmen, among them William Cecil, 1st Baron Burghley (1520-1598), director of Queen Elizabeth's policy. The youngest, Edward Christian David Cecil (1902-) is a biographer. Cf. his The Young Melbourne (1939).

Cecilia, or Memoirs of an Heiress. A novel by Fanny BURNBY (1782). The heroine, Cecilia Beverley, is an heiress of somewhat inferior birth, who must, to keep her fortune, marry a husband who will adopt her name. The hero, Mortimer Delville, loves her, but numerous obstacles keep them apart for a long time, particularly the schemes and prejudices of people who wish to make use of her for their own advantage.

Cecilia, St. See under SAINT.

Cecily, St. The heroine of the SECOND NUN'S TALE in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales.

Cecrops. Traditional founder of Athens and first King of Attica. Supposed to have sprung from the ground and was represented as half man, half dragon.

Cedar Creek, in the Shenandoah, where Early surprised Sheridan's Army (Oct. 19, 1864). Sheridan mustered a victorious countercharge that broke the Confederates' command of the Valley for incursions northward.

cedilla. Literally, a "little z (or zeta)." A diacritical mark placed under a "c" (as in façade) to assign to it the sound value of "s" rather than of "k." The form ç is a development from an older cz. It is used in French and Portuguese, formerly also in Spanish.

Cedric. In Scott's IVANHOE, athane of Rotherwood surnamed "the Saxon." He is the father of the hero, and the guardian of Rowena, the heroine.

Celadon. A general name for a lover. In D'Urfé's ASTRÉE he is the shepherd lover of Astrée; in Thomson's SEASONS the shepherd lover of Amelia.

Celandine, To the Small. Poem by William WORDSWORTH. The celandine is a herb whose yellow flowers resemble buttercups. Less poetically it is called pilewort, a specific.

Celebrated Jumping Frog of Calaveras County, The. A sketch by Mark TWAIN, based on an old American "tall tale" and first published in 1865. It was the first of the author's works to bring him fame as a humorist.

celesta. A keyboard instrument having a piano-like action. Its tone is similar to that of the glockenspiel. It is occasionally demanded in modern orchestral scores.

Celestial City. Heaven is so called by John Bunyan, in his Pilgrim's Progress (1678). Peking, in China, was so called also.

Celestial Empire. China; a translation of the Chinese Tien Chao, literally "heavenly dynasty," alluding to the belief that the old emperors were in direct descent from the gods. Hence, the Chinese themselves are sometimes spoken of as Celestials.

Celeus. In Greek legend, husband of Metanira. He sheltered Demeter when she was seeking Persephone. His son Triptolemus was in gratitude made by the goddess the teacher of men in the use of the plough.

Celia. (1) Rosalind's cousin in Shakespeare's As You Like It. She marries Oliver de Boys.

(2) In English lyrics of the Elizabethan and Stuart periods, a poetic name for any lady-love, as, "Would you know my Celia's charms?"

Célimène. In Molière's MISANTHROPE, a coquette courted by Alceste the "misanthrope"; hence any flagrant coquette. For the plot, see ALCESTE.

Celine, Louis Ferdinand, see DESTOUCHES.

Cellini, Benvenuto (1500-1571). Florentine sculptor, famous for his work as a goldsmith and his Autobiography of Benvenuto Cellini, which was written between 1558 and 1562 and first published in 1730. It is one of the most celebrated autobiographies of history, giving an intimate and lively picture of the life of the times and of the author's vivid and arrogant personality. GOETHE was so fascinated by it that he translated it into German. Cellini was a pupil of MICHELANGELO and for a time was attached to the court of FRANCIS I of France, for whom he made his best-known piece, a gold salt-cellar.

An overture called Benvenuto Cellini was written by the French Romantic composer BERLIOZ.

celt. (Welsh celt, flint). Prehistoric implement, one of man's most primitive tools, chisel-shaped, an elongated stone. Progenitor of the axe, hoe, and chisel. See also FOLSOM POINT.

Cénacle, the. A club or group of men of letters and affairs prominent in many of the novels of Balzac's Comédie Humaine. The leader is Daniel d'Arthez and among the most active members are Henri de Marsay, Horace Bianchon and Joseph Brideau.

Cena de la Ceneri. See BRUNO, GIORDANO.

Cena delle Beffe, La. See BENELLI, SEM.

Cenci, Beatrice. A historical character (1577-1599) known as the "Beautiful Parricide" from a famous portrait in the Barberini Palace at Rome attributed to Guido Reni. She was the daughter of Francesco Cenci, a dissipated and passionate Roman nobleman, and, with her brothers, plotted the death of her father because of his unmitigated cruelty to his wife and children. She was executed in 1599, and at the trial her counsel, with the view of still further gaining popular sympathy for his client, accused the father, probably without foundation, of having attempted to commit incest with her. Her story has been a favorite theme in poetry and art; Shelley's tragedy The Cenci (1819) is particularly noteworthy.

Cendrars, Blaise (1887-). French novelist and poet. Sutter's Gold (1926) is his best-known work in English. John Dos Passos has translated his Panama, or the Adventures of my Seven Uncles (1931).

cenobite. As opposed to anchorite, "a hermit," one of a religious order dwelling in a convent community.

centaurs. In classic mythology, a set of beings who were half horse and half man. They fought with the Lapithae at the marriage feast of Pirithous, were expelled from their country, and took refuge on Mount Pindus. Chiron was the most famous of the centaurs.

Centennial Exposition. At Philadelphia (1876).

Centennial State. Colorado. See under STATES.

center party. In politics, a party occupying a place between two extremes: the left center is the more radical wing, and the right center the more conservative. In the French Revolution the Center of the Legislative Assembly included the friends of order.

In the Fenian rebellion (1866) the chief movers were called Head Centers, and their subordinates Centers.

Centlivre, Susanna (1667?-1723). English dramatist and actress. A widow at 17, she began to write plays. In 1706 she married Joseph Centlivre, the chief cook to Queen Anne. Among her comedies are The Gamester (1705), and A Bold Stroke for a Wife (1718), in which one of the characters is SIMON PURE.

Cent nouvelles nouvelles (1462). An early work of French literature akin to Boccaccio's Decameron or Poggio's Facetiae. It uses everyday French of the period. The authorship is in doubt.

cento (Lat., a patchwork). Poetry made up of lines borrowed from established authors. It was an art freely practised in the decadent period of Greece and Rome, and Ausonius, who has a nuptial idyll composed from verses selected from Virgil, composed rules governing their manufacture. Among well-known examples are the Homerocentones, the Cento Virgilianus by Proba Falconia (4th century), and the hymns made by Metellus out of the Odes of Horace. Of modern centos the following portion of a Shakespearean cento that appeared in English, November, 1919, may serve as an example:

Let fame that all hunt after in their lives
Among the buzzing pleased multitude
For present comfort and for future good,
Taint not thy mind; nor let thy soul contrive
With all the herce endeavour of your wit
To woo a maid in way of marriage,
As it is common for the younger sort,
The lunatic, the lover, and the poet:
Thus bad begins, and worse remains behind.
I see a man's life is a tedious one,
For it appears, by manifest proceeding,
There's nothing serious in mortality.
Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player,
And one man in his time plays many parts,
As an imperfect actor on the stage.

In many passages, T. S. Eliot's poem THE WASTELAND might be called a cento, since the author juxtaposes quotations from great works of the past with tawdry modern popular songs in order to show the contrast between two civilizations. Ezra Pound's CANTOS often are characterized by this device also.

Central Powers. In World War I, Austria-Hungary and Germany, so called because of their geographical position. Sometimes including their allies Bulgaria and Turkey.

Century of Progress. Official subtitle of the Chicago World's Fair of 1933, held in celebration of the centenary of the city's founding.

Century Was Young, The. Title of the English translation of Les Voyages de l'impériale (1940) a novel by Louis ARAGON. It is one of a series designed to present a sociological portrait of twentieth-century France in the manner of Balzac. It tells of Pierre Mercadier, a provincial history teacher of modest means, who becomes a secret gambler on the stock exchange and eventually deserts his family and ruins himself in the pursuit of his vain goal of winning a fortune.

cephalic index. A number obtained by dividing the maximum breadth of the cranium by its maximum length and multiplying by 100. When measured on skeletons it is called cranial index. Used to classify racial types.

Cephalus and Procris. Made familiar to us by an allusion in the MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM. In classic legend, Cephalus was husband of Procris, who, out of jealousy, deserted him. He went in search of her, and rested awhile under a tree. Procris, knowing of his whereabouts, crept through some bushes to ascertain if a rival was with him; and he, hearing the noise and thinking it to be made by some wild beast, hurled his javelin into the bushes and slew her. When the unhappy man discovered what he had done, he slew himself in anguish of spirit with the same javelin.

the unerring dart of Procris. Diana gave Procris a dart which never missed its aim, and after being discharged returned back to the shooter.

Cepola. See DEVICES OF CEPOLA.

Cerberus. A grim, watchful keeper, house-porter, guardian, etc. Cerberus, according to Roman mythology, is the three-headed dog that keeps the entrance of the infernal regions. Hercules dragged the monster to earth, and then let him go again. Orpheus lulled Cerberus to sleep with his lyre, and the Sibyl who conducted Aeneas through the Inferno, also threw the dog into a profound sleep with a cake seasoned with poppies and honey.

give a sop to Cerberus. To give a bribe, to quiet a troublesome customer. When persons died, the Greeks and Romans used to put a cake in their hands as a sop to Cerberus, to allow them to pass without molestation.

Ceres. The Roman name of Mother Earth, the protectress of agriculture and of all the fruits of the earth; later identified with the Greek DEMETER. She is the personification of the fruits of the harvest. See PROSERPINE.

Cerf, Bennett Alfred (1898-). American publisher and anthologist. Try and Stop Me (1944), Shake Well Before Using (1948).

Cervantes Saavedra, Miguel de (1547-1616). Spanish novelist, famous for DON QUIXOTE, his great satire on chivalry, the first part of which was published in 1605 and the second, in 1615. He wrote a number of plays as well, most of which are now lost. Novelas Ejemplares, a collection of short tales, and Persiles y Sigismunda, an adventure tale, are also included among his works.

Cervera y Topete, Marqués de Santa Ana (1839-1909). Spanish naval commander whose squadron was blockaded and defeated in Spanish-American war in harbor of Santiago de Cuba (July 3, 1898).

César Birotteau, see BIROTHEAU, CÉSAR.

cesarevitch. See under CZAREVITCH.

Cesario. In Shakespeare's Twelfth Night, the name assumed by Viola when disguised as a boy.

Cestius, Pyramid of. Tomb of the Roman Praetor Gaius Cestius in Rome. Keats and Shelley are buried nearby.

Cestre, Charles (1871-). French critic. An Introduction to Edwin Arlington Robinson (1929).

cestus. (1) The girdle of Venus, made by her husband Vulcan. When she wanted with Mars it fell off and was left on the "Acidian mount." It was reputed to possess magical power to move to ardent love. By a poetical fiction, all women of irresistible attraction are supposed to be wearers of Aphrodite's girdle, or the cestus. It is introduced by Spenser in the Faerie Queene as the girdle of FLORIMEL; it gave to those who could wear it "the virtue of chaste love and wifehood true," but if any woman not chaste and faithful put it on, it "loosed or tore asunder."

(2) In Greek and Roman games the covering for the hands of boxers of leather bands, often loaded with lead or iron.

The girdle and the glove are etymologically not related.

Cézanne, Paul (1839-1906). Famous French painter, a leader of the Post-Impressionist movement (see POST-IMPRESSIONISM) and known for his emphasis on the geometric forms in nature. He painted chiefly still lifes and landscapes, which were misunderstood and regarded as ugly by many people of his time. During most of his life he was unknown, but he had an important influence on the painters of CUBISM and soon came to be regarded as a modern classic. Cézanne is considered to have been in the mind of ZOLA, his life-long friend, during the composition of L'Œuvre, a novel dealing with painting.

chaconne (Fr.), ciacona (Ital.), chacuna (Span.) From Basque chocuna, pretty. A lively folk dance, considered to have been of Mexican Indian origin, adopted in Spain and popular in the 17th century. Later it came to be used in orchestral suites. See BERGMASCA.

Chadband, The Rev. Mr. In Dickens' BLEAK HOUSE, a famous type of a canting hypocrite "in the ministry." He calls himself "a vessel," is much admired by his dupes, and pretends to despise the "carnal world," but nevertheless loves dearly its "good things," and is most self-indulgent.

Chadwick, James (1891-). English physicist. Director of radioactive research, Cavendish Laboratory, Cambridge. Discovered the neutron (1932). Nobel Prize for physics (1935).

Chagall, Marc (1887-). Russian painter; studied under BAKER. Identified with impressionism and cubism. Known for scenes of Russian life and illustrations for La Fontaine's Fables.

Chaillu, Paul Belloni Du, see DU CHAILLU, PAUL BELLONI.

Chain Gang, I was a Member of A Georgia. Moving picture in which Paul MUNI scored a sensation.

chaise (Fr. chair). A two-wheeled carriage for one or two persons with a calash top and body hung on leather straps. Usually a one horse affair. Corrupted in America to Shay. See ONE HOSS SHAY.

Chaliapin, Feodor Ivanovich (1873-1938). Russian basso. Sang in several Moscow opera companies. Great success in London and U.S.

Challenger, Professor. Sir Arthur CONAN DOYLE thought him the most amusing character he ever invented. He appears in The Lost World (1912); The Poison Belt (1913); The Land of Mist (1926); The Maracot Deep (1928).

Chalons, Battle of. See BATTLES, FIFTEEN DECISIVE.

cham [pronounce k-]. The sovereign prince of Tartary, now written "khan."

Fetch you a hair off the great Cham's beard Shakespeare, Much Ado About Nothing, II. 1

the Great Cham of Literature. Dr. Samuel JOHNSON (1709-1784).

Chambered Nautilus, The. Poem by Dr. Oliver Wendell HOLMES (1858).

Chamberlain, John Rensselaer (1903-). American critic writing for New York Times, Saturday Review of Literature, Fortune (as editor), Scribner's and Harper's Magazine. Has written four books, among them The American Stakes (1940).

Chamberlain, Neville (1869-1940). English statesman, Conservative in politics and holder of numerous offices in the British government, including those of Chancellor of the Exchequer (1923-1924, 1931-1937) and Prime Minister (1937-1940). He is best known for his rôle in the MUNICH CRISIS of September 1938, which brought him into wide public disfavor. For a time, his name became synonymous with betrayal in the writings of Marxists and Liberals, who considered that he had delivered Czechoslovakia into the hands of Adolf HITLER. Chamberlain made the official declaration of war against Germany on September 3, 1939, at the outset of World War II, but his war policies were not satisfactory to the British public, who preferred his successor, Winston Churchill. See CHURCHILL, WINSTON LEONARD SPENCER.

chamber music. Instrumental music designed for performance by a small orchestra in a moderate-sized room. Originally it referred to music performed for a nobleman in his own home as distinguished from music in a church or theater. It began about the year 1600 in Italy and England. William BYRD, Alessandro SCARLATTI, HAYDN, MOZART, and BEETHOVEN were outstanding composers of chamber music, which is chiefly represented by the string quartet.

Chamber Music. A volume of poems by James Joyce, published in 1907 and consisting of lyrics showing the influence of the Elizabethan poets.

Chambers, Charles Haddon (1860-1921). Australian playwright. His best comedy The Tyranny of Tears produced by Charles Wyndham.

Chambers, Robert (1802-1871). Scottish publisher of the celebrated Chambers' Encyclopaedia in ten volumes (1859-1868). His brother William (1800-1883) started Chambers' Edinburgh Journal.

Chambers, Robert William (1865-1933). Enormously prolific and popular American novelist. Some good work, such as The King in Yellow (1893) and Cardigan (1901), hidden under a mass of trash.

chameleon. A small lizard that changes its color according to mood and surroundings. Hence a person whose attitude and opinions so change.

Chaminade, Cécile Louise Stéphanie (1861-1944). French salon composer and pianist. Most popular works are The Flatterer and Scarf Dance.

Chamisso, Adelbert von (1781-1838). German romantic writer, best known for his tale of the man who sold his shadow, PETER SCHLEMIHL. Chamisso was born in France and is one of the very few Frenchmen who achieved literary fame in German after having learned that language as a second tongue. In his earlier years he was the botanist of the Romanzov expedition to Oceania and the Arctic. See also OTTO VON KOTZEBUE.

Champion of England. A person whose office it is to ride up Westminster Hall on a Coronation Day, and challenge anyone who disputes the right of succession. The office of champion had existed under the dukes of Normandy in the family of the lords of Fontenay. Sir John Dymoke, who was the first to perform this office in England at the coronation of Richard II in 1377, was the husband of Margaret de Ludlow, heiress of Philip Marmion, who claimed descent from the lords of Fontenay. The office continued in the Dymoke family. After the coronation of George IV the office was allowed to lapse when the estate passed to a collateral branch of the family.

Champlain, Lake. Site of an American naval victory over a slightly superior British fleet (1814) which thus failed in its task to cover an invasion of the U.S. by land.

Champlain, Samuel de (1570-1635). French explorer who in 1608 founded the colony of Quebec. He discovered Lake Champlain, between the present New York and Vermont.

Champollion, Jean François (1790-1832). Famous French Egyptologist. From his study of the ROSETTA STONE he obtained a clue for deciphering Egyptian hieroglyphics.

Champs Élysées. Literally, Elysian Fields. A beautiful avenue in Paris.

Chamson, André (1900-). French novelist and essayist. Simple and austere.

Chan, Charlie. See BIGGERS, EARL DERR.

Chan, Marse, see MARSE CHAN.

Chance. A novel by Joseph CONRAD (1914). In the home of his sister, Mrs. Fyne, Captain Roderick Anthony, master of the Ferndale, meets and falls in love with Flora de Barral, the daughter of a once wealthy man now serving a prison sentence for his frauds. Flora is poor and utterly wretched and imagines that Anthony is marrying her out of pity; he, on his part, begins to fear that she has accepted him merely from the necessity of providing for herself and her father, who emerges from prison and is taken on board the Ferndale by the newly married pair. The hatred which the old man conceives for his daughter's husband serves to intensify the misunderstanding which the isolation of life on shipboard makes all the more painful. Finally De Barral's attempt to poison Anthony, discovered and thwarted by mere "chance" clears the situation. Most of the story is told by MARLOW.

Chance Acquaintance, A. A novel by W. D. Howells (Am. 1873), dealing with the short-lived steamboat romance of Miles Arbuton and Kitty Ellison. See ARBUTON, MILES.

Chancellor, Lord or Lord High. The highest judicial functionary of England, who ranks above all peers, except princes of the blood and the Archbishop of Canterbury. He is "Keeper of the Great Seal," is called "Keeper of His (or Her) Majesty's Conscience," and presides on the Woolsack in the House of Lords, and in the Chancery Division of the Supreme Court.

Chancellor, Olive. A New England feminist, the leading character in Henry James' novel THE BOSTONIANS.

Chancellorsville, Battle of. In American Civil War (May 1-3, 1863). Defeat of Union Army under Hooker by Confederate Army under Lee.

chancery. The highest division of the High Court of Justice in the English judicial system, comprising a court of common law and a court of equity.

get a man's head into chancery is to get it under your arm, where you can pummel it as long as you like, and he cannot get it free without great difficulty. The allusion is to the long and exhausting nature of a Chancery suit. If a man once gets his head there, the lawyers punish him to their hearts' content.

In Chancery is the title of a novel by Galsworthy, one of the novels in the FORSYTE SAGA.

Channel Islands, The. The islands of Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark in the English Channel. Held by the Germans in World War II.

Channing, Edward (1856-1931). American historian. Won Pulitzer Prize for history (1926) with the final volume (on the Civil War) of his large A History of the United States.

Channing, William Ellery (1780-1842). American Transcendentalist (see TRANSCENDENTALISM) and Unitarian clergyman, the friend of Emerson, Hawthorne, and Thoreau. He was involved in many religious controversies, being especially opposed to Calvin's doctrine of the total depravity of mankind. See CALVINISM. Channing was also a pioneer in the opposition to slavery and to war, and urged improvements in the working conditions of laborers.

Chanouns Yemannes Tale, see CANON YEOMAN'S TALE.

chanson de geste (Fr. song of deeds, from Lat. gesta, deeds). A type of early French epic poems of the 11th and 12th centuries, celebrating the heroic deeds in battle of fictional and historical knights. The chanson de geste was a forerunner of the medieval romance, although it lacked the rich feudal trappings and the importance of women in the plot that was a leading characteristic of the romance. The form of the chanson consisted of stanzas, called laisses, of unequal length, written in ten-syllable lines and marked by assonance or a single rhyme; it was set to music and sung by minstrels or jongleurs, who arranged the chansons in cycles, the name of some ancestor at the head of each. Most of the chansons de geste were written about CHARLEMAGNE and heroes of Charlemagne's time, the best-known being the Chanson de Roland (see ROLAND), which William of Malmesbury, the medieval English chronicler, asserts was sung during the Battle of HASTINGS in 1066. Another cycle was of the Crusades, containing the Chanson de Jérusalem and the Chanson d'Antioche.

Chantecler. A drama by ROSTAND (1910). The hero, the lord of the barnyard, believes that his Cock-a-doodle-doo brings the Dawn. When the owls and the cat, his enemies, stir up trouble for him with the hens, he wins back supremacy by defending them from a hawk. He later goes off into the woods with a hen-pheasant, and one day, in her jealousy of the Dawn, she covers his eyes and he learns that Dawn can come without him. He recovers from this shock, confident that his crowing will be a comfort on gray mornings.

chanties, see SHANTY SONGS.

Chanticleer (Fr. chanter, to sing, claiement, i.e. distinctly). A cock. Chanticleer plays a prominent rôle in the medieval beast-epic REYNARD THE FOX and is the hero of Chaucer's Nun's Priest's (Nonne Priestes) Tale, one of the Canterbury Tales (1388). The latter tells of how one day, Dan Russell, the fox, comes into the poultry-yard, and tells Master Chanticleer he cannot resist the pleasure of hearing him sing, for his voice is divinely ravishing. The cock, pleased with this flattery, shuts his eyes, and begins to crow most lustily; whereupon Dan Russell seizes him by the throat, and runs off with him. When they get to the wood, the cock says to the fox, "I would recommend you to eat me at once, for I think I can hear your pursuers." "I am going to do so," says the fox; but when he opens his mouth to reply, out flies the cock into a tree, and while the fox is deliberating how he may regain his prey, up come the farmer and his men with scythes, flails, and pitchforks, with which they despatch the fox without mercy.

chant royal. In old French poetry an elaborate form of ballade. Five stanzas of eleven lines and an envoy of eight lines, and five rhymes. The most frequent rhyme-scheme is ababccddede.

chantry. Chapel founded for the constant chanting of masses. The word might be rendered by "singery."

Chanute, Octave (1832-1910). Aviation pioneer. Wright brothers paid tribute to his experiments and designs.

Chaos. In Greek mythology, the original confusion in which earth, sea, and air were mixed up together. It was personified by the Greeks as the most ancient of the gods. The egg of Nyx, the daughter of Chaos, was floating on Chaos and from it arose the world.

chapbook. Originally one of the books carried about for sale by chapmen ("tradesmen," chap meaning purchase or bargain). Hence, any book of a similar nature, a tract, small collection of ballads, or the like.

The Chap-Book was a distinguished LITTLE MAGAZINE, published by Stone and Kimball in Chicago (1894-1898).

chapeau bras (Fr. literally "arm hat"). Three-cornered hat in use in 18th-century France. So called because it could be compressed and carried under the arm. Still occasionally seen at French state and naval functions.

Chapelain, Jean (1595-1674). A French critic who attempted epic verse with indifferent success but was important in forming the classical doctrine. "Between Malherbe and Boileau the notable name in criticism is that of Chapelain."

chaplet. A garland. Cf. The Chaplet, an early poem by Witter Bynner. In the Catholic Church, a third of the rosary.

Chaplin, Charlie. In full Charles Spencer Chaplin (1889-). English-born American motion-picture comedian, perhaps the most famous film actor in the world. He became known for his skill at pantomime and for the combined humor and pathos of the little tramp character who appears in all his pictures, dressed in a costume said to have been inspired by the shabby-genteel clothes of ill-paid London clerks. Chaplin's best-known films, written, acted, and directed by him, are The Kid (1920); The Gold Rush (1925); City Lights (1932); Modern Times (1936), a satire on the mechanical civilization of the 20th century; The Great Dictator (1940), a satire on Adolf Hitler; and Monsieur Verdoux (1947). Chaplin's art has frequently been praised by serious critics, and in Chaplinesque, a poem by Hart CRANE, his famous screen character is used as a symbol of the average, unimportant man of the 20th century.

Chapman, Frank Michler (1865-1945). American ornithologist, the "most influential since AUDUBON." For thirty-four years curator of birds at the American Museum of Natural History. Built up one of the finest collections of birds in the world. He also is known as the father of the bird-sanctuary system in the United States.

Chapman, George (1559?-1634). English poet and scholar, best known for his translations of the works of Homer, beginning in 1598 and extending to 1624. He made additions of his own and very nearly rewrote Homer from an Elizabethan standpoint. His translation was praised by Lamb and Coleridge, and Keats paid a tribute to it in his sonnet On First Looking into Chapman's Homer. Chapman also completed HERO AND LEANDER, which had been left unfinished on the death of Christopher Marlowe; it was published in 1598. Other works of Chapman include The Shadow of Night (1594); Ovid's Banquet of Sense (1595), with which was also published a sonnet sequence, A Coronet for his Mistress Philosophy; The Memorable Mask of the Middle Temple and Lincoln's Inn (1613); and a play, Bussy d'Ambois (1607).

Chapman, John (1775?-1847), see JOHNNY APPLESEED.

Chapman, John Jay (1862-1933). American man of letters. Edmund Wilson calls him the best writer on literature of his generation. He was also the best letter-writer of his time.

Chapman, Maristan (1895-). Pen-name of two American novelists, authors of books on the life and people of the Tennessee Mountains. The best known are The Happy Mountain (1928) and Homeplace (1929).

Chappell, George Shepard (1877-1946). American humorist. Wrote, as Captain Traprock, The Cruise of the Kawa (1921), My Northern Exposure: The Kawa at the Pole (1922) etc.

Chapter on Ears, A. A whimsical essay by Charles LAMB, appearing in Essays of Elia (1823).

Chapultepec. Ancient residence of the kings of Mexico. The Mexicans were heavily defeated there by General Winfield Scott (1786-1866) in 1847.

Characteristics of Shakespeare's Dramas. Lecture by Samuel Taylor COLERIDGE (1818).

characterizer, the complete. Phrase used for a series of epigrams by "F.P.A." (Franklin P. Adams) and others in the newspaper column "The Conning Tower."

Characters, The. See OVERBURY, Sir THOMAS.

Characters of Shakespeare's Plays, The. See HAZLITT, WILLIAM.

Characters of Virtues and Vices. See HALL, JOSEPH.

character writers. A school of English prose writers in the first half of the 17th century who wrote sketches of men and women, either individuals or types, in descriptive, analytical, or satirical form, as observed in the life of their time. Many of them were influenced by the work of the Athenian Peripatetic philosopher Theophrastus (373-284 B. C.), who wrote studies of thirty ethical types of mankind under the title of Characters. The best-known English character writers are Joseph HALL, Sir Thomas OVERBURY, John EARLE, and Owen FELTHAM.

Chardin, Jean Baptiste Siméon (1699-1779). French painter, known for his still lifes and domestic scenes, and his luminous color effects.

chargé d'affaires. The proxy of an ambassador, or the diplomatic agent where none higher has been appointed.

Charge of the Light Brigade. A poem by TENNYSON based on the fatal "death charge of the 600" at Balaklava in the Crimea, Sept. 20th, 1854.

When can their glory fade?
O the wild charge they made!
All the world wonder'd.
Honor the charge they made Honor the Light Brigade
Noble six hundred!

Charicleia. The lady-love of Theagenēs in the exquisite erotic Greek romance called The Loves of Theagenēs and Charicleia by Heliodoros, Bishop of Tricca, in Thessaly, in the 4th century.

Charing Cross. South of Trafalgar Square in London, triangular space of roadway, named for a Gothic cross erected there in the formerly independent village of Cherringe. South of it is Whitehall guarded by the Statue of King Charles I. Cf. Lionel Johnson's poem "On the Statue of King Charles" and Francis Thompson's poem "In No Strange Land" containing the lines:

Shall shine the traffic of Jacob's ladder Pitched between Heaven and Charing Cross

Charis. In the Iliad the wife of Hephaestus or Vulcan. In later times any one of the three Graces.

Charity. See COWPER, WILLIAM.

charivari. A mock serenade of discordant noise, a disorderly demonstration after a wedding in the west. Also chivaree, shivaree. The London Charivari, meaning a medley of jest, is the subtitle of Punch, the famous English comic paper.

Charlemagne. Charles the Great, King of the Franks and Emperor of the West (742–814). Historically Charlemagne is a very distinct figure of whose deeds and characteristics there is a definite record; but there grew up during the Middle Ages tales of a quite different and mythical Charlemagne, the center of a cycle of romances concerned with wars against the Saracens. The principal source of the early Carolingian legends is a chronicle which was long falsely attributed to Archbishop TURPIN, a contemporary of Charlemagne, and which relates the heroic deeds of Charlemagne's famous Twelve Paladins. For the most important of these legends, see under Paladins and separate entries for individual names. The Carolingian legends form the subject matter of the famous French Chanson de Roland and of the Italian epic poems Orlando Innamorato and Orlando Furioso, by Boiardo and Ariosto respectively (see ROLAND), as well as of a host of lesser romances. See also CAROLINGIAN.

Charles I and Charles II. Stuart kings of England, 1625–1649 and 1660–1685.

Charles d'Orléans (1391–1465). Son of Louis of Orleans and Valentina of Milan. Inherited love of art and letters. Captured by the English in 1415, he was in captivity for a quarter of a century. His best poetry was written at that time. It suggests both Petrarch and Heine. It was not printed in any amount until the 17th Century.

Charles Edward. See YOUNG PRETENDER.

Charles Emmanuel. Son of Victor Amadeus, king of Sardinia. Robert BROWNING wrote a poem called "King Victor and King Charles." See under VICTOR.

Charles Martel, i.e., Charles the Hammer. Founder of the power of the CAROLINGIANS in the Frankish state, known for his wars to drive the invading Mohammedans out of France and his victory over them at the Battle of Tours in 732. See BATTLES, FIFTEEN DECISIVE. He began the alliance with the papacy which was one of the important factors in the success of his grandson Charlemagne.

Charles the Great. See CAROLINGIANS; CHARLEMAGNE.

Charleston. An extremely popular American ballroom dance, in four-four time, Negro in origin, introduced in 1922. Cf. BLACK BOTTOM.

Charleston School. A group of American literary men of the South in the years before the Civil War, centered in Charleston, S.C. It included Paul Hamilton HAYNE, William Gillmore SIMMS, and Henry TIMROD.

Charlestown, Mass., with Bunker Hill. First great battle of American Revolution; actually fought on Breed's Hill nearby June 17, 1775. The anniversary of the battle is celebrated as Bunker Hill Day.

Charles's Wain, Charles' Wain. An old popular name for the Great Bear. The constellation forms the rough outline of a wheelbarrow or rustic wagon, and the "Charles" stands for "CHARLEMAGNE," probably owing to the similarity of the names Arcturus and Arturus (Lat. for Arthur), and the confusion in the popular mind between the legendary cycles of romance connected with King Arthur and Charlemagne, respectively.

Charley, plu. Charleys. An old watchman or "night guardian," before the reorganization of the English police force in 1829. See Bobby. So called from Charles I, who extended and improved the English police system.

Charley's Aunt. An immensely popular comedy by Brandon Thomas (1892), revived on the American stage with José Ferrer in the principal rôle.

Charlot, André Eugène Maurice (1882–). British theatrical manager and producer born in Paris and well known for Charlot's Revue.

Charlotte. (1) A character in Goethe's novel, WERTHER. See THE BELOVED RETURNS.

(2) In Dickens' Oliver Twist, a dishonest, rough servant girl, who ill-treats Oliver Twist, and robs her master, Sowerberry.

Charlotte Baynes, see BAYNES, CHARLOTTE.

Charlotte Elisabeth of Bavaria (1652–1722). Daughter of Charles Louis, Elector Palatine, Second wife of Philippe d'Orléans, brother of Louis XIV. Her Letters, translated 1855, 1880, are full of delightful gossip. In Germany her healthy common sense and habit of calling a spade a spade endeared her to the people who remember her even now as Liselotte von der Pfalz. At the court of Versailles she was something like a bull in a china shop.

Charlottesville, Virginia. Site of the University of Virginia, founded in 1819.

Charlotte Temple. An early American novel by Susannah Haswell Rowson (published in England, 1790; America, 1794) which has run through more than a hundred editions and is still occasionally read. The heroine is lured from her English home and deserted in New York by a British officer named Montrésor. She was a real person, probably Charlotte Stanley, but her tomb in Trinity Churchyard, New York, bears the name Charlotte Temple.

Charlus, Palamède, Baron de. One of the leading characters in Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST. He is an aristocrat, a member of the ancient family of de GUERMANTES and uncle of Robert SAINT-LOUP, a friend of the narrator, Marcel. In society, the Baron is proud and imperious, doing all he can to conceal the fact that in secret taste and practice he is a depraved homosexual, verging on insanity as he grows older. CITIES OF THE PLAIN, Book IV of the series, gives a full account of the Baron's character and his vices. De Charlus is regarded as one of Proust's masterly creations, and is considered by some critics to have been drawn in large part from Robert de Montesquiou, an actual personage with whom the author was friendly in his youth.

Charmian. In Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra and Dryden's ALL FOR LOVE, a kind-hearted, simple-minded attendant on Cleopatra. After the Queen's death, she applies one of the asps to her own arm; and when the Roman soldiers enter the room, falls down dead. Rider Haggard in his romance Cleopatra represents her as in love with HARMACHIS.

Charnwood, 1st Baron. Godfrey Rathbone Benson (1864-1945). English biographer chiefly known in the U.S. for his Abraham Lincoln (1916).

Charon. In classic myth, the ferryman of the STYX.

Charon's toll. A coin, about equal to a penny, placed in the mouth or hand of the dead by the ancient Greeks to pay Charon for ferrying the spirit across the river Styx to the Elysian fields.

Charon's staircase. In the Greek theater, a flight of steps from mid-stage to the orchestra.

Charpentier, Gustave (1860-). French composer whose opera Louise is widely known.

Charter, the Atlantic, see ATLANTIC CHARTER.

Charteris, John. In the contemporary novels of James Branch CABELL, a novelist, the supposed author of the series of essays entitled Beyond Life (1919). Charteris is prominent in CORDS OF VANITY in which he is depicted as the hero of almost as many illicit amatory episodes as his young friend Robert Townsend, the hero of the novel.

Charteris, Leslie (1907-). English writer of stories of crime and adventure. Noted for creation of "the Saint," a latter-day Raffles. Charteris' real name is Leslie Charles Bowyer Lin. His father was a Chinese surgeon, his mother an Englishwoman.

Charter Oak. Oak tree in Hartford, Conn. where the Charter of Connecticut, rescued from Governor Andros in 1687, is said to have been concealed. It was blown down in August, 1856.

Chartier, Alain (1385?- after 1433). Called the "father of French letters," but remembered mainly for his poetry, particularly La Belle dame sans merci (a title later used by Keats). His prose, however, modeled on Seneca made him a classic to the 16th Century.

Chartism. The political system of the English Chartists, who, in 1838, demanded the People's Charter, consisting of five principles: universal suffrage, annual parliaments, stipendiary members, vote by ballot, and electoral districts. They disappeared as a party about 1849.

the Chartist Clergyman. Charles KINGSLEY (1819-1875) because of his novel, ALTON LOCKE.

Chartres, Cathedral of. Famous Gothic cathedral at Chartres, France. Several churches were built on its site throughout the Middle Ages and subsequently destroyed by fire, but the main building as it appears today was erected between 1194 and 1220, with additions later. Chartres is particularly celebrated for its stained-glass windows. In MONT-SAINT-MICHEL AND CHARTRES, by Henry ADAMS, the cathedral of Chartres serves as a symbol of the spirit of unity of the Middle Ages.

chartreuse. A liqueur of complex composition. Also a color, called green or yellow according to brilliance. Named after LA GRANDE CHARTREUSE, the home of the CARTHUSIANS, where chartreuse was originally distilled.

Charudatta. The hero of the old Sanskrit drama known as THE LITTLE CLAY CART.

Charybdis. A whirlpool on the coast of Sicily. SCYLLA and Charybdis are employed to signify two equal dangers. Thus Horace says an author trying to avoid Scylla, drifts into Charybdis, i.e. seeking to avoid one fault, falls into another.

The Homeric account says that Charybdis dwelt under an immense fig tree on the rock, and that thrice every day he swallowed the waters of the sea and thrice threw them up again; but later legends have it that he stole the oxen of Hercules, was killed by lightning, and changed into the gulf.

Chase, Mary Ellen (1887-). American educator and novelist. Her best-known novel is Mary Peters. Her locale is boat-building and fisherman's Maine north of the farmland of which Gladys Hasty CARROLL writes.

Chase, Salmon Portland (1808-1873). American statesman. Prominent in defending fugitive slaves, active in free-soil movement. Chief justice, U.S. Supreme Court (1864-1873). As Lincoln's Secretary of Treasury (1861-1864), originated national banking system.

Chase, Stuart (1888-). American economist and author of popular books on governmental control and liberal reform. His works include The Tragedy of Waste (1925), dealing with conservation of natural power and resources; Your Money's Worth (1927), advice to the consumer; Mexico: A Study of Two Americas (1931); A New Deal (1932), a book on economic reform whose title became the name of the reform program of President Franklin D. ROOSEVELT (see NEW DEAL); Rich Land, Poor Land (1936), on conservation; and The Tyranny of Words (1938), a popular study of SEMANTICS.

Chase, William Merritt (1849-1916). Leading American painter. Landscapes, portraits, still lifes.

Chastelard. In Swinburne's tragedy of that name (1865), a gentleman of Dauphiny, who falls in love with Mary, Queen of Scots. He is discovered in the Queen's bedroom. Chastelard was a historical personage who atoned for his sin on the scaffold. Swinburne's drama shows Mary Beaton, one of the Queen's ladies, in love with him, but to little avail. The tragedy is the first of a trilogy. See MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

château (Fr.). A feudal castle, especially in France. Hence the fact that the names of a good many wines, grown on the estates belonging to such castles, have the word château as the first part of their names. Cf. Château Lafite, Château d'Yquem, etc.

Chateaubriand, François René de (1768-1848). French novelist, a forerunner of the Romantic movement in France, whose work is marked by the characteristic Romantic qualities of melancholy, impassioned emotion, individualism, a fondness for wild nature, primitive tribes, and distant, exotic countries, and a strong attraction to the Catholicism of the Middle Ages. He had a stormy career and was prominent in the politics of his time, favoring the Bourbon monarchy, under which he served as ambassador to England, Italy, and Germany, and as Minister of Foreign Affairs. Chateaubriand is most famous for his fictional portrayals of America and the Orient. ATALA (1801), RENÉ (1802), and LES NATCHES (1826) are novels dealing with North America and the North American Indians; LES MARTYRS (1809) and L'itinéraire de Paris à Jérusalem et de Jérusalem à Paris (1811) are concerned with Greece, the Holy Land, and the Near East. Others of Chateaubriand's works are LE GÉNIE DU CHRISTIANISME (The Genius of Christianity) (1802) and MÉMOIRES D'OUTRE-TOMBE (Memories from Beyond the Tomb) (1848-1850). He had a great influence on the writers of the French Romantic school, among whom are considered to be LAMARTINE, GEORGE SAND, FLAUBERT in Salammbô, and PIERRE LOTI.

Château-Thierry. In France on Marne River. During World War I American troops won their first success here against the Germans. On August 27, 28, 1944, the American Third Army drove through it again and went 22 miles beyond to take Soissons.

Châtelet, Marquise du. Gabrielle Émilie Le Tonnelier de Breteuil (1706-1749). Among the finest female minds of her time. Mistress of Voltaire, living with him at Montjeu and at Château de Cirey. The connection lasted 14 years until her death. The Marquise had an intense interest in mathematics and the theories of Leibnitz and Newton. Wrote Traité sur le Bonheur and Traduction des Principes de Newton.

Chatfield-Taylor, Hobart Chatfield (1865-1945). Wealthy American writer of Chicago.

Chatham, Lord. William Pitt (1708-1778). British statesman. Used his influence on behalf of the American colonies though unwilling to recognize their independence from England.

Chatrian, Alexandre. See under ERCKMANN-CHATRIAN.

Chatterley, Lady. See LADY CHATTERLEY'S LOVER.

Chatterton, Edward Keble (1878-1944). English journalist, author of many books on ships, as Sailing Ships (1907), Ship Models (1923). In 1940 he published The Epic of Dunkirk.

Chatterton, Thomas (1752-1770). English poet, known for his literary frauds distinguished by poetic genius. He wrote a number of poems which he pretended were the work of one Thomas Rowley, a non-existent monk of the 15th century. His deception was successful for awhile, although it was exposed in 1777. He also wrote Apostate Will (1764), a satire, and The Revenge (1770), a successful burlesque opera. In despair at his poverty in London, he committed suicide by poison at the age of seventeen. A volume of his "collected works" was published in 1803, but many of his poems are said to be still in manuscript, being considered too obscene to publish. Chatterton was a favorite figure in the writings of the English Romantic poets. Cf. also the drama Chatterton by Alfred de Vigny (1835).

Chaucer, Geoffrey (ca. 1343-1400). Middle English poet, considered the greatest literary figure of his age and one of the most important of English poets. He lived an extremely active life, having been a soldier in the English army in France, a commercial agent for the English government in Italy, a customs comptroller of hides and skins and wines, a country justice of the peace, a member of Parliament, Clerk of the King's Works, and a deputy forester for the crown. He was associated with John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, who at one time was his patron, and was an important public figure of his time. Chaucer's work is usually divided into three literary periods: (1) the French period (1355?-1370), when he was influenced by the French poets of the day, including Froissart, Eustace Deschamps, Guillaume Machaut, Guillaume Deguileville, etc.; (2) the Italian period (1370-1385), when he was influenced by the Italian literature he encountered on his trip to Italy, especially by the works of Boccaccio; and (3) the English period (1385-1400), when he did his best work. Chaucer's most famous and greatest work is THE CANTERBURY TALES, begun about 1386. His version of the famous Troilus story, Troilus and Criseyde (ca. 1385), is his next best-known work. Other works, on which, as on all of Chaucer's writings, there is much scholarly debate as to date of composition and source, include THE BOOK OF THE DUCHESS; The House of Fame; ANELIDA AND ARCITE; THE PARLIAMENT OF FOWLS; Boece (Boethius); THE LEGEND OF GOOD WOMEN; a fragmentary translation of The Romance of the Rose; A Treatise on the Astrolabe; and a number of shorter poems, some of which are only doubtfully attributed to him. In his work, Chaucer summed up the ideas, attitudes, and literary themes and forms of the Middle Ages, as well as stamping upon it, for the first time in English literature, the mark of a definite personality. He is known for his humor, his realism, his psychological insight, the accuracy of his observation, and the grace and technical excellence of his style. The poets of the 15th century in England, notably Spenser, looked on Chaucer as their literary master. The Middle English dialect in which he wrote, that of London, became the basis for the standard English language of today.

Chaucer of France. Clément Marot (1496-1544).

Chaucer of Painting. Albrecht Dürer of Nuremberg (1471-1528).

Chauchat, Clavdia. In Thomas MANN's THE MAGIC MOUNTAIN, a beautiful Russian patient at the HAUS BERGHOF. She has red hair, bites her fingernails, dresses carelessly, and slams doors. She has a powerful and mysterious attraction for Hans CASTORP, the hero, who is unable to leave the mountain while she is there. She has the qualities of a mythological enchantress, and has been compared to such figures as VENUS and ASTARTE.

Chauncey, Charles (1705-1787). American churchman, known for his opposition to the preachings of Jonathan EDWARDS. His best-known writings are those in which he sought to refute the genuineness of the violent conversions that accompanied the GREAT AWAKENING: The New Creature Described, and Considered as the Sure Characteristic of a Man's Being in Christ (1741), The Outpouring of the Holy Ghost (1742), and Enthusiasm Described and Cautioned Against (1742), all three sermons; and Seasonable Thoughts on the State of Religion in New England (1743), a book in reply to Edwards' Some Thoughts Concerning the Present Revival of Religion in New England. Chauncey was a liberal in his views on both religion and politics, and was well known in America and Great Britain. His political writings include: the Massachusetts Election Sermon (1747), which warns the British governors that all government originates in God and they must not exceed the bounds of their power; A Discourse on the Good News from a Far Country (1766), dealing with the Stamp Act; Trust in God the Duty of a People in a Day of Trouble (1770); A Letter to a Friend, Giving a Concise but Just Representation of the Hardships and Sufferings the Town of Boston Is Exposed to . . . in Consequence of the Late Act of the British Parliament (1774); and The Accused Thing Must Be Taken Away from the People (1778). The Massachusetts Election Sermon aroused so much opposition among the Boston Tories that for a time it was not permitted publication.

Chautauqua. An institution which offers a popular program of lectures, entertainments, etc. The original or mother Chautauqua is a summer resort on Lake Chautauqua, N.Y., but the name has been popularized by traveling Chautauquas which go from place to place presenting a week's program, usually in a big tent.

Chauve Souris. The entertainment offered by a group of Russian comedians, under the direction of Nikita Balieff. The group took their name from the Russian word for "bat," in French, Chauve Souris. "The Bat" was a Moscow institution before World War I; after the war it was reorganized in Paris and later came to New York.

chauvinism. Blind and pugnacious patriotism of an exaggerated kind; unreasoning jingoism. Nicholas Chauvin, a soldier of the French Republic and Empire, was madly devoted to Napoleon and his cause. He was introduced as a type of exaggerated bellicose patriotism into a number of plays. Scribe's Le Soldat laboureur, Cogniard's La Cocarde tricolore, 1831, Bayard and Dumanoir's Les Aides de camps, Charet's Conscrit Chauvin, are some of them. The term chauvinism spread quickly into a great number of languages.

Chávez, Carlos (1899-). Mexican orchestra leader and composer of operatic ballet H.P. presented in Philadelphia by Leopold Stokowski.

Cheapside. Anciently The Cheap. London street running east from St. Paul's Churchyard, formerly noted for its shops. Before the Great Fire of 1666, it was an open square, where markets and fairs were held.

Cheeryble Brothers. In Dickens' novel NICHOLAS NICKLEBY, brother Ned and brother Charles, the incarnations of all that is warm-hearted, generous and kind. They were once homeless boys running about the streets barefooted; and, when they grew to be wealthy London merchants, were ever ready to stretch forth a helping hand to those struggling against the buffets of fortune.

Cheese, Rev. Cream. In The Potiphar Papers, a series of satires on New York life by G. W. Curtis (Am. 1856), a high church Episcopalian minister. He gives Mrs. Potiphar solemn advice on the proper color for her prayer-book cover and other important religious matters. He was very popular in the dramatized version.

Cheka. In Soviet government, secret police acting against counter-revolutionary movements. From che and ka, the initial Russian letters of the words for "extraordinary commission." In 1922 succeeded by the Gay-Pay-Oo (OGPU).

Chekhov, Anton Pavlovich (1860-1904). Russian dramatist, novelist, and short-story writer, known for the irony and pathos of his studies of frustrated middle-class lives in the Russian provinces, and for his skillful and penetrating delineation of character. His best-known play is THE CHERRY ORCHARD (1904), and other works for the theater include Ivanov (1887), The Seagull, Uncle Vanya, and The Three Sisters. The Peasants, My Life, and Ward No. 6 are among his novels. Chekhov's short stories are considered among the most distinguished examples of the form, and influenced a number of the leading authors of short stories in the 20th century, including James Joyce and Katherine Mansfield.

chela. In India, a disciple. Cf. Kim, by Rudyard Kipling.

Chelsea Rooming House. See GREGORY, HORACE.

Cheltenham. A style of type.

Cheney, Sheldon Warren (1886-). American writer on art and the theatre. Author of Modern Art and the Theatre (1921), A World History of Art (1937), etc.

Chénier, André Marie de (1762-1794). French poet, sympathetic with the French Revolution in its first years, although he later attacked Robespierre and was guillotined. His chief poems were written in a classical manner, by which he sought to recapture the outlook of the original Greeks. He also wrote 18th-century neo-Classical verse, political poems and satires, and philosophical poetry celebrating the science of his day. His best-known poem and also his last is La Jeune captive, written in prison about a fellow victim.

Chennault, Claire Lee (1891-). American general and aviator. Demonstrated the use of parachute troops (1926). Resigned from U.S. Army (1937). Subsequent to Japanese invasion of China became air adviser to Chiang Kai-shek and formed the volunteer air corps, the "Flying Tigers" to aid China, superseded by the U.S. Fourteenth Air Force under General Chennault (1943). Protected Burma Road against superior Japanese air forces (1941). Commanded U.S. Army air forces in China. Made Major General in 1943.

Cheops. See under PYRAMID.

Chequers. The official country seat of the prime ministers of England. It is an historic Tudor house, thirty-five miles northwest of London, which was presented to the government in 1917 by Lord and Lady Lee of Fareham.

Cherokee strip. A narrow strip of land along the Southern border of what is now the State of Kansas, ceded by the Cherokee Indians to the U.S. in 1866.

Cherry Fair. A sort of passing show that will not last. Gower says of this world, "Alle is but a cherye-fayre," a phrase frequently met with. The phrase comes from the Cherry Fairs, held in Worcestershire and elsewhere. They may have been held in cherry orchards, but another explanation is that they were "cheery" fairs—i.e. gay or merry-making occasions.

Cherry Orchard, The. A play by Anton CHEKHOV (1904). The estate of Madame Ranievskaya is about to be sold for debt. She and her brother and daughter turn a deaf and horrified ear to the plan of Lopachin, a rich neighbor of serf ancestry, who suggests that they cut down the orchard and turn it into suburban lots. They talk excitedly and at length but do nothing, and when the sale comes, Lopachin buys the estate and carries out the plan himself. Bernard Shaw presented an adaptation of this play in his HEARTBREAK HOUSE.

chersonese. A peninsula. The Cimbrian Chersonese is Jutland; the Tauric Chersonese, the Crimea; the Thracian Chersonese, Gallipoli; the Golden Chersonese, the Malay peninsula; etc.

Cherubic Doctor. St. Thomas Aquinas. See under SAINT.

Cherubim, Don. The titular hero of Le Sage's BACHELOR OF SALAMANCA.

Cherubini, Maria Luigi Carlo Zenobio Salvatore (1760–1842). Italian composer. Ifigenia in Aulide (1787).

Chery and Fair-star. One of the best known of Countess d'Aulnoy's Fairy Tales (Fr. 1682). Prince Chery (Chéri) and his cousin Princess Fair-star are set adrift in infancy, but after numerous adventures find their way back to their own kingdom. The tale is remembered chiefly for the three magic gifts which Chery secures for Fair-star: (1) the dancing water, which has the gift of imparting beauty; (2) the singing apple, which has the gift of imparting wit; and (3) the green bird, which can reveal all secrets. By this bird the story of their birth is made known, and Fair-star marries Chery.

Cheshire cat. In Alice in Wonderland by Lewis Carroll. When it vanished, its grin vanished last of all. Hence the phrase, to grin like a Cheshire cat.

Cheshire Cheese. A famous inn on Wine Office Court, Fleet Street, London, where Dr. Johnson used to dine. Cheshire cheese is a kind of hard cheese, originally made in Cheshire county, England.

Chesnutt, Charles Waddell (1858–1932). The first American Negro novelist. The Conjure Woman (1899), etc. Praised by William Dean Howells. Awarded the Spingarn Gold Medal for pioneer work as a literary artist in depicting the Negro (1928).

Chester, George Randolph (1869–1924). American novelist and short-story writer, creator of the character Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford.

Chester, Sir John. In Dickens' BARNABY RUDGE, a plausible, foppish villain, the sworn enemy of Geoffrey Haredale, by whom he is killed in a duel as a result of his effort to put an end to the match between Emma Haredale and his son Edward.

Chester Cycle. A series of twenty-four MYSTERY PLAYS performed by the guilds of Chester at Whitsuntide (13th to 16th centuries).

Chesterfield, Lord (1694–1773). The author of a famous series of Letters to his son, chiefly regarding the manner in which a gentleman should conduct himself in all the affairs of life. Hence, Chesterfieldian, an adjective applied to manners and dress of gentlemanly correctness.

Chesterton, Gilbert Keith (1874–1936). English journalist, poet, author of biography, history, fiction, essays, and plays. His books include The Man Who Was Thursday (1908), a novel; a series of detective stories beginning in 1911 and dealing with the adventures of Father Brown, a priest; A Short History of England (1917); The Everlasting Man (1925), an outline of history; Come to Think of It (1930) and As I Was Saying (1936), essays; Autobiography (1936). Chesterton was converted to Catholicism in 1922 and, like Hilaire BELLOC, frequently expressed his religious views in his writings.

chestnut. A stale joke. The term is said to have been popularized in America by a Boston actor named Warren, who, on a certain opposite occasion, quoted from The Broken Sword, a forgotten melodrama by William Dimond, which was first produced in 1816 at Covent Garden. Captain Xavier, a principal character, is for ever repeating the same yarns, with variations. He is telling about one of his exploits connected with a cork tree, when Pablo corrects him, "A chestnut-tree, you mean, captain." "Bah!" replies the captain, "I say a cork-tree." "A chestnut-tree," insists Pablo. "I must know better than you," says the captain, "it was a cork-tree, I say." "A chestnut," persists Pablo. "I have heard you tell the joke twenty-seven times, and it was always a chestnut before."

Chettam, Sir James. In George Eliot's MIDDLEMARCH, the lover who wins Dorothea Brooke's sister Celia.

Chettle, Henry (1560?–?1607). English dramatist. Wrote or collaborated on some forty-eight Elizabethan plays. Author of an elegy on Queen Elizabeth.

chevalier.

the Chevalier or Chevalier de St. George. James Stuart (1688–1766), the Old Pretender. the Young Chevalier. Charles Edward Stuart (1720–1788), the Young Pretender.

le Chevalier sans peur et sans reproche. The French hero, BAYARD (1473–1524).

Chevalier, Maurice (1888–). French actor and singer in variety and moving pictures.

Chevalier de Maison Rouge, Le (The Knight of the Red House). A romance by Alexandre DUMAS. The titular hero attempts to rescue Marie Antoinette from the Tower, but succeeds only in unwittingly preventing her rescue by others and is killed by his rival conspirators. The novel has a basis in the career of A. D. J. Gonze de Rougeville, but presents a highly idealized version of his story.

Chevy Chase. A celebrated ancient ballad with a Scottish version earlier than 1549. There is evidence to indicate that it has grown out of the traditions of the Battle of Otterbourne (1388).

Chew, Samuel Claggett (1888–). Professor at Bryn Mawr; writer on Byron, Swinburne, etc.

Cheyne, Harvey. The boy hero of Kipling's CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS.

Chiang Kai-shek (1888–). Generalissimo of the Chinese Army and President of the Executive Yuan. First became protégé of Sun Yat-sen who sent him to Russia to study Soviet military methods. On Sun Yat-sen's death he became the leader of the Nationalist movement. In 1926 he broke with Russian communists to get the support of Shanghai bankers. Fought against communistic elements in China. Was kidnaped by one of his own allies who demanded that he unite with communists against Japan. Freed, he formed a so-called united China. When the United Nations organized in 1942, he was made Commander-in-Chief of the Chinese theater of war. For Mme Chiang Kai-shek, see CHIANG MEI-LING.

Chiang Mei-ling (1898–). American-educated, Christian Chinese wife of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, commander-in-chief of the armies of China in their war against the invading Japanese (1932–1945). She became known throughout the world for her activities in the administration of the national affairs of her country, for her constructive influence on the policies of her husband, and for her importation of Western ideas and methods into China. China Fights for Her Life (1938), China in Peace and War (1940), and This Is Our China (1940) are books by Mme. Chiang, written in English.

chiaroscuro (Ital.). "A method of painting with deep shadows emphasizing the modelling and atmosphere, thus creating a pictorial design through light and dark areas." (Harper's Encyclopedia of Art.) CARAVAGGIO and REMBRANDT were outstanding painters of chiaroscuro effects.

Chibiabos. The musician in Longfellow's Hiawatha; the harmony of nature personified. He teaches the birds to sing and the brooks to warble as they flow. "All the many sounds of nature borrow sweetness from his singing."

Chicago. A poem in free verse by Carl SANDBURG, celebrating the Midwestern American city for its vitality amid its evil and brutality. It appears in CHICAGO POEMS.

Chicago Group. A group of American writers, living in Chicago and dealing with Middle Western subjects in their works, which flourished from about 1912 to about 1925. It included Sherwood ANDERSON, Floyd DELL, Theodore DREISER, Ben HECHT, and Carl SANDBURG. POETRY: A MAGAZINE OF VERSE and THE LITTLE REVIEW were the leading magazines of the group.

Chicago Poems. A volume of poetry by Carl SANDBURG, published in 1916 and dealing with the Middle West. It served to establish his reputation as a poet.

Chichen-Itza. Ancient city of Yucatan, Mexico, founded in 530 A.D., with well-preserved ruins of the Mayan civilization.

Chichikov. The rascally hero of Gogol's DEAD SOULS.

Chichivache. A fabulous animal that lived only on good women, and was hence all skin and bone, because its food was so extremely scarce; the antitype to BICORNE. Chaucer introduced the word into English from French; but in doing so he changed chichifache (thin or ugly face) into chichivache (lean or meager-looking cow), and hence the animal was pictured as a kind of bovine monstrosity.

O noble wyves, ful of heigh prudence,
Let noon humilitie your tonges mayle;
Ne lat no clerk have cause of diligence
To write of you a story of such mervayle
As of Griseldes, patient and kynde,
Lest Chichivache you swolwe in hir entraile.
Chaucer, Envoy to the Clerk's Tale.

Chicken, The Game. In Dickens' DOMBEY AND SON, a low fellow, to be heard of at the bar of the Black Badger. Mr. Toots selects this man as his instructor in fencing, betting, and self-defense. The Chicken has short hair, a low forehead, a broken nose, and "a considerable tract of bare and sterile country behind each ear."

Chickweed, Conkey. In Dickens' OLIVER TWIST, the famous character who robs himself. He is a licensed victualer on the point of failing, and announces that he has been robbed of 327 guineas "by a tall man with a black patch over his eye." He is much pitied, and numerous subscriptions are made on his behalf. A detective is sent to inquire into the "robbery," and Chickweed cries out, "There he is!" and runs after the hypothetical thief for a considerable distance, then losing sight of him. He is caught at the trick at last.

Chigi, Agostino (1465?-1520). Banker, born in Siena, who used his great wealth to encourage leading artists, as Peruzzi, Perugino, Sebastiano del Piombo, and especially Raphael.

Chikamatsu Monzaemon (1653?-1724). Japanese romantic dramatist. Sometimes called "the Shakespeare of Japan." Created new type of drama. Composed nearly one hundred five-act plays, half of which are still produced or read.

Child, Francis James (1825-1896). American philologist. Authority on the ballad. English and Scottish Popular Ballads (5 vols., 1883-1898). See also George Lyman KITTREDGE.

Child, Richard Washburn (1881-1935). American writer and diplomat. U.S. Ambassador to Italy (1921-1924). Wrote many romances and several factual works.

Child, Lydia Maria (1802-1880). American author and reformer, an active worker for the abolition of slavery and the emancipation of women. She wrote historical novels and anti-slavery tracts, including Anti-Slavery Catechism (1836) and The Evils of Slavery and the Cure of Slavery (1836).

Childe. In Childe Harold, Childe Roland, Childe Tristram, etc., "Childe" is a title of honor, like the Spanish infante and infanta. In the times of chivalry, noble youths who were candidates for knighthood were, during their time of probation, called infans, valets, damoyseles, bacheliers, and childe.

Childe Harold. Byron's poem which depicts a man sated of the world, who roams from place to place to flee from himself. The "Childe" is, in fact, Lord Byron himself, who was only twenty-one when he began, and twenty-eight when he finished the poem. In canto I (1809), he visits Portugal and Spain; in canto II (1810), Turkey in Europe; in canto III (1816), Belgium and Switzerland; and in canto IV (1817), Venice, Rome, and Florence. The French composer BERLIOZ based his overture Harold en Italie on Byron's poem.

Childe or Gil Morrice. The hero of an old Scottish ballad, natural son of an earl and the wife of Lord Barnard, and brought up "in the gude grene wode." Lord Barnard, thinking the Childe to be his wife's lover, slays him with a broadsword, and setting his head on a spear gives it to "the meanest man in a' his train" to carry to the lady. When she sees it she says to the baron, "Wi' that same spear, O pierce my heart, and put me out o' pain"; but the baron replies, "Enouch of blood by me's bin spilt, sair, sair I rew the deid," adding—

I'll ay lament for Gil Morrice,
As gin he were mine ain;
I'll neir forget the dreiry day
On which the youth was slain.
Percy's Reliques, ser. iii. 1.

Percy says this pathetic tale suggested to Home the plot of his tragedy, Douglas.

Childe Roland (sometimes spelled Rowland). Youngest brother of the "fair burd Helen" in the old Scottish ballad. Guided by Merlin, he undertakes to bring back his sister from Elf-land, whither the fairies have carried her, and succeeds in his perilous exploit.

Childe Roland to the dark tower came;
His word was still "Fie, foh, and fum,
I smell the blood of a Britishman."
Shakespeare, King Lear, iii. 4.

Browning's poem, Childe Roland to the Dark Tower Came, in title suggested by the Shakespeare passage above, is not connected in any way (except by the first line) with the old ballad.

Childers, Erskine (1870-1922). Anglo-Irish writer and politician. Wrote a history of the Boer War, and a curiously prophetic novel, The Riddle of the Sands (1903), concerning a carefully planned invasion of England by Germany. The second edition of this remarkable book was published, at the insistence of Christopher Morley, in November 1940 when the Luftwaffe attack over London was at its peak. Though Childers received promotion and the D.S.C. in World War I, he devoted the rest of his life to securing Irish independence. On establishment of the Irish Free State government, Childers joined the Republican Army. He was shot by a firing squad of Free State soldiers, after shaking hands with them all, on Nov. 24, 1922.

Childers, Haveth, Everywhere. One of the several excerpts from Joyce's Finnegans Wake, published separately in 1931, the other separate parts published being Anna Livia Plurabelle (1932); Two Tales of Shem and Shaun (1932); and The Mime of Mick, Nick and the Maggies (1934).

Childe Waters. The hero of a ballad in Percy's Reliques. He is cruel to his love, the fair Ellen who accompanies him on his travels as his foot-page, but finally relents and marries her.

Child in the House, The. A study by Walter PATER (1894) of his own childhood.

Children and Fools. See MANN, THOMAS.

Children in the Wood. A ballad in Percy's Reliques III. ii. 18. The story is, shortly, as follows: The master of Wayland Hall, Norfolk, leaves a little son and daughter to the care of his wife's brother; both are to have money, but if the children die first the uncle is to become the heir. After twelve months the uncle hires two ruffians to murder the babes; one of the ruffians relents and kills his fellow, leaving the children in a wood; they die during the night, and "Robin Redbreast" covers them over with leaves. All things go ill with the wicked uncle; his sons die, his barns are fired, his cattle die, and he himself perishes in jail. After seven years the ruffian is taken up for highway robbery, and confesses the whole affair. An old melodrama by Robert Farrington (1599) also embodied the tale.

children of Ler. In Irish legend the children of Ler, the Celtic Neptune, were transformed by his second wife into swans, with power to speak and to sing for thrice three hundred years.

Children of the Earth. A drama of New England life by Alice Brown (Am. 1915) which was awarded the prize of $10,000 offered by Winthrop Ames, director of the Little Theater of New York, for the best American play by an American author.

Children of the Mist. In Scott's Legend of Montrose, a branch of the clan MacGregor, a band of Highland outlaws.

Children of the Soil. A novel by H. Sienkiewicz (Pol. 1894). The hero is Pan Stanislas Polanyetski, and the heroine, whom he finally marries, Maryina Plaritski. The book gives a vivid and comprehensive picture of Polish life.

Children of the Sun. The ancient people who erected megaliths.

Children's Crusade. A crusade of about fifty thousand unarmed children, which set out in 1212 from France and Germany to recover the Holy Sepulcher. It was a complete failure, but the naive purity of faith which inspired it has remained a beautiful symbol of medieval civilization.

Children's Hour, The. A poem by Longfellow (1859). Also a play by Lillian Hellman (1934), based on a case described in William ROUGHHEAD's Bad Companions (1931).

Childs, Marquis William (1903-). American journalist. Author of Sweden—The Middle Way (1936), I Write from Washington (1942), etc.

Child's Garden of Verses, A. See STEVENSON, ROBERT LOUIS.

Chillingly, Kenelm, see KENELM CHILLINGLY.

Chillingworth, Roger. In Hawthorne's SCARLET LETTER the name assumed by Hester Prynne's physician husband in order to work his cruel revenge on Arthur Dimmesdale, the clergyman who is the father of Hester's child.

Chillingworth, William (1602-1644). English Protestant prose writer, at one time a Roman Catholic in belief. He is known for his work entitled The Religion of the Protestants a Safe Way to Salvation (1638).

Chillon, Prisoner of. François de Bonnard (d. about 1570), a Genevan prelate and politician. In his poem of that title, Byron makes him one of six brothers, all of whom suffer for their opinions. The father and two sons die on the battlefield; one is burnt at the stake; three are incarcerated in the dungeon of Chillon, on the edge of the Lake of Geneva. Of these, two die, and François, who has been imprisoned for "republican principles" by the Duke-Bishop of Savoy, is set at liberty by "the Bearnais." Although Bonnard was an actual prisoner at Chillon, the rest of the tale and the idealized character of the man seem to have been Byron's own invention.

Chills and Fever. A volume of poems by John Crowe RANSOM.

Chiltern Hundreds. In British history, a hundred is a division of a county. The Chiltern hundreds are Stoke, Desborough, and Burnham, in Buckinghamshire. At one time the Chilterns, i.e., the hills between Bedford and Hertford, etc., were much frequented by robbers, so a steward was appointed by the Crown to put them down. The necessity has long since ceased, but the office remains; and, since 1740, when a Member of Parliament wishes to vacate his seat, one way of doing so is by applying for the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds; for no member of Parliament may resign his seat, but if he accepts an office of profit under the Crown he is obliged to be re-elected if he wishes to remain a member. The Stewardship of the Manor of Northstead (Yorks) is used in the same way. The gift of both is in the hands of the Chancellor of the Exchequer; it was refused to a member for Reading in 1842.

The Stewardships of Old Sarum (Sussex), East Hendred (Berks), Poynings (Sussex), Hempholwic (Yorks), were formerly used for the same purpose, as were (till 1838) the Escheatorships of Munster and Ulster.

Chilton, Eleanor Carroll (1898-1949). American novelist, poet and playwright. Wrote Shadows Waiting, The Burning Fountain, and, in collaboration with her former husband Herbert Agar, The Garment of Praise. A fastidious artist.

Chimborazo.

Chimborazo, Cotopaxi,
They had stolen my soul away!

Last lines of a well-known poem by the Australian poet, W. J. Turner (1889-). Chimborazo and Cotopaxi are peaks in the South American Andes.

Chimaera (Gr. chimaira, a "she-goat"). A fabulous monster of Greek mythology, described by Homer as a monster with a goat's body, a lion's head, and a dragon's tail. It was born in Lycia, and was slain by Bellerophon. Hence the term chimera is used in English for an illusory fancy, a wild, incongruous scheme.

Chimes, The. A Christmas story by Dickens (1844). It is about some bells which ring the old year out and the new year in. Trotty Veck, a little old London ticket-porter and messenger hears the Christmas chimes, and receives from them both comfort and encouragement.

Chimney-Sweeper, The. One of William Blake's early humanitarian poems, appearing in Songs of Experience.

Chinaman, John, a Chinese.

Chinatown. That section of an American city, particularly of San Francisco or New York, inhabited by Chinese. In both of the above-mentioned cities, Chinatown was formerly notorious for vice, opium and gambling dens and the like and many horrible tales of conditions are still told. Chinatown is now a commercially exploited show place, but is still the scene of tong feuds between the different tongs or secret associations and of occasional murders as a result.

Chinee, The Heathen, see HEATHEN CHINEE.

Chinese Gordon. General Gordon (killed at Khartoum in 1885), who in 1863 was placed in command of the EVER-VICTORIOUS ARMY and in the following year succeeded, after thirty-three engagements, in putting down the Taiping rebellion, which had broken out in 1851.

Chinese Parrot, The. See BIGGERS, EARL DERR.

Chingachgook. The Indian chief, friend of LEATHERSTOCKING in four of the novels of Cooper's Leatherstocking series: The Deerslayer, The Pathfinder, The Last of the Mohicans and The Pioneers. He is known as Le Gros Serpent (the Great Serpent) because of his cunning and stealth. Cooper's portrayal of Chingachgook and his son UNCAS was greatly criticized as an over-idealized conception of the American Indian.

chinook. A warm, moist southwest wind on the coast of Oregon and Washington. Called so by white settlers of Astoria because it came from the direction of a camp of Flathead Indians, i.e., Chinookans.

Chinook. Also called Chinook jargon or Oregon jargon. A mixed trade language of Chinook, other Indian, English and French elements. It was the equivalent of Pidgin English in the northwestern U.S. and neighboring Canada.

Chios, the man of. Homer, who lived at Chios, near the Aegean Sea.

Chippendale. Furniture by or in the style of Thomas Chippendale, English cabinet-maker (1718?-1779). Graceful outline with rococo ornamentation. Experts distinguish French, Chinese, and Gothic Chippendale.

Chips, Goodbye Mr. Popular novel and moving picture by James HILTON. Mr. Chips was an English schoolmaster.

Chirico, Giorgio de (1888-). Italian painter, an early leader of and an important influence on the movement of SURREALISM. He was influenced first by the Italian Renaissance painters, and is best known for his early landscapes, done before the founding of Surrealism and marked by ruins of massive classical architecture, long perspectives, deep shadows, and a sense of barrenness and immense space. Many of the paintings of Salvador DALI resemble those of de Chirico in these respects. During the 1920's, when de Chirico was definitely associated with Surrealism, he often painted faceless figures suggestive of dummies or mannequins in his characteristic landscapes.

Chiron. The centaur who taught Achilles and many other heroes music, medicine, and hunting. Jupiter placed him in heaven among the stars as Sagittarius (the Archer).

In the INFERNO Dante gives the name to the keeper of the lake of boiling blood, in the seventh circle of hell.

chiton. The garment worn next to the skin by both sexes in classic times. A single piece of cloth, folded, pinned, and girdled; or a loose linen gown sewed. The former is Dorian, the latter Ionian.

Chitra. A play by Sir Rabindranath TAGORE.

chivalry. The system of customs and conventions connected with knighthood in the Middle Ages. It included the curriculum of training the young knight to fight, hunt, serve his lord, and govern his own vassals, the system of values of the feudal aristocracy, the ceremonies connected with the knighting of the squire, and the cult of gallantry and veneration of women. See KING ARTHUR; COURTLY LOVE; ROUND TABLE.

Chivers, Thomas Holley (1809-1858). American poet. Associated with Edgar Allan POE (1843-1849). When accused of plagiarism from Poe (1850), he retorted by charging that Poe plagiarized from him. Made unusual experiments in metres.

Chkalov, Valeri Pavlovich (1904-1938). Soviet aviator, Order of Lenin 1935. Piloted nonstop flight (5400 miles) from Moscow over North Pole to Vancouver, Washington, in 1937.

chlamys. In classical Greece, a short mantle usually fastened by a clasp on the shoulder. It was a horseman's cloak that became the ordinary outdoor garment for young men.

Chloe. (1) The shepherdess beloved by Daphnis in the pastoral romance of Longus, entitled Daphnis and Chloe, and hence a generic name among romance writers and pastoral poets for a rustic maiden—not always of the artless variety.

(2) In Pope's Moral Essays (ii) Chloe is intended for Lady Suffolk, mistress of George II, "Content to dwell in decencies for ever." Matthew Prior uses the name for Mrs. Centlivre.

Chloe, Aunt. In Harriet Beecher Stowe's UNCLE TOM'S CABIN, the wife of Uncle Tom.

Chloris. The ancient Greek name of FLORA.

Choate, Rufus (1799-1859). Eminent American jury lawyer and orator. House of Representatives (1831-1834), Senate (1841-1845).

Chocano, José Santos (1875-1934). "The poetic trumpeter of the South American continent."—Alice Stone Blackwell. His Alma América is his masterpiece.

Chocolate Soldier, The. A character in Shaw's ARMS AND THE MAN and the name of the popular comic opera by Oscar Straus which was founded on the drama; hence, a soldier more remarkable for his faculty of appearing to good effect in uniform than for his fighting ability.

Choir Invisible, The. A novel by James Lane ALLEN (1897). John Gray, an idealistic school teacher, falls in love with Mrs. Falconer, but because of her marriage ties, she keeps their relationship that of friendliness only. When years later she writes that she is free and has always loved Gray, he has incurred other obligations. The title is borrowed from the first line and title of George Eliot's poem, O May I join the Choir Invisible.

Choke, General. In Dickens' MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT, a lank North American gentleman, "one of the most remarkable men in the century." He is editor of The Watertoast Gazette, and a member of the "Eden Land Corporation." It is General Choke who induces Martin Chuzzlewit to stake his all in the Eden swindle.

Cholmondeley (pronounce Chumley) Mary (1859-1925). English novelist. Her Red Pottage (1899) was "a minor literary scandal" because it satirized the pretentious complacency of the English middle class. Her niece was the novelist Stella Benson.

Chomette, René, see CLAIR, RENÉ.

Chopin, Frédéric François (1810-1849). Composer of the Romantic school, son of a French father and Polish mother, born near Warsaw but resident for most of his career in France. Famous for his compositions for the piano, on which he was also a gifted performer. His work, which includes dance forms, concertos, sonatas, songs, and solo pieces, is marked by delicacy, technical precision, grace, and sentiment. Chopin was a close friend of the painter DELACROIX and was admired by the pianist SCHUMANN. For several years he was associated with George SAND, the novelist, in an unhappy affair which ended in a quarrel and estrangement. Chopin died of tuberculosis of the larynx, a disease which caused him much weakness and physical suffering throughout his life. See also GLADKOWSKA, CONSTANTIA; WODZINSKA, MARIE; WOJCIECHOWSKI, TITUS.

Chopin, Kate O'Flaherty (1851-1904). American author of stories of Creole life in Louisiana. Bayou Folk (1894) and A Night in Arcadia (1897) are two collections of such stories.

choragus. In Greek antiquity a chorus leader.

Choral Symphony. Subtitle by which Beethoven's Ninth Symphony (1824) is popularly known. It refers to the chorus and soloists used in the last movement of the symphony to sing Schiller's Ode to Joy.

choreography. A system of notation in signs to indicate the steps, gestures, attitudes, etc., to be used in a dance, especially a ballet. The practice is said to have begun in the 15th century with Margaret of Austria, and to have been given its present name in 1699.

Chorus for Survival. See GREGORY, HORACE.

chosen people. The Jews, so called because of the divine promises of special protection recorded in the Biblical narrative.

Chotzinoff, Samuel (1889-). American pianist and music critic. Accompanist for Zimbalist, Alma Gluck, and others. Critic New York World (1925-1930); New York Post (1934-1940).

Chouans, The (Les Chouans). A historical novel by BALZAC (1829). The heroine is the beautiful spy, Marie de VERNEUIL and the hero the Marquis de Montauran, a Royalist leader. The Chouans are French insurgents of the Royalist party during the Revolution. Jean Cottureau is their leader, nicknamed Chouan (a corruption of Fr. chathuant, a screech-owl), because he is accustomed to warn his companions of danger by imitating the screech of an owl. They are also known as "Companions of JEHU."

Chou En-lai (1898?-). Chinese communist leader. A founder of the party. Joined Sun Yat-sen (1924); became active in Chinese Red Army (1931); its political leader, second only to Mao Tse-tung. Communist representative at kidnaping of CHIANG KAI-SHEK in 1936.

Chrétien de Troyes (fl. second half of 12th century). Leading French author of medieval romances, known for his psychological insight and his attempts in his writings to prove that love and marriage, considered mutually exclusive in the code of COURTLY LOVE, could be reconciled. His most important romances are Lancelot, Ou le chevalier de la charette (Lancelot, Or the Knight of the Cart), dealing with the adventures of the LANCELOT of Arthurian legend; and the Conte del Graal, or Perceval, left incomplete at his death, the earliest literary version of the celebrated legend of the Holy GRAIL. He also wrote Erec et Enide, Cligés, and Yvain, Ou le chevalier au lion (Yvain, Or the Knight of the Lion). Guillaume d'Angleterre, a version of the life of St. Eustace, has been attributed to him by some scholars. Marie de Champagne, daughter of ELEANOR of AQUITAINE and Philip of Flanders were patrons of Chrétien de Troyes.

Chriemhilda, see KRIEMHILD.

Christabel. The heroine of a fragmentary poem of the same title by COLERIDGE (1816), known for its interesting metrical form and its distinctive effects of the supernatural, which are often compared with those of The Rime of the ANCIENT MARINER. Her purity and innocence are threatened by the wicked enchantress, Lady Geraldine.

Christabelle. In Percy's Reliques I. i. 4, daughter of "a bonnie king of Ireland," beloved by Sir CAULINE.

Christian. (1) A follower of Christ. So called first at Antioch (Acts xi. 26).

most Christian Doctor. John Charlier de Gerson (1363-1429).

most Christian King. The title of the King of France. Pepin le Bref was so styled by Pope Stephen III (714-768). After 1469, when it was conferred upon Louis XI, it was regularly used.

founder of Christian eloquence. Louis Boraloué, the French preacher (1632-1704).

For the Christian Cicero, the Christian Virgil, etc., see under CICERO, VIRGIL, etc.

(2) The hero of Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS; the "pilgrim" of the title, whose journey from the City of Destruction to the Celestial City forms the substance of Part I.

Christian, The. A novel by Hall Caine (Eng. 1897). "The Christian" is John Storm, first a clergyman and later a member of a monastic brotherhood, but his love for the music-hall singer and actress, Glory Quayle, a woman very much of this world, finally breaks down his faith and resolution.

Christian II. King of Illyria in Daudet's KINGS IN EXILE. He is meant for Francis II, king of Naples, who abdicated in 1860.

Christian, Edward. In Scott's PEVERIL OF THE PEAK, a conspirator who has two aliases, "Richard Ganlesse" and "Simon Canter."

Colonel William Christian. In the same work, Edward's brother, shot for insurrection.

Christian, Fletcher. In the famous mutiny case on H.M.S. BOUNTY, the ringleader of the rebellious crew. With eight other men, Christian eventually reached the South Sea island called Pitcairn Island and founded a settlement there, where their half-white, half-Polynesian descendants live today under British rule. A poem by Byron, "The Island," drew upon their adventure.

Christiana. The wife of Christian in Pt. ii. of Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, who starts with her children and Mercy from the City of Destruction long after her husband. She is placed under the guidance of Mr. Great-Heart, and goes, therefore, in "silver slippers" along the thorny road.

Christian Endeavor, Young People's Society of. Religious association for promoting Christian faith founded in Portland, Maine, in 1881.

Christian Front. An American anti-Semitic, pro-Fascist organization (ca. 1938-1940), with which Father Charles E. COUGHLIN was associated. In 1940 several of its members were arrested on a charge of conspiring to overthrow the U.S. government by force.

Christian Hero, The. A didactic pamphlet by Richard STEELE (1701), written while the author was in the British army. It was praised by King William III but was the cause of a duel between Steele and one of his fellow-soldiers, who was seriously wounded. After this incident, Steele was opposed to the custom of dueling.

Christiania or Christiania turn. Also Christy. In skiing a Norwegian swinging turn. Upward spring from a forward crouch, inward leaning—of several kinds, as pure, jerked, or stem.

Christian Science. A religious movement whose basic principles are healing by spiritual means rather than by surgery or medicine, optimism in the face of disaster, and a belief in God as a universal, impersonal, infinite Mind. Christian Science was founded by Mary Baker Eddy in Massachusetts in 1866 and spread to the rest of the U.S., to the British Empire, and to Germany. The name Christian Science is said to have been first used by P. P. Quimby, a physician and mesmerist, of whom Mrs. Eddy was once a patient. It is claimed that the religion has no connection with this former usage. The official name of the church is Church of Christ, Scientist.

Christians Only. See BROWN, HEYWOOD CAMPBELL.

Christie, Agatha Miller (1897-). English detective story writer, a consistent best seller. Her invented Belgian detective, Hercule Poirot, is nearest to being a successor in popularity to Sherlock Holmes. The best-known of her books is The Murder of Roger Ackroyd (1926).

Christie, Anna, see ANNA CHRISTIE.

Christie Johnstone. A novel by Charles READE (1855), the story of a Scots fishergirl and her artist lover, Charles Gatty. Gatty's mother opposes the match, but when Christie saves his life, her opposition is removed. The Viscount Ipsden, whose health has been impaired by his cousin Barbara Sinclair's refusal to marry him, meets Christie in the course of following his physician's prescription to mingle with humble folk and "relieve one fellow creature a day." Eventually Barbara relents and marries the Viscount.

Christina (1626-1689). Queen of Sweden, daughter of Gustavus Adolphus (1594-1632) who was given the education of a man and who made her court a center of intellectual activity to which she invited distinguished foreign scholars, artists, and philosophers. The French philosopher DESCARTES died while in Christina's employ as tutor. Before she came of age, the affairs of state, troubled by the Thirty Years' War, were conducted by Axel Oxenstierna. She herself reigned for ten years (1644-1654) and abdicated in favor of her cousin Charles X. She embraced Roman Catholicism (1655) and died in poverty in Rome.

Christina de Pisan (1364-1430). Italian-born French poet, one of the few women authors of her time. She wrote lyrics, marked by a strong personal touch and the influence of classical reading, and three longer, philosophical poems: the Chemin de long estude (The Road of Long Study), the Mutation de fortune (The Mutation of Fortune), and Avision (Advice). "She died . . . shortly after celebrating in song Joan of Arc, whose triumph she had lived to see."

Christ in China. Title of a poem by Witter Bynner and another by Arthur Davison Ficke.

Christ in Hades. Title of a poem by Stephen Phillips.

Christ in the Tyrol. See LAWRENCE, DAVID HERBERT.

Christmas Carol. A Christmas story in prose by Dickens (1843). The subject is the conversion of SCROOGE, "a grasping old sinner," to generous good temper, by a series of dreams.

There is a story by Kate Douglas Wiggin, THE BIRDS' CHRISTMAS CAROL.

Christmas Day. December 25th. Also called the Nativity (of Christ), Noel, Yule. Before the 5th century there was no consensus of opinion as to when Christmas should come in the calendar. In Britain, December 25 was a festival in pre-Christian times. BEDE says: "The ancient peoples of the Angli began the year on December 25 when we now celebrate the birthday of the Lord; and the very night which is now so holy to us, they called in their tongue modranecht, that is, the mothers' night." In 1644 Christmas was forbidden in England. Charles II revived it.

Christmas Eve and Easter Day. See BROWNING, ROBERT.

Christophe, Henri (1767-1820). Negro King of Haiti (1811-1820). Lieutenant to TOUSSAINT L'OUVERTURE in the revolution against the French (1791). See also DESSALINES.

Christophe, Jean. See ROLLAND, ROMAIN.

Christopher, St. See under SAINTS.

Christy, Howard Chandler (1873-). American illustrator and creator of a type of American girl on magazine covers. Also has done portraits of prominent people and the large Signing the Constitution in Capitol building, Washington D.C.

Christy Minstrels. A troupe of Negro minstrels organized in New York (ca. 1860) by Edwin P. Christy (1815-1862).

chromatic scale. In music, a scale of twelve semitones or half-steps within an octave, the more usual diatonic scale plus five additional steps. It is used for rich, colorful, emotionally expressive effects and is notably to be found in the works of the musical Impressionists (see IMPRESSIONISM), particularly DEBUSSY and RAVEL.

Chronicle, Anglo-Saxon, see ANGLO-SAXON CHRONICLE.

Chronicle of Charlemagne. See under TURPIN, ARCHBISHOP.

Chronicle of the Kings of England. See WILLIAM OF MALMESBURY.

Chronicle Play. A play with purely historical theme, consisting of scenes more or less loosely connected by a thread of history. Cf., e.g., Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Chronicles. Two canonical books of the Old Testament following 2 Kings.

Chronicles of England, Scotland, and Ireland. The famous history by Raphael HOLINSHED, published in 1578. The section concerning the history of Scotland is said to be chiefly a translation of Scotorum Historiae (1527), by Hector Boece. In 1587 a second edition was published, but parts of it did not please Queen Elizabeth, and she tried to have it suppressed. The Chronicles was the source of much of the material used in Shakespeare's Cymbeline, King Lear, and Macbeth.

Chronicles of the Popes. See WILLIAM OF MALMESBURY.

Chroniques de la grande guerre. See BARRÈS, MAURICE.

Chronon-hoton-thologos. A burlesque pomposo, King of Queerummania, in Henry Carey's farce of the same name—"the most tragical tragedy ever tragedized"—(1734). The name is used for any bombastic person who delivers an inflated address. See ALDIBORONTEPHOSOPHORNIO.

Chrysale. In Molière's comedy, LES FEMMES SAVANTES, a simple-minded, henpecked French tradesman, whose wife Philaminte neglects her house for the learned languages, women's rights, and the aristocracy of mind.

chryselephantine. From the Greek words for gold and ivory. In their chryselephantine statues the Greeks used ivory for the flesh and gold, generally decorated with color, for hair and clothing.

Chryseis. In Homer's Iliad, daughter of Chryses, priest of Apollo, famed for her beauty. During the Trojan War Chryseis was taken captive and allotted to Agamemnon, king of Argos, and when he refused to accept ransom for her, Chryses called down a plague, so that Agamemnon was forced to let her go.

Chrysostom, Saint John (345?-407). Patriarch of Constantinople (398-404).

Chubb, Thomas Caldecot (1899-). American poet and biographer. The Life of Giovanni Boccaccio (1930); Ships and Lovers (1933), Cliff Pace and Other Poems (1936), two volumes of poetry; Aretino: Scourge of Princes (1940); A Time to Speak (1943), another volume of poetry; etc.

Chucks. An amusing boatswain who serves under Captain Savage in Marryat's Peter Simple (1833).

Church, Benjamin (1639-1718). American soldier and author, known as one of the outstanding fighters in the wars between the New England colonists and the Indians. He wrote Entertaining Passages Relating to Philip's War (1716), an account of his experiences in the various Indian wars of the period.

Church, Richard (1893-). English poet, novelist, critic. His novel, The Porch, won the Femina Vie-Heureuse Prize for 1937.

Churchill, John, 1st Duke of Marlborough (1650-1722). Great English military commander; nicknamed "Corporal John"; son of the impoverished Royalist Sir Winston. Assisted in advancing his fortunes by his sister Arabella, who was the mistress of the Duke of York, the later James II. Defeated the French at Blenheim, Ramillies, Oudenarde, and Malplaquet. His wife, the famous Duchess of Marlborough, was Queen Anne's closest friend for some years until she was dismissed. See also MALBROUK.

Churchill, Winston (1871-1947). American novelist, writing chiefly on political and historical subjects. His works include Richard Carvel (1899); THE CRISIS (1901); THE CROSSING (1904); CONISTON (1906); Mr. Crewe's Career (1908); The Inside of the Cup (1913); A Far Country (1915); The Dwelling Place of Light (1917); Dr. Jonathan (1919).

Churchill, Winston Leonard Spencer (1874-). English author and statesman, Conservative in political affiliation and holder of a number of British governmental offices, including those of First Lord of the Admiralty (1911-1915, 1939-1940), Chancellor of the Exchequer (1924-1929), and Prime Minister (1940-1945). Churchill was unpopular during World War I because of his conduct of naval affairs in his position as First Lord of the Admiralty, and also preceding World War II. During World War II, however, as Prime Minister in succession to Neville CHAMBERLAIN, he became very popular both in England and the U.S. because of his personality and the confidence and encouragement of his speeches. Books by Churchill include The World Crisis (1923-1929), dealing with World War I; Marlborough (1933-1938), a biography of an earlier English statesman, the author's ancestor; Blood, Sweat, and Tears (1940); The Gathering Storm (1948), and Their Finest Hour (1949).

Churchyard, Thomas (ca. 1520-1604). English poet, for several years a soldier in the Low Countries, France, Ireland, and Scotland. His poems appeared in several of the popular Elizabethan miscellanies (see TOTTEL'S MISCELLANY). He was the author of the accounts of Jane Shore and Cardinal Wolsey in THE MIRROR FOR MAGISTRATES, editions of 1563 and 1587, respectively. SHORE'S WIFE is considered his best work. His poetry appears in a series of volumes exemplified by Churchyard's Challenge (1593) and continuing with Churchyard's Chips, Churchyard's Chance, Churchyard's Charge, Churchyard's Good Will, etc.

Chute, The. A novel by Albert HALPER, published in 1937 and dealing with the mail-order business as seen through the eyes of a minor employee.

Chuzzlewit, Martin. The hero of Dickens' MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT. At first he is both selfish and exacting; but the hardships he undergoes in America completely transform him, and he becomes worthy of Mary Graham, whom he marries.

Martin Chuzzlewit, senior. Grandfather to the hero of the same name, a stern old man, whose kind heart has been turned to gall by the selfishness of his relations. He goes to live in Pecksniff's house, and pretends to be weak in intellect, but keeps his eyes open, and is able to expose the canting scoundrel.

Jonas Chuzzlewit. Son of Anthony, of the "firm of Anthony Chuzzlewit and Son, Manchester warehousemen." A consummate villain. He attempts to poison his old father, murders Montague Tigg, who knows his secret, marries Mercy Pecksniff, his cousin, and leads her a life of utter misery. He poisons himself to save his neck from the gallows.

This fine young man had all the inclination of a profligate of the first water, and only lacked the one good trait in the common catalogue of debauched vices—open-handedness—to be a notable vagabond. But there his griping and penurious habits stepped in.—Chap. xi.

Anthony Chuzzlewit. The cousin of Martin Chuzzlewit, the grandfather. Anthony is an avaricious old man, proud of having brought up his son Jonas to be as mean and grasping as himself.

Ciacco. In Dante's Inferno, a glutton, spoken to by Dante, in the third circle of hell, the place to which gluttons are consigned to endless woe. The word means "a pig," and is not a proper name, but only a symbolical one. He is introduced into Boccaccio's Decameron ix. 8.

Ciano, Conte Galeazzo (1903-1944). Married the daughter of Benito Mussolini, and became prominent in Italian Fascism. Member of the Fascist Supreme Council. Executed by order of Mussolini. His diaries, published in 1946 with an introduction by Sumner Wells, reveal him as "the creature of his times and the times in which he had his being are the least admirable mankind has known for many centuries."

Cibber, Colley (1671-1757). English actor, dramatist, and poet. Brought out 30 dramatic pieces between 1697 and 1748. Appointed poet laureate in 1730. Depreciated by Pope and Johnson, and attacked by Fielding for style, language, and mutilation of Shakespeare.

Cicero, Marcus Tullius (106-43 B.C.). Great Roman orator, philosopher, and statesman. He is often referred to as Tully. His essays on Friendship (De Amicitia) and Old Age (De Senectute) are Latin classics, as are his orations against the conspirator CATILINE. la bouche de Ciceron (Cicero's mouth). Philippe Pot, prime minister of Louis XI. (1428-1494).

Cicero of France. Jean Baptiste Massillon (1663-1742).

Cicero of Germany. Johann III, elector of Brandenburg (1455-1499).

Cicero of the British Senate. George Canning (1770-1827).

British Cicero. William Pitt, Earl of Chatham (1708-1778).

Christian Cicero. Lucius Coelius Lactantius, a Christian father, who died 330.

German Cicero. Johann Sturm, printer and scholar (1507-1589).

cicerone. A sight-seers' guide in Italy. Hence any guide. The term is an allusion to the proverbial talkativeness of guides which reminds ironically of the Roman orator CICERO.

Cid. A corruption of seyyid, Arabic for lord. The title was given to Roderigo or Ruy Diaz de Bivar (ca. 1040-1099), also called El Campeador, the national hero of Spain and champion of Christianity against the Moors. His exploits, real and legendary, form the basis of many Spanish romances and chronicles, as well as Corneille's tragedy, Le Cid (1636).

the Cid's horse. Babieca.

the Cid's sword. Colada. The sword taken by him from King Bucar was called Tizona.

Cid Hamet Benengeli. The supposititious author upon whom CERVANTES fathered the adventures of DON QUIXOTE.

Spanish commentators have discovered this pseudonym to be only an Arabian version of Señor Cervantes: Cid, "Señor"; Hamet, a Moorish prefix; and Ben-en-geli, meaning "son of a stag." So cervato "a young stag" is the basis of the name Cervantes.

Cimabue, Cenni di Pepo (fl. 1301-1302). Florentine painter, known chiefly through his reputation among his contemporaries. He executed mosaic work at Pisa and painted religious scenes and figures for other churches in Florence and Assisi. He is mentioned by Dante in The Divine Comedy.

Cimmerian darkness. Intense darkness. Homer places the legendary Cimmerians beyond Oceanus, in a land of never-ending gloom. Immediately after Cimmeria he places the empire of Hades. Pliny (Historia Naturalis, vi. 14) places Cimmeria near the lake

Avernus, in Italy, where "the sun never penetrates."

Cimourdean. A character in Victor Hugo's NINETY-THREE.

Cincinnatus (ca. 500-430 B. C.). A legendary Roman hero who, after having been consul years before, was called from his plough to be Dictator. After he had conquered the Aequians and delivered his country from danger, he laid down his office and returned to his plough. The name has been assumed as a pen name by political columnists, particularly in Europe.

Cincinnatus of the Americans. George Washington (1732-1799).

Cincinnatus of the West. William Henry Harrison (1773-1841), President of the United States.

Cinderella. In French Cendrillon and in German Aschenbrotel. Literally, the little cinder girl. Heroine of a fairy tale of very ancient, probably Eastern, origin, mentioned in German literature in the 16th century and popularized by Perrault's Contes de ma mère l'oye (1697). Cinderella is drudge of the house, dirty with housework, while her elder sisters go to fine balls. At length a fairy enables her to go to the prince's ball; the prince falls in love with her, and she is discovered by means of a glass slipper which she drops, and which will fit no foot but her own.

J. M. BARRIE wrote a play entitled A Kiss for Cinderella (1916). The heroine is "Miss Thing, the Penny Friend," who keeps a day-nursery for war babies and, like Cinderella, has her dreams, which finally come true.

Cinna. A drama on Roman history by Pierre CORNEILLE (1640), revolving about the struggle in the mind of Augustus between revenge and mercy with regard to the conspirators against his life. He finally chooses to be merciful.

Cinq-Mars, Henri, Marquis de (1620-1642). A French nobleman who plotted against Richelieu when the latter opposed his love for Marie de Gonzague. Alfred de Vigny made him the hero of a historical novel, Cinq-Mars ou une conjuration sur Louis XIII (1826), which was later the basis of an opera by Gounod (1877).

cinquain. A five-line stanza, particularly the form invented by Adelaide CRAPSEY, a minor American poet. It is based on the Japanese HOKKU.

Just now,
Out of the strange
Still dusk—as strange, as still—
A white moth flew. Why am I grown
So cold?

Adelaide Crapsey, The Warning.

cinquecento. Literally, five hundred. The Italian name for the sixteenth century, that is, the century with years in the names of which 500 occurs, applied as an epithet to art and literature with much the same significance as Renaissance or Elizabethan. The great men of the period included Ariosto, Tasso, Raphael, Titian and MICHELANGELO. It was the revival of the classical or antique, but is often used as a derogatory term, implying debased or inferior art.

Cinque Ports. Originally the five seaports, Hastings, Sandwich, Dover, Romney, and Hythe, which were granted special privileges from the 13th to the 17th centuries, and even later, in consideration of their providing ships and men for the defense of the Channel. Subsequently Winchelsea and Rye were added.

Cintré, Claire de. In Henry James' AMERICAN, the widow with whom Christopher Newman falls in love.

CIOPW. See CUMMINGS, EDWARD ESTLIN.

Cipango or Zipango. A marvelous island described in the Voyages of MARCO POLO, the Venetian traveler. He described it as lying some 1500 miles from land. This island was an object of diligent search by Columbus and other early navigators; but it belongs to that wonderful chart which contains the El Dorado of Sir Walter Raleigh, the Utopia of Sir Thomas More, the Atlantis of Lord Bacon, the Laputa of Dean Swift, and other places better known in story than in geography.

Circe. A sorceress in Greek mythology, who lived in the island of Aea. When Ulysses landed there, Circe turned his companions into swine, but Ulysses resisted this metamorphosis by virtue of a herb called MOLY, given him by Mercury.

Circensian. Having to do with the Circus in Rome. The Circensian games (Lat. Ludi Circenses) were held in the Circus Maximus.

circuit rider. A pioneer preacher assigned to a circuit, particularly on the frontier. Had to ride on horseback. In 1874 Edward Eggleston wrote The Circuit Rider, and in 1910 Corra Harris wrote A Circuit Rider's Wife.

Circumlocution Office. A term applied in ridicule by Dickens in LITTLE DORRIT to public offices in England, because each person tries to shuffle off every act to someone else; and before anything is done it has to pass through so many departments and so much time elapses that it is hardly worth having bothered about it.

Whatever was required to be done, the Circumlocution Office was beforehand with all the public departments in the art of perceiving—How not to do it.

Dickens, Little Dorrit, ch. x.

Hence, routine, formality, red tape.

Cistercians. A monastic order, founded at Cistercium, or Cîteaux, by Robert, abbot of Molême, in Burgundy, in 1098, as a branch of the Benedictines. The monks are known also as Bernardines, owing to the patronage of St. Bernard (see under SAINT), who entered Cîteaux in 1112 and in 1115 became abbot of a daughter monastery at Clairveaux. In 1664 the order was reformed on an excessively strict basis by Jean le Bouthillier de Rance.

Cithaeron. In ancient geography, a mountain range between Attica and Boeotia. It was the scene of the Bacchic festival at which king Pentheus of Thebes was torn to pieces by his frenzied mother and aunts. It was also the place where the usurping King Lycus of Thebes exposed Amphion and Zethus, the sons of Queen Antiope.

Cities of the Plain. English translation of Sodome et Gomorrhe (1921-1922), Book IV of Marcel Proust's long novel, REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST. Presenting the characters who appear in the rest of the series, this book is devoted chiefly to a careful and objective exposition of the unnatural vices and the sexual perversions practiced by the decadent French aristocrats with whom the narrator, Marcel, associates. Outstanding among these is the Baron de CHARLUS. Cities of the Plain was first published in English in 1928. See also under CITY.

Citizen King, The. Louis Philippe (1773-1850), the first elective king of France (1830 to abdication in 1849).

Citizen of the World, The. A series of satires by Oliver GOLDSMITH (1762), published with the subtitle Letters from a Chinese Philosopher Residing in London to his Friends in the East. Lien Chi Altangi, the "Chinese philosopher," Beau Tibbs and the "Man in Black" who is Lien's companion at the theater are entertaining personalities, through whom the author makes his comments on contemporary English life.

Citroën. A low-priced French automobile, named for the maker. Paris sightseers of the twenties will always remember the Citroën advertisement on the Eiffel Tower.

city. Strictly speaking, a large town with a corporation and cathedral; but any large town is so called in ordinary speech. In the Bible it means a town having walls and gates.

City of a Hundred Towers. Pavia, in Italy; famous for its towers and steeples.

City of Bells. Strassburg.

City of Brotherly Love. A nickname of Philadelphia. (Gr. philadelphia means "brotherly love").

City of David. Jerusalem. So called in compliment to King David (2 Sam. v. 7, 9).

City of Destruction. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, the world of the unconverted. Bunyan makes CHRISTIAN flee from it and journey to the "Celestial City," thereby showing the "walk of a Christian" from conversion to death.

City of God. The Church, or whole body of believers; the kingdom of Christ, in contradistinction to the City of Destruction. The phrase is that of St. Augustine; one of his chief works bears that title.

City of Lanterns. A supposititious city in Lucian's Veræ Historiæ, situated somewhere beyond the zodiac. See LANTERN-LAND.

City of Legions. Caerleon-on-Usk, where King Arthur held his court.

City of Lilies. Florence.

City of Magnificent Distances. Washington; famous for its wide avenues and splendid vistas.

City of Palaces. Agrippa, in the reign of Augustus, converted Rome from "a city of brick huts to one of marble palaces." Calcutta is also called the city of palaces.

city of refuge. Moses, at the command of God, set apart three cities on the east of Jordan, and Joshua added three others on the west, whither any person might flee for refuge who had killed a human creature inadvertently. The three on the east of Jordan were Bezer, Ramoth, and Golan; the three on the west were Hebron, Shechem, and Kedesh (Deut. iv. 43; Josh. xx. 1-8).

By Mohammedans, Medina, in Arabia, where Mahomet took refuge when driven by conspirators from Mecca, is known as the city of refuge. He entered not as a fugitive, but in triumph 622 A. D. Also called the city of the Prophet.

city of St. Michael. Dumfries, of which city St. Michael is the patron saint.

City of Saints. Montreal, in Canada, is so named because all the streets are named after saints. Salt Lake City, Utah, U.S.A., also is known as the city of the saints, from the Mormons who inhabit it.

Cities of the Plain. Sodom and Gomorrah.

Abram dwelled in the land of Canaan, and Lot dwelled in the cities of the plain, and pitched his tent toward Sodom.—Gen. xiii, 12.

City of the Golden Gate. San Francisco. See GOLDEN GATE.

City of the Prophet. Medina. See CITY OF REFUGE.

City of the Seven Hills. Rome, built on seven hills (urbs septacollis). The hills are the Aventine, Caelian, Capitoline, Esquiline, Palatine, Quirinal, and Viminal.

City of the Sun. Baalbec, Rhodes, and Heliopolis, which had the sun for tutelary deity, were so called. It is also the name of a treatise on the Ideal Republic by the Dominican friar Campanella (1568-1639), similar to the Republic of Plato, Utopia of Sir Thomas More, and Atlantis of Bacon.

City of the Three Kings. Cologne; the reputed burial-place of the MAGI.

City of the Tribes. Galway; because it was anciently the home of the thirteen "tribes" or chief families, who settled there in 1232 with Richard de Burgh.

City of the Violated Treaty. Limerick; because of the way in which the Pacification of Limerick (1691) was broken by England.

City of the Violet Crown. Athens is so called by Aristophanes.

Celestial City. See under CELESTIAL.

Cream City. Milwaukee is sometimes so called from its numerous cream-colored brick houses.

Crescent City. New Orleans, from its location on the curving Mississippi River.

Elm City. New Haven, Conn., so called from its magnificent elm trees.

Empire City. New York City, so called from its commercial importance and because it is the metropolis of New York, the Empire State.

Eternal City. Rome. See also under ETERNAL.

Forest City. Cleveland, Ohio.

Granite City or Capital. Aberdeen.

Heavenly City. The New Jerusalem; paradise.

Holy City. See under HOLY.

Imperial City. Rome, the seat of empire.

Marsh City. Leningrad, from its low-lying situation and frequent floods.

Monumental City. Baltimore, U.S., is so called because it abounds in monuments.

Nameless City. Ancient Rome, so called from a superstition that anyone who uttered its mystical name would perish.

Puritan City. Boston, Mass., the metropolis of the Puritan settlements of New England.

Quaker City. Philadelphia, so called from its Quaker founders.

Railroad City. Indianapolis, Ind., has been so called because of its importance as a railroad center.

Smoky City. Pittsburgh, so called from the dirt and smoke of its industries.

Twin Cities. Minneapolis and St. Paul, two cities of about equal importance across the Mississippi River from each other near its head in Minnesota.

Windy City. Chicago is so called from its stiff lake breezes.

City of Dreadful Night, The. A long poem by the Victorian poet James THOMSON, published in The City of Dreadful Night, And Other Poems (1880). It describes an imaginary city of misery and horror created out of the author's own sense of despair as, afflicted with insomnia, he walked at night through the streets of London.

City of God. Latin title De Civitate Dei.

The most famous work of St. Augustine (see under SAINT, written after the sack of Rome by the Visigoths (410 A. D.) in order to disprove the charges then being made that Christianity was to blame for the collapse of the Roman Empire. Augustine asserts that all history is a conflict between good, represented by the City of God (Civitas Dei), which includes all pious Christians—in other words, the Church which later became the Roman Catholic Church, and evil, represented by the Earthly City (Civitas Terrena), including pagans and unfaithful Christians, or the Roman Empire. This conflict is leading, through the will of God, which is supreme, to the Last Judgment, when the people in the City of God will win immortality, and the Earthly City will be destroyed; the Church, therefore, is more important than the state, since it is destined for triumph, and should be given support.

civet cat. An African animal which produces most of the civet (used as a perfume) for commerce. In Elizabethan times the appellation was passed about as a term of opprobrium.

civic crown. Also civic wreath. In ancient Rome, a garland of oak leaves bestowed upon a soldier who had saved the life of a citizen.

Civilian Conservation Corps (C.C.C.). An agency of the New DEAL, established in 1933 and terminated in 1942. Under it, unemployed American youths were enlisted in an "army" to aid in reforestation and lived in camps under semi-military discipline.

Civil Code. See CODE NAPOLÉON.

Civil Works Administration (C.W.A.). An agency of the American New DEAL, established in 1933 to provide Federal work RELIEF for the nation's unemployed. It provided for the building of bridges, roads, and other public projects. It was abandoned in 1934 and replaced by the Works Progress Administration (W.P.A.) in 1935.

Civitate Dei, De, see CITY OF GOD.

Claës-Molina, Balthazar. In Balzac's novel, Alkahest or the House of Claës (La Recherche de l'absolu) (1834) a chemist who spends a huge fortune and neglects his family completely in the "quest" of the secret of chemical affinity. He dies crying "Eureka."

Clafin, Victoria (1838-1927), and Clafin, Tennessee Celeste (1846-1923). Victoria married Dr. Canning Woodhull (1853) and is hence also known as Victoria Woodhull. American sisters, who traveled as children with a "medicine show." Later opened brokerage offices under the wing of Cornelius Vanderbilt. In 1870 founded Woodhull and Claffin's Weekly in which they advocated women's rights, free love, and the like.

Claimant, The American (1892). Novel by Mark TWAIN.

Claimant, The Tichborne. See ORTON.

Clair, René. Real name René Chomette (1898-). French motion-picture director, known for the wit, social satire, and sophisticated fantasy of his films. He is best known in the U.S. for Sous les toits de Paris (Under the Roofs of Paris) (1930); Le Million (The Million) (1931); and A Nous la liberté (Liberty for Us) (1932).

clairaudience. Term formed by analogy with clairvoyance. The power of hearing significant distant or future sounds.

Clairmont, Clara Mary Jane, usually Claire (1798-1879). Stepdaughter of William Godwin and mother of Lord Byron's daughter Allegra; friend of the Shelleys.

clairvoyance. The power of seeing significant distant or future objects or scenes.

Clan-na-Gael. An Irish secret organization founded in Philadelphia in 1881, and successor to the FENIAN Brotherhood (1856); its avowed object being to secure "the complete and absolute independence of Ireland from Great Britain, and the complete severance of all political connection between the two countries, to be effected by unceasing preparation for armed insurrection in Ireland."

claque (Fr.). (1) Paid applauders at a theatrical performance. Hence any trucklers. (2) A collapsible opera hat.

Clärchen. The heroine of Goethe's historical drama EGMONT, noted for her constancy and devotion.

Clare. In the Roman Catholic Church, a nun of the order founded by St. Clare of Assisi (1194-1253) as the equivalent for women of the Franciscan friars minor. The nuns of this order are known as Poor Clares.

Clare, Ada. In Dickens's Bleak House, John Jarndyce's ward, who marries Richard Carstone.

Clare, Angel. A leading character in Hardy's TESS OF THE D'URBERVILLES.

Clare, John (1793-1864). The "Northamptonshire peasant poet." Wrote The Shepherd's Calendar (1827), Rural Muse (1835). Confined in a lunatic asylum.

Clarence. A play by Booth TARKINGTON.

Clarendon Press. A printing establishment connected with the university of Oxford, England. It was founded partly with the profits from Edward Hyde, 1st Earl of Clarendon's (1609-1674) History of the Rebellion (published from transcript, 1702-1704; from original manuscript, 1826).

Claretie, Jules (1840-1913). French journalist and writer. Director of the Comédie Française (1885). Many novels and historical works.

Clari. An opera by J. Howard Payne and Sir Henry Bishop (1823), with the subtitle The Maid of Milan. It is remembered chiefly because of the famous song Home, Sweet Home, which was one of its melodies.

Clarinda. The name which Mrs. M'Lehose used in her correspondence with Robert Burns.

Clarissa Harlowe. A novel by Samuel RICHARDSON (1747-8), the full title being Clarissa; or the History of a Young Lady. As one of the earliest English novels it exercised a marked influence on the development of fiction. It is constructed as a series of letters to Clarissa's friend, Miss Howe. To avoid a marriage to which her heart cannot consent, but to which she is urged by her parents, Clarissa casts herself on the protection of a lover, named Lovelace, who abuses the confidence reposed in him. He afterwards proposes marriage; but she rejects his proposal, and retires to a solitary dwelling, where she pines to death with grief and shame.

Clark, Badger (1883-). American poet, author of the famous singing ballad "High Chin Bob" or "Way up high in the Mokiones."

Clark, Barrett Harper (1890-). Dramatic teacher and editor of many books on the drama.

Clark, Champ. In full James Beauchamp (1850-1921). Well-known American political leader. Speaker of the House of Representatives (1911-1919). Defeated as candidate for President (1912) when Bryant supported Woodrow Wilson.

Clark, George Rogers (1752-1818). American Revolutionary frontier leader. Fought British and Indians (1779-1783).

Clark, Mark Wayne (1896-). American army man. As lieutenant-general he commanded the Fifth Army which made the principal assault on the Italian mainland in World War II (Sept. 9, 1943).

Clark, William (1770-1838). American explorer. Crossed continent with Capt. Meriwether Lewis finding route to Pacific Ocean (1804-1805).

Clarke, Austin (1896-). Irish poet. National award for poetry at Tailtean Games (1932). Also author of verse plays and novels. The Vengeance of Fionn (1917), The Cattle-drive in Connaught (1925), etc.

Clarke, Charles Cowden (1787-1877). English Shakespearean scholar. Taught Keats his letters. Friend of Hunt, Shelley, Hazlitt, Charles and Mary Lamb. His wife, Mary, compiled The Complete Concordance to Shakespeare.

Clarke, Micah, see MICAH CLARKE.

Clark's Field. A novel by Robert Herrick (Am. 1914). Ardelle Clark, an orphan, is heir to a huge fortune from the sale of "Clark's Field," which has remained vacant in the midst of a great industrial district. She marries Archie Davis, a shiftless art student, and they squander the inheritance freely. Among the workmen on their great estate in California is a mason named Tom Clark who, Adele discovers, is a distant cousin and, as she believes, an equal heir to the estate. After his brave but unsuccessful effort to save her child from fire, she decides to recognize his claim; and when this decision cannot be legally carried out, she asks his assistance in using the money for the welfare of the industrial community in which "Clark's Field" was located.

classical. (1) Usually, a term referring to the CLASSICS, or to the period of greatest power among the Greeks and Romans, as "classical culture."

(2) In literature and art in general, a term used to express, with reference to a single work as well as to an entire age, dominance of form over content, technical precision over emotional expressiveness, clarity, restraint, and rationality over wildness, bombast, and imaginative excess; opposed to ROMANTIC. See also NEO-CLASSICAL.

(3) In music, specifically referring to the period of the 18th century, which was marked by the development of the symphony and the rise of such composers as HANDEL, HAYDN, and MOZART. "Classical music" also means, in loose usage, generally among those opposed to it or unfamiliar with it, all music not included in the category of "popular"—in other words, music other than folk-tunes, the songs of TIN PAN ALLEY composers and their successors, and music produced on a mass-scale for ballroom dancing.

Classical Symphony. A symphony by Sergei PROKOFIEV (1917). In this, the composer announced, he tried to capture the spirit of Mozart's music and to write as Mozart might have written if he were living in the 20th century.

classics. The Romans were divided by Servius into five classes. Any citizen who belonged to the highest class was called classicus, all the rest were said to be infra classem (unclassified). From this the best authors were termed classici auctores (classic authors), i.e. authors of the best or first class. The high esteem in which Greek and Latin were held at the revival of letters obtained for these authors the name of classics; and when other first-rate works are intended some distinctive name is added, as the English, French, Spanish, etc., classics.

Claudel, Paul (1868-). French poet, playwright, and diplomat. Was once French ambassador to Japan and wrote The East I Know. He is a mystical Catholic poet. His plays owe a debt to Aeschylus. The Tidings Brought to Mary (1916) is among his most notable works.

Claude Lorrain, see LORRAIN.

Claudine. See COLETTE.

Claudio. (1) In Shakespeare's MEASURE FOR MEASURE, brother of Isabella and the suitor of Juliet. He is imprisoned by Lord Angelo for the seduction of Juliet, and his sister Isabella pleads for his release.

(2) In Shakespeare's MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING, Lord Claudio of Florence is a friend of Don Pedro, prince of Aragon, and engaged to Hero.

Claudius. In Shakespeare's HAMLET, Hamlet's uncle, who poisons his brother, marries the widow, and usurps the throne.

Claudius the God. See GRAVES, ROBERT.

Claus, Peter, see KLAUS, PETER.

Claus, Santa, see SANTA CLAUS.

Clausewitz, Karl von (1780-1831). Prussian army officer whose books on the science of war, notably Vom Kriege (3 vols.; 1833), are classics in their field.

Clavering, Sir Francis. In Thackeray's PENDENNIS, a dissipated baronet who marries the rich mother of BLANCHE AMORY, only to discover that her scoundrelly first husband is still alive and eager for blackmail. See ALTAMONT; AMORY.

Claverings, The. A novel by Anthony Trollope (1867). The hero is Harry Clavering, a rector's son and a somewhat fickle but likable young man.

clavichord. A keyboard instrument, precursor of the piano by which it was superseded. The distinct charms have brought it back into use, especially for the performance of works composed before the piano was developed.

While you sat and played Toccatas,
Stately at the clavichord.

Robert Browning, "A Toccata of Galuppi's."

Clavigo. A drama by Goethe (1774) based on the career of Don José Clavijo y Foxardo (1730-1806). This Spanish official seduced a sister of BEAUMARCHAIS and suffered consequent disgrace. Beaumarchais wrote his drama Eugénie around the same episode.

Clavileno. In DON QUIXOTE (II, iii. 4 and 5), the wooden horse on which the Don mounts in order to disenchant the Infanta Antonomasia and her husband, who are shut up in the tomb of Queen Maguncia of Candaya. It is the very horse on which Peter of Provence carried off the fair Magalona; it was constructed by Merlin, and is governed by a wooden pin in the forehead. The word means Wooden Peg. See also CAMBUSCAN.

Clay, Bertha M. Pseudonym of Charlotte Monica Braeme (1836-1884). English author of a flood of romantic novels. See also CARTER, NICK.

Clay, Henry (1777-1852). Famous American statesman. Senator; Speaker of the House; Secretary of State. From the Missouri Compromise (1820) he derives his nickname "The Great Pacificator." He lived up to his reputation in the so-called Compromise of 1850 by which he sought to avoid civil war.

Clay, Robert. The hero of Soldiers of Fortune by Richard Harding DAVIS.

Clayhanger. A novel by ARNOLD BENNETT (Eng. 1910). Under the domination of his old father Darius, the hero, Edwin Clayhanger, is forced into the family printing business. He falls in love with Hilda Lessways, who is visiting in town, but learns that Hilda is the wife of George Cannon. Much later he finds her living in wretched quarters and learns that Cannon is a bigamist and the marriage void. His old father dies, and Edwin marries Hilda.

In Hilda Lessways the same events are narrated from Hilda's point of view. These Twain continues the study of the two temperaments into their married life, and The Roll Call (1919) carries their story still further. In all four books, Hilda's son George plays an important part. As a boy of ten he does much to bring Edwin and Hilda together and after their marriage his experiences are the leading element.

Clayton Act or Clayton Antitrust Act. An act passed by the 63rd Congress (Oct. 14, 1914) as a supplement to the Sherman Antitrust Act (1890). It is directed against agreements between banks and large corporations, as far as these are designed "to substantially lessen competition." Its provisions are enforced by the Federal Trade Commission.

Cléante. A favorite name with Molière: (1) In his Malade imaginaire, the lover of Angélique, the daughter of ARGAN. (2) In L'Avare, the son of HARPAGON. (3) In TARTUFFE, the brother-in-law of Orgon.

clearing house. An agency set up by banks, railroads, buyers and sellers, etc., for the purpose of adjusting their accounts with each other. Hence, any agency functioning in a comparable manner. As, "the office of the cultural attaché is to be a clearing house for matters of non-political importance concerning the two countries."

Cleave, Richard. The hero of Mary Johnston's LONG ROLL.

clef. A character used in musical notation to determine the pitches to be represented by the lines and spaces of the staff.

The clefs are three:
C, F, and G.

The shape of the clefs grew out of the letters by which they are named. The word is French and means "key."

clef, romans à. See Roman à clef.

Clegg, Jane, see JANE CLEGG.

Cleghorn, Sarah Norcliffe (1876-). American poet with a passion for social justice. A typical New Englander, a native of Vermont, she has allied herself with many causes and also written beautifully of New England.

Cleishbotham, Jedediah. The imaginary editor, schoolmaster and parish clerk of Gandercluch, who is supposed to have employed his assistant teacher, Peter Pattieson, to write down THE TALES OF MY LANDLORD. Of course the real author is Sir Walter SCOTT. Jedediah Cleishbotham is also introduced in the preface to The Black Dwarf.

Clelia or Cloelia. In the legendary history of Rome, a Roman maiden, one of the hostages given to Porsena. She made her escape from the Etruscan camp by swimming across the Tiber. She was sent back by the Romans, but Porsena not only set her at liberty for her gallant deed, but allowed her to take with her a part of the hostages. Mlle. de Scudéry took this story as the framework for her celebrated romance Clélie, published in ten volumes (Fr. 1654-1660). Like her CYRUS, it deals with contemporary French life under the thin disguise of other times and other scenes.

Clélie. A novel by Mlle. de Scudéry. See CLELIA.

Clemenceau, Georges (1841-1929). French journalist and statesman. Correspondent in U.S. with Grant's army (1865). Premier of France (1906-1909, 1917). Head of French delegation to Peace Conference at Versailles (1919). Both his looks and attitudes are responsible for his nickname "the Tiger."

Clemens, Samuel Langhorne. See TWAIN, Mark.

Clementina, The lady. In Richardson's novel Sir Charles Grandison, an amiable, accomplished, but unfortunate woman, deeply in love with Sir Charles Grandison. Sir Charles, however, married Harriet Byron.

Clementine, O my Darling. An old song, beginning

In a cavern, in a cavern,
Excavating for a mine,
Lived a miner—Forty-niner—
And his daughter, Clementine.

Clendening, Logan (1884-1945). Physician and author. The Human Body (1927) is his most popular book.

Cleofas, Don. The hero of a novel by Le Sage, entitled Le Diable boiteux (The Devil on Two Sticks). He is a fiery young Spaniard, proud, high-spirited and revengeful, noted for gallantry, and not without generous sentiments. His guide is the fiend ASMODEUS.

Cleombrotos. A philosopher who so admired Plato's discourse on the immortality of the soul (in the Phaedo) that he jumped into the sea in order to exchange this life for a better. He was called Ambraciota, from Ambracia, in Epirus, the place of his birth.

Cleon. In Browning's poem of this name the writer is supposed to be one of the poets alluded to by St. Paul in Acts xvii. 28 ("As certain also of your own poets have said"). Cleon believes in Zeus under the attributes of the one God, but sees nothing in his belief to warrant the hope of immortality, which disconcerts him. The poem is a protest against the inadequacy of the earthly life.

Cleopatra. Queen of Egypt, wife of Ptolemy Dionysius. She was driven from her throne, but re-established by Julius Caesar, 47 B.C. Antony, captivated by her, repudiated his wife, Octavia, to live with the fascinating Egyptian. After the loss of the battle of Actium, Cleopatra killed herself by an asp. She is the heroine of many tragedies, of which the most notable in English are Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra (1608) Dryden's All for Love or the World Well Lost (1682) and Shaw's Caesar and Cleopatra (1908). There is an Italian tragedy by Alfieri (1773), and French tragedies by E. Jodelle, Cléopâtre captive (1550); Jean Mairet, Cléopâtre (1630); Isaac de Benserade (1670), J. F. Marmontel (1750), and Mde. de Girardin (1847). Rider Haggard has a romance called Cleopatra (1889). See HARMACHIS.

Cleopatra and her pearl. It is said that Cleopatra made a banquet for Antony, the costliness of which excited his astonishment; and, when Antony expressed his surprise, Cleopatra took a pearl ear-drop, which she dissolved in a strong acid, and drank to the health of the Roman triumvir, saying, "My draught to Antony shall far exceed it."

Cleopatra's Needle. The obelisk so called, now in London on the Thames Embankment, was brought there in 1878 from Alexandria, whither it and its fellow (now in Central Park, New York) had been moved from Heliopolis by Augustus about 9 B.C. It has no connection with Cleopatra, and it has carved on it hieroglyphics that tell of its erection by Thothmes III, a Pharaoh of the 18th dynasty who lived many centuries before her time.

Cleopatra's nose. It was Blaise Pascal (d. 1662) who said, "If the nose of Cleopatra had been shorter, the whole face of the earth would have been changed" (Pensées viii. 29); the allusion, of course, being to the tremendous results brought about by her enslavement through her charm and beauty, first of Julius Caesar and then of Mark Antony.

clerihew. See BENTLEY, EDMUND CLERIHUEW.

Clerk-Maxwell, James, see MAXWELL, JAMES CLERK.

Clerk's or Clerkes Tale. In Chaucer's Canterbury Tales. See GRISELDA. The Clerk is probably best described in the following well-known lines:

A Clerk ther was of Oxenford also
That unto logik hadde longe y-go . . .
For him was lever have at his beddes heed
Twenty bokes, clad in blak or red
Of Aristotle and his philosophye
Than robes riche, or fithele, or gay sautrye . . .
Souninge in moral vertu was his speche,
And gladly wolde he lerne and gladly teche.

Prologue.

Clermont, The. The first American steamboat built by Robert Fulton (1765-1815). It made a trial trip from New York to Albany (150 miles) in 32 hours (August 11, 1807). It was popularly called Fulton's Folly.

Clery, Emma. In James Joyce's A PORTRAIT OF THE ARTIST AS A YOUNG MAN, a girl with whom Stephen DEDALUS attends a Gaelic class and who is the object of his adolescent love. She is the "E——— C———" to whom he addresses a sentimental poem.

Cléry, Lucile: A Woman of Intrigue (1932), reprinted as The Strange Case of Lucile Cléry (1941), by Joseph Shearing, pseudonym of Mrs. Gabrielle M. V. Campbell Long. It was based on the actual murder of the Duchesse de Praslin in Paris (1847). In the real story the actual governess, after coming to America, married the great-uncle of Rachel FIELD, American novelist, and in 1938 Miss Field published a novel, All This, and Heaven Too, dealing with the same case, which became a most successful motion picture.

Cleveland, Duchess of (1641-1709). Mistress of Charles II (1660-1674).

Cleveland, (Stephen) Grover (1837-1908). 22nd and 24th President of the United States. Democrat. 1st election 1884. Re-elected 1892. Second term noted for vigorous handling of national credit and firm foreign policy. Under the name of Peter Stirling he is the hero of Paul Leicester Ford's HONORABLE PETER STIRLING (1894).

Cleveland, John (1613-1658). English poet, a reader in rhetoric at Cambridge and a Royalist during the English Civil War, serving both as a soldier and a verse and prose satirist against the Puritans. His poetry is marked by fantastic conceits (see CONCEIT) carried to an extreme of ornamentation. He was very popular in his day and was imitated by numerous lesser poets. Among his works are Jonsonus Virbius (1638) and Poems (1653).

cliché. Literally, a stereotype plate; hence, a stereotyped expression, a stock phrase, such as "few and far between," "ever and anon," "at the eleventh hour."

Cliff Dwellers, The. A novel by Henry Fuller (Am. 1893), concerning a heterogeneous group of characters of varying social backgrounds, all of whom work in a huge office building in Chicago. The term came to be often used with reference to modern city life.

Cliffe, Geoffrey. A character in Mrs. Humphry Ward's MARRIAGE OF WILLIAM ASHE.

Clifford, Lady. Mrs. Henry de la Pasture. English novelist and playwright. Second marriage to Sir Hugh Clifford. Mother of Elizabeth Monica Dashwood whose pen-name, E. M. Delafeld, is an Anglicized form of de la Pasture.

Clifford, Mrs. Lucy Lane (d. 1929). English novelist and playwright. Robert Browning said he should like to have written her first novel, Mrs. Keith's Crime (1885), which was also admired by Hardy. Kipling commented on her good literary judgment, and Henry James remembered her in his will.

Clifford, Martha. A character in James Joyce's ULYSSES, a stenographer with whom Leopold Bloom is carrying on a clandestine affair. She addresses love-letters to him as Henry Flower. In the novel's parallel with the Odyssey, she represents CALYPSO.

Clifford, Paul, see PAUL CLIFFORD.

Cligés. See CHRÉTIEN DE TROYES.

Clim of the Clough, see CLYM.

climax. (Lat., Gr. a ladder.) The rhetorical figure in which the sense rises gradually in a series of images, each exceeding its predecessor in force or dignity. Popularly, the word is used to denote the last step in the gradation, the point of highest development.

Clinker, Humphrey, see HUMPHREY CLINKER.

Clinton, Sir Henry (1738?-1795). English general at Bunker Hill. In 1778 commander-in-Chief of all British forces in America. Captured Charleston, S.C., but could not prevent Cornwallis's surrender at Yorktown, Va.

Clinton's Ditch. The Erie Canal. Begun in 1817 through the efforts of Governor DeWitt Clinton (1769-1828). Formally opened in 1825 at the beginning of Clinton's second term.

Clio. In classic mythology, one of the nine Muses, the inventor of historical and heroic poetry.

ADDISON adopted the name as a pseudonym, perhaps because many of his papers in the Spectator are signed by one of the four letters in this word, probably the initial letters of Chelsea, London, Islington, Office.

clipper or clipper ship. The type of full-rigged ship developed by American builders about 1840. Fine lines, overhanging bow, tall raking masts, large sail area. Sailed in the tea and china trade. Cf. Java Head by Joseph Hergesheimer.

Clitandre. In Molière's comedy, LES FEMMES SAVANTES, a wealthy bourgeois, in love with Henriette, "the thorough woman," by whom he is beloved. Her elder sister Armande also loves him.

Clive, Kitty. Née Catherine Raftor (1801-1873). British comedy actress of Irish extraction. Played for Colley Cibber at Drury Lane. Married a relative of Robert CLIVE. An original member of Garrick's Drury Lane Company (1746-1769).

Clive, Robert. Baron Clive of Plassey (1725-1774). Founder of the empire of British India. Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Bengal (1764). Obtained for East India Company sovereignty over whole province. On return to England (1767) met storm of obloquy and inquiries into his actions and committed suicide.

cloak-and-sword plays. Swashbuckling plays, full of fighting and adventure. The name comes from the Spanish comedies of the 16th century dramatists, Lope de Vega and Calderón—the comedia de capa y espada. With them it signified merely a drama of domestic intrigue and was named from the rank of the chief characters, in France—and, through French influence, in England—it was applied as above.

Clockmaker, The. See SLICK, SAM.

Clod and the Pebble, The. Short mystical lyric by William BLAKE, occurring in Songs of Experience.

Cloe, see CHLOE.

Cloete, Stuart (1897-). South African novelist. Born in Paris, educated in England, "half ex-Coldstream Guards officer and half Dutch ex-farmer." His The Turning Wheels (1937) was highly successful.

Cloelia. A maiden in Roman legend who was given as a hostage to Porsena and escaped by swimming the Tiber.

Cloister and the Hearth, The. A historical novel by Charles Reade (1861). The action takes place on the Continent in the latter years of the 15th century; and among the historical characters of note introduced are Froissart, Gringoire, Deschamps, Luther, Villon and the child Erasmus. The interest centers in the love story of Erasmus' parents—Gerard, a talented young writer, and the red-haired Margaret, daughter of Peter Brandt. A forged letter convinces Gerard of Margaret's death and he becomes a monk, but after many misadventures, the pair meet again at last.

Cloisters, The. See BARNARD, GEORGE GREY.

Clonbrony, Lord and Lady. The chief characters in Maria Edgeworth's ABSENTEE.

Clongowes Wood College. In A PORTRAIT OF THE ARTIST AS A YOUNG MAN by James JOYCE, an Irish Jesuit school attended by Stephen DEDALUS as a boy.

Cloutie, Auld, see AULD HORNIE.

Clorinda. The pagan heroine whose praises are sung in Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED, daughter of Senapus of Ethiopia, a Christian. Because she was born white, her mother changes her for a black child. The eunuch Arsetes is entrusted with the infant Clorinda, and as he is going through a forest, he sees a tiger, drops the child, and seeks safety in a tree. The tiger takes the babe and suckles it, after which the eunuch carries the child to Egypt. In the siege of Jerusalem by the Crusaders, Clorinda is a leader of the pagan forces. TANCRED falls in love with her, but slays her unknowingly in a night attack. Before she expires she receives Christian baptism at the hands of Tancred, who greatly mourns her death.

Clorinda Walks in Heaven. See COPPARD, ALFRED EDGAR.

Cloten. In Shakespeare's CYMBELINE, a vindictive lout, son of the second wife of Cymbeline by a former husband. He is noted for "his unmeaning frown, his shuffling gait, his burst of voice, his bustling insignificance, his fever-and-ague fits of valor, his froward tetchiness, his unprincipled malice, and occasional gleams of good sense." Cloten is the rejected lover of Imogen.

Clotho (Gr. klôtho, to draw thread from a distaff.). One of the Three Fates in classic mythology. She presided over birth, and drew from her distaff the thread of life; Atropos presided over death and cut the thread of life; and Lachesis spun the fate of life between birth and death.

Cloud, The. A famous poem by P. B. SHELLEY (1820), in which the cloud recounts its cyclical journey from the sky to the earth and back once more to the sky. It expresses the poet's ideas of resurrection and recurrence and his pantheism.

Cloud-cuckoo-Land (Gr. Nephelo-Coccygia). An idealistic plan to reform the world; any visionary scheme. So called from the city in the clouds in Aristophanes' comedy, THE BIRDS.

Cloudesley, William of, see WILLIAM OF CLOUDESLEY.

Clouds, The. The best-known comedy of Aristophanes (422 B. C.), a satire on Socrates and the Sophists. The young Athenian, Pheidippides, is a caricature of the Alcibiades of history. Under Socrates' instruction he becomes so bereft of common virtues and so adept in proving that black is white that his irate father sets fire to Socrates' house.

Clouet. Family of Flemish-French painters of the 15th and 16th centuries.

Clough, Arthur Hugh (1819-1861). English poet, known for the expression of his melancholy and his religious conflicts in his works. These include The Bothie of Tober-na-Vuolich (1848), a love story written in hexameter verse; Amours de Voyage, written in 1849 and published in 1858; Mani Magno, written in 1849 and published in 1862, a series of narratives in verse; and Dipsychus, written in 1849 and published in 1862 also, a series of dialogues between a Faustian hero and a Satan-like spirit. Matthew ARNOLD, a friend of Clough, wrote the elegy THYRSIS (1866) in his memory.

Clovis Ger. Chlodwig (d. 511 A. D.). King of the Salian Franks, who after his succession in 481 A. D. led his people in a series of systematic conquests and migrations until they occupied the remainder of the Roman Empire in Gaul and the territory of other German tribes, including the Alemanni and the Visigoths. Clovis was converted to the orthodox Christianity of the Western Church and ordered all his people baptized as well, thus securing the important co-operation of the clergy. The Frankish kingdom of Clovis, who has been called the greatest figure in political history between CAESAR and CHARLEMAGNE, is considered to be the foundation of modern Western Europe. The dynasty lasted until 751.

Clout, Colin, see COLIN CLOUT.

Clown's House. See SITWELL, EDITH.

Club of Queer Trades, The by Gilbert K. CHESTERTON.

Cluny. A Benedictine monastery founded in Burgundy in 910 by William, Count of Auvergne and Duke of Aquitaine. It became the center of monastic reform, assuming a centralized control over old monasteries and founding new, subordinate houses, enforcing celibacy among the monks and secular clergy, and insisting that the power to appoint members of the clergy be in the hands of ecclesiastical authorities rather than of kings and feudal lords. After 1046, Cluniac reform was handled by Hildebrand, later Pope GREGORY VII.

cluricaune. In Irish folklore, an elf, particularly one guarding secret treasures.

Clutterbuck, Captain. The hypothetical editor of some of Sir Walter Scott's novels, as The Monastery and The Fortunes of Nigel. Captain Clutterbuck is a retired officer, who employs himself in antiquarian researches, idle literary pursuits. THE ABBOT is dedicated by the "author of Waverley" to "Captain Clutterbuck," late of His Majesty's — infantry regiment.

Clutton-Brock, Arthur (1868–1924). English essayist and critic. Known particularly for his studies of SHELLEY and William MORRIS. Became a FABIAN Socialist in 1909.

Clymene. In Greek mythology, the daughter of Oceanus, mother of Atlas and Prometheus.

Clym of the Clough. A noted archer and outlaw, supposed to have lived shortly before Robin Hood, who, with Adam BELL and William of Cloudesly, forms the subject of one of the ballads in Percy's Reliques. The three became as famous in the north of England as Robin Hood and Little John in the midland counties. Their place of resort was in Englewood Forest, near Carlisle. Clym of the Clough means Clement of the Cliff. He is mentioned in Ben Jonson's Alchemist (I. ii. 46).

Clytemnestra. In Greek legend, the wife of AGAMEMNON, whom she and her paramour Aegisthus murders after his return from Troy. She is slain by her son ORESTES.

Clytie. In classical mythology, an ocean nymph, in love with Apollo. Meeting with no return, she was changed into the heliotrope, or sunflower, which, traditionally, still turns to the sun, following him through his daily course.

coalition government. A government formed by various parties by a mutual surrender of principles; such as the Ministry of the Duke of Portland which included Lord North and Fox in 1783, and fell to pieces in a few months, and that of Lord Salisbury with the old Whig Party headed by Lord Hartington in 1886. The most famous Coalition in British history, however, is that formed in May, 1915, by Mr. Asquith, when Mr. Bonar Law with the Unionist and Conservative parties joined the Liberals—the whole being under Mr. Asquith—for the better conduct of World War I which had then been in progress for nearly ten months. In spite of a General Election at the end of the War in 1918 and many changes of Government—Mr. Lloyd coals.

George succeeded Mr. Asquith as Premier in December, 1916—the Coalition lasted till October, 1922.

carry coals to Newcastle. To do what is superfluous; to take something where it is already plentiful. Newcastle, of course, is a great coal port. The French say, "porter de l'eau à la rivière" (to carry water to the river). There are a great many phrases expressing this same idea, as, to carry owls to Athens, teach fishes to swim, kill the slain, teach one's grandmother to suck eggs, etc.

heap coals of fire on one's head. To melt down his animosity by deeds of kindness; to repay bad treatment with good. (Prov. xxv. 21, 22).

coalsack. One of the black spaces in the Milky Way.

coaster. A coasting vessel. Cf. "The Coasters," a poem by Thomas Fleming Day in E. C. Stedman's American Anthology.

Coates, Robert Myron (1897–). Author of The Eater of Darkness, the first Dada novel in English. His The Outlaw Years is valuable Americana. Associated with The New Yorker as art critic.

Coatsworth, Elizabeth (1893–). American poet and juvenile writer. Her poetry is vivid, her children's books popular.

Cobb, Humphrey (1899–1944). American novelist known for his Paths of Glory (1935), one of the post-war novels of the school of Remarque, later made into a successful play by Sidney Howard.

Cobb, Irvin Shrewsbury (1876–1944). American humorist, journalist, and short-story writer. He was on the staffs of the New York Sun and the New York World. His books, a number of which are collections of local-color stories of Kentucky, include Back Home (1912); Old Judge Priest (1915) (see PRIEST, JUDGE); Speaking of Operations (1916); The Thunders of Silence (1918); Snake Doctor (1923); Ladies and Gentlemen (1927); To Be Taken Before Sailing (1930); Faith, Hope, and Charity (1934); Judge Priest Turns Detective (1937); Exit Laughing (1941), an autobiography.

Cobb, Ty (Tyrus Raymond) (1886–). American professional baseball player. Detroit (1904–1926); Philadelphia (1926–1930).

Cobbett, William (1762–1835). English author and journalist, best known for his pro-British pamphlets, written in the U.S. under the pseudonym of Peter Porcupine, and his newspaper, Cobbett's Political Register, published in England beginning in 1802. He was later an M.P. and wrote a number of books, including Rural Rides (1830), descriptions of life and agricultural conditions in the English countryside. Cobbett was attacked by Matthew CAREY for his criticisms of America.

Cobden, Richard (1804–1865). English statesman and economist, known as the Apostle of Free Trade. Attacked doctrine of balance of power in Europe. With John Bright a leader of national Anti-Corn-Law League (1838–1846). See CORN LAWS. Shared unpopularity with Bright for opposing Crimean War. Came out in favor of the North in American Civil War.

Cobden-Sanderson, Thomas James (1840–1922). English bookbinder and printer. Established, with Emery Walker, the Doves Press. Designed a new font of type. Printed, among other books, an English Bible (1903–1905) and edition of Milton (1905).

Coburn, Charles Douville (1877–). American actor (stage and screen) and manager. Organized the Coburn Players (1906).

Cocagne or Cocaigne, see COCKAIGNE.

Cochet, Henri (1901–). French lawn tennis player. Member of the Davis Cup Team that won (1927) and successfully defended the cup (1928–1930). Professional since 1933.

Cochran, Jacqueline. Well-known American aviatrix. Winner of Bendix Transcontinental Air Race (1938) and holder of national and international speed records. Also businesswoman running a chain of beauty parlors and a cosmetics factory.

cock.

cock of the walk. The dominant bully or master spirit. The place where barndoor fowls are fed is the walk, and if there is more than one cock they will fight for the supremacy of this domain.

cock-and-bull story. A far-fetched tale with little foundation in fact. The derivation is obscure.

Cockade State. Maryland. See under STATES.

Cockaigne, The Land of. An imaginary land of pleasure, wealth, luxury, and idleness. London is so called, and Boileau applies the word to Paris. This mythical Utopia (spelled also Cokayne and Cocagne) was the subject of many mock-serious poems of the Middle Ages. According to a typical account of the 13th century, the houses were made of barley-sugar and cakes, the streets were paved with pastry, and the shops supplied goods without requiring money in payment. James Branch CABELL makes JURGEN visit Cocaigne in his satiric romance Jurgen and describes it as a land of curious delights, presided over by Anaitis.

cockatrice. A fabulous and heraldic monster with the wings of a fowl, tail of a dragon, and head of a cock. It was so called because it was said to be produced from a cock's egg hatched by a serpent. According to legend, the very look of this monster would cause instant death. In consequence of the crest with which the head is crowned, the creature is called a BASILISK. Isaiah says, "The weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den" (xi, 8), to signify that the most obnoxious animal should not hurt the most feeble of God's creatures.

Figuratively, it means an insidious, treacherous person bent on mischief.

They will kill one another by the look, like cockatrices.

Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, 111 4.

Cock Lane ghost. A tale of terror without truth; an imaginary tale of horrors. In Cock Lane, Smithfield (1762), certain knockings were heard, which Mr. Parsons, the owner, declared proceeded from the ghost of Fanny Kent, who died suddenly, and Parsons wished people to suppose that she had been murdered by her husband. All London was agog with this story; but it was found out that the knockings were produced by Parsons' daughter (a girl twelve years of age) rapping on a board which she took into her bed. Parsons was condemned to stand in the pillory. Cf. Dr. Johnson's account in Gentleman's Magazine, vol. xxxii, pp. 43 and 81.

Cock Lorel or Cocklorel. Titular hero of the saurical poem Cocke Lorelles Bote (ca. 1515) which tells the story of a ship filled with merry renegades and rascals. The poem is one of many imitations of Sebastian BRANT's Narrenschiff (SHIP OF FOOLS, 1494).

cockney. The origin of this word is obscure. The most picturesque explanation which deserves to be preserved runs as follows. Cockney is the M.E. cokeney, meaning "a cock's egg"; -ey = A.S. aeg, an egg. This is a small egg with no yolk that is occasionally laid by hens; hence it was applied originally to a foolish, spoiled, cockered child:

I made thee a wanton and thou hast made me a fool, I brought thee up like a cockney and thou hast handled me like a cock's-comb, I made more of thee than became a father and thou less of me than seemed a child.

Lyly, Euphues (1578).

From this the word came to signify a foolish or effeminate person; hence, by the country-dwellers—the majority of the population—it was applied to townsmen generally, and finally became restricted to its present meaning, one born within sound of Bow Bells, London; one possessing London peculiarities of speech, etc.; one who, hence, is—or is supposed to be—wholly ignorant of country sports, country life, farm animals, plants, and so on.

As Frenchmen love to be bold, Flemings to be drunk, Welchmen to be called Britons, and Irishmen to be costermongers; so cockneys, especially she cockneys, love not aqua-vitae when 'tis good for them. Dekker Webster, Westward Hoe, II, II. (1607).

Shakespeare uses the word for a squeamish woman:

Cry to it, nuncle, as the cockney did to the eels, when she put them into the paste alive—King Lear, II, 4.

Cockney School. A nickname given by Lockhart (see quotation below) to the group of writers including Leigh HUNT, HAZLITT, SHELLEY, and KEATS, most of whom were Londoners or lived in London. Lockhart was a strong partisan of the LAKE SCHOOL and had great animosity against writers with other aims or principles. Hunt he called "the Cockney Homer," Hazlitt "the Cockney Aristotle," and Haydon "the Cockney Raphael."

If I may be permitted to have the honour of christening it, it may be henceforth referred to by the designation of the "Cockney School"—Lockhart, Blackwood's Magazine, Oct., 1817.

king of cockneys. A master of the revels chosen by students of Lincoln's Inn on Christmas Day (December 28).

Cockpit of Europe. Belgium has for long been so called because it has been the site of more European battles than any other country. From cockpit in the sense of "pit for fighting cocks."

Cock Robin. The hero of a nursery rhyme beginning, "Who killed Cock Robin?"

Cockton, Henry (1807–1853). English humorist. His novels include Valentine Vox, the Ventriloquist (1840), and Sylvester Sound, the Somnambulist (1844).

Cocles, Horatius, see HORATIUS COCLES.

Cocteau, Jean (1891–). French poet, playwright, and novelist, known for his iconoclastic writings and conduct and his association with the movement of SURREALISM. His works include Discours du grand sommeil, poems of World War I; Poésies (1920); Plainchant (1923); Le Rappel à l'ordre (1926), essays; Grand écart (1925), Thomas the Impostor (1925), and Enfants terribles (1930), novels; Parade, Les Mariés de la Tour Eiffel, and Le Bœuf sur le toit, ballets; La Machine infernale (The Infernal Machine, 1936), a play. Cocteau served as the literary spokesman for the group of musicians known as "Les Six" ("The Six"). Le Sang d'un poète (The Blood of a Poet, 1932) is a Surrealist motion picture written and produced by Cocteau.

Cocytus. One of the five rivers of hell in Greek mythology. The word means the "river of lamentation." The unburied were doomed to wander about its banks for 100 years. It flows into the river Acheron.

coda. In music, a concluding, rounding-out passage, the use of which was extended by BEETHOVEN. The word is Italian and means "tail."

Code Napoléon. The French law as embodied in the "Five Codes" (enacted 1804 to 1810), or, more commonly, the Code Civil des Français (enacted 1804). It was enforced in the conquered countries, and traces of it are found in the modern laws of Belgium, the Netherlands, Spain, Switzerland, Quebec, Louisiana, South America.

Cody, William Frederick, see BUFFALO BILL.

Coelebs' Wife. A bachelor's ideal of a model wife. Coelebs is the hero of a novel by Mrs. Hannah More, entitled Coelebs in Search of a Wife (1809).

Coelum Britannicum. Masque by CAREW.

Cœur de Lion. (1) Richard I of England (1157–1199). So called from the prodigies of personal valor performed by him in the Holy Land.

(2) Louis VIII of France (1187–1226). Also called le Lion.

Coffee Cantata. See CANTATA.

Coffin, Long Tom. A famous sailor in Cooper's sea novel, THE PILOT. Of Nantucket origin, Long Tom loves the sea with passionate devotion and hates land as passionately. As an ex-whaler he flourishes a harpoon even on board a man-of-war. His simple, hardy virtues and his thorough professional skill have caused him to be regarded as a Leatherstocking of the sea, and he rivals the famous scout for first place in popularity among Cooper's characters.

Coffin, Robert Peter Tristram (1892–). American poet. Pulitzer prize for Poetry (1936) for Strange Holiness. Also a biographer with Laud (1930) and The Dukes of Buckingham (1931). Lecturer and essayist. Collected Poems (1939) with a preface on poetry.

Coghlan, Rose (1853–1932). English-born American actress. Leading lady in Wallack's company (1880–1889).

cogito ergo sum. The axiom formulated by DESCARTES as the starting-place of his system of philosophy. It means "I think, therefore I exist." Descartes, at the beginning, provisionally doubted everything, but he could not doubt the existence of the ego, for the mere fact that I doubt presupposes the existence of the I; in other words, the doubt could not exist without the I. The phrase lends itself to adaptation and parody: dubito ergo sum ("I doubt, therefore I exist"); I sneeze, therefore I exist; etc.

Cohan, George Michael (1878–1942). American actor, playwright, producer and composer of popular songs, notably Over There. The "Yankee Doodle Boy," because of his song "I'm a Yankee Doodle Dandy." Also a serious and charming playwright in Pigeons and People. A huge popular success in musical comedy. James Cagney has acted in the biographical moving picture made of his life.

Cohen, Bella. In James Joyce's ULYSSES, the proprietress of a Dublin house of prostitution which is visited near the climax of the novel by STEPHEN DEDALUS and to which LEOPOLD BLOOM also comes in order to protect Stephen. Bella Cohen corresponds to CIRCE in the Homeric legend, because under her influence men are turned into swine. It is at her establishment that the famous "witches' sab-bath" episode of the novel takes place.

Cohen, Mirah. In George Eliot's DANIEL DERONDA, the beautiful Jewess whom Deronda marries. She is also known as Mirah Lapidoth.

Mordecai Cohen. Mirah's lost brother Ezra; an idealistic Jew, on fire with plans for the advancement of the race. The character is said to have been drawn from a Jewish journeyman watchmaker named Cohn or Kohn.

A man steeped in poverty and obscurity, weakened by disease, consciously within the shadow of advancing death, but living an intense life in an invisible past and future, careless of his personal lot, except for its possibly making some obstruction to a conceived good which he would never share except as a brief inward vision—a day afar off, whose sun would never warm him, but into which he threw his soul's desire, with a passion often wanting to the personal motives of healthy youth—Ch. xliii.

Cohen, Morris Raphael (1880–1947). American philosopher. Reason and Nature (1931), Law and the Social Order (1933), An Introduction to Logic and Scientific Method (1934). Harold J. Laski called him "the most penetrating and creative United States philosopher since William James."

Cohen, Octavus Roy (1891–). Writer of popular detective fiction and Negro stories that created the characters of Florian Slappey and Epic Peters.

Coignard, Jerome. An irreverent, licentious abbé, who is nevertheless something of the philosopher and saint. He is the chief character in Anatole France's novels At the Sign of the Reine Pédauque (La Rôtisserie de la Reine Pédauque) (1893) and its sequel, The Opinions of Monsieur Jerome Coignard. Coignard is one of France's most popular characters and is said to be a mouthpiece for many of the author's opinions.

Coke, Sir Edward (1552–1634). Famous English jurist. Best known for his four Institutes (1628–1644). The first of these is currently called Coke upon Littleton.

Cokes or Cook's Tale. In Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES. See GAMELYN.

Colas Breugnon, Burgundian. A romance of 16th century Burgundy by Romain Rolland (Fr. 1919). The hero and supposed narrator is an old craftsman, who indulges in delightful reminiscences.

Colbert, Jean Baptiste (1619–1683). French statesman. Made controller general of finance by Louis XIV (1665). A great financial reformer. Because of his coldness of temperament Mme de Sévigné called him le Nord. Patron of men of letters and academies.

Colby, Frank Moore (1865–1925). American essayist. The Colby Essays were edited by Clarence Day, Jr. after his death.

Colcord, Lincoln Ross (1883–1947). American poet and author of sea stories. Born aboard ship, off Cape Horn. Collaborated with O. E. Rølvaag in translating the latter's Giants in the Earth (1927).

Cole, George Douglas Howard (1880–). English economist of socialist leanings and, in collaboration with his wife, writer of numerous detective stories. Author of a series of studies, from World of Labour (1913) to Socialism in Evolution (1938). He also has written a life of William Cobbett.

Cole, King, see KING COLE.

Cole, Timothy (1852–1931). British-born American wood engraver. Employed by Scribner's Magazine from 1875 and its successor the Century Magazine. Sent to Europe to engrave old masters. After his return, continued the same sort of work in American collections.

Coleridge, Samuel Taylor (1772–1834). English poet, essayist, and literary critic, known for the brilliance of his intellect and his great, if never fully realized, talent, which was defeated by his procrastinating nature and his addiction to opium. He was an early crusader for UNITARIANISM, and was associated with Robert SOUTHEY in plans for the PANTISOCRACY settlement and with William WORDSWORTH in the publication of LYRICAL BALLADS. He also became a keen student of German philosophy and literature, lectured extensively, was a brilliant conversationalist, and was interested in a wide variety of subjects, including politics, the drama, and the history of the Christian religion. His most famous poems are The Rime of the ANCIENT MARINER, published in LYRICAL BALLADS (1798), and the fragments CHRISTABEL and KUBLA KHAN, written in 1797 and 1800, and in 1798, respectively. In the realm of literary criticism, in which no other prose writer of the English Romantic period was a significant rival, his best-known work is BIOGRAPHIA LITERARIA (1817). Among his other works are The Fall of Robespierre (1794), Zapolya (1817), Osorio (ca. 1798, performed as Remorse in 1813), all plays; Lay Sermons (1816); and Aids to Reflection (1825). Well-known minor poems include France: An Ode (1798); Ode to Dejection (1802); and Youth and Age (1828–1832). Coleridge's three greatest poems, which are sharply different from his others in conception, imagery, style, and versification, are marked by subtlety of meter, imagination, powerfully evocative qualities of mystery and the supernatural, and a sophistication of symbolism not generally found in poetry until much later. His prose is distinguished by its accomplishments in metaphysics, psychology, and aesthetics beyond the usual attainments of the time. For a study of the operation of Coleridge's imagination on the source-materials of The Rime of the Ancient Mariner and Kubla Khan, consult The Road to Xanadu, by J. L. Lowes.

Coleridge-Taylor, Samuel (1875-1912). English composer. Won acclaim with his choral work in the trilogy, Hiawatha's Wedding Feast (1898), in Death of Minnehaha (1899), and A Tale of Old Japan (1911).

Colet, John (1467?-1519). English scholar and theologian. Accompanied Erasmus on his pilgrimage to Canterbury (1514). Dean of St. Paul's 1504-1519.

Colette. Pen-name of Sidonie Gabrielle Claudine Colette (1873-). French writer of semi-autobiographical stories, the main character being Claudine. Has also written short stories, essays, and a few plays.

Colette Baudoche. See BARRÈS, MAURICE.

Coligny, Gaspard de (1519-1572). Admiral of France and, after his conversion to Protestantism, leader of the Huguenots. Killed in the Massacre of St. Bartholomew (1572). His brothers, cardinal Odet de Coligny (1517-1571) and François de Coligny (1521-1569), also broke with the Church of Rome, but both died a natural death.

Colin Clout. A name which Spenser assumes in THE SHEPHERD'S CALENDAR, and in other pastoral poems, particularly Colin Clout's Come Home Again, which represents his return from a visit to England (1589-1591) to Sir Walter Raleigh, "the Shepherd of the Ocean" and allegorically praises Queen Elizabeth and attacks the intrigues at her court. SKELTON previously (about 1520) used the name as the title of a satire directed against the abuses of the Church.

Colin Tampon. See NICKNAMES OF NATIONALITIES.

Collar, The. Famous religious poem by George HERBERT (1633), in which an ox-yoke is used as a symbol of spiritual authority and restraint and obedience to God.

Collean, May. The heroine of a Scotch ballad, which relates how "fause Sir John" carried her to a rock for the purpose of throwing her down into the sea; but May outwitted him, and subjected him to the fate he had designed for her.

Colleen Bawn, The. See BOUCICAULT, DION.

Collegians, The. An Irish novel by Gerald Griffin.

Colleoni, Bartolommeo (1400-1475). Venetian soldier. Foremost tactician of the 15th century.

Collier, Jeremy (1650-1726). English clergyman, known for his Short View of the Immorality and Profaneness of the English Stage (1698), an attack on the license of the Restoration drama.

Collier, John (1901-). His first book, a fantastic novel, His Monkey Wife, is a frivolous masterpiece. His short stories are unrivaled in the fantastic vein. His early verse received This Quarter's prize for English poetry in 1922.

Collier, John Payne (1789-1833). English Critic. Brought out texts of Shakespeare based on forged marginal corrections but was exposed in 1859. Editor of Spenser's works (1862) and compiler of a critical bibliography of the rarest English books (1865).

Collier, Old Cap. A character of dime-novel fame. The Old Cap Collier Library was published by the house of Munro during the latter part of the 19th century. Irvin S. Cobb wrote, in the Captain's defense, A Plea for Old Cap Collier (1921), a sketch of the dime novel.

Collier, William (Willie) (1866-1944). American comedian and playwright. Very popular in his day.

Collin, Jacques. The most consummate villain and criminal of Balzac's COMÉDIE HUMAINE, playing a part in many of the novels. In Father Goriot (Le Père Goriot; see GORIOT), under the name and disguise of Vautrin he makes love to the landlady whose cheap scanty fare he eats, until the spiteful Mlle. Michonneau gives him up to the police. He appears in Scenes from a Courtesan's Life (Les Splendeurs et misères des courtisanes) and The Last Incarnation of Vautrin (La Dernière incarnation de Vautrin) as a Spanish priest and philosopher. In this guise he befriends the discouraged Lucien de Rubempré and makes use of Lucien's love affair with Esther Van Gobseck to secure money from Esther's wealthy admirer, Nucingen. Finally both Lucien and Collin are given over to justice, but Collin, by placing his knowledge of the criminal world at the service of the police, wins for himself safety.

Collins, Michael (1890-1922). Irish revolutionary leader. Commander of the army of the Irish Free State and minister of finance in the Sinn Féin ministry. Killed in the civil war of 1922.

Collins, Mr. In Jane Austen's PRIDE AND PREJUDICE, a self-important clergyman, very much the toady and the prig. Elizabeth Bennet refuses him, and he marries Charlotte Lucas. A "bread and butter letter" is sometimes called a Collins, from him.

Collins, William (1721-1759). English poet, one of the pre-Romantics of the 18th century. He wrote only a small quantity of poetry, consisting chiefly of odes on nature subjects in a quiet, melancholy vein, distinguished by their smoothness and their skillful use of sound-effects. His best-known poems are Ode to Evening (1746); How Sleep the Brave (1746); and a dirge for Shakespeare's Cymbeline (1744). Others are Ode to Simplicity (1746); The Passions: An Ode for Music (1746); Ode to Fear; On the Poetical Character, On the Popular Superstitions of the Highlands (1749). All his life Collins suffered from poverty and illness, and he was insane before his death.

Collins, William Wilkie (1824-1889). English novelist, best known as the author of THE WOMAN IN WHITE (1860) and THE MOONSTONE (1868). He wrote numerous other works similar to these two, and is considered by some to have been the first English author of bona fide "detective" and "mystery" novels. Collins and Charles DICKENS collaborated on several stories for periodicals of the time.

Colloquy on the Occupations. A Latin work by AELFRIC in the form of a dialogue between master and pupil and consisting of questions and answers on the trades and occupations of Anglo-Saxon England.

cologne, cologne water, eau de cologne. Perfumed toilet water, originally made in Cologne. The most famous brands are "4711" (read: forty-seven eleven) and "Johanna Maria Farina." The former got its name from the number of the house (before street names were in general use) in which it was manufactured; the latter from its Italian originator.

Cologne. French name of the German city of Koln. Founded by the Romans as Colonia Agrippina in honor of a wife of Claudius (50 A.D.).

the three kings of Cologne. The three Wise Men of the East, the MAGI, Gaspar, Melchior, and Balthazar, whose bones, according to tradition, were deposited in Cologne Cathedral.

Colombe's Birthday. See BROWNING, ROBERT.

Colonel Carter of Cartersville. A novel of Southern life by F. Hopkinson Smith (Am. 1891). Colonel Carter is a typical Virginia gentleman of the old school. A dramatic version won popular favor in 1892 and he reappeared in Colonel Carter's Christmas (1903).

Colonel Jack. See DEFOE, DANIEL.

Colonna, Guido. The Pisan commander, husband of MONNA VANNA in Maeterlinck's drama of that name.

colophon. The end of a book; the statement containing information about the date, place, printer, and edition which, in the early days of printing, was given at the end of the book but which now appears on the title page. It is derived from Gr. kolophon, the top or summit, a word which, according to Strabo, is from Colophon, a city of Ionia, the inhabitants of which were such excellent horsemen that they would turn the scale of battle to the side on which they fought. The Colophon (1928-1940; 1948-) is an American literary quarterly.

Color.

complementary colors. Colors which, in combination, produce white light. Red and green, orange and blue, violet and yellow are complementary.

The color transmitted is always complementary to the one reflected—Brewster, Optics, xii.

fundamental colors. The seven colors of the spectrum: violet, indigo, blue, green, yellow, orange, and red. Or red, yellow, blue, also called primary or simple colors.

secondary colors. Those which result from the mixture of two or more primary or simple colors, such as green, which is a blend of blue and yellow.

national colors:

Great Britain	red, white, and blue.
Argentina	blue and white.
Austria	red; white, and red.
Belgium	black, yellow, and red.
Bolivia	red, yellow, and green.
Brazil	green and yellow.
Bulgaria	white, green, and red
Chile	white, blue, and red.
China	yellow ochre.
Colombia	yellow, blue, and red.
Costa Rica	blue, white, red, white, and blue.
Cuba	five horizontal stripes, blue and white
Denmark	red, with white cross.
Ecuador	three horizontal stripes, yellow, blue, and red, the yellow being twice the width of the others.
France	blue, white and red, vertical stripes.
Germany	black, red and white (Imperial and Third Reich); black, red and gold (Republican).
Greece	nine horizontal stripes, blue and white.
Guatemala	blue, white and blue, vertical stripes.
Hayti	blue and red.
Honduras	blue, white, and blue, horizontal stripes.
Irish Free State	orange, white and green.
Italy	green, white, and red, vertical stripes.
Japan	white, with red disk in center, from which spring sixteen red rays to edge.
Liberia	eleven horizontal stripes, red and white.
Luxemburg	red, white, and blue.
Morocco	red.
Mexico	green, white, and red, vertical stripes.

Monaco	red and white, horizontal.
Netherlands	red, white, and blue, horizontal stripes
Nicaragua	blue, white, and blue, horizontal stripes.
Norway	red, with blue cross bordered with white
Panama	blue, white, red
Paraguay	red, white, blue, in horizontal stripes
Peru	red, white and red, vertical stripes
Persia	white, top edge green, bottom edge red
Portugal	blue and white.
Roumania	blue, yellow, and red, vertical stripes.
Russia	white, with blue St. Andrew's cross.
Salvador	nine horizontal stripes, blue and white
Serbia	red, blue, and white.
Siam	red, with a white elephant.
Sweden	blue, with yellow cross.
Switzerland	red, with white cross.
Turkey	green and red.
Uruguay	nine horizontal stripes, blue and white.
United States	stars on blue, white with red stripes.
Venezuela	yellow, blue, and red, horizontal stripes.

colors in symbolism, ecclesiastical use, etc.

Black:

In blazonry, sable, signifying prudence, wisdom, and constancy; it is engraved by perpendicular and horizontal lines crossing each other at right angles.
In art, signifying evil, falsehood, and error.
In Church decoration it is used for Good Friday.
As a mortuary color, signifying grief, despair, death. (In the Catholic Church violet may be substituted for black.)
In metals it is represented by lead.
In precious stones it is represented by the diamond.
In planets it stands for Saturn.

Blue:

Hope, love of divine works; (in dresses) divine contemplation, piety, sincerity.
In blazonry, azure, signifying chastity, loyalty, fidelity; it is engraved by horizontal lines.
In art (as an angel's robe) it signifies fidelity and faith (as the robe of the Virgin Mary), modesty and (in the Catholic Church) humility and exaltation.
In Church decoration, blue and green are used indifferently for ordinary Sundays, and blue for all weekdays after Trinity Sunday.
As a mortuary color it signifies eternity (applied to Deity), immortality (applied to man).
In metals it is represented by tin.
In precious stones it is represented by sapphire.
In planets it stands for Jupiter.

Pale Blue:

Peace, Christian prudence, love of good works, a serene conscience.

Green:

Faith, gladness, immortality, the resurrection of the just; (in dresses) the gladness of the faithful.
In blazonry, vert, signifying love, joy, abundance; it is engraved from left to right.
In art, signifying hope, joy, youth, spring (among the Greeks; and Moses it signifies victory).
In Church decoration it signifies God's bounty, mirth, gladness, the resurrection, and is used indifferently with blue for ordinary Sundays.
In metals it is represented by copper.
In precious stones it is represented by the emerald.
In planets it stands for Venus.

Pale Green:

Baptism.

Purple:

Justice, royalty.
In blazonry, purpure, signifying temperance; it is engraved by lines slanting from right to left.

In art, signifying royalty.

In metals it is represented by quicksilver.

In precious stones it is represented by amethyst.

In planets it stands for Mercury.

Red:

Martyrdom for faith, charity; (in dresses) divine love

In blazonry, gules, blood-red is called sanguine. The former signifies magnanimity and the latter fortitude; it is engraved by perpendicular lines.

In Church decorations it is used for martyrs, for Ash Wednesday, for the last three days of Holy Week, and for Whit Sunday

Colosseum. The great Flavian amphitheater of ancient Rome, said to be so named from the colossal statue of Nero that stood close by in the Via Sacra. It was begun by Vespasian in 72 A. D., and, for 400 years, was the scene of the gladiatorial contests. The ruins remaining are still colossal and extensive, but quite two-thirds of the original building have been taken away at different times and used for building material.

Byron, adapting the exclamation of the 8th-century pilgrims (and adopting a bad spelling), says:

While stands the Coliseum, Rome shall stand;
 When falls the Coliseum, Rome shall fall;
 And when Rome falls—the world

Childe Harold, IV. cxlv.

The name has since been applied to other amphitheaters and places of amusement.

Colossians, Epistle to the. One of the books of the New Testament, written by "Paul the apostle" to the people of Colossae, in Asia Minor, during his imprisonment at Rome.

Colossus or Colossos (Lat. and Gr. a gigantic statue). The Colossus of Rhodes, completed probably about 280 B. C., was a representation of the sun-god, Helios, and commemorated the successful defense of Rhodes against Demetrius Poliorcetes in 304 B. C. It was one of the Seven Wonders of the World; it stood 105 feet high, and is said to have been made from the warlike engines abandoned by Demetrius by the Rhodian sculptor Chares, a pupil of Lysippus. The story that it was built striding across the harbor and that ships could pass in full sail between its legs, rose in the 16th century. There is nothing to support it; neither Strabo nor Pliny makes mention of it, though both describe the statue minutely.

Colossus of Maroussi, The. See MILLER, HENRY.

Colton, Arthur Willis (1868-1943). American poet and story writer. The Delectable Mountains (1901); The Belted Seas (1905); Harps Hung Up in Babylon (1907), poems. Colton's fine qualities as a writer have been too little appreciated.

Colum, Mary Gunning (Maguire). Irish-American literary critic and writer of short stories. Wife of Padraic COLUM. From These Roots (1937) traces the historical background of modern criticism. Life and the Dream (1947) is her distinguished and fascinating autobiography.

Colum, Padraic (1881–). Irish writer, associated as playwright with the IRISH RENAISSANCE and the Irish National Theater, in company with A. E., W. B. YEATS, and Lady GREGORY. His works include Wild Earth (1907), poems; The Boy Who Knew What the Birds Said (1918); Dramatic Legends And Other Poems (1922); Castle Conquer (1923); Balloon (1929), a comedy; The Big Tree of Bunnahy (1933), stories; The Story of Lowry Maen (1937), a narrative poem; and numerous books on travel and folklore.

Columban, St. (543–615). Irish missionary.

Columbia. (1) A poetic name for America, or for the United States of America, from Christopher Columbus, the discoverer of the New World. It is in common use in patriotic songs and pageants. Columbia is usually personified as a woman in white flowing garments, draped with an American flag.

(2) An American revolutionary poem by Timothy DWIGHT, published in 1777. It hails the coming greatness of the U.S. and is considered to be Dwight's best work.

Columbiad, The. An epic poem (1807) by Joel BARLOW first published in briefer form as The Vision of Columbus (1787) and of interest chiefly as a specimen of early American literature. Columbus is taken by Hesper, the spirit of the Western World, to the Mount of Vision and there foresees the history of the North American continent up to the times of the poet.

Columbian Magazine. One of the first two successful magazines in the U.S., founded in 1786 by a group of editors that included Matthew CAREY. It was published until 1792, although its title was changed in 1790. Fiction; mechanical and agricultural subjects.

Columbine. A stock character in old Italian comedy, where she first appeared about 1560 and thence was transplanted to English pantomime. She is the daughter of PANTALON, and the sweetheart of HARLEQUIN, and, like him, is supposed to be invisible to mortal eyes. Columbina in Italian is a pet name for a ladylove, and means dove-like. See also PIERROT.

Columbus Day. October 12, an American holiday in commemoration of the discovery of America, October 12, 1492.

column or (humorously) colyum. A popular newspaper feature which became something of an American institution in the period between World Wars I and II. It appears daily and contains a heterogeneous mixture of prose and poetry, humor and satire, gossip and prediction, narrative and comment, much of the material being supplied by contributors. See ADAMS, FRANKLIN PIERCE; BROUN, HEYWOOD CAMPBELL; WINCHELL, WALTER. Many well-known humorous characters were created by American columnists, notably DULCY, ARCHY THE COCKROACH, HERMIONE, and the OLD SOAK.

Colvin, Sir Sidney (1845–1927). British critic of art and literature. Friend of Robert Louis Stevenson. Keeper of department of prints, British Museum (1884–1912). Edited Stevenson's letters to him from Samoa as Vailima Letters (1895). His John Keats, His Life and Poetry (1917) is authoritative.

Combe, William, see DR. SYNTAX.

Combray. In Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, a French village where the narrator, Marcel, spent his childhood, and where the country homes of his mother, Charles SWANN, and the de GUERMANTES family are located. It plays a prominent part in Marcel's memories of the past.

Comédie Française. French national theater in Paris. Founded in 1681 by the union of several theatrical companies—MOLIÈRE's among them—; renamed Théâtre Français in 1791.

Comédie humaine, La (The Human Comedy). The name given (1841) by Honoré de BALZAC to his great project of representing in his novels a complete social history of France in his own day through the portrayal, in separate panels, of the lives of typical individuals of the various classes. In the preface of The Cat and the Racket Balzac discusses the scope of the Comédie humaine. It comprises three main divisions, Studies of Manners, Studies of Philosophy, and Studies of Marriage. The first group subdivided into Scenes of Private Life, of Provincial Life, of Parisian Life, of Country Life, of Political Life, and of Military Life. Some of the projected novels were not completed, but there are no less than ninety-two in the series as it stands today. Some of the best-known titles include Les Chouans (The Chouans, 1829), the first of the series; Eugénie Grandet, 1833; Le Père GORIOT (Father Goriot, 1834); La Recherche de l'absolu (The Quest of the Absolute) (see CLAËS); César BIROTTEAU (1837); Illusions perdues (Lost Illusions); Le Médecin de campagne (The Country Doctor); Le Curé de village (The Village Priest, 1837); Le Cousin PONS (Cousin Pons, 1847); LA COUSINE BETTE (Cousin Betty, 1847). Many characters appear in several works.

La Comédie humaine is considered the first work of Realism in French literature, and had tremendous influence upon French novelists of the 19th and 20th centuries, from the GONcourt brothers down to Marcel Proust and Jules ROMAINS.

Comedy of Errors, A. A drama by Shakespeare (ca. 1591). Aemilia, wife of Aegeon, has twin sons, both named Antipholus, who are shipwrecked in infancy and carried, one to Syracuse, the other to Ephesus. The play represents Antipholus of Syracuse going in search of his brother; and to make the confusion of identities more absurd, the brothers each have a slave named Dromio and the Dromios are also indistinguishable twins. Adriana, the wife of the Ephesian, mistakes the Syracusan for her husband and later has her real husband arrested as a madman. Great confusion results, but ultimately the matter is brought into court, and not only do the brothers recognize each other at last, but their mother Aemilia, an abbess in whose priory the Syracusan had taken refuge during the excitement, and their father Aegeon, who had come to Ephesus in search for his son, appear in court and the entire family is reunited. The source of the plot is the Menoechmi of Plautus. THE BOYS FROM SYRACUSE (1938), an American musical comedy, was based on A Comedy of Errors.

Comedy, The Divine, see DIVINE COMEDY.

Comedy, The Human, see COMÉDIE HUMAINE, LA.

Come Hither. An anthology of verse and prose compiled by Walter DE LA MARE.

Come into the Garden, Maud. A well-known lyric from the romance Maud by TENNYSON.

Come out of the Kitchen. A story by Alice Duer MILLER.

Comfort, Will Levington (1878-1932). American novelist and war correspondent. Routledge Rides Alone (1910), his best-known novel, based on his experiences during the Russo-Japanese war, was circulated by peace societies as anti-war propaganda.

comic relief. The relaxation of the listener's tension by means of an interpolated comic episode in a serious play. Its function is to permit a stronger renewal of the emotional surge. Best-known example: the grave diggers in HAMLET. Some critics hold that the function of such scenes is not relief but increased tension through senseless and ironical juxtaposition of opposites. "The bitter smile with which we greet the comic interlude is almost the grin of the death's head."—Philo Buck, The Golden Thread.

comic spirit. Invoked by George Meredith as the attitude that regards human problems and complications as conducive to "thoughtful laughter."

comic strip. A strip of drawn panels telling a comic story, entirely without or with a clearly subordinated text. Comic-strip magazines have become very popular. Educators and publishers have begun to investigate the applicability of the comic-strip technic to serious subjects. Cf. Biblical stories in picture continuities, etc.

comic supplement. The cartoon section of an American newspaper, 1900 and thereafter; particularly those series of cartoons (COMIC STRIPS) which present the adventures of certain humorous characters whose story is carried on from day to day. Among the most popular characters of the comic supplement, whose names have been adopted into common speech are BARNEY GOOGLE, BLONDIE, BUSTER BROWN, the GUMPS, Jiggs and Maggie, the KATZENJAMMER KIDS, Little Abner, MUTT AND JEFF, and Moon Mullins. See also TOONERVILLE TROLLEY.

Comines or Commynes, Philippe de (1447?-1511). French chronicler. His Mémoires are a classic of medieval historiography.

Coming of Arthur, The. A narrative on the Arthurian legend (see ARTHUR) included in Tennyson's IDYLLS OF THE KING.

Coming Race, The. A satiric romance by Bulwer LYTTON (1870), in which an American discovers a Utopia inhabited by a strange race of beings called "Vrilya" or "Ana" who are far ahead of mankind in their scientific attainments. They are scornful of democracy, which they call Koombosh, or government of the ignorant.

Coming Struggle for Power, The. Chief work of John STRACHEY, published in 1932 and predicting a close and final conflict between capitalism and Communism, and the doom of capitalism.

Coming through the Rye. A Scottish poem, partly composed or revised by Robert BURNS.

Comintern. The Third or Communist International of Moscow. Officially dissolved May 15, 1943. See also COMMUNISM.

comitatus (Lat., from comes "companion"). Among the early Germanic tribes, a band of warriors gathered about a specific chief to whom they pledged themselves by a personal oath, with whom they lived, and whom they served in battle. This institution had an important influence on later feudalism, especially in the relationship between lord and vassal. The Anglo-Saxon epic BEOWULF contains an excellent illustration. Cf. modern German Gefolgschaft which is a loan translation of comitatus.

comitia and Comitium. In ancient Rome, the comitia were assemblies of the people which had the authority to act on certain matters submitted to them through official channels. They met at the foot of the Capitol at a place called Comitium.

Commander of the Faithful. A title of the Caliphs, first assumed by Omar I. (581, 634-644).

Commandments, the Ten. The Decalogue; the laws given to Moses on tables of stone at Mount Sinai (Ex. xx. 1-18).

commandos. In World War II, British shock troops specially trained for lightning attacks on enemy key positions. The term commando had been in use with about the same meaning in South Africa. It was adapted from Dutch which in turn had taken it from Portuguese.

commedia dell'arte (It., not to be rendered by "art theater" but by "theater of professionals"). Italian comedy as performed by guilds of professional actors who were trained to embroider improvised lines and business on a written plot. The rôles were fairly fixed, representing such typical figures as Pantalone, a Venetian merchant; Pulcinella, a wag of Apulia; Arlecchino, a clown; and so on. The commedia dell'arte flourished from about 1560 to 1625. It influenced the Elizabethan drama. Without it certain features of the modern opera, ballet, musical revue, and circus could not be explained.

Commemoration, Ode recited at the Harvard. Poem by James Russell LOWELL.

Commentaries on the Gallic War. Lat. De bello Gallico. Julius CAESAR's account of his wars in Gaul, written by him in seven books about 51 B. C.

commissar. In Soviet Russia, one of the people's commissars, that is, the head of a governmental department (called commissariat) in one of the republics of the U.S.S.R. Through Arthur Koestler's The Yogi and the Commissar (1945), the term has come to stand for the typical 20th-century man of aggressive efficiency.

Commodus, Lucius Aelius Aurelius (161-192 A.D.). Roman emperor (180-192). Prided himself on his gladiatorial skill and was strangled by an athlete in a conspiracy.

Common. The name of the principal public park in Boston, so called because it was originally the "common," or public cow pasture.

Common, Doll. A young woman in Ben Jonson's comedy THE ALCHEMIST, in league with Subtle the alchemist, and with Face his ally.

Commoner, The Great. The elder William Pitt (1708-1778), afterwards Earl of Chatham.

common-law marriage. A marriage concluded without ecclesiastical or civil ceremony, simply by mutual consent of the partners. Not recognized in all jurisdictions.

common sense. A general sense assumed as the medium of perception in cases where none of the five traditional senses seems to fit. This "general" common sense is often called the sixth sense. It is viewed as having the entire body as its organ or as not being in need of a special organ at all. Its name is a translation of Latin sensus communis. The signification "good sense, horse sense" is a more recent development. It seems to imply, on the basis of eighteenth century philosophy, that what is common to all human beings must be sound.

Common Sense. A political treatise by Thomas PAINE (1776) largely influential in bringing about the American Declaration of Independence.

commonwealths, ideal. The most famous ideal, or imaginary, commonwealths in which equity and wisdom rule, are those sketched by Plato in the Republic (from which all the others derive), by Cicero in his DE REPUBLICA, by St. Augustine in his De Civitate Dei (THE CITY OF GOD), by Dante in his De Monarchia, by Sir Thomas More in Utopia (1516), by Bacon in the NEW ATLANTIS (a fragment, 1616), by Campanella, a Dominican friar (about 1630), and Samuel Butler's EREWON (1872).

To these some would add Johnson's Rasselas (1759), Lytton's Coming Race (1871), Bellamy's Looking Backward (1888), Wm. Morris' News from Nowhere (1891), and some of H. G. Wells' romances, such as In the Days of the Comet (1906) and The World Set Free (1914). See also COMMUNISM.

Commune of Paris, the. The government established in Paris in 1792 by the representatives of the communes and leading up to the period called "The Reign of Terror." More commonly the term is applied to the insurrectionary government that took possession of Paris, March 18 to May 28, 1871, after the withdrawal of the Prussian troops.

communism (from Lat. communis, common). A form of SOCIALISM characterized by the principle of control by society of all economic activities, especially the common ownership of property, personal as well as productive. It differs from socialism in a strict sense in that the latter aims at the social ownership only of property used for production, not of personal property. The term "communism" was coined (ca. 1840) by the French revolutionary societies, and thereafter came to mean more specifically a doctrine advocating the overthrow of capitalist society (see CAPITALISM), while socialism was used in connection with a program of peaceable reform.

Revolutionary violence was the popular implication of communism especially after the BOLSHEVIK Revolution of 1917 in Russia.

Communism, in one form or another, based on anti-materialistic doctrines and humanitarian sympathies, was for centuries an ideal among philosophers such as Plato, Zeno the STOIC, Sir Thomas MORE, and others. See COMMONWEALTHS, IDEAL. It was also an intermittent practice among various Christian monastic sects, Jesus Himself having urged charity, benevolence, and common ownership of goods. During the 19th century, a number of experimental communities were established which practiced communism, especially in America. See BROOK FARM; OWEN, ROBERT; PANTISOCRACY.

By combining traditional humanitarian ideals and the philosophical ideas of HEGEL with a scientific theory of economics, Karl MARX gave great impetus to the communist movement, strengthening it both in its principles and objectives and in its practical program. After his death, however, and in the 20th century the movement was considerably weakened by factional disputes on doctrine and method. See also BABEUF, GRACCHUS; GOLDEN AGE; MARXISM; TROTSKY, LEON.

Communist Manifesto. A pamphlet, published in 1848 by Karl MARX and Friedrich ENGELS under the title of Manifest der Kommunisten. It contains a survey of the history of the working classes in modern times, written on the basis of the materialist conception of history, and leading up to the conclusion that social and political changes of a revolutionary nature are to be foreseen with absolute certainty. Its principles account for much of the driving force behind the Communism of Nikolai Lenin and modern Russia.

Communist parties. Political organizations designed to put into practice the principles of Marxist Communism, their aim being revolution, the abolition of capitalist economy (see CAPITALISM), and the establishment of a "dictatorship of the proletariat," the model for which became the Soviet Union of Russia. Lenin did much to influence the form of the Communist parties, in accordance with his modifications of Marx's theory, which were attacked by the Socialists. The first Communist Party was formed in Russia in 1918 by the BOLSHEVIK faction of the Social Democratic Party, and the first outside Russia, in Germany in 1919. Within the next few years, in accordance with the program of the Third, or Communist, International, Communist parties were established in over fifty countries. They were very strong in a number of European countries during the first ten years after World War I, especially in Germany, France, and Czechoslovakia. The policies of the various Communist parties consistently followed those of the Soviet Union, and their original revolutionary aims were considerably modified by the rise of FASCISM. See also TROTSKYISM; POPULAR FRONT; FELLOW TRAVELERS.

Communist Party of the U.S.A. Established in 1919 as the Communist Party of America and the Communist Labor Party by the radical faction of the Socialist Party, which were combined in 1920 as the United Communist Party. After being called next the Worker's Party (1921), it acquired the name of Communist Party of the U.S.A. in 1928. After the dissolution of the COMINTERN it became the Communist Political Association (May 20, 1944). It had its greatest influence during the 1930's, under the secretaryship of Earl Browder; then, because of the effects of the widespread economic depression of the time, numerous college students, intellectuals, and members of the unemployed either joined the Party or became sympathetic "FELLOW TRAVELERS." Among certain of the educated classes, Communist leanings were often little more than conformity with a fad of the period. At this time, the American Communist party devoted itself prominently to labor organization and defense of civil liberties and the rights of the Negro, and showed a resemblance to the indigenous American reform movements of the 19th century, such as Abolitionism and POPULISM. Its general policies, however, continued to follow those of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union of Russia. See also COMMUNISM; MARXISM; MASSES; PROLETARIAN LITERATURE.

Companionate Marriage, The. A treatise by Benjamin Barr Lindsey and Wainwright Evans (1927), proposing a form of marriage which childless couples would be allowed to dissolve by mutual consent and without ensuing legality of economic or financial claims of one of the partners on the other.

Companions of Jehu. The CHOUANS were so called, from a fanciful analogy between their self-imposed task and that appointed to Jehu, on being set over the kingdom of Israel. Jehu was to cut off Ahab and Jezebel, with all their house, and all the priests of Baal. The Chouans were to cut off all who assassinated Louis XVI, and see that his brother (Jehu) was placed on the throne.

Company of Jesus, see JESUITS.

Compensation. One of the best-known and most characteristic essays of Ralph Waldo EMERSON (1841). Compensation is "the cosmic process" by which "each thing is a half, and suggests another to make it whole. . . . What we call retribution is the universal necessity by which the whole appears wherever a part appears . . . Every act rewards itself."

Compiègne. French town on Oise river where Joan of Arc was captured by the English in 1430. In the forest of Compiègne the Armistice of Nov. 11, 1918, ending World War I was signed in a railroad car. This car was preserved in a near-by museum. On June 21, 1940, Hitler made use of it to re-enact the scene of the signing of the armistice with changed parts.

Compleat Angler, The. A famous volume on fishing by Izaak Walton (1653). It has the subtitle Contemplative Man's Recreation, being "a Discourse on Rivers, Fish-ponds, Fish and Fishing."

complex. One of the more popular terms of PSYCHOANALYSIS; in general terms, any deeply rooted, subconscious association of ideas with a strong emotional tone, so functioning that reference to a minor idea on the fringe of the main association or even slightly connected with it, tends to bring to the fore the entire feeling-tone and so prevent rational thought or action. According to the FREUDIANS, such complexes may be resolved or sublimated through psychoanalysis. The specific nature of a complex will be more evident from the following specially named complexes which were popularized by the psychoanalytic craze of the years immediately following World War I.

inferiority complex. A feeling of being inferior to other people, usually deeply rooted in subconscious childhood associations that operate to prevent normal mental activity. Technically it is always the negative partner of a repressed superiority complex. See also ADLER, ALFRED.

Messiah complex. A delusion that one is born to do great things, to be a sort of Messiah.

Narcissism. The term given by the Freudians to the complex of self-love, with obvious allusion to NARCISSUS who fell in love with his own reflection.

Oedipus complex. Any undue or unhealthy attachment of a child for his mother, which, according to the Freudians, is apt to be morbidly suppressed and to cause great mental distress through illogically remote manifestations in later years. The allusion to the involuntary incest of the Greek hero OEDIPUS is obvious.

Complutensian Polyglot. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Compromise, Missouri. See MISSOURI.

Compton, Ben. In Dos Passos' trilogy U.S.A., a young Jewish Communist who becomes the lover for awhile of Mary FRENCH.

Compton, Private. In James Joyce's Ulysses. See under CARR, PRIVATE.

Comsomol (Russ. Komsomol: Kommunistichesku "communist" + soyuz "union" + molodezh "youth"). The youth organization of the Russian Communist Party.

Comstock, Anthony (1844-1915). An American reformer spokesman for the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice. His name came to be frequently used as a synonym for a strait-laced and narrow-minded Puritan.

Comstock lode. A famous gold and silver lode discovered in 1859 in Storey County, Nevada, near the site of what is now Virginia City. Owing to the Comstock lode Nevada ceased to be a transit area for gold seekers and became instead their most popular goal. Virginia City was for a time the most famous mining camp of the Far West.

Comte, Auguste (1798-1857). French philosopher, known for his philosophy of POSITIVISM, by which he planned to apply the methods and findings of science to philosophy, social science, and even religion and thereby achieve true social reform. His ideas are to be found in Cours de philosophie positive (1839-1842). Comte had an important influence on the thought of his time, John Stuart MILL and Hippolyte TAINÉ showing the effect of his ideas in their own writings. Comte's socio-ethical religion is summed up in the principle "vivre pour autrui" (to live for one's neighbor).

Comus. In Milton's masque of this name (1634) Comus is the god of sensual pleasure, son of Bacchus and Circe. The name is from the Gr. komos, carousal.

In the masque the elder brother is meant for Viscount Brackley, the younger brother is Mr. Thomas Egerton, and the lady is Lady Alice Egerton, children of the Earl of Bridgewater, at whose castle in Ludlow it was first presented. The lady is left in the woods by her two brothers, who go in search of "cooling fruit" for her. She falls into the hands of Comus, but the brothers come to her rescue just as the god is offering his captive a magic potion; and SABRINA is invoked to break the spell.

Conachar. In Scott's FAIR MAID OF PERTH the Highland apprentice of Simon Glover, the old glover of Perth. Conachar is in love with his master's daughter, Catharine, called "the fair maid of Perth"; but Catharine loves and ultimately marries Henry Smith, the armorer. Conachar is at a later period Ian Eachin M'Ian, chief of the clan Quhele.

Conan. The Thersites of Fingal in Macpherson's OSSIAN; brave even to rashness.

Blow for blow, or claw for claw, as Conan said. Conan makes a vow never to take a blow without returning it; when he descends into the infernal regions, the arch fiend gives him a cuff, which Conan instantly returns, saying "Claw for claw."

Conan Doyle, see DOYLE.

Conant, James Bryant (1893-). American educator and teacher of chemistry. President of Harvard University since 1933.

conceit. A poetic device of extended metaphor, by which an object, a scene, person, situation, or emotion is presented by means of comparison with a simpler analogue, usually chosen from nature or a context familiar to author and reader alike. The conceit was developed in the poetry of PETRARCH and his followers, and spread to Elizabethan England, where it became almost an institution in the poetry of the day.

The following is an excellent example:

My galley charged with forgetfulness
Through sharp seas, in winter nights, doth pass
'Tween rock and rock, and eke my foe, alas,
That is my lord, steereth with cruelty;
And every oar a thought in readiness,
As though that death were light in such a case.
And endless wind doth tear the sail apace,
Of forced sighs and trusty fearfulness,
A rain of tears, a cloud of dark disdain,
Have done the wearied cords great hindrance;
Wreathed with error and with ignorance,
The stars be hid that led me to this pain;
Drowned is reason, that should be my comfort,
And I remain despairing of the port.

Sir Thomas WYATT, an adaptation of Petrarch's Sonnet 139

concerto. A musical composition in which there is one solo instrument, usually a violin or piano, accompanied by a full orchestra. The concerto began as music for voices and organ in the early 17th century and then developed into a chamber orchestra in the 18th century. MOZART is considered to have fixed the form of the modern concerto.

concert of Europe. The European powers, as they existed in the past, insofar as they were bound by agreement or understanding to concerted action in questions of common interest, especially with reference to the Balkan States and the Near East.

concerto grosso. An early form of concerto in which several solo instruments, usually strings, appear with a full orchestra. CORELLI (1653-1713), HANDEL, and J. S. BACH were composers of concerti grossi. Bach's BRANDENBURG CONCERTOS are examples of this form.

conchy, see CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR.

conclamatio. Among the ancient Romans, the loud cry raised by those standing round a death-bed at the moment of death. It probably had its origin in the idea of calling back the departed spirit, and was similar to the Irish howl over the dead. "One" not howled over" (corpus nondum conclamatum) meant one at the point of death; and "one howled for" was one given up for dead or really deceased. Hence the phrase conclamatum est, he is dead past all hope, he has been called and gives no sign. Virgil makes the palace ring with howls when Dido burns herself to death.

Lamentis, gemituque, et foemineo ululato, Texta fremunt Aeneid, iv 667.

concordance. An index of words (also often of subjects), showing their various occurrences (with indication of context) in a work or a collection of works. The term is often used as a pars pro toto instead of "Bible concordance."

concordat. An agreement made between a ruler and the Pope. Concordats of outstanding historical importance are the Concordat of 1801 between Napoleon and Pius VII; the Concordat of 1516 between François I and Leo X to abolish the "pragmatic sanction"; and the Germanic Concordat of 1448 between Frederick III and Nicholas V.

Concord Hymn. A poem by Ralph Waldo EMERSON, sung at the completion of the Bunker Hill Monument in 1836. It contains the much-quoted lines

Here once the embattled farmers stood
And fired the shot heard round the world.

concubinage. From Lat. con "together" and cubare "to lie down." A form of marriage considered inferior by the Romans because the absence of legal bonds excluded the offspring from the potestas of the father. The partners in such a union were called concubines (in Lat. concubinus and concubina). In modern usage the term concubine stands only for the woman and is little more than a euphemism for "kept mistress."

Conder, Charles (1868-1909). English artist. His The Hot Wind (1890) was painted in Australia. Especially known for his technique of water-color decorations on white silk.

Condon, Linda, see LINDA CONDON.

Condor, Legion, see LEGION KONDOR.

Condorcet, Marquis de (1743-1794). French philosopher and mathematician. Protagonist of the theory of the "infinite perfectibility of man" in his Esquisse d'un tableau historique des progrès de l'esprit humain (1794). Arrested as a member of the Girondist faction, he died in prison.

condottieri (It.). Leaders of mercenaries and military adventurers, particularly from about the 14th to 16th centuries. The most noted of these brigand chiefs in Italy were Guarnieri, Lando, Francesco of Carmagnola, and Francesco Sforza. The singular is condottiere.

Conestoga wagon or wain. A great white-topped covered wagon, boat-shaped, as much as 16 ft. long and 6 ft. deep. Used by the pioneers and designed for travel in soft soil and on prairies. First manufactured at Conestoga, Lancaster Co., Pa.

Confederate flag, see under STAR.

Confederate States, see under STATES.

Confessio Amantis (The Lover's Confession). A Latin work by the medieval English author John GOWER (ca. 1386–1390), in the story-within-a-frame tradition. In it, a young man confesses the sins he has committed against love—love here being the convention of COURTLY LOVE. To illustrate each one he tells a story, usually from the Bible or from classical literature. The stories of Jason, Narcissus, Gideon, Tobias, and Appollonius of Tyre are included.

confession. As a literary term, a form of autobiography, in which the true or manipulated account of the author's life serves some sort of didactic purpose. In this sense, confessions constitute a literary genre which took its start in the CONFESSIONS OF ST. AUGUSTINE. They reached the height of their development in the era of romanticism when they began to show symptoms of narcissistic decadence. See ROUSSEAU, DE QUINCEY, MUSSET, CHATEAUBRIAND.

Confession of Golias. A famous medieval Latin poem by the ARCHPOET, addressed to the Archbishop of Cologne, which sums up the pursuits and the general attitude of the wandering scholars of the Middle Ages. See GOLIAS.

Confession of My Faith and a Reason of My Practice, A. See BUNYAN, JOHN.

Confessions. Famous autobiography of Jean Jacques ROUSSEAU, in which he frankly reveals the details of his erratic and rebellious life.

Confessions of an English Opium-Eater. The most famous work of Thomas DE QUINCEY, published in 1822. It gives an account of the poet's early life and describes the growth and effects of his habit of taking opium.

Confessions of a Thug. See TAYLOR, M.

Confessions of St. Augustine. Autobiography of St. Augustine (see under SAINT), written after 390 A.D. in order to reveal to the world the circumstances of his conversion to Christianity. The work gives an excellent picture of Augustine's mind and personality, and of the life and conflicting philosophies and religions current in the last days of the Roman Empire.

Confraternità della Misericordia. Brotherhood of Mercy. An organization established in Florence, Italy, in 1244 to give help to the sick and bury the dead. It is still active.

Confucius. Latinized form of Chinese Kung Fu-tzu, literally "the philosopher Kungx" (ca. 551–479 B.C.). Great Chinese teacher of ethics who called himself a "transmitter, not an originator." His function of strengthening the native Chinese religion has been exaggerated to a point where Confucianism is considered a full-fledged religious system on a par with the other Chinese religions of Taoism and Buddhism. In essence, however, the system of Confucius is concerned with mundane ethics, and endeavors to regulate the five relationships of life, that is, the relationships of prince and subject, parent and child, brother and brother, husband and wife, and friend and friend.

Congo, Thé: A Study of the Negro Race.

A poem by Vachel LINDSAY, published in 1914 in The Congo And Other Poems. It is an attempt to represent African and Negro ragtime rhythms in verse by means of various verbal effects.

Congregationalist. A member of the Congregational Church whose doctrines, known as evangelical or orthodox, include autonomy tempered by co-operation and fellowship of the individual congregations. Hence the name.

Congress of Industrial Organizations (C.I.O.). An American organization of labor unions, founded by John L. Lewis in 1935 and first known as the Committee for Industrial Organization. It split away from the AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR, favoring union organization on the basis of the type of industry in which its prospective members might be employed rather than on their individual crafts.

Congreve, William (1670–1729). The most prominent English dramatist of the Restoration period, known for his witty contributions to the comedy of manners of his time. His best-known comedies are The Double Dealer (1694), Love for Love (1695) and THE WAX OF THE WORLD (1700). Congreve was one of the playwrights attacked for lewdness by Jeremy COLLIER. He was a friend of SWIFT, STEELE, and POPE.

Coningsby or the New Generation. A political novel by DISRAELI (1844). The hero, Harry Coningsby, is the mouthpiece of the political group known as YOUNG ENGLAND; and in sharp contrast to him is his grandfather, the Marquis of Monmouth, a shrewd and worldly representative of the old school. Coningsby's love affair with the daughter of a self-made man named Millbank is kept distinctly subordinate to the political interest. A noteworthy character is the Jew, Sidonia, said to have been drawn partly from Baron Alfred de Rothschild and partly from the author himself. He has wealth, strength of body and of intellect and unswerving devotion to high ideals. In Coningsby Disraeli introduced many prominent figures of contemporary affairs in thinly veiled disguise and much of its popularity may be credited to the interest of identification. Gladstone is said to be depicted as Oswald Millbank; the Marquis of Hertford as the Marquis of Monmouth; and as for the hero, Coningsby, he has been variously identified as Lord Littleton, Lord Lincoln or George Smythe.

The characters are supposed to be as follows: Croaker is Rigby; Monmouth is Lord Howard, Eskdale, Lowther; Urmsby, Irving; Lucretia is Mde. Zichy; the countess Colonna is Lady Strachan; Sidonia is baron A. de Rothschild; Henry Sidney is Lord John Manners; Belvoir, the duke of Rutland. —Notes and Queries, March 6, 1875.

Coniston. A political novel by Winston CHURCHILL (1906), narrating the career of Jethro Bass, the local "boss." His corrupt political practices separate him from the girl he loves and later from her daughter, whom he has taken to live with him.

Conkey Chickweed, see CHICKWEED, CONKEY.

Conkling, Grace Hazard (1878?-). American poet. Teacher of English, Smith College. Her daughter Hilda (1910-) was a phenomenal child poet.

Connec, Father. In James Joyce's A PORTRAIT OF THE ARTIST AS A YOUNG MAN, the elegant rector of CLONGOWES WOOD COLLEGE, to whom Stephen DEBALUS appeals when he is unjustly punished by Father DOLAN. Father Connec also appears briefly in ULYSSES, when Leopold BLOOM observes him taking a walk in Dublin.

Connally Resolution. Nov. 5, 1943, in favor of international organization. The House of Representatives had adopted the Fulbright Resolution, Sept. 21, 1943, by a vote of 360 to 29, in favor of American participation in "the creation of appropriate international machinery with power adequate to establish and maintain a just and lasting peace." The U.S. Senate adopted the language of the Moscow Conference in passing the Connally Resolution.

Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court. A. A satirical romance by Mark TWAIN (1889), narrating the imaginary adventures of a 19th century Yankee who suddenly wakes up in a court of medieval chivalry. His knowledge of modern inventions, together with his native shrewdness, gives him many an opportunity to impress and outwit the valorous but slow-moving knights of King Arthur.

Connell, Richard Edward (1893-). American novelist and short-story writer. Has also made motion pictures. Apes and Angels (1924) is a characteristic collection of short stories.

Connelly, Marcus Cook (1890-). American playwright, best known for his comedies written in collaboration with George KAUFMAN, including Dulcy (1921); Beggar on Horseback (1924); Merton of the Movies (1925). Connelly also dramatized THE GREEN PASTURES (1929) from Ol' Man Adam an' His Chillun by Roark BRADFORD. Winner of the O. Henry Memorial award (1930) for his short story, "Coroner's Inquest."

Conning Tower, The. See ADAMS, FRANKLIN P.; COLUMNS.

Connolly, James Brendan (1868?-). Well-known American writer of sea stories, knowing all that concerns sea-going fishermen. Has written Out of Gloucester (1902), Steel Decks (1925), American Fishermen (1940), and Canton Captain (1942), as well as many other books.

Connor, Ralph, see GORDON, C. W.

Conqueror, The. A historical novel by Gertrude ATHERTON (1902), based on the career of Alexander Hamilton (1757-1804).

Conqueror, the. An epithet applied to leading warriors of history, including the following:

Alfonso I (ca. 1109-1185). King of Portugal.
Aurangzeb the Great (1619, 1659-1707). The most powerful of the Moguls.

James I (1206, 1213-1276). King of Aragon.
Mohammed II (1430-1481). Sultan of Turkey.
Othman or Osman I (1259, 1299-1326). Founder of the Turkish power.

Francisco Pizarro (1475-1541). Called el Conquistador because he conquered Peru.
William, Duke of Normandy (1027, 1066-1087). Called "the Conqueror" because he obtained England by conquest.

Conquest of Canaan, The. A poem by Timothy DWIGHT (1785) based on the Old Testament book of Joshua and called by its author "the first American epic." Joshua was the leader under whom the Jews entered the Promised Land of Canaan and defeated the inhabitants.

The phrase was taken as the title of a novel by Booth TARKINGTON (1905), dealing with small-town politics. The hero is Joe Loudon, a young lawyer who finally becomes mayor of his town.

Conquest of Granada, The. A mock serious history by Washington IRVING (1829), purporting to be written by the priest Fray Agapida. This book, which gives an account of the conflict between Spanish Christians and Moors in the days of Ferdinand, was Irving's favorite among his own works.

For Dryden's tragedy Almanzor and Almahide, or The Conquest of Granada, see under ALMANZOR.

Conquest of Mexico, The. One of the two principal works of the American historian William Hickling Prescott (1843). The other chief work of the author, written in a similar pattern, is The Conquest of Peru (1847). The Conquest of Mexico is known for its dramatic sweep and its centering of the historic conflict between native Mexicans and invading Spaniards in the heroic figures of Hernando Cortés and Montezuma.

Conquistador. A narrative poem in TERZA RIMA by Archibald MacLeish, published in 1932, winner of the Pulitzer Prize for poetry in 1933. It is based on an eye-witness account of the Spanish expedition to Mexico (1519-1520) led by Hernando Cortés, as told by one of Cortés' soldiers, Bernal Díaz. It is heroic and realistic in flavor.

Conrad. Hero of Byron's poem, THE CORSAIR. He was afterwards called LARA in the poem of that title.

Conrad, Joseph (1857-1924). English novelist, of Polish parentage and upbringing. Original name Teodor Józef Konrad Korzeniowski. He worked at sea on British merchant ships from 1878 to 1894, and is known for his studies of character against a background of life at sea. His novels include ALMAYER'S FOLLY (1895); AN OUTCAST OF THE ISLANDS (1896); THE NIGGER OF THE NARCISSUS (1898); LORD JIM (1900); NOSTROMO (1904); ROMANCE (1903), with Ford Madox Hueffer (see FORD, FORD MADOX); UNDER WESTERN EYES (1911); CHANCE (1914); VICTORY (1915); THE ARROW OF GOLD (1919); THE RESCUE (1920). Conrad wrote an autobiographical volume entitled A Personal Record.

Conrad in Quest of His Youth. A novel by Leonard Merrick.

Conroy, Gabriel, see GABRIEL CONROY.

Conscience, Hendrik (1812-1883). Flemish novelist. In't Wonderjaer 1566 (In the Year of Marvels 1566), published in 1837, was his first novel and the first book to be published in modern Flemish. De Leeuw van Vlaenderen (The Lion of Flanders) of 1838 is the one of his more than 100 books that will continue to be read.

conscience clause. A clause in an Act of Parliament to relieve persons with conscientious scruples from certain requirements in it. It generally has reference to religious matters, but it came into wider prominence in connection with the English Compulsory Vaccination Act of 1898.

conscience money. Money paid anonymously to a local or national government by persons who have defrauded the revenue, or who have understated their income to the income-tax assessors; also any money secretly refunded on the dictates of conscience.

conscientious objector. One who takes advantage of a CONSCIENCE CLAUSE, and so does not have to comply with some particular requirement of the law in question. In England, the name used to be applied specially to those who would swear legally that they had a conscientious objection to vaccination; but during the recruiting campaigns of World War I it was given—usually with contempt—to those who refused to fight in the army because they found war incompatible with their religious beliefs. They were also known as Conchies and C.O.'s.

Conscious Lovers, The. See STEELE, RICHARD.

conscript fathers (Lat. Patres conscripti). The Roman senate. Romulus instituted a senate consisting of a hundred elders, called Patres (Fathers). After the Sabines joined the State, another hundred were added. Tarquinius Priscus, the fifth king, added a third hundred, called Patres Minorum Gentium. When Tarquinius Superbus, the seventh and last king of Rome, was banished, several of the senate followed him, and the vacancies were filled up by Junius Brutus, the first consul. The new members were enrolled in the senatorial register, and called Conscripti; the entire body was then addressed as Patres [et] Conscripti or Patres conscripti.

Consolation of Philosophy, The (De Consolatione Philosophiae). Best-known work of the Christian philosopher BOETHIUS, written while he was in prison after being condemned to death by the Emperor Theodoric. In it, the Lady Philosophy comes to comfort the author in his cell, and they discuss various philosophical issues of the time, including riches, honor, love, fate, free will, and the like. Lady Philosophy expresses a modified Stoic attitude throughout. The Consolation of Philosophy was extremely popular during the Middle Ages, having been translated by King Alfred, Chaucer, and Queen Elizabeth, among others.

consols, i.e., consolidated annuities. In 1751, several public securities forming part of the debt of Great Britain were consolidated into one fund and became popularly known as "consols." Securities of this type constituted at times more than half of the country's national debt.

Conspiracy of Pontiac, The. A book by Francis Parkman. • constable. From Latin comes stabuli, count of the stable. In the monarchical establishments of the Middle Ages the constables were originally chief grooms and later chief officials in the palace, the army, and the like. Hence the titles Constable of France, Lord High Constable of England, Constable of Scotland, etc.

Constable, Henry (1562-1613). English poet of Catholic faith. He wrote sonnets and pastoral poems which are represented in the first edition of Sir Philip Sidney's APOLOGY FOR POETRY, in the Poetical Exercises (1591) of King JAMES I, and in England's Helicon (1600). He also wrote a sonnet sequence, Diana, published in 1592 and 1594, and a series of religious sonnets, Spiritual Sonnets to the Honor of God and His Saints, not published until 1815 because they were Catholic in flavor.

Constable, John (1776-1837). English painter, known for his rural landscapes and his effects of light and color. He influenced the BARBIZON SCHOOL.

Constance. Mother of Prince Arthur and widow of Geoffrey Plantagenet portrayed in Shakespeare's King John (1598). See also CUNSTANCE.

Constance of Beverley. In Scott's MARMION, a Benedictine nun, who falls in love with Marmion, and, escaping from the convent, lives with him as a page. Marmion proves faithless; and Constance, falling into the hands of the Benedictines, is tried for violating her vows and immured in the convent wall.

Constant, Benjamin (1845-1902). French romantic painter. Algerian scenes and portraits. Among the latter Queen Victoria, Le conte de Lasle, etc.

Constant de Rebecque, Benjamin (1767-1830). French author and politician. Friend of Mme de Staël. His Adolphe: anecdote trouvée dans les papiers d'un inconnu (1816) is a psychological novel of lasting interest.

Constantin, L'Abbé, see ABBÉ CONSTANTIN, L'.

Constantine, Lady Viviette. Heroine of Hardy's TWO ON A TOWER.

Constantine the Great. Roman emperor (306-337). Became sole emperor of the West (312) after defeating Maxentius in the battle at the Milvian Bridge, where a cross appeared to him in the sky, bearing the famous words, in hoc signo vinces, "by this sign you will conquer." Adopted Christianity (313). Defeated Licinius (323) and became sole emperor of the Roman world. Called Council of Nicaea (325) where Nicene Creed was adopted. Chose Byzantium as his new capital, calling it after himself Constantinople (The City of Constantine).

Constitution. A 44-gun frigate, U.S. Navy, launched in 1797. When, under Jefferson, the United States resisted at last the Barbary corsairs after this country had paid them a tribute of two million dollars, the Constitution was one of the ships taking part in the expedition known as the Tripolitan War (1801-1805). Later, in the War of 1812, under the command of Isaac Hull (1773-1843), she forced the surrender of the British frigate Guerrière off Cape Race, Newfoundland (August 19, 1812). When the Constitution was ordered dismantled (1830), Oliver Wendell HOLMES wrote the poem, OLD IRONSIDES, that caused her rebuilding.

Constitution of the United States of America. Fundamental law adopted in 1787 and in effect since March 1789, supplanting the articles of confederation signed in 1781. See CONTINENTAL CONGRESS. Up to 1942, 21 amendments to the original instrument had been adopted. The 21st amendment repealed the 18th or Prohibition amendment in 1933. The Constitution established a republican form of government for the United States, with separate executive, legislative, and judicial branches.

Consul Bibulus, see under BIBULUS.

Consuelo. One of the best known of George SAND's novels (1844), which, together with its sequel The Countess of Rudolstadt (La Comtesse de Rudolstadt), relates the adventures of the beautiful Venetian singer Consuelo. She grows up in the streets, but is given a musical education by Porporo, a maestro who becomes interested in her gifts. After she has made her début in opera, she visits the castle of the Rudolstdts in Bohemia and there marries Count Albert of Rudolstadt on his deathbed. Albert is a firm believer in the occult and expects to be reborn, but instead he comes to life after burial, having been in a deep trance. In the sequel Consuelo and her husband go on together through life affirming a sort of occult gospel that brings them great satisfaction.

Conte del Graal. See CHRÉTIEN DE TROYES; GRAIL.

Contentment, Adventures in. See BAKER, RAY STANNARD.

Contes de fées. Fairy tales in French prose by Claude Perrault (1697), a source book for many old tales and nursery rhymes. They have been translated into English.

Contes de ma mère Poye. See MOTHER GOOSE.

Contes Drôlatiques (Droll Stories), by Honoré de BALZAC (1832, 1833, 1837). A collection of stories, written in the style of Rabelais "for the diversion of the Pantagruelists and no others."

Continental Congress. The congress of deputies from the British colonies of North America meeting to consider their common interests. The First Continental Congress met in Philadelphia, Sept. 5 to Oct. 26, 1774; the Second May 10, 1775 to Dec. 12, 1776; the Third in Baltimore Dec. 20, 1776. Others followed till March 1, 1781.

Continental system. A name given to Napoleon's plan for shutting out Great Britain from all commerce with the continent of Europe. He forbade under pain of war any nation of Europe to receive British exports, or to send imports to any of the British dominions. It began November 21, 1806.

continuity. In motion picture and radio, a technical term for that which assures the continuity of the performance, that is, the scenario of a film or the interpolated remarks by the announcer which serve to connect the various selections of the broadcast.

contraception. See BIRTH CONTROL.

Contrast, The. The first native American comedy, written by Royall TYLER and produced in New York in 1787. It concerns the contrast between Colonel Manly, representing dignified simplicity, and Dimple, Charlotte, and Letitia, who represent the social frivolities of the time. One of the leading characters is Jonathan, the Colonel's servant, who is the typical Yankee. See BROTHER JONATHAN. The Contrast was a great success.

contredanse, see COUNTRY-DANCE.

Convent Threshold, The. A poem by Christina ROSSETTI (1862), presenting the thoughts of a girl about to go into a convent as she ponders on a past love and repentance and a mystic dream.

Conversation at Midnight. A long poem by Edna St. Vincent MILLAY, published in 1937, in which a group of men, representing varying shades of interest and opinion, discuss controversial social, political, and aesthetic issues of the time. The characters are presented satirically.

Converse, Florence (1871-). American poet. Collected Poems (1937). Also wrote Long Will, an historical novel concerning William Langland, author of PIERS PLOWMAN, which is a classic in Everyman's Library.

Converse, Frederick Shepherd (1871-1940). American musician and composer who wrote in Pipe of Desire (1910) the first opera by an American composer ever performed by the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York City.

Convivio. See DANTE ALIGHIERI.

convoy. Fleet of merchant vessels voyaging under protection of one or more warships. The formation of convoys was found, during World War I, to be an effective defense against U-boat attacks. The method was further developed during World War II.

Conway, Moncure Daniel (1832-1907). An American abolitionist clergyman. Noted as biographer of THOMAS PAINE, and for works on CARLYLE, EMERSON, and HAWTHORNE.

Conway Cabal. See under CABAL.

Cook, George Cram (1873-1924). American novelist, poet, and playwright. He figures in Floyd Dell's novel Moon-Calf as Tom Alden. He wrote The Chasm, a socialistic novel, in 1911. He married Susan Glaspell and organized with her the Provincetown Players "in an old fish-house which Mrs. Wilbur Daniel Steele had taken for a studio, at the end of Mary Heaton Vorse's wharf." In 1915 Cook established the Playwrights' Theatre in New York City. In 1921 he sailed for Greece where he entered into the peasant life and died at sixty. His daughter Nilla is a disciple of Gandhi and published her autobiography in 1939.

Cook, James (1728-1779). English navigator and explorer. Discovered New Caledonia and Sandwich Islands. Was murdered by Sandwich Islanders in revenge for a flogging administered to one of them for stealing a boat.

Cooke, Jay (1821-1905). American banker. After the Civil War, financed construction of western railroads and made a fortune from mining investments in Utah.

Cooke, Rose Terry (1827-1892). American poet and author of local-color stories dealing with New England. Her works include Poems (1860); Happy Dodd, Or She Hath Done What She Could (1878); Somebody's Neighbors (1881); The Sphinx's Children and Other People's (1886); Huckleberries Gathered from New England Hills (1891).

Cook's or Cokes Tale. In Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES. See GAMELYN.

Coolidge, Calvin (1872-1933). Thirtieth president of the U.S. (1923-1929). Elected vice-president in 1921, he succeeded president Harding after the latter's death. Re-elected in 1924.

Coolidge, Dane (1873-1940). American naturalist. Also author of western stories.

Coomaraswamy, Ananda Kentish (1877-1947). East Indian scholar. Author of books on Buddhism and Indian art and literature. Resident (from 1917) in Boston.

Cooper, Courtney Ryley (1886-1940). Versatile American author. Once press agent for Buffalo Bill. Wrote on the circus, on crime, and 750 stories besides many books of a wandering life. Wild Cargo and The Plansman; also moving pictures.

Cooper, James Fenimore (1789-1851). American novelist, the first to achieve substantial fame outside the U.S. He is best known for his historical novels of romance and adventure, dealing with the native American scene, which are best represented by the LEATHERSTOCKING TALES. These include THE PIONEERS (1823); THE LAST OF THE MOHICANS (1826); THE PRAIRIE (1827); THE PATHFINDER (1840); and THE DEERSLAYER (1841). Among his other works are THE SPY (1821); THE PILOT (1823); THE RED ROVER (1827); THE BRAVO (1831); several scholarly and biographical studies; volumes of social criticism expressing Cooper's own conservatism and his political theories; and the Littlepage Manuscripts, a trilogy of historical novels on the relations between American economic classes, consisting of Satanstoe (1845), The Chainbearer (1845), and The Redskins (1846).

Cooper, Peter (1791-1883). American industrialist and humanitarian. Owner of a Baltimore iron works. Founder of Cooper Union (1857) in New York City, dedicated to the "advancement of science and art," and offering free courses and lectures in a variety of (chiefly practical) subjects.

Cooper, Samuel (1724-1783). American clergyman of New England, known for his revolutionary writings against British rule in the colonies. He was the author of sermons, pamphlets, and articles for the Boston Gazette. His most famous work is The Crisis (1754), a pamphlet attacking the currently proposed bill for excise taxes on America. Cooper also worked prominently in support of the alliance with France made by Benjamin Franklin.

Cooper's Hill. See DENHAM, SIR JOHN.

Copernicus Nicolaus. Latinized form of Niklas Koppernigk (1473-1543). Polish astronomer, famous as the proponent of the theory that the earth and planets revolve around the sun, in radical opposition to the widely held theory of PTOLEMY, which was one of the pillars of medieval cosmology. "The Copernican revolution dethroned man as the center and lord of Creation."

Cophetua, a King. Anyone who marries far below his station. From a mythical king of Africa, of great wealth, who fell in love with a beggar-girl, Penelophon (Zenelophon in Shakespeare's Love's Labour's Lost, IV, 1.), and married her. He is the hero of a ballad in Percy's Reliques, and Tennyson versified the tale in The Beggar-Maid.

Copland, Aaron (1900-). American composer of ballet music, symphonies, chamber music, and orchestral and choral works, mostly in the dissonant 20th-century idiom, and adaptations of jazz pieces. See also Jazz. His Dance Symphony (1930) won the RCA-Victor Company award of that year. One of the best known of his works is El Salón México (1936). A number of his compositions were written for motion pictures and radio, and Billy the Kid (1941) is an attempt in the manner of American folk music, being based on cowboy songs.

Copley, John Singleton (1738-1815). American painter, resident of England from 1774 until his death. He is best known for his portraits.

Coppard, Alfred Edgar (1878-). English short-story writer and poet, known for the pathos and quiet irony of his work. His volumes of short stories include Adam and Eve and Pinch Me (1921); Clorinda Walks in Heaven (1922); The Black Dog (1923); The Field of Mustard (1926); Count Stefan (1928); The Gollan (1929); Pink Furniture (1929); Rummy (1930); Easter Day (1931); Ring the Bells of Heaven (1933); Emergency Exit (1934); The Ninepenny Flute (1937). Among his books of poems are: Hips and Haws (1922); A Yokohama Garland (1926); Collected Poems (1928).

Coppée, François Édouard Joachim (1842-1908). French poet and playwright. Contributor to the PARNASSE CONTEMPORAIN (1866).

Copper Captain, A. A poseur, a masquerader, from the famous character so called in Beaumont and Fletcher's Rule a Wife and Have a Wife (1624). The Copper Captain is Michael Perez, a captain without money, but with a plentiful stock of pretense, who seeks to make a market of his person and commission by marrying an heiress. He is caught in his own trap, for he marries Estifania, a woman of intrigue, fancying her to be the heiress Margaritta. His wife says to him—

Here's a goodly jewel . . .
Did you not win this at Goletta, captain . . .
See how it sparkles, like an old lady's eyes . . .
And here's a chain of whittings' eyes for pearls . . .
Your clothes are parallels to these, all counterfeits
Put these and them on, you're a man of copper,
A copper . . . copper captain.

Fletcher, Rule a Wife and Have a Wife.

Copperfield, David, see DAVID COPPERFIELD.

Copperheads. The copperhead is a poisonous snake of North America (Trigonocephalus contortrix), which, unlike the rattlesnake, gives no warning of its attack. Hence the name Copperheads was applied by the early colonists to the Indians, then to the Dutch (cf. Washington Irving's History of New York), and, finally, in the Civil War to the pro-Southerners among the Northerners, the covert friends of the Confederates.

Copts. The Jacobite Christians of Egypt who, since the Council of Chalcedon in 451, have been in possession of the patriarchal chair of Alexandria. The word is probably derived from Coptos, the metropolis of the Thebaid. These Christians conduct their worship in a dead language called "Coptic" (language of the Copts). St. Anthony (ca. 250-350), the founder of Christian monachism, was a Copt.

copyright. The exclusive right of multiplying for sale copies of works of literature, art, etc., or substantial parts thereof, allowed to the author or his assignees.

United States copyrights may be secured under the Act of March 4, 1909 (as amended), for a period of twenty-eight years and a twenty-eight-year renewal is allowed, making the entire period of possible copyright, fifty-six years. Serial rights, motion picture rights, etc., are often disposed of separately and the matter is an intricate one. International copyright was established in 1891, but is regarded as inadequate and a matter for agitation.

The first Copyright Act in England is that of 1709; modifications and additions to it were made at various times, and in 1842 a new Act was passed granting copyright for forty-two years after publication or until the expiration of seven years from the death of the author, whichever should be the longer.

This Act was superseded by the Copyright Act of 1911, under which the period of protection was extended to fifty years after the death of the author, irrespective of the date of publication of the book. This Act deals also with the copyright in photographs, engravings, architectural designs, musical compositions, gramophone records, etc. See also PIRACY.

Coq d'or, Le (Fr. literally, the golden cockerel). A satirical opera (1909) by Rimsky-Korsakov, flaying the foibles of royalty.

Coquelin, Benoît Constant (1841-1909). Famous French actor and actor-manager. Mainly remembered as having created the rôle of Cyrano in Edmond ROSTAND's Cyrano de Bergerac.

Coquette, The. An early American novel by Hannah Webster Foster (1797) which ran through thirty editions in forty years, but is now forgotten. It was based on the tragic story of Elizabeth Whitman of Hartford.

coquillard (Fr., from coquille "cockle, shell"). In medieval France, a beggar pretending to be on a pilgrimage, and wearing or selling cockles supposedly coming from Santiago de Compostela. See St. James under SAINTS.

Cora Munroe. In Cooper's LAST OF THE MOHICANS.

Corbaccio, Il. See BOCCACCIO, GIOVANNI.

Corbet, Richard, Bishop of Oxford and Norwich (1582-1635). English churchman and poet, known for his joviality. An old story tells how once, on seeing a vender of broadside ballads (see BALLADS; BROADSIDE) unable to sell his wares at a marketplace, the bishop took off his gown, put on the other man's jacket, and began hawking the ballads in a loud voice until they were all sold. Corbet was a friend of Ben JONSON and was popular at the MERMAID TAVERN because of his skill at extemporizing poetry. His best-known poem is Iter Boreale, an account of a vagabonding trip he once took.

Corbett, James J. (1866-1933). American professional boxer, popularly known as "Gentleman Jim." Knocked out world champion John L. Sullivan on Sept. 7, 1892 and held title till March 17, 1897, when he lost it to Robert Fitzsimmons.

Corbière, Jean Antoine (1793-1875). French naval officer, known as author of sea tales. Édouard Joachim Corbière (1845-1875), the son of Jean Antoine, made a name for himself as a poet of the SYMBOLIST group.

Corbin, Alice. See HENDERSON.

Corbin, John (1870-). American author and dramatic critic. Member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

Corbino, Jon (1905-). Italian-American painter whose work is represented in the Pennsylvania Academy of Art and the Toledo Museum of Art. Member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

Corbusier, Le, see LE CORBUSIER.

Corceca. The typification of blindness of heart (Lat. cor, heart, caecus, blind) in Spenser's Faerie Queene (I, iii). She is a blind old woman, mother of Abessa (Superstition) and is often regarded as a personification of Romanism.

Corcoran Art Gallery at Washington, D.C. Founded and endowed for maintenance by William Wilson Corcoran, American financier and humanitarian (1798-1888).

Corday, Charlotte (1768-1793). French patriot who stabbed MARAT, a leader of the Terrorists, to death in his bath. Guillotined July 17, 1793. She was an adherent of the Revolution but felt repelled by the excesses of the REIGN OF TERROR. Cf. Joseph Shearing's The Angel of the Assassination.

Cordelia. In Shakespeare's KING LEAR, the youngest of Lear's three daughters, and the only one who loves him. Hence the expression Cordelia's gift, a "voice ever soft, gentle and low, an excellent thing in woman."

Cordelier, i.e. "cord-wearer." A FRANCISCAN friar of the strict rule, an Observantin. In the Middle Ages they distinguished themselves in philosophy and theology. DUNS SCOTUS was one of their most distinguished members. The tale is that in the reign of St. Louis these Minorites repulsed an army of infidels, and the king asked who those gens de cordeliers (corded people) were. From this they received their appellation.

There is a French proverb, Il ne faut pas parler latin devant les Cordeliers, "don't talk Latin before the Cordeliers," which means that one should be careful what one says on a subject before those who are masters of it.

In the French Revolution the name Club des Cordeliers was given to a political club, because it held its meetings in an old convent of Cordeliers. The Cordeliers were the rivals of the Jacobins, and numbered among their members Paré (the president), Danton, MARAT, Camille Desmoulins, Hébert, Chaumette, Dufournoy de Villiers, Fabre d'Eglantine, and others.

cordillera (Span., a mountain range, from cuerda "a rope"). Originally applied to the Andes. Now often used loosely, as in "the western cordillera of the U.S.," which includes the Rocky Mountains, the Sierra Nevada, and the Coast and Cascade ranges.

cordón (Fr.). A ribbon or cord; especially the ribbon of an order of chivalry; also, a line of sentries or military posts enclosing some position; hence, an encircling line.

cordón bleu. A knight of the ancient order of the St. Esprit (Holy Ghost); so called because the decoration is suspended on a blue ribbon. It was at one time the highest order in the kingdom of France.

The title is also given, as a facetious compliment, to a good cook; and to a member of the "BLUE RIBBON ARMY," i.e. a teetotaler.

cordón noir. A knight of the Order of St. Michael, distinguished by a black ribbon.

Cords of Vanity. A novel of 20th-century life by James Branch CABELL (1905), a story, chiefly, of the numerous love affairs of Robert Etheridge Townsend, a rising young author. John CHARTERIS is also a prominent character.

Corelli, Marie. Pseudonym of Mary Mackay (1855-1924). English romantic novelist. The Sorrows of Satan (1895), The Master Christian (1900), etc. George Meredith encouraged her as a musician but not as a writer. A pretty little blonde woman who wrote torrentially and died of her 28th novel in her 70th year.

Corey, Bromfield. An aristocratic Bostonian art connoisseur who appears in Howells' Rise of Silas Lapham and THE MINISTER'S CHARGE. He is considered one of Howells' most amiable and delightful characters.

Corey, Giles, see GILES COREY.

Corey, Lewis (1894-). American free-lance economist. The House of Morgan. A Social Biography of the Masters of Money (1930), The Decline of American Capitalism (1934), The Crisis of the Middle Class (1935), etc.

Corey, Tom. A character in Howells' Rise of Silas LAPHAM.

Corinne or Italy. A novel by Madame de STAËL (1807). Corinne's lover, Oswald, marries her younger sister Lucile instead and Corinne's consequent suffering brings about her death. The book is famed for its descriptions of Italy; and Corinne, whose mother was Italian, represents the ideal qualities of Italy as her sister does those of England.

Corinthian. A licentious libertine; also a gentleman sportsman who rides his own horses on the turf, or sails his own yacht. The immorality of Corinth was proverbial both in Greece and Rome. The sporting rake in Pierce Egan's Life in London (1821) was known as "Corinthian Tom," and in Shakespeare's day a "Corinthian" was the "fast man" of the period.

I am no proud Jack, like Falstaff; but a Corinthian, a lad of mettle, a good boy.—1 Henry IV, ii. 4.

Corinthian brass. An alloy made of a variety of metals (said to be gold, silver, and copper) melted at the conflagration of Corinth in 146 B.C., when the city was burnt to the ground by the consul Mummius. Vases and other ornaments, made by the Romans of this metal, were of greater value than if they had been silver or gold.

I think it may be of Corinthian brass,
Which was a mixture of all metals, but
The brazen uppermost.

Byron, Don Juan, vi. 56

Corinthian order. A type of Greek architecture, of later date than the DORIC and IONIC orders. It was used less frequently than the other two, appearing chiefly in the CAPITAL, where the ornamentation was based on the design of the acanthus leaf. An unfounded legend traces the origin of this to a basket of playthings placed on the grave of a little girl of Corinth by her nurse and weighted with a tile. The following spring an acanthus plant was discovered to have twined its leaves about the basket. CALLIMACHUS, the sculptor, is said to have seen it and been inspired to imitate in a metal capital.

Coriolanus, Caius Marcius. A legendary Roman general called Coriolanus from his victory over the Volscians at Corioli. Shakespeare wrote a drama Coriolanus (ca. 1608-1610). Returning to Rome in triumph he is elected consul, but opposes the plebeian interests and is shortly afterwards banished. He joins his former enemies the Volscians against Rome, but is finally persuaded to give up the siege by the entreaties of his wife and mother. In the classic sources his mother was Veturia, not Volumnia, and his wife Volumnia, not Virgilia, as Shakespeare has called them.

Corkery, Daniel (1878-). Irish playwright, short story writer, novelist. Among his best known books is one of short stories, The Hounds of Banba.

Corleone. One of the novels of F. Marion CRAWFORD'S SARACINESCA series.

Corley, Donald. American writer who illustrated his own fantastic stories, The House of Lost Identity (1927), The Fifth Son of the Shoemaker (1929), etc.

Cormoran. The Cornish giant who, in the nursery tale, fell into a pit dug by Jack the Giant-killer. For this doughty achievement Jack received a belt from King Arthur, with this inscription—

This is the valiant Cornish man
That slew the giant Cormoran.
Jack the Giant-killer.

Corn Cracker State. Kentucky. See under STATES.

Corneille, Pierre (1606-1684). Famous French dramatist of the early neo-Classical period, author of tragi-comedies and tragedies dealing chiefly with psychological conflicts of mind and will in reference to honor, patriotism, duty, etc. His best-known plays are Le Cid (1636); Cinna (1640); Horace (1640); and Polyeucte (ca. 1641). His other works include Mélite (1629); Médée (1634); La Morte de Pompée (1643); Le menteur (1644); Rodogune (1645); Nicomède (1650); Andromède (1650); Pertharite (1652); Oedipe (1659); Othon (1664); Tite et Bérénice (1669). RACINE was Corneille's rival and successor.

Cornelia. In Roman history, wife of Titus Sempronius Gracchus, and mother of the two tribunes, Tiberius and Caius. She was almost idolized by the Romans, who erected a statue in her honor, with this inscription, Cornelia, Mother of the Gracchi.

Cornelia's jewels. One day a lady from Campania called upon Cornelia, the mother of the Gracchi, and after showing her jewels, requested in return to see those belonging to the famous mother-in-law of Africanus. Cornelia sent for her two sons, and said to the lady, "These are my jewels, in which alone I delight."

Cornell, Katharine (1898-). American actress, best known for her performances in THE GREEN HAT (1925), The Letter (1927), and THE BARRETT'S OF WIMPOLE STREET (1931).

Cornford, Frances Crofts (1886-). English poet; wife of the English philosopher Francis Macdonald Cornford (1874-). Outstanding among her volumes of poetry is Spring Morning.

Cornhusker State. Nebraska. Named from its large corn crops.

Cornish, N.H. Abode of a number of poets and artists, as Augustus St. Gaudens, Percy MacKaye, William Vaughn Moody, Maxfield Parrish, etc.

corn laws. Laws passed at various times in English history to prevent first the export and later the import of grain. The most controversial Corn Laws were those of the 19th century, which levied a high duty on imports and raised domestic prices, causing great suffering among the poor of England, especially in the manufacturing districts. An Anti-Corn Law League was formed to bring about repeal of the laws, and John BRIGHT was one of the orators who worked toward this end. The grain tariff was reduced in 1849 and entirely abolished in 1862.

cornucopia. The horn of plenty or the horn of Amalthaea. According to one Greek legend, it was broken off the goat Amalthaea by the infant JUPITER, who endowed it with the magic power of becoming filled with whatever its owner wished, and gave it to his nurses.

Cornwallis, Charles, 1st Marquis (1738-1805). English major general in American Revolution; defeated Greene but was forced to surrender shortly thereafter (1781). Viceroy of Ireland (1798-1801). Died as governor general of India.

Cornwell, Dean (1892-). American artist. Illustrated Blasco IBÁÑEZ, Somerset MAUGHAM, etc. Murals in General Motors Building at World's Fair (1939) and elsewhere.

Corombona, Vittoria, see ACCORAMBONI.

coronach. See under BALLAD.

Coronado, Francisco Vásquez (1510-1554). Spanish explorer in America. In search of famed Quivira. (See poem "Quivira" by Arthur Guiterman.) Followed course of Rio Grande and went north across what is now the Texas Panhandle and Oklahoma into eastern Kansas.

Coronet for his Mistress Philosophy, A. See CHAPMAN, GEORGE.

Corot, Jean Baptiste Camille (1796-1875). French painter associated with the BARBIZON SCHOOL. He is known for his landscapes, often containing classical figures and representing classical scenes, marked by Romantic feeling and tremulous effects of mist and sunlight.

Corporal, the little. Napoleon Bonaparte, so called after the battle of Lodi (1796). During his exile at Elba Napoleon was called Corporal Violet because his adherents wished for his return with the violets of Spring.

Corporal John. John CHURCHILL, the duke of Marlborough (1650-1722).

Corporal Trim. Uncle Toby's attendant in STERNE'S Tristram Shandy.

corporation. In commerce, etc., a body of persons considered, with legal authorization, as an individual.

A corporation is an artificial being, invisible, intangible, and existing only in contemplation of law. Dartmouth College Case (17. U.S. 518, 636).

In their names, corporations are often identified by the abbreviation Inc., meaning "incorporated."

corposant. The ST. ELMO'S FIRE or "Castor and Pollux" of the Romans; the ball of fire which is sometimes seen playing round the masts of ships in a storm. So called from Span. corpo santo, holy body. Sometimes known as comazant.

Corpus Christi. A festival of the Church, kept on the Thursday after Trinity Sunday, in honor of the Eucharist. It was instituted by Urban IV in 1264, and was the regular time for the performance of religious dramas by the trade guilds. In England many of the Corpus Christi plays of York, Coventry, and Chester are still extant.

Corpus Christi College at Cambridge was founded in 1352, and the College of the same name at Oxford in 1516.

Correggio, Antonio Allegri da (1494-1534). Italian painter, known for the grace and sensuous charm of his classical landscapes, and their effects of color, light, and shade.

Corrigan, Douglas. American airplane pilot, object of a flurry of publicity in the summer of 1938 when he made a flight from New York to Ireland. He claimed that he believed he was flying to California, and he was known in the newspapers for awhile as "Wrong-way" Corrigan.

Corsair (Ital. corsaro; Fr. corsaire; ultimately from Lat. cursus, "a chase, run"). Properly "one who gives chase," applied to the pirates of the northern coast of Africa.

The Corsair is the title of a narrative poem in three cantos by BYRON (1814). The hero is Conrad, chief of the pirates, afterwards known as Lara in the poem of that title which relates his last adventures. He enters the palace of the Sultan Seyd in the disguise of a dervish but is discovered and thrown into a dungeon. Gulnare, queen of the harem, releases him and follows him from the palace disguised as a page. Upon returning to the Pirates Isle, he finds that Medora, his true love, has died during his absence, so he returns to his native land, heads a rebellion and is shot. On his death his page Kaled is discovered to be Gulnare in disguise. Byron is said to have based The Corsair and Lara on the career of Lafitte, a notorious American buccaneer, pardoned by General Jackson for services rendered in 1815 during the attack of the British on New Orleans.

Corsican, the. Napoleon Bonaparte who was born in Ajaccio on the island of Corsica.

Cortegiano, Il. See CASTIGLIONE, BALDASARE DE.

Cortes. The Spanish or Portuguese parliament. The word means "courts," that is, "court officers." The Portuguese name in full is Cortes Gerais "general courts."

Cortés, Hernán. More commonly Hernando Cortes (1485-1547). Spanish conqueror of Mexico (1519-1521). He is an important figure in THE FAIR GOD, by Lew Wallace, and the story of his conquest is told in Prescott's CONQUEST OF MEXICO and Archibald MacLeish's poem CONQUISTADOR, both of which were based on records of the Spanish expedition left by Bernal Díaz, one of its members.

Cortesi, Arnaldo (1897-). American journalist. New York Times correspondent from Rome (1921-1938), Mexico, Argentina. In 1946 he won one of four Pulitzer prizes for reporting for his dispatches from Buenos Aires.

Cortissoz, Royal (1869-1948). American art critic and journalist. Wrote studies of Augustus St. Gaudens (1907) and John La Farge (1911).

Corvo, Baron, see ROLFE.

Corwin, Norman (1910-). Widely known American writer of radio scripts, as Ten by Corwin, More by Corwin, On a Note of Triumph. His scripts approach poetry in their rhythmic and dramatic qualities.

Cory, William Johnson (1823-1892). English lyric poet. Author of Jonica (1858), and the famous translation, "They told me, Heraclitus, they told me you were dead."

Coryate or Coryat, Thomas (1577?-1617). English traveler and buffoon at court. Coryate's Crudities (1611) are an account of his travels through Germany, Switzerland, and the Netherlands.

Corybantes. The Phrygian priests of Cybele, whose worship was celebrated with orgiastic dances and loud, wild music. Hence, a wild, unrestrained dancer is sometimes called a corybant.

Corydon. A conventional name for a rustic, a shepherd; a brainless, love-sick youth; derived from the shepherd in Virgil's Eclogue VII, and in Theocritus.

Coryell, John R. See CARTER, NICK.

coryphaeus. The leader and speaker of the chorus in Greek dramas; hence, figuratively, the leader generally, the most active member of a board, company, expedition, etc.

Coryphaeus of German literature. GOETHE (1749-1832).

Coryphaeus of Grammarians. Aristarchus (220-143 B.C.).

coryphée. A leading ballerina, formerly also her male equivalent. Hence in American colloquial usage, a chorus-girl.

Cosette. In Victor Hugo's LES MISÉRABLES, the daughter of Fantine. While she is still a little girl, Jean Valjean rescues her from a wretched existence and becomes the most devoted of fathers. Eventually she falls in love with Marius and marries him.

Così Fan Tutte (It. Thus Do They All). An opera buffa by MOZART (1790).

Cosima. Wife of Richard WAGNER. See LISZT, COSIMA.

Cosme, St. See under SAINT.

Cosmological Eye, The. See MILLER, HENRY.

Cosmopolis. See BOURGET, PAUL.

cosmos (Gr. kosmos "order, harmony"). The universe as an organic whole. Hence any independent organic entity. Cf. microcosm, "a small cosmos," as applied for instance to the human individual in contrast to macrocosm, "the world at large."

Costard. In Shakespeare's LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST, a clown who apes the court wits of Queen Elizabeth's time. He uses the word "honorificabilitudinitatibus," and some of his blunders are very ridiculous, as "ad dunghill, at the fingers' ends, as they say."

Coster, Charles de (1827-1879). Belgian writer, whose best-known work, La Légende de Thyl Ulenspiegel et de Lamme Goedzak (1868), succeeds in making of TYLL EULENSPIEGEL a delightful incarnation of the Flemish folk spirit.

Costigan, Captain. The father of Miss Fotheringay, in Thackeray's PENDENNIS. He is a happy-go-lucky Irishman, an ex-army officer, usually known as "Cos" to his companions. Though he is none too particular about his own reputation, he has always an eye out for his daughter's good name and fortune. When he learns that Pen has no special prospects financially, he makes his daughter break her engagement.

Emily Costigan. The Captain's daughter, an actress engaged, for a time, to Pen. She is better known under her stage name of The Fotheringay.

Cottard, Dr. In Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, an eminent physician with snobbish ambitions in the social world who attends the Wednesday evening salons of M. and Mme VERDURIN, neglects his practice, and insultingly reprimands his meek wife in public for being dowdy or graceless.

Cotter's Saturday Night, The. A poem by Robert BURNS (1787) famous for its description of Scottish peasant life.

Cottle, Joseph (1770-1853). English bookseller, publisher, and poet. He brought out some of the first works of SOUTHEY, COLERIDGE, and WORDSWORTH. Author of Early Recollections, chiefly relating to Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1837). His poetic efforts are remembered as having won the distinction of Byron's sarcastic scorn.

Cotton, Charles (1630-1687). English poet and first translator of Montaigne's Essays (1685). He also brought out various burlesques of Virgil, Lucian, etc., and a second part to the fifth edition of Walton's Compleat Angler (1676).

Cotton, John (1585-1652). Puritan divine, who fled from England to New England and became one of the most powerful and influential men in the American colony, successor to Thomas HOOKER. He was known for his tireless scholarship and religious fanaticism. He was the author of sermons, religious treatises, and pamphlets. His works include The Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven (1644); The Way of the Churches of Christ in New England (1645); Milk for Babes, Drawn Out of the Breasts of Both Testaments (1646), a children's catechism; The Bloody Tenent Washed and Made White in the Blood of the Lamb (1647), part of a celebrated controversy on religious toleration which took place between Cotton and Roger Williams (see BLOODY TENENT, THE); The Way of the Congregational Churches Cleared (1648); A Survey of the Sum of Church Discipline (1648). Increase MATHER was his son-in-law.

Cotton, Sir Robert Bruce (1571-1631). English antiquary, collector of books, manuscripts, coins, medals, and the like. He was the founder of the famous Cottonian Library, which contained many otherwise unobtainable manuscripts saved from destroyed monasteries, including those of BEOWULF, THE PEARL, and GAWAIN AND THE GREEN KNIGHT. The titles of the manuscripts were derived from the busts of Roman emperors which adorned the bookcases in these collections; thus the Beowulf manuscript is called Cotton Vitellius A XV, from the Emperor Vitellius, and the manuscript of The Pearl is known as Cotton Nero A X, from the Emperor Nero. Cotton allowed the free use of his library to leading scholars of his time and presented manuscripts from his collection to the Bodleian Library when it was founded. His library was bequeathed to the English nation on the death of his grandson in 1701.

Cotton Plantation State. Alabama. See under STATES.

Cotytto. The Thracian goddess of immodesty, worshiped at Athens with licentious rites. See BAPTES.

Hail! goddess of nocturnal sport,
Dark-veiled Cotytto

Milton, Comus, 129, 130.

Couch, Sir Arthur Quiller-, see QUILLER-COUCH.

Coughlin, Father Charles Edward (1891-). Canadian-born American Roman Catholic priest, known for a series of Sunday afternoon radio sermons which he delivered from his church, the Shrine of the Little Flower, at Royal Oak, Michigan (ca. 1930-1940). In these he criticized contemporary events and forcefully presented economic and political platforms of his own devising, in which he urged nationalization of natural resources and banking functions and attacked Wall Street, Communism, and the Jews. At first he supported the NEW DEAL, but later became a strong enemy of it and President Franklin D. ROOSEVELT. During the depression years of the 1930's Coughlin commanded a tremendous following among his radio audience, the members of his National Union for Social Justice, and the readers of his newspaper Social Justice, which was devoted chiefly to the propagation of anti-Semitism. He was opposed to the entry of the U.S. into World War II. The similarity of his ideas to those of Fascism was frequently pointed out. See CHRISTIAN FRONT; FASCISM, LONG, HUEY. TOMMY GALLAGHER'S CRUSADE by James T. FARRELL portrays the type of person to whom fascist and anti-Semitic sentiments like those expressed by Father Coughlin make their greatest appeal.

Coulin. A British giant mentioned by Spenser (Faerie Queene, II, x. 11); he is pursued by Debon until he comes to a chasm, and, after leaping it, he slips on the opposite side, falls back, and is killed.

Council of Clermont. A church council, held in 1095, at which Pope Urban II made a powerful speech urging the knights of medieval Europe to join in a Crusade to the Holy Land, to assist the Byzantine emperor ALEXIUS COMNENUS in his war against the Turks, to rescue the Holy Sepulcher from Moslem hands, and to reach the lands of the East where there was greater wealth and a greater abundance of food. The First Crusade was a direct outcome of the Pope's skillful pleading.

Counter-Attack. A book of poems by Siegfried SASSOON, published in 1918, denouncing and satirizing war.

countercheck quarrelsome. "Sir, how dare you utter such a falsehood? Sir, you know that it is not true." This, in TOUCHSTONE's classification (Shakespeare's As You Like It, v. 4), is the third remove from the lie direct; or rather, the lie direct in the third degree.

The reproof valiant, the countercheck quarrelsome, the lie circumstantial, and the lie direct, are not clearly defined by Touchstone; but that is not true; how dare you utter such a falsehood; if you say so, you are a liar; you lie, or are a liar, seem to fit the four degrees.

Counterfeiters, The (Les Faux-monnaieurs). A novel by André GIDE (1925; English translation, 1927). According to Gide, it was the first novel he ever wrote. It deals with the family relationships and social experiences of Bernard Profitendieu, an adolescent French youth who runs away from his home on discovering what he regards as evidence of his illegitimate birth. Édouard, uncle of Olivier Molinier, a friend of Bernard, is introduced as the supposed author of the novel, and his journal, commenting on the characters and the progress of the action, is interspersed among the chapters of the novel itself. The "counterfeiters" of the title are teachers of what Gide regards as false morals.

Counterpane, The Land of. A poem in A Child's Garden of Verse by Robert Louis Stevenson.

Counterparts. A story in DUBLINERS by James Joyce, in which a clerk is reprimanded by his employer and, to salve his wounded pride, becomes drunk and beats his small son.

counterpoint (from It. contrappunto). In music, the term for the combining of two or more melodies in simultaneous rendition, first used in the 14th century as punctus contra punctus (Lat.), "note for note." One melody, called the cantus firmus, at first taken from a Gregorian plain-song, remains fixed, and other, independent melodies accompany it. Strict counterpoint is counterpoint written according to the established rules of its early usage; free counterpoint permits variation and greater scope. Counterpoint was at first vocal, used in religious music, and in the 17th century it became instrumental. J. S. BACH is considered the greatest writer of counterpoint since the 17th century. Aldous HUXLEY wrote a novel Point Counter Point (1928).

Countess Cathleen, The. See YEATS, WILLIAM BUTLER.

Count of Monte Cristo, The. A romance by Alexandre DUMAS (1844). When the story opens, the young hero, Edmond Dantes, is on the point of becoming captain of his vessel and of marrying his sweetheart, Mercedes. On a false charge of political intrigue made by jealous rivals, he is sentenced to life imprisonment in the Château d'If. He digs a passage-way through the thick walls of the Château with infinite labor and finally makes his escape. A half-mad fellow prisoner, a Catholic Abbé with whom he had established communications, had told him of a buried treasure on the island of Monte Cristo. With this treasure he becomes a powerful and mysterious figure and eventually exacts a fearful revenge from all those who have wronged him.

Count Robert of Paris. A novel by Sir Walter Scott (1831), relating the adventures of Count Robert and his wife Brenhilda, who set out together on the First Crusade (1096-1099). Vying in interest with Robert is Hereward the Saxon, one of the Varangian guard of the Emperor ALEXIUS COMNENUS. Hereward enlists under the Count's banner and discovers in Brenhilda's maid Bertha his old Saxon sweetheart.

Country, Father of his. See under FATHER.
country-dance. An English dance of popular origin, viewed by Nicolas Slonimsky as the ancestor of several modern ballroom dances.

The English Country-dance became the Contredanse in France, and this in turn was called Contradanza in Spain, or later, simply Danza. When imported by the Spaniards into Cuba, it became the Danza Habanera, that is, the dance of Havana, and then was reintroduced into Spain as Habanera. During the Spanish-American War, a popular dance called Habanera del Café appeared, which was the prototype of the Tango.

Country Doctor, The (Le Médecin de campagne). A novel by BALZAC (1833). The principal character is Dr. BENASSIS.

coup (Fr.). Properly a blow or stroke, but used both in French and English in a large number of ways, as for a clap of thunder, a draught of liquids, a piece of play in a game (a move in chess, etc.), a stroke of policy or of luck, a trick, etc.

a good coup. A good hit or haul.

coup d'essai. A trial-piece; a piece of work serving for practice.

coup d'état. A state stroke; the term is applied to a bold measure taken by a government to prevent a supposed or actual danger, as when a large body of men are arrested suddenly for fear they should overturn the government. It also applies to deliberate action to seize power undertaken by a group of relatively minor authority.

The famous coup d'état, by which Louis Napoleon became possessed of absolute power, took place on December 2, 1851.

coup de grâce. The finishing stroke; the stroke of mercy. When a criminal was tortured by the wheel or otherwise, the executioner gave him a coup de grâce, or blow on the head or breast, to put him out of his misery.

coup de main. A sudden stroke, a stratagem whereby something is effected suddenly.

coup d'œil. A view, glance, prospect; the effect of things at the first glance; literally "a stroke of the eye."

coup de pied de l'âne. Literally, a kick from the ass's foot; figuratively, a blow given to a vanquished or fallen man; a cowardly blow; an insult offered to one who has not the power of returning or avenging it. The allusion is to the fable of the sick lion kicked by the ass.

coup de soleil. A sunstroke, any malady produced by exposure to the sun.

coup de théâtre. An unforeseen or unexpected turn in a drama producing a sensational effect; a piece of claptrap, something planned for effect.

coup manqué. A false stroke, a miss, a failure.

Couperus, Louis Marie Anne (1863-1923). Dutch novelist. The Small Souls (1914), one of his more than thirty novels, is an example of his best work.

couplet. In versification, a pair of lines whose end-words rhyme. The best-known example of the form is the heroic couplet, so named because it was used in the composition of epic poetry in the 17th and 18th centuries. It was written in iambic pentameter measure, and in neo-Classical usage the two lines were required to express a complete thought, with a subordinate pause at the end of the first line. Pope was the most skillful writer of heroic couplets, which were often used for epigrams:

You beat your pate, and fancy wit will come.
Knock as you please—there's nobody at home.
Pope

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates, and men decay.
Goldsmith

By the time of the Romantic period the thought was carried beyond the two rhyming lines of the couplet, which was then known as open or run-on, in contrast with the former example, or closed couplet:

A thing of beauty is a joy forever:
Its loveliness increases; it will never Pass into nothingness; but still will keep
A bower quiet for us, and a sleep.
Keats

Courageous, Captains, see CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS.

Courbet, Gustave (1819-1877). French painter, initiator of the movement against the painters of historical and pseudo-classical subjects of the school of DAVID and INGRES. He painted realistic pictures of men and women, sometimes on autobiographical events, animal scenes, and landscapes. During his entire career, Courbet's work was attacked by hostile critics, and his association with the Communists in the Revolution of 1871 added further to his misfortunes, causing him to be sentenced to a term in prison and to the payment of heavy fines in money.

Cournos, John (1881-). Russian-American novelist. Author of The Mask (1919), The Wall (1921), The New Candide (1924), etc.

Cours de Philosophie Positive. See COMTE, AUGUSTE.

Courtier, The. See CASTIGLIONE, BALDASARE DE.

courtly love (Fr. amour courtois). A widespread convention of the Middle Ages, according to which the knight regarded the lady with whom he was in love with deep veneration and unquestioning devotion. This was accompanied by exaggerated gallantry of conduct and violent physical effects—such as fainting, loss of sleep and appetite, and the like—when he came into her presence or brooded upon her indifference. The convention originated in the Provence, the south of France, during the late 11th century or early 12th century, and was at its height at the court of ELEANOR OF AQUITAINE; from there it spread to the north of France and to Germany. See MINNESINGERS. Eleanor employed ANDREAS CAPELLANUS to draw up an elaborate list of rules for the courtly lover in his treatise De Arte Honeste Amandi (Concerning the Art of Loving Honestly). This includes an enumeration of the virtues required of the knight who aspired to be a lover, and announces as an outstanding tenet of the cult of Courtly Love the incompatibility of love with marriage, although the lady in question was nearly always married to someone other than her lover and often to his overlord. "Courts of Love" were held, and theoretical problems of love were proposed on which Eleanor and her ladies passed judgment in accordance with the rules of Andreas.

The TROUBADOURS expressed the convention in their poetry, and through their influence it reached Italy, where it was adopted by a group of poets associated with the Sicilian court of the Emperor Frederick II and by the school of IL DOLCE STIL NUOVO. Here the exaggerated worship of women acquired religious overtones and was identified with the cult of worship of the Virgin Mary. Through DANTE and PETRARCH, the convention finally reached the Elizabethan writers of lyrics and love-sonnets and became a permanent part of the literary concept of love until the 19th century.

Scholars disagree on the origin of the cult of Courtly Love, but some maintain it grew out of the influence of the Near Eastern goddess-cults or the strongly Platonized literature of the Arabs in Spain. The principles of the convention are embodied in a number of medieval romances, particularly the cycles dealing with King ARTHUR, TRISTAN and Isolt, and TROILUS and Cressida. Outstanding single works exemplifying it are Lancelot, ou le chevalier de la charette (Lancelot, Or the Knight of the Cart) (see LANCELOT), by CHRÉTIEN DE TROYES; The Romance of the Rose; and Chaucer's Troilus and Criseyde.

Courtrai, Battle of, see BATTLE OF THE SPURS.

Courtship of Miles Standish, The. A narrative poem by LONGFELLOW (1858), based on the early history of the PILGRIM FATHERS. Miles Standish, the bluff middle-aged soldier of the colony, wishes to marry the Puritan maid, Priscilla, but instead of presenting his own cause, he sends his young friend, John Alden. Priscilla's answer is, "Why don't you speak for yourself, John?"; and although John is too loyal to speak for himself at once, eventually all ends happily for the two lovers.

Courvoisier, Eugen. The hero of Jessie Fothergill's FIRST VIOLIN.

Cousin, Victor (1792-1867). French philosopher. Studied German philosophy. Met Hegel and Schelling. Leader of the Eclectic School and first to formulate ECLECTICISM as a method. Wrote histories of philosophy in the 18th Century and studies of Pascal and Kant.

Cousin Betty (La Cousine Bette). A novel by BALZAC (1846). See FISCHER, LISBETH.

Cousin Jacky or Jan. A Cornishman.

Cousin Michel or Michael. The nickname of a German. See NICKNAMES OF NATIONALITIES.

Cousin Pons. A novel by BALZAC (1847). See PONS.

Cousins, Norman (1912-). Editor SATURDAY REVIEW OF LITERATURE. Author of Modern Man is Obsolete (1945), an essay concerning the release of atomic energy; also The Good Inheritance: The Democratic Chance (1942); etc. Co-editor with William Rose Benét of The Poetry of Freedom (1945).

couvade (from Fr. couver, to hatch). The name given by anthropologists to the custom prevalent among some primitive races by which the father of a newly born infant makes a pretense of going through the same experiences as the mother, lies up for a time, abstains from certain foods, etc., as though he, too, were physically affected by the birth. The custom has been observed by travelers in Guiana and other parts of South America, among some African tribes, in parts of China, Borneo, etc., and it was noted by the ancients as occurring in Corsica and among the Celtiberians.

Covarrubias, Miguel (1902–). Mexican artist and illustrator. Did much work for Vanity Fair and illustrated many American books, mainly in a style of grotesque characterization.

Covenanters. A term applied, during the English civil wars, to the Scotch Presbyterians, who, in 1643, united by "solemn league and covenant" to resist the encroachments of Charles I on religious liberty.

Coventry. A town in England of historic associations. During World War II it was laid in complete ruin by bombing attacks from the air. Worst raid, November 14, 1940.

Coventry Mysteries or Plays. One of the important series of English MYSTERY PLAYS, so called because they were supposedly acted at Coventry.

send one to Coventry. To take no notice of him; to make him feel that he is in disgrace by having no dealings with him. Cf. also BOYCOTT. It is said that the citizens of Coventry had at one time so great a dislike to soldiers that a woman seen speaking to one was instantly tabooed; hence, when a soldier was sent to Coventry he was cut off from all social intercourse.

Hutton, in his History of Birmingham, gives a different version. He says that Coventry was a stronghold of the parliamentary party in the civil wars, and that troublesome and refractory royalist prisoners were sent there for safe custody.

Peeping Tom of Coventry. See under GO-DIVA.

Coverdale, Miles (1) (1488–1568). English priest, converted to Lutheranism and reputed to be the translator of the first complete Bible in English (1535). See under BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

(2) The narrator of Hawthorne's BLITHEDALE ROMANCE and a leading character in the story.

Coverley, Sir Roger de. (1) A member of an hypothetical club in the SPECTATOR, "who lived in Soho Square when he was in town." Sir Roger is the type of an English squire in the reign of Queen Anne. He figures in thirty papers of the Spectator.

Who can be insensible to his unpretending virtues and amiable weaknesses; his modesty, generosity, hospitality, and eccentric whims, the respect for his neighbors, and the affection of his domestics?—Hazlitt.

(2) A well-known country dance was known by this name (also Roger of Coverly) many years before Addison's time. Its American form is the Virginia reel.

covey. An assemblage of birds, specifically of partridges. There are numerous terms in English signifying group, assemblage, etc., restricted by usage to certain creatures and hence in extension to certain metaphoric situations. Some of them are: flock (of sheep, geese, goats, and hence of believers), herd (of cattle or swine and hence of vulgar, unreasoning people), pack (of hounds and wolves, and hence of pursuers), drove (of cattle and hence of docile fools), bevy (of quails, larks), flight (of birds and hence of girls or women), swarm (of insects and hence numberless insignificant individuals), shoal (of fish). Cf. also skein, gaggle, etc.

Coward, Noel Pierce (1899–). English actor, composer, and playwright, known for his witty, brittle, and sophisticated comedies of the English "leisure class." His works for the theater, in addition to musical revues, include The Vortex (1923), a serious drama; Bitter Sweet (1929), an operetta; Private Lives (1931), his most successful comedy; Cavalcade (1931), a patriotic play on the British Victorian tradition in the history of a single family; and Blithe Spirit (1941). Present Indicative (1937) is an autobiography.

Cowboy. An American cattle herder on the Western plains, hero of folk-ballads, tall tales, dime novels, motion-picture melodramas, radio serials, and the games of small boys. The name originally was applied to Tory raiders during the American Revolution, who plundered neutral land.

Popular representatives and portrayers of the cowboy have been BUFFALO BILL, Kit Carson, William S. Hart, Tom Mix, and the LONE RANGER.

Cowden-Clarke, see CLARKE.

Cowl, Jane (1884–). Original surname Cowles. American actress. Starred in Within the Law, Common Clay, Lilac Time, Romeo and Juliet, The Road to Rome, etc.

Cowley, Abraham (1618–1667). English poet and essayist, a Royalist in sympathies during the English Civil War. His conceits were fantastic and extreme, popular in his own day but regarded with disfavor by the time of DRYDEN. His best-known poem is the DAVIDEIS (1656). His other works include Poetical Blossoms (1636) and The Works of Mr. Abraham Cowley (1668). The English Writings of Cowley were published in 1905–1906.

Cowley, Malcolm (1898–). American literary critic and poet, an editor of THE NEW REPUBLIC. His poetry, marked by satirical wit and sharp impressions in a disillusioned picture of his age, appears in Blue Juniata (1929) and The Dry Season (1942). The Lost Generation (1931) is a critical study of the neurotic and disillusioned intellectuals of the years following World War I, and Exile's Return:

A Narrative of Ideas (1934) is concerned with a similar subject, autobiographical in part.

Cowper, William (1731-1800). English poet of the pre-Romantic school of the 18th century. From his twenty-fourth year on he suffered from a morbid religious mania which manifested itself in a sense of overwhelming guilt and despair and intermittent attacks of insanity. His poetic activity began late in life, with the production of hymns, didactic verse, and nature lyrics, and intense, introspective religious poetry. His most famous poem is THE TASK (1785). Other poems of Cowper's which are well known are Truth, The Progress of Error, Expostulation, Hope, Charity, Conversation, and Retirement, all published in 1782, and THE DIVERTING HISTORY OF JOHN GILPIN, a humorous ballad, published with The Task. A collection of his hymns appears in Olney Hymns (1779). He also translated Homer and Milton and on his death left letters and introspective autobiographical writings. See also AUSTEN, LADY; CASTAWAY, THE; OLNEY; UNWIN, MRS. MARY; STRICKEN DEER.

Cowperwood, Frank. The central figure of Theodore DREISER's novels The Financier (1912), The Titan (1914) and The Stoic (1947). Cowperwood is a ruthlessly dominating Philadelphia financier who finally receives a prison sentence for illegal dealings. In The Titan he puts his prison life behind him and builds up another great fortune in Chicago. He marries his former mistress, but continues to indulge in innumerable affairs with women. The novels are said to be in some respects based on the career of Charles T. Yerkes.

Cox, Anthony Berkeley (1893-). English author of detective and psychological crime fiction. Writes under the pseudonyms of Anthony Berkeley and Francis Iles.

Cox, Kenyon (1856-1919). American painter and writer on art. Portrait of Saint Gaudens in Metropolitan Museum of Art, murals in Library of Congress, etc. The Fine Arts (1911), Concerning Painting (1917).

Cox, Palmer (1840-1924). Illustrator and author. Best-known for series of "Brownie" books for children.

Coxey's Army. An "army" of several hundred unemployed, led by the business man and politician Jacob Sechler Coxey (1854-), on a march on Washington, D.C. (1894 and 1914) to demonstrate in favor of legislation to produce emergency work for the unemployed. Coxey's demands anticipated the plans of the W.P.A.

Coyle, Kathleen. Irish novelist. A Flock of Birds, a novel about the Irish revolution, is her own choice among her sensitive novels. In Immortal Ease (1939), the character Victoria Rising is supposed to be based on Elinor WYLIE.

Cozzens, James Gould (1903-). American novelist. The first of his novels to attract wide attention was based on the Vestris disaster and called S.S. San Pedro (1931). The Just and the Unjust (1942) is a novel concerning a trial in a country town.

Crabbe, George (1754-1832). English poet, associated with Samuel JOHNSON and Edmund BURKE, considered to be a transitional figure between neo-Classicism and Romanticism. He was humanitarian in his sympathies but realistic and opposed to sentimentality; he wrote in the heroic couplet. His best-known poem is THE VILLAGE (1783), a satirical answer to Goldsmith's THE DESERTED VILLAGE. Other poems by Crabbe, similar in theme to The Village, include The Newspaper (1785); The Parish Register (1809); The Borough (1810); Tales of the Hall (1819).

Crabbed Age and Youth. (1) An anonymous Elizabethan lyric (1599), presenting a series of antitheses between youth and age.

(2) An essay (1878) by Robert Louis STEVENSON, appearing in a collection entitled Virginibus Puerisque (To Girls and Boys) (1881).

Crabshaw, Timothy. A servant in Smollett's ADVENTURES OF SIR LAUNCELOT GREAVES (1760).

Crabtree, Lotta (1847-1924). American actress, excelling in burlesque. Subject of Troupers of the Gold Coast: or the Rise of Lotta Crabtree by Constance Rourke.

Cracker State. Georgia. See under STATES.
cracklings. Usually cracklins. Dialect. Meat tissue from which fat has been fried.

... the smell of hot cracklin and of young roast pork.

Thomas Wolfe

Hence cracklin bread, corn bread containing little fatty leftovers from lard making.

Crack-up, The. Title of Edmund Wilson's edition of the literary remains of F. Scott Fitzgerald.

Craddock, Charles Egbert. Pseudonym of Mary Noailles Murfree (1850-1922). American author of local-color novels and stories dealing with life in the Tennessee Mountains, including In the Tennessee Mountains (1884); Down the Ravine (1885); The Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountains (1885); The Mystery of Witch-Face Mountain (1895); The Young Mountaineers (1897).

Cradle of Liberty. Faneuil Hall in Boston is so called from its use as a meeting-place for the American patriots during the Revolutionary era.

Cradle Will Rock, The. See BLITZSTEIN, MARC.

Craig (Edward) Gordon (1872-). English actor, stage designer, producer, and writer on subjects related to the theater. He organized and published a journal, The Mask (1908), and founded a theatrical school at the Arena Goldoni in Florence, Italy. Son of Ellen Terry and Edward Godwin.

Craigenputtock. The lonely farm owned by Jane WELSH, the wife of Thomas CARLYLE who lived and wrote there from 1826 to 1834.

Craigie, Pearle Mary Teresa. Pseudonym John Oliver Hobbes (1867-1906). English novelist and dramatist of American birth. Became a Roman Catholic in 1892. One of her best-known novels is The Herb Moon (1896).

Crais-Billon, see CRÉBILLON.

Cram, Ralph Adams (1863-1942). American architect, known for his use of English Gothic architecture in churches, schools, and colleges, from which it came to be called "collegiate Gothic."

Crampart. In the medieval beast epic Reynard the Fox, the king who makes a wooden horse which will travel 100 miles an hour.

swifter than Crampart's horse. Quick as lightning; quick as thought.

Cranach, Lucas (1472-1553). German painter and engraver. His fame rests firmly on his portraits of Martin LUTHER and Philip MELANCHTHON, both of whom were his personal friends. His son Lucas Cranach the Younger (1515-1585) painted portraits and historical subjects.

Crane, Harold Hart (1899-1932). American poet, one of the first to attempt to express the spirit of a mechanized 20th century in valid and appropriate poetic terms. He was influenced mainly by T. S. ELIOT and the Elizabethan and 17th-century poets, and his poetry is marked by dramatic rhetoric reminiscent of the Elizabethans and extremely complex, compact imagery which is often obscure and fantastic in the manner of the METAPHYSICALS. He used blank verse and conventional stanza forms. Denounced as unintelligible by many readers, Crane influenced a number of younger American poets. His published works are White Buildings (1926), chiefly lyrics; THE BRIDGE (1930), an attempt at an epic poem on America, left incomplete; and Collected Poems (1933). See also GREENBERG MANUSCRIPTS. For full analysis of some of Crane's characteristic poems, cf. The Double Agent, by R. P. Blackmur.

Crane, Ichabod. The gawky and timorous schoolmaster in Washington IRVING's Legend of Sleepy Hollow. "He was tall, but exceedingly lank, with narrow shoulders, long arms and legs, hands that dangled a mile out of his sleeves, feet that might have served for shovels, and his whole frame most loosely hung together . . . He was, in fact, an odd mixture of small shrewdness and simple credulity." Ichabod is one of the best-known characters in all American literature. For the tale, see SLEEPY HOLLOW.

Crane, Nathalia Clara Ruth (1913-). American poet, celebrated during the 1920's for the precocious lyric poetry she wrote as a child, first published in The Janitor's Boy (1924). Her other books of verse include Lava Lane (1925), The Singing Crow (1926), Venus Invisible (1928), and as adult volumes, Swear by the Night (1936), The Ark and the Alphabet (1939), and The Death of Poetry (1942).

Crane, Stephen (1871-1900). American novelist and short-story writer, one of the first realists in American fiction, influenced by the 19th-century Russian novelists and the French writers of the school of NATURALISM. His best-known novel is THE RED BADGE OF COURAGE (1895). His other works include MAGGIE: A GIRL OF THE STREETS (1892), regarded as the first Naturalistic novel of the U.S.; The Black Riders (1895), a volume of poems influenced by Walt Whitman and Emily DICKINSON; The Little Regiment (1896); The Open Boat (1898), a short story; Active Service (1899); The Monster (1899); War is Kind (1899); Wounds in the Rain (1900), sketches of the Spanish-American War; The O'Ruddy (1903), completed after his death by Robert Barr. Crane's reputation was repeatedly attacked by people hostile to his works, although he was defended by such figures as Hamlin GARLAND, W. D. HOWELLS, and James HUNEKER.

Crane, Walter (1845-1915). English painter and illustrator. Leader and typical representative of the romantic movement in decorative art. Excelled in imaginative illustrations, particularly for children's books. Cf. also his illustrations for Spenser's Faerie Queene (1894-1896). He was associated with William Morris in the contemporary Socialist movement.

Cranford. A story by Mrs. GASKELL (1853) dealing with the life of the peaceful little English village of Cranford, inhabited chiefly by old ladies who practice "elegant economy" and a quaint social decorum, under the leadership of the Honorable Mrs. Jamieson. The chief characters are the two Miss Jenkyns. Miss Deborah, the elder, is a great admirer of the involved sentences of Samuel Johnson and very firm as to the proprieties; Miss Mattie is her gentle, lovable, timid sister. After Deborah's death and the failure of the bank, Miss Mattie is forced to open a little shop, but soon afterward her brother Peter, who ran away from home as a boy, returns from India with a considerable fortune. One of the most interesting episodes of the book is concerned with the noisy and likable Captain Brown, a bull in a china shop among the old ladies of Cranford—disapproved of because he prefers Dickens to Dr. Johnson and speaks aloud of his poverty, but greatly mourned when he sacrifices his life to save a child from being run over by a train.

cranial index. See under CEPHALIC INDEX.

Cranmer, Thomas (1489–1556). Archbishop of Canterbury (1533). Resourceful adviser to Henry VIII in his marital troubles. Gained the king's confidence by suggesting a way of repudiating Catherine of Aragon without Papal dispensation. The king summoned him (1529) in these terms: "Let him be sent for out of hand. This man, I trow, has got the right sow by the ear." On accession of Queen Mary, he was degraded, condemned, and burned at the stake. Cranmer's constructive work for the church was remarkable (promotion of Bible translation, revision of Prayer Book, etc.). He was one of those extraordinary characters who seem to have remained limited to the 16th century. His seemingly devious actions gain in consistency when one remembers that Church and State to him were one and that he held that their joint sovereignty should rest in the hands of the king.

Cranmer's Bible. See under BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

Crapaud or Johnny Crapaud. A Frenchman; according to Guillim's Display of Heraldry (1611), so called from a device of the ancient kings of France, "three toads (Fr. crapauds) erect, saltant."

craps.

shoot craps. To take part in a gambling game played with two dice in which the dice are exhorting in a particular lingo. A losing throw of 2, 3, 12 is called crap, craps, crap-out; 7 or 11 is natural, nick; 3 is little trey; 4 Little Joe; 5 fever in the South (and no doctor), Phoebe, Little Phoebe, 6 Captain Hicks, Captain Jimmy Hicks of the Horse Marines; 8 Ada Ross the stable boss, eighter from Decatur; 9 quinine (the bitter dose), Carolina nine; 10 Big Dick from Boston; 12 boxcars; etc. Negroes are particularly fond of this game.

Wild crap-shooters with a whoop and call.
Vachel Lindsay, The Congo.

Crapsey, Adelaide (1878–1914). American poet. Her brief, compact lyrics, predominantly in a form called CINQUAIN, resemble the work of the Imagists (see IMAGISM). They are few in number and were published after her death in a volume entitled Verse (1915). Her father was Algernon Sidney Crapsey (1847–1927), American Episcopal clergyman, convicted of heresy in 1906, author of The Last of the Heretics (1924).

Crashaw, Richard (1612–1649). English poet, a convert to Catholicism. His poetry is marked by passionate religious emotion and mysticism, and lush, sensuous imagery and ornate conceits in the manner of the Italian poetry of the 16th and early 17th centuries. His works include Epigrammatum Sacrorum Liber (1634); Steps to the Temple (1648); and Carmen Deo Nostro (1652). From the beginning of the English Civil War until his death he lived in Italy, attached to the household of Cardinal Palotto and to the shrine of Loretto.

Crassus, Marcus Licinius. Surnamed Dives, i.e. "the Rich" (115?–53 B.C.). Roman financier and politician. After the bloody rivalry of Marius and Sulla, contending leaders, as Lucullus, Pompey the Great, Crassus, and Julius Caesar dominated the Roman affairs Crassus defeated SPARTACUS in 73 B.C. when the latter led a great insurrection of slaves and gladiators. Through speculation he amassed a vast fortune; joined Pompey and Caesar in organizing the First Triumvirate; was finally killed at Carrhoe by the Parthians.

Cratchit, Bob. In Dickens' CHRISTMAS CAROL, clerk of Ebenezer Scrooge, stockbroker. Though Bob Cratchit has to maintain nine persons on 15s. a week, he has a happier home and spends a merrier Christmas than his master, with all his wealth and selfishness.

Tiny Tim Cratchit. The little lame son of Bob Cratchit, the Benjamin of the family, the most helpless and most beloved of all. Tim does not die, but Ebenezer Scrooge, after his change of character, makes him his special care.

Craven, Frank (1875?–1945). American actor and playwright. Notable success in the rôle of commentator in Thornton Wilder's Our Town; author of Too Many Cooks and The First Year.

Craven, Thomas (1889–). American art critic and popular writer. Men of Art (1931); A Treasury of Art Masterpieces (1939); etc.

Crawford, Francis Marion (1854–1909). American novelist, best known for his popular romances set against a background of history or a glamorous depiction of life in cosmopolitan society. His books include MR. ISAACS: A TALE OF MODERN INDIA (1882); the Saracinesca series, consisting of SARACINESCA (1887), SANT' ILARIO (1889), Don Orsino (1892), and CORLEONE (1896); VIA CRUCIS (1898); The White Sister (1909); and numerous other historical and romantic novels.

Crawford, Mary and Henry. Characters in Jane Austen's novel, MANSFIELD PARK.

Crawford, Nelson Antrim (1888–). American author and poet. A Man of Learning (1928), Unhappy Wind (1930), We Liberals (1936). Editor of The Household Magazine (from 1928).

Crawley, Captain Rawdon. The husband of Becky Sharp in Thackeray's VANITY FAIR. He is separated from his wife and ends his days as governor of Coventry Island.

Sir Pitt Crawley. Rawdon's father, a rich, vulgar baronet, "a philosopher with a taste for low life." On the death of his second wife Sir Pitt proposes to Becky Sharp, but she has already married his son.

Mr. Pitt Crawley. Sir Pitt's eldest son. He inherits fortunes from his father and from the aunt who disowned Crawley for his marriage to Becky.

Mr. and Mrs. Bute Crawley. A "tall, stately, jolly, shovel-hatted rector," brother of Sir Pitt, and his politic little wife.

Crawley or Crawley brook. A river in Bedfordshire. That part called the brook, which runs into the Ouse, is so crooked that a boat would have to go eighty miles in order to make a progress direct of eighteen. Hence the phrase, crooked as Crawley or Crawley brook.

Crawley, Rev. Josiah. In Trollope's Last Chronicle of Barset (see BARSETSHIRE), a proud and sensitive country clergyman, driven almost out of his mind by financial pressure. He is accused of having stolen a check, and in spite of his absolute integrity, has hard work to allay suspicion because of his unpleasant and formidable manner, which keeps even his best friends at a distance.

Crayant. The name given to one of the daughters of Chanticleer, the Cock, in Caxton's version of Reynard the Fox. Her sisters were Coppen and Cantart.

Crayon, Geoffrey, Esq. A pseudonym of Washington IRVING.

Crazy Horse. Indian name Tashunka-Uitco (1849?–1877). American Indian chief of the Oglala Sioux. Surrendered after the battle of Little Big Horn (1876), in which Custer was killed and was killed himself when he refused to submit to imprisonment. Cf. Longfellow's poem, "The Year of a Hundred Years," and John G. Neihardt, Songs of the Indian Wars.

Crazy Hunter, The. A short novel by Kay BOYLE (1940), in which a lonely young girl devotes herself to the training of a blind horse, with which she identifies herself in her unhappiness and isolation, until he is able to carry her as easily as he did before he lost his sight.

Creakle. In Dickens' DAVID COPPERFIELD, a hard, vulgar schoolmaster, to whose charge

David is entrusted, and in whose school he first makes the acquaintance of Steerforth.

The circumstance about him which impressed me most was that he had no voice, but spoke in a whisper. Dickens, David Copperfield, vi.

Cream City. Milwaukee. See under city.

Cream of the Jest, The. A novel by James Branch CABELL (1917). The hero, Felix Kennaston, is a rather unattractive American author of forty or thereabouts who lives a prosaic enough existence in a little Virginia town by day; but by night he visits the magic realm of POICTESME, where he loves the elusive, beautiful Ettare.

Creasy, Sir Edward Shepherd (1812–1878). English historian and author of Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World (1851). See under BATTLES.

Creation, The. An oratorio by HANDEL, produced in 1798 at Vienna under the title of Die Schöpfung.

Creative Evolution (L'Évolution créatrice). Chief work of Henri BERGSON (1911). In it he explains how intuition penetrates to the essence of the soul—the élan vital, vital impulse or energy—where science cannot extend, and how the individual participates in all his perceptions and actions and responses in the actual processes of evolution, which are taking place continually by dissociation, change, and constant movement. By intensity of feeling and knowledge of the self, the individual can direct the continual evolutionary energy of life into the channels he chooses and achieve progress. The introduction of the irrational concept of the élan vital into modern philosophy marks to some people the bankruptcy of positivistic science and re-establishes the claim to serious consideration of traditional "mystico-romantic" ideas like the vital force, vis vitae or vitalis, etc.

creature comfort. Not the comfort of God's creatures but their animal needs, as food, drink, clothing, without which they cannot be comfortable.

Crébillon. Originally in full Prosper Jolyot, Sieur de Crais-Billon (1674–1762). French tragic poet and member of the Académie Française. Idoménée (1705), Atrée et Thyeste (1707), Rhadamiste et Zénobie (1711). His son Claude Prosper Jolyot de Crébillon (1707–1777) is remembered for his novels in which he portrayed the corruption of contemporary society.

credence. A kind of sideboard, or buffet, generally associated with the Renaissance. Originally, the table on which the food was placed before serving to be tasted by a servant to guard against poisoning. The tasting itself was also called credence because it proved that credence could be given to the wholesome nature of the food.

credo. A creed or confession of faith. Credo is Latin for "I believe" and is the first word of several creeds. The Protestant creeds are felt to be authoritative only in subordination to the Bible. In the Catholic Churches the creeds have equal authority with the Bible. The more important historical Christian creeds are the Apostles' Creed and the Nicene Creed (4th century), the Athanasian Creed (5th century), the Decrees of the Council of Trent (1563), the Augsburg Confession (1530), the Westminster Confession of Faith (1647), etc.

Creel, George (1876-). American journalist. Chairman of the Committee on Public Information (1917-1919) and of the national advisory board, W.P.A. (1935). Author of Tom Paine—Liberty Bell (1931), etc.

creese, kris. A heavy dagger, used among the Malays, with a waved blade and a handle forming an oblique angle with it. In George Du Maurier's novel Peter Ibbetson (1891) the hero's uncle used a creese when Peter fought with him and killed him.

Creevey, Thomas (1768-1838). English diarist of the Georgian era. His journals and correspondence covering a period of 36 years were published in 1903 as the Creevey Papers.

Cremona. A violin of the greatest excellence; so called from Cremona, in Lombardy, where in the 17th and early 18th centuries lived violin makers of world-wide notoriety, such as Andrea Amati and Antonio his son, Antonius Stradivarius his pupil, and Giuseppe Guarnerius the pupil of Stradivarius.

Creole (from Span. criadillo, diminutive of criado, bred, brought up, native to the locality). A descendant of white people, born in Mexico, South America, and the West Indies. Also, a descendant of French and Spanish settlers of the southern U.S., especially in Louisiana. Hence, anything "native" and therefore superior may be called Creole. The phrase creole negro is used in the West Indies to distinguish native Negroes from immigrants.

Creole Sketches. See HEARN, LAFCADIO.

Crescent, The. Turkey, from the crescent moon on its flag.

Crescent City. New Orleans. See under CITY.

Cressida or Criseyde. See TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Cresswell, Madame. A woman of infamous character who bequeathed £10 for a funeral sermon, in which nothing ill should be said of her. The Duke of Buckingham wrote the sermon, which was as follows: "All I shall say of her is this—she was born well, she married well, lived well, and died well; for she was born at Shadwell, married Cresswell, lived at Clerkenwell, and died in Bride-well."

cretin. A person showing striking mental deficiency. The word has developed from a French dialectal form meaning "Christian," not because the French thought that Christians were mentally deficient but because the word for Christian had become synonymous with human being and the mentally deficient were referred to, as it were, as "that (poor) human being" or "that (poor) creature."

Creusa. In classic myth, the daughter of Priam and wife of Aeneas.

Crèvecoeur, Michel Guillaume Jean de (1735-1813). Pseudonym J. Hector St. John. French author and traveler, a resident of America from 1754 to 1780. He lived for some time on a farm in the colony of New York with his American wife, Mahetabel Tiffet, and their three children, after having traveled through Canada, the Great Lakes region, and Pennsylvania. He is best known for his Letters from an American Farmer, an extremely popular series of essay-letters, published in London in 1782, in Paris in 1784, and in Philadelphia in 1793. Crèvecoeur returned to the U.S. as a French consul in 1783, but found his wife dead and his family scattered. He also wrote Voyage dans la haute Pennsylvanie et dans l'état de New York, par un membre adoptif de la nation Onéida (1801), an account of his early travels and of the American Indians, which he pretended to have translated from an original manuscript.

Crewe, Sara, or What Happened at Miss Minchin's. A book by Frances Hodgson BURNETT.

Crews, Laura Hope (1880-1942). American actress on stage and screen. In 1906 she created the role of Polly Jordan in William Vaughn Moody's The Great Divide (1906).

Cribb, Tom (1781-1848). English champion pugilist whose claim to fame rests on the fact that he lost but one fight in his entire professional career.

Crichton, Admirable, see ADMIRABLE CRICHTON.

Crichton, Kyle (1896-). American journalist. A college graduate with experience as a coal miner and steel worker. Under the pseudonym of Robert Forsythe he contributed biting articles to the New Masses and the Daily Worker. Associate editor of Collier's Weekly. Reader Than The Rose is a collection of his Leftist articles.

Cricket on the Hearth, The. A Christmas tale by Charles Dickens (1845). See PEERY-BINGLE.

crickey, crikey. An exclamation; a mild oath; originally one of the numerous euphemistic modifications of Christ. Others are crickets, jeepers, Christopher Columbus, cheeses, gee-my-knee. The supply is inexhaustible.

Crillon, Louis Balbis de Berton de (1541-1615). One of the greatest captains of the 16th century. He fought at the battle of Ivry (1590), and was entitled by Henri IV "le brave des braves." He is also known as l'homme sans peur (the man without fear).

Henry IV, after the battle of Arques (1589), wrote to Crillon: "Prend-toi, brave Crillon, nous avons vaincu à Arques, et tu n'y étais pas." This letter has become proverbial.

where wert thou, Crillon? Crillon, sur-named the Brave, in his old age went to church, and listened intently to the story of the Crucifixion. In the middle of the narrative he grew excited, and, unable to contain himself, cried out, "Où étais-tu, Crillon?" (What were you about, Crillon, to allow of such things as these?)

Crime and Punishment. A novel by Fyodor DOSTOYEVSKY (1866). The student Raskolnikov, almost out of his mind with poverty and depression, murders an old woman money-lender. Tormented by his thoughts, he finds a friend in Sonia, a girl who is attempting by prostitution to save her family from starving. After she reads aloud to him the story of Lazarus, he feels sure of her sincerity. He confesses his crime and is sentenced to seven years in Siberia, but looks forward hopefully to the future. This novel, an intense psychological study, is marked by the introspective analysis of the author's other novels. It was dramatized as a play and repeatedly as a motion picture.

Crimean War (1854-1856). Turkey and its allies (England, France and Sardinia) fought Russia and succeeded for the time being in shattering their adversary's ambitions of leadership in southeastern Europe. The chief battles were at Alma, Balaklava, Inkerman, and the famous siege of Sevastopol. The result was the Treaty and Declaration of Paris (1856), in which the integrity of Turkey was guaranteed, the Black Sea neutralized and Danubian navigation declared free.

Crime of Sylvestre Bonnard, The (Le Crime de Sylvestre Bonnard). A novel by Anatole FRANCE (1881). Sylvestre Bonnard is a delightfully kind-hearted, absent-minded old archaeologist whose immense learning has served only to make him more lovable. His simple wants are cared for by his vigilant and devoted servant Thérèse. This old scholar commits the "crime" of kidnaping a minor, Jeanne Alexandre, the orphaned daughter of the only love of his bygone youth, from a miserable school where she is abused and unhappy. Many threatening complications result, but when it is discovered that Jeanne's guardian is an embezzler, she is made the legal ward of M. Bonnard.

Crimes of Charity. See BERCOVICI, KONRAD.

Cripps, Sir Richard Stafford (1889-). Youngest son of Charles Alfred Cripps, 1st Baron Parmoor (1852-1941). Lawyer and socialist. King's council; solicitor general; Labor M.P.; etc. Ambassador to Russia (1940); special envoy to India (March-April 1942); Chancellor of the Exchequer, Nov. 1947-. Wrote Why This Socialism (1934), Democracy Up-to-date (1940), etc.

Crishna, see KRISHNA.

Crisis, The. (1) A novel of Civil War times by Winston CHURCHILL (1901). The hero is Stephen Brice, a young New England lawyer in the South; the heroine Virginia Carvel, a loyal daughter of the courtly old Southerner, Colonel Carvel. Of course the lovers are estranged by the conflict, but after many adventures, come together at last. The novel introduces Lincoln and Grant and contains, among other interesting types, the characters of Eliphalet Hopper, the carpet bagger, and Judge Whipple, the abolitionist.

(2) See COOPER, SAMUEL.

Crispin. A sort of HARLEQUIN in early French comedy. He is a blustering valet, apparently copied from an Italian model around 1650.

Crispin, St. See under SAINTS.

Battle on St. Crispin's Day. Cf. in Shakespeare's King Henry V, the king's speech beginning "This day is called the feast of Crispin" and ending "That fought with us upon Saint Crispin's day."

Criterion, The. A quarterly literary review (1922-1939), edited in London by T. S. ELIOT and reflecting the opinions of Eliot.

Critic, The. A famous comedy by Richard Brinsley SHERIDAN (1779), a satire on the contemporary stage, with the subtitle A Tragedy Rehearsed. The principal characters are Sir Fretful Plagiary, the author, Dangle, the critic, and Puff, the promoter. The burlesque tragedy which is rehearsed is entitled The Spanish Armada. In it are introduced the Governor of Tilbury Fort, his daughter Tilburnia and her lover Whiskerandos.

criticaster. An inferior critic.

The rancorous and reptile crew of poeticles, who decompose into criticasters.

Swinburne

Critique of Pure Reason. A famous philosophical treatise by Immanuel KANT (1781) in which the power of pure reason as an instrument for the attainment of metaphysical truth is "criticized," that is, examined and defined in its limitations. The Critique of Practical Reason (1788) and the Critique of Judgment (1790) complete the trilogy of Kant's major works which are responsible for the term critical philosophy in its meaning of Kantianism.

Crito (fl. late 5th century B.C.). The friend and disciple of Socrates who tried to arrange for his escape from prison. Socrates' last words were, "Crito, I owe a cock to Aesculapius." Plato immortalized him in the dialogue Crito.

Croaker. A famous character in Goldsmith's Good-Natured Man (1768), guardian to Miss Richland. Croaker is never so happy as when he imagines himself a martyr. He loves a funeral better than a festival, and delights to think that the world is going to rack and ruin. His favorite phrase is "Maybe not."

A poor, fretful soul, that has a new distress for every hour of the four and twenty.—Act 1. 1.

Mrs. Croaker. The very reverse of her husband. She is mirthful, light-hearted, and cheerful as a lark.

Leontine Croaker. Son of Mr. Croaker. Being sent to Paris to fetch his sister, he falls in love with Olivia Woodville, whom he brings home instead, introduces her to Croaker as his daughter, and ultimately marries her.

Croaker Papers, The. A series of satires on contemporary American life (1819) by Fitz-Greene Halleck and Joseph Rodman Drake.

Croatan. An island off the North Carolina coast, on which Sir Walter Raleigh left a colony of about 140 people (1587), was the scene of the "Lost Colony." None of them was ever seen again. Some may have intermarried with Indians. On the trunk of a tree one word was roughly cut, Croatan. An historical novel by Mary Johnston has that title.

Croce, Benedetto (1860–). Italian philosopher and literary critic, best known for his Estetica Come Scienza dell'Espressione e Linguistica Generale (Aesthetics as Science of Expression and General Linguistics) (1902), a study of aesthetics, in which art is considered as the expression of imagination. His other works include Logica Come Scienza del Concetto Puro (Logic as the Science of the Pure Concept) (1905), Filosofia della Pratica, Economica, ed Etica (Philosophy of the Practical, Economic, and Ethical) (1908), and Teoria e Storia della Storiografia (Theory and History of Historiography) (1916), all three of which, with the Estetica, constitute his Filosofia Come Scienza dello Spirito (Philosophy As Science of the Spirit); Historical Materialism and Marxian Economy (1914); The Poetry of Dante (1922); The Conduct of Life (1924); Autobiography (1927); History of Italy from 1871 to 1915 (1928); Moral Aspects of Political Life (1930); History as the Story of Liberty (1941).

Crockett, David (1786–1836). A celebrated American frontiersman. His autobiography (1834) was very popular. He became a member of Congress from Tennessee, was one of the six survivors of the ALAMO but was executed on March 6. Famous as a humorist and marksman. He is the hero of a drama by Frank Murdock (Am. 1874) entitled Davy Crockett.

Crockett, Samuel Rutherford (1860–1914). Scottish romantic novelist and clergyman. Member of the KILLYARD school of writers. He wrote The Stickit Minister (1893) and many fine and exciting historical novels.

crocodile. A symbol of deity among the Egyptians, because, says Plutarch, it is the only aquatic animal which has its eyes covered with a thin transparent membrane, by reason of which it sees and is not seen, as God sees all, Himself not being seen. To this he subsequently adds another reason, saying, "The Egyptians worship God symbolically in the crocodile, that being the only animal without a tongue, like the Divine Logos, which standeth not in need of speech." (De Iside et Osiride, vol. ii. p. 381.)

Achilles Tatius says, "The number of its teeth equals the number of days in a year." Another tradition is, that during the seven days held sacred to Apis, the crocodile will harm no one.

crocodile's tears. Hypocritical tears. The tale is, that crocodiles moan and sigh like a person in deep distress, to allure travelers to the spot, and even shed tears over their prey while in the act of devouring it.

As the mournful crocodile
With sorrow snares relenting passengers.
Shakespeare, 2 Henry VI, iii. 1.

Crocus. In classic legend, a young man enamored of the nymph Smilax, who did not return his love. The gods changed him into the crocus flower, to signify unrequited love.

Croesus, the king of Lydia (560–546 B.C.) was so rich and powerful that all the wise men of Greece were drawn to his court, and his name became proverbial for wealth. Hence the expression, rich as Croesus.

Croftangry, Mr. Chrystal. The pretended editor of Scott's two novels, The Highland Widow (1827) and THE FAIR MAID OF PERTH. Lockhart tells us that Mr. Croftangry is meant for Sir Walter Scott's father, and that "the fretful patient at the death-bed" is a living picture.

Crofts, Freeman Wills (1879–). Anglo-Irish author of detective stories and creator of "Inspector French."

Croix de Feu (Fr. fiery cross). A French fascist organization headed by Colonel François de la Rocque; disbanded in 1936 and reorganized as the French social party.

Croix de guerre (Fr. war cross). A French war decoration, a cross of bronze, suspended by a green ribbon with red stripes. It was instituted during World War I, April 19, 1915, and is awarded for gallantry in action.

Cro-Magnon race. A prehistoric people, remains of whom have been found in the Cro-Magnon cave in Dordogne, France, in 1868. They are regarded as belonging to the same species as modern man. Some anthropologists hold that their descendants can be identified among the races now living in Europe.

Crome Yellow. A novel by Aldous HuxLEY.

cromlech. An ancient sepulchral monument, a circle of stones around a DOLMEN. Also the dolmen itself.

Crommyonian sow. In Greek mythology, a dangerous wild pig that roamed the land of Crommyon on the Isthmus of Corinth. Theseus killed it.

Cromwell, Oliver (1599-1658). Lord protector that is, chief executive, of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland (1653-1658). Nicknamed Old Noll by the Cavaliers. In the great Civil War in England in 1642 he raised a famous troop of cavalry called the Ironsides. In 1644 he decided the battle of Marston Moor and, under Fairfax, led the army to victory at Naseby in 1645. As commander in chief and lord lieutenant of Ireland he massacred the garrisons of Drogheda and Wexford. His protectorate was characterized by religious toleration, advantageous commercial treaties with foreign powers, and several successful wars. He died of tertian ague. His eldest surviving son, Richard, trained to be his successor, fell between the Army and Parliament and was dismissed in 1659.

Cromwell, Thomas (1485?-1540). English statesman. Son of a blacksmith who rose to the earlship of Essex. In the employ of Cardinal Wolsey after whose death he became Lord Great Chamberlain (1539). Convicted of treason, he died on the scaffold in the Catholic faith. In Shakespeare's Henry VIII, he appears as a servant to Cardinal Wolsey.

Cromwell's Bible. See BIBLE, THE ENGLISH.

Cronin, Archibald Joseph (1896-). Scotch novelist and physician, author of best-selling works of fiction, often dealing with the medical profession. His books include Hatter's Castle (1931); Three Loves (1932); Grand Canary (1933); The Stars Look Down (1935); Jupiter Laughs (1940), a play; The Keys of the Kingdom (1941); The Green Years (1944).

The Citadel and The Keys of the Kingdom were the most popular.

Cronus. One of the Titans of Greek mythology, son of Uranus and Ge, father (by Rhea) of Hestia, Demeter, Hera, Hades, Poseidon, and Zeus. He dethroned his father as ruler of the world, and was in turn dethroned by his son, Zeus. By the Romans he was identified with SATURN.

Crook, George (1829-1890). American army officer who served during the Civil War and took part in various campaigns against the Indians. Major general in 1888. Cf. General Charles King, Campaigning with Crook.

Crooked Dick. Richard III of England (1452, 1483-1485). Also nicknamed "the Crouchback."

Crookes, Sir William (1832-1919). English physicist, chemist, and inventor. Studied radium. Engaged in psychical research. His name is perpetuated in several technical terms as Crookes glass, crookesite, Crookes layer, Crookes space, Crookes tube, Crookes vacuum.

Croppy Boy, The. Famous Irish poem of revolutionary times.

Crosby, Jane. The heroine of Owen Davis' play, ICEBOUND.

Crosby, Percy. American cartoonist. Created the popular small-boy character of Skippy.

Crosley rating. The rating in popularity of a radio performer. Called after the organizer of the Crosley Radio Corporation (1921).

Crosman, Henrietta (1870-1944). American actress. Connected with Charles Frohman's company (1892-1894). Later starred in many plays.

cross. The cross is not solely a Christian symbol, originating with the crucifixion of the Redeemer. In Carthage it was used for ornamental purposes; runic crosses were set up by the Scandinavians as boundary marks, and were erected over the graves of kings and heroes; Cicero tells us (De Divinatione, ii. 27, and 80, 81) that the augur's staff with which they marked out the heaven was a cross; the Egyptians employed the same as a sacred symbol, and two buns marked with the cross were discovered at Herculaneum. It was a sacred symbol among the Aztecs long before the landing of Cortez; in Cozumel it was an object of worship; in Tabasco it symbolized the god of rain; and in Palenque it is sculptured on the walls with a child held up adoring it.

The cross is not only a Christian symbol, it was also a Mexican symbol. It was one of the emblems of Quetzalcoatl, as lord of the four cardinal points, and the four winds that blow therefrom.—Fiske, Discovery of America, vol. ii. ch. viii.

The cross of the crucifixion is legendarily said to have been made of four sorts of wood (palm, cedar, olive, and cypress), to signify the four quarters of the globe.

Ligna crucis palma, cedrus, cupressus, oliva.

In his Monasteries of the Levant (1849) Curzon gives the legend that Solomon cut down a cedar and buried it on the spot where the pool of Bethesda stood later. A few days before the crucifixion, this cedar floated to the surface of the pool, and was employed as the upright of the Savior's cross.

It is said that CONSTANTINE, on his march to Rome, saw a luminous cross in the sky, in the shape and with the motto In hoc vinces, by this [sign] conquer. In the night before the battle of Saxa Rubra (312) a vision appeared to the Emperor in his sleep, commanding him to inscribe the cross and the motto on the shields of his soldiers. He obeyed the voice of the vision, and prevailed. The monogram is $\chi\rho\iota\sigma\tau\omicron\varsigma$ (Christ). Cf. Gibbon's Decline and Fall, ch. xx.

This may be called a standing legend; for, besides St. Andrew's cross, and the Danneborg, there is the story concerning Don Alonzo before the battle of Ourique in 1139, when the figure of a cross appeared in the eastern sky; Christ, suspended on it, promised the Christian king a complete victory, and the Moors were totally routed. This legend is commemorated by Alonzo's device, in a field argent five escutcheons azure, in the form of a cross, each escutcheon being charged with five bezants, in memory of the five wounds of Christ. See LABARUM.

In heraldry, as many as 285 varieties of cross have been recognized, but the twelve in ordinary use, and from which the others are derived, are: (1) The ordinary cross; (2) the cross humetté, or coupé; (3) the cross urdé, or pointed; (4) the cross potent; (5) the cross crosslet; (6) the cross botonné, or treflé; (7) the cross moline; (8) the cross potence; (9) the cross fleury; (10) the cross paté; (11) the Maltese cross (or eight-pointed cross); (12) the cross cleché and fitché.

As a mystic symbol the number of crosses may be reduced to four:

the Greek cross (✝), found on Assyrian tablets, Egyptian and Persian monuments, and on Etruscan pottery.

the crux decussata (✕), generally called St. Andrew's cross. Quite common in ancient sculpture.

the Latin cross (✞), or crux immissa. This symbol is found on coins, monuments, and medals long before the Christian era.

the tau cross (T), or crux commissa. Very ancient indeed, and supposed to be a phallic emblem.

The tau cross with a handle (‡), or crux ansata, is common to several Egyptian deities, as Isis, Osiris, etc.; and is the emblem of immortality and life generally. The circle signifies the eternal preserver of the world, and the T is the monogram of Thoth, the Egyptian Mercury, meaning wisdom, Invention of the Cross. A church festival held on May 3, in commemoration of the discovery (Lat. invenire, to discover) of the Cross (326) by St. Helena. At her direction, after a long and difficult search in the neighborhood of the Holy Sepulcher (which had been overbuilt with heathen temples), the remains of the three buried crosses were found. These were applied to a sick woman, and that which effected her cure was declared to be the True Cross. The Empress had this enclosed in a silver shrine (after having carried a large piece to Rome), and deposited in a church that was built on the spot for the purpose.

Cross, Wilbur Lucius (1862-1948). American educator and Governor of Connecticut. An authority on Henry Fielding. Founded Yale Review (1911). Wrote Life and Times of Laurence Sterne (1909); History of Henry Fielding (1918); and several other works on the English novel.

cross and ball. The orb of royalty is a sphere or ball surmounted by a cross, an emblem of empire introduced in representations of our Savior. The cross stands above the ball, to signify that the spiritual power is above the temporal.

Cross Creek. See RAWLINGS, MARJORIE.

Crossing, The. A historical novel by Winston CHURCHILL (1901), dealing with the ending of the Revolution and the Clark expedition westward. George Rogers Clark is a prominent character. Among the other historical personages introduced are Daniel Boone and Andrew Jackson. The hero is David Ritchie, leader of the Kentucky pioneers who accompany the expedition.

Crossing the Bar. A pious religious poem by TENNYSON, written in 1889, which the author before his death gave instructions to his publishers to insert at the end of each edition of his works.

Cross of Gold, The. A famous speech delivered by William Jennings BRYAN at the Democratic national convention in Chicago in 1896. In it, Bryan, advocating the unlimited free coinage of silver, charged that the nation was being "crucified on a cross of gold," referring to the gold standard.

crossword puzzle. A forerunner of the crossword puzzle was the word square, letters arranged in a square so that vertical and horizontal reading yields the same words, as

B	I	R	D	S
I	D	I	O	T
R	I	F	L	E
D	O	L	O	R
S	T	E	R	N

In the crossword puzzle proper, the square is a checkerboard pattern in which the letters of words in vertical and horizontal arrangement are to be filled in, with the known number of spaces and a definition of the word as guides. Crossword puzzles are so popular that special dictionaries have been published in which, in contrast to ordinary dictionaries, the definitions are alphabetized and precede the terms they define. Cf. Andrew Swanfeldt, Crossword Puzzle Dictionary, 568 pages.

Crotalus. A poem about the rattlesnake by Bret HARTE.

Crotchet Castle. A novel by T. L. PEACOCK (1831) relating the sayings and doings, but chiefly the sayings, of the eccentric guests of Mr. Crotchet of Crotchet Castle.

Crothers, Rachel (1878-). American playwright. When Ladies Meet (1932), Susan and God (1937), etc.

Crothers, Samuel McChord (1857-1927). American clergyman and essayist. Author of The Gentle Reader (1903) and other collections.

Crotona or Croton. The ancient Cotrone on the Ionian Sea, where Pythagoras of Samos passed the chief portion of his life. In 510 B. C. the city of Sybaris, which was celebrated among the more important cities of Magna Graecia for luxury and effeminacy, was conquered and destroyed by an army under the leadership of the Crotonian athlete Milo. Crotona was colonized by the Romans in 194 B. C.

Crouse, Russel (1893-). American journalist, playwright and theatrical producer. Author of Mr. Currier and Mr. Ives (1930) and other books, of librettos for musical comedies, scenarios for motion pictures, and collaborator in the stage adaptation of Clarence DAY's Life with Father (1939). With Howard Lindsay he won the Pulitzer Prize for drama (1946) for the play State of the Union. Mrs. Crouse is the daughter of John ERSKINE.

crow.

as the crow flies. The shortest route between two given places.

I must pluck a crow with you; I have a crow to pick with you. I am displeased with you, and must call you to account. I have a small complaint to make against you.

crow over one. To exult over a vanquished or abased person. The allusion is to cocks, who always crow when they have vanquished an adversary.

eat crow. To take back what one has said.

Crow, Carl (1883-1945). American journalist and writer on the Orient. His Four Hundred Million Customers discusses the potentialities of the Chinese market.

Crow, Jim, see JIM CROW.

Crowdero. In Butler's poem HUDIBRAS, one of the rabble leaders encountered by Hudbras at a bear-baiting. The original was one Jackson or Jephson, a milliner, of the New Exchange, Strand.

Crowe, Captain. In Smollett's ADVENTURES OF SIR LAUNCELOT GREAVES (1760) the attendant of Sir Launcelot Greaves in his peregrinations to reform society. Sir Launcelot is a modern Don Quixote, and Captain Crowe is his Sancho Panza.

Captain Crowe had commanded a merchant-ship in the Mediterranean trade for many years, and saved some money by dint of frugality and traffic. He was an excellent seaman, brave, active, friendly in his way, and scrupulously honest, but as little acquainted with the world as a sucking child; whimsical, impatient, and so impetuous that he could not help breaking in upon the conversation, whatever it might be, with repeated interruptions. . . . When he himself attempted to speak, he never finished his period.—Smollett, The Adventures of Sir Launcelot Greaves.

Crowfield, Christopher. A pseudonym of Mrs. Harriet Beecher STOWE.

crown. In heraldry, nine crowns are recognized: the oriental, the triumphal or imperial, the diadem, the obsidional crown, the civic, the crown vallery, the mural crown, the naval and the crown celestial. In ancient Egypt, there were two crowns, one of Upper and another of Lower Egypt. Together they formed the head-dress of the pharaohs and were called the pschent. The crown of Upper Egypt was a tall red cap whereto was bound that of Lower Egypt, of stiff white linen.

Among the Romans of the Republic and Empire crowns of various patterns formed marks of distinction for different services; the principal ones were:

The blockade crown (corona obsidionalis), presented to the general who liberated a beleaguered army. This was made of grass and wild flowers gathered from the spot.—A camp crown (corona castrenses) was given to him who first forced his way into the enemy's camp. It was made of gold, and decorated with palisades.—A civic crown to one who saved a civis or Roman citizen in battle. It was of oak leaves, and bore the inscription, H.O.C.S.—i.e. hostem occidit, civem servavit (a foe he slew, a citizen saved).—A mural crown was given to that man who first scaled the wall of a besieged town. It was made of gold and decorated with battlements.—A naval crown, of gold, decorated with the beaks of ships, was given to him who won a naval victory.—An olive crown was given to those who distinguished themselves in battle in some way not specially mentioned.—An ovation crown (corona ovatio) was by the Romans given to a general in the case of a lesser victory. It was made of myrtle.—A triumphal crown was by the Romans given to the general who obtained a triumph. It was made of laurel or bay leaves. Sometimes a massive gold crown was given to a victorious general.

The iron crown of Lombardy is the crown of the ancient Longobardic kings. It was used at the coronation of Agilulph, King of Lombardy, in 591, and among others that have since been crowned with it are CHARLEMAGNE, as King of Italy (774), Henry of Luxemburg (the Emperor Henry VII), as King of Lombardy (1311), Frederick IV (1452), Charles V (1530); in 1805 Napoleon put it on his head with his own hands.

In 1866, at the conclusion of peace, it was given up by Austria to Italy and was replaced in the cathedral at Monza, where Charlemagne had been crowned, and whence it had been taken in 1859. The crown is so called from a narrow band of iron about three-eighths of an inch broad, and one-tenth of an inch in thickness, within it, said to be beaten out of one of the nails used at the Crucifixion. According to tradition, the nail was given to CONSTANTINE by his mother, St. HELENA, who discovered the cross. The outer circlet is of beaten gold, and set with precious stones.

The crown, in English coinage, is a five-shilling piece, and is so named from the French denier à la couronne, a gold coin issued by Philip of Valois (1339) bearing a large crown on the obverse. The English crown was a gold coin of about 43½ grs. till the end of Elizabeth's reign, except for a silver crown which was issued in the last coinage of Henry VIII and one other of Edward VI.

Crowninshield, Francis Welch (1872-1947). American editor and collector of modern art. Publisher of The Bookman (1895-1900) and editor of several magazines, among them Vanity Fair (1914-1935).

Croy, Homer (1883-). American novelist. Wrote West of the Water Tower (1923), etc.

Croy, Kate. One of the chief characters of Henry James' WINGS OF A DOVE.

Croye, Isabelle, Countess of. A ward of Charles "the bold," duke of Burgundy in Scott's QUENTIN DURWARD. She first appears at the turret window in Plessis les Tours, disguised as Jacqueline. Her marriage with Quentin Durward concludes the novel.

Cruden, Alexander (1701-1770). Scottish bookseller in London, who compiled and brought out one of the best-known Biblical CONCORDANCES (1737).

Cruikshank, George (1792-1878). English illustrator and caricaturist. Famous illustrator of DICKENS (Sketches by Boz and Oliver Twist only) and SCOTT and satirist of his time.

Cruise of the Snark, The. A book by Jack LONDON (1911) recording a Pacific voyage.

Crummles, Mr. Vincent. In Dickens' NICHOLAS NICKLEBY (1838) the eccentric but kind-hearted manager of the Portsmouth Theater.

Mrs. Crummles. Wife of Mr. Vincent Crummles, a stout, ponderous, tragedy-queen sort of a lady. She walks or rather stalks like Lady Macbeth, and always speaks theatrically. Like her husband, she is full of kindness, and always willing to help the needy.

Miss Ninetta Crummles. Daughter of the manager, and called in the play-bills "the infant phenomenon."

Cruncher, Jerry. In Dickens' TALE OF TWO CITIES, an odd-job man in Tellson's bank. His wife is continually saying her prayers, which Jerry terms "flopping." He is a "RESURRECTION MAN."

Crusades. Wars undertaken in late medieval times by Christians against the Turks and Saracens for the recovery of the Holy Land and, nominally at least, for the honor of the cross. The word is ultimately derived from Lat. crux "cross."

The seven principal Crusades are:

(1) 1096-1100. Preached up by Peter the Hermit. Led by Godfrey of Bouillon, who took Jerusalem and founded a Christian kingdom in Palestine, himself becoming King of Jerusalem.

(2) 1147-1149. At the instigation of St. Bernard. Led by Louis VII and the Emperor Conrad. It was a failure.

(3) 1189-1193. Led by Richard Lionheart, Frederick Barbarossa, and Philip Augustus. It did not succeed in recapturing Jerusalem, which the Mohammedans had taken in 1187.

(4) 1202-1204. Led by Baldwin of Flanders and the Doge of Venice. It established a Latin Empire at Constantinople.

(5) 1228-1229. Led by Frederick II. Palestine was ceded to Frederick, who was crowned king of Jerusalem.

(6) 1248-1254 and (7) 1268-1270. Unsuccessful expeditions undertaken by St. Louis, Louis IX of France.

See also CHILDREN'S CRUSADE.

cruse. A jar for water, oil, honey, etc. For the story of the widow's cruse, cf. 1 Kings xvi. 10 ff.

Crusoe. A solitary man; the only inhabitant of a place. From the tale of Daniel DEFOE, which describes ROBINSON CRUSOE as cast on a desert island.

Crutched Friars. A Catholic order of monks in England, whose members bore the sign of the cross on their staves and habits (13th to 17th centuries).

crux ansata. (1) In Egyptian ankh means life, prosperity. A tau cross with a loop at the top, signifying life and called ankh or crux ansata, is used by the Church as a sacred emblem.

(2) The title of a book by H. G. Wells on the Roman Catholic Church, an indictment.

Cruze, James. In full James Cruze Bosen (1884-1942). Famous moving-picture director: Old Ironsides (1925), The Covered Wagon, Merton of the Movies, Ruggles of Red Gap, I Cover the Waterfront, Sutter's Gold, etc. Twice named as one of the best ten directors.

Cry of the Children, The. A humanitarian poem by Elizabeth Barrett BROWNING (1843), expressing intense sympathy for the victims of child labor in the English mines and factories of her day and indignantly indicting those who were responsible for their exploitation.

cry wolf. The phrase means to give alarm without occasion by allusion to the fable in which the warning, "the wolf is coming," was given in vain so often that nobody paid attention to it when the wolf finally did come.

Ctesiphon. An ancient city of Mesopotamia, whose site is now occupied by ruins.

Cuba (from Lat. cuvo, to lie down in bed). The Roman deity who kept guard over infants in their cribs and sent them to sleep. Note: The island of Cuba has nothing to do with the old deity. It got its name because of its shape, Spanish cuba meaning "vat."

Cubism. A movement in painting, begun about 1910 in reaction against IMPRESSIONISM. It involved the reduction of figures, objects, and occasionally landscapes to their fundamental geometric forms, and the abstraction and resynthesis of these forms into new designs from which naturalistic subject considerations and literary "meaning" were banished. The culmination of the development of Cubism, which tended more and more toward the simple and geometrically "abstract," is considered to be found in the colored squares of Pieter MONDRIAN (ca. 1925). Georges BRAQUE and Pablo PICASSO were the founders of Cubism and also its most outstanding representatives, the work of one often being indistinguishable from that of the other. They derived an important influence from the work of Paul CÉZANNE. Cubism was regarded with bewilderment and hostility by many people, and had a sensational vogue in the years immediately preceding and following World War I.

Cubs. In American baseball parlance, the Chicago Nationals. Cf. under BASEBALL TEAMS.

cucking stool, see under DUCKING STOOL.

cuckold. The husband of an adulterous wife; so called from cuckoo, the chief characteristic of this bird being to deposit its eggs in other birds' nests. Johnson says "it was usual to alarm a husband at the approach of an adulterer by calling out 'Cuckoo,' which by mistake was applied in time to the person warned." Greene calls the cuckoo "the cuckold's quirister" (Quip for an Upstart Courtier, 1592), and the Romans used to call an adulterer a "cuckoo," as "Te cuculum uxor ex lus-tris rapit" (Plautus: Asinaria, v. 3). See also ACTÆON; HORN.

Cudahy, Michael (1841-1910). Well-known Irish-American meat packer, originally with Armour & Co. and then (1890-1910) president of his own, the Cudahy Packing Co.

cuddy. Aboardship a small cabin or the galley or pantry of a small vessel. In a house, a small room; also a cupboard or closet. The name Cuddy which Edmund Spenser gave to a rustic swain in his Shepherd's Calendar is a variant of Cuthbert.

Cuffy. A Negro; both a generic word and proper name; possibly from the English slang term "cove."

Sambo and Cuffey expand under every sky.—Harriet Beecher Stowe, Uncle Tom's Cabin.

Cui, César Antonovich (1835-1918). Russian composer, engineer, and music critic, author of operas, songs, piano pieces, etc. He was a member of the group known as "The Five."

cui bono? (Lat.) Who is benefited thereby? To whom is it a gain? A common, but quite erroneous meaning attached to the words is, What good will it do? For what good purpose? It was the question of the Roman judge L. Cassius Pedanius. Cf. Cicero, Rosc. Am., xxx. 84.

Cato, that great and grave philosopher, did commonly demand, when any new project was propounded unto him, cui bono, what good will ensue in case the same is effected?—Fuller, Worthies (The Design, i.).

Culbertson, Ely (1893-). American authority on contract bridge. Also protagonist of a scheme for world co-operation.

cul-de-sac (Fr. bottom of a bag). A blind alley, or alley blocked up at one end like a sack. Figuratively, an argument, etc., that leads to nothing.

Culebra Cut (From Span. culebra "snake"). Earlier name of the Gaillard Cut, the deeply excavated part of the Panama Canal, about 10 miles northwest of Panama, 6.97 miles long. It was renamed after David Du Bose Gaillard (1859-1913), the American army engineer in charge of the Culebra Cut excavations (1907).

Cullen, Countée (1903-1946). American Negro poet, known for his poetry on Negro themes. His books include Color (1925); Copper Sun (1927); The Ballad of the Brown Girl (1927); The Black Christ (1929); One Way to Heaven (1932); The Medea And Some Poems (1935), which contains a translation of Euripides' Medea; The Lost Zoo (1940), for children; My Lives and How I Lost Them (1942), stories supposedly by "Christopher Cat."

Cullinan diamond. The largest diamond ever known. It was discovered in 1905 at the Premier Mine in South Africa, and when found weighed 3,025 $\frac{3}{4}$ carats (about 1 lb. 6 oz.), as against the 186 $\frac{1}{8}$ carats of the famous KOH-I-NUR in its uncut state. It was purchased by the South African Government for £150,000 and presented to Edward VII, and now forms part of the Crown Jewels, its estimated value being over £1,000,000. It was cut into a number of stones, of which the two largest weigh over 516 and 309 carats respectively. It was named after Sir T. M. Cullinan, South African mineowner (1862-1936) at the time of its discovery.

Culloden, or Drum Mossie Moor. A heath in Scotland where the Duke of Cumberland defeated Prince Charles Edward Stuart (the Young Pretender) on April 27, 1746. "Drum Mossie Moor, Drum Mossie Day!" begins the old Scots ballad of Culloden.

Culprit Fay, The. A nature fantasy and fairy tale in verse by Joseph Rodman Drake (Am. 1795-1820), published posthumously in 1835.

Cult of Unintelligibility, The. An essay by Max EASTMAN, appearing in The Literary Mind (1931). It denounces 20th-century authors—including E. E. CUMMINGS, T. S. ELIOT, James JOYCE, Gertrude STEIN, and Edith SITWELL—for the private character of their allusions and what Eastman regards as the general uncommunicativeness of their writing. The title of this essay came to be applied to the writers in question as a generic designation by hostile critics.

Culture and Anarchy. A collection of essays on political and social conditions by Matthew ARNOLD, published in 1869. In these are found some of his most famous utterances. The collection includes the famous essay on HEBRAISM AND HELLENISM.

Cumberland Road. The first main road to the American West, begun in 1811 and built for the most part with Federal money. It ran from Cumberland, Md., over the mountains to Wheeling and Zanesville on the Ohio and finally to Vandalia, Illinois. When completed it was about 600 miles long, sixty feet wide, and had a paved strip twenty feet wide in the middle. Over this "National Pike" ran the Western mails.

cum laude (Lat.). With praise. Used on diplomas and the like. A distinction is made between magna cum laude "with great praise," insigne cum laude "with notable praise," and summa cum laude "with the highest praise."

cummerbund. In India, a sash worn around the waist. Adapted to men's evening dress in England and America.

Cummings, Bruce Frederick. Pseudonym W. N. P. Barbellion (1889-1919). Biologist in Natural History Museum, South Kensington. His book, The Journal of a Disappointed Man (1919), has been called one of the great autobiographies of all time.

Cummings, Edward Estlin (1894-). American poet, known for the eccentricity of his typography and punctuation, employed in order to indicate the rhythm of the poem immediately to the eye of the reader. His work consists of love poems, often treated in a romantic and even sentimental manner, humorous character sketches, and bitter satires on the foibles and institutions of his time. "Tough" characters of the type well publicized in the U.S. in the 1920's—gangsters, prize-fighters, night-club singers, and the like—frequently appear in his poems, along with contemporary slang and "tough" dialect and the rhythms of jazz. Some critics consider Cummings' cynicism and "toughness" an attempt to suppress a natural poetic tendency toward lyric sentiment. His books of poetry are Tulips and Chimneys (1923); XLI Poems (1925); & (1925); is 5 (1926); ViVa (1931); No Thanks (1935); Collected Poems (1938). Among his other works are THE ENORMOUS ROOM (1922), a prose account of experiences during World War I; him (1927), a play in prose and verse; EMM (1933), an account of a trip to Russia, written in prose and verse; CLOPP (1931), a collection of drawings and paintings, so named because the artwork is done in charcoal, ink, oil, pencil, and watercolor; Tom (1935), a satirical ballet from UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.

cumulative story. In universal folklore there is a particular kind of story that assumes a human understanding in related creatures and objects, whereby all interact upon each other in a sequence of cause and effect. The nursery tale "Titty Mouse and Tatty Mouse" is an example. Titty Mouse is scalded to death and Tatty sits down and weeps. The stool asks why Tatty weeps, and decides to hop. The broom sweeps. The door asks why. "Titty's dead," says the broom, "and Tatty weeps, and the stool hops, and so I sweep." "Then," says the door, "I'll jar." And so it goes—the window creaks, the walnut tree sheds its leaves, a bird moults its feathers—until an old man on a ladder breaks his neck, whereupon the walnut tree falls down and upsets the house, the house knocks out the window, the window knocks down the door, the door upsets the broom, the broom upsets the stool, and poor little Tatty Mouse is buried beneath the ruins.

Cunctator (Lat. the delayer). Quintus Fabius Maximus (d. 203 B. C.), the Roman general who baffled Hannibal by avoiding direct engagements, and wearing him out by marches, countermarches, and skirmishes from a distance. This was the policy by which Du Guesclin forced the English to abandon their French possessions in the reign of Charles V. Cf. FABIAN.

Cunégonde. In Voltaire's CANDIDE, the Baron's daughter beloved through long years by the hero. See KUNIGUNDE.

cuneiform. Wedge-shaped. The cuneiform inscriptions of ancient Assyria, Babylonia, Persia, etc. were made with wooden styles on blocks of soft clay which were baked when permanent records were required. See also HIERATIC, DEMOTIC WRITING.

Cunizza. Heroine of Browning's SORDELLO, called Palma until the end of the poem. Dante refers to her in his Paradiso ix. 32 as in paradise. She was the sister of Ezzelino III.

Cunningham, Alison. The nurse of Robert Louis STEVENSON during his childhood. A Child's Garden of Verses is dedicated to her.

Cunningham, Allan (1784-1842). Scottish author, who wrote many songs, as "A Wet Sheet and a Flowing Sea" (1825), several novels, biographies, etc. Best known for his Lives of the Most Eminent British Painters, Sculptors, and Architects (6 vols., 1829-1833) and as an editor of Burns's works (1834).

Cunningham, Sir Andrew (1883-), and Cunningham, Sir John. British admirals. Sir Andrew commanded the Mediterranean Fleet in 1943 in World War II. Following the Teheran Conference and the reorganization of the Mediterranean theater, Sir John remained in command of all Mediterranean naval forces.

Cunningham, Martin. A character in James Joyce's DUBLINERS and ULYSSES. At one point in the latter work he is said to represent the mythological character of SISYPHUS, since he continually sets up a home for his wife, who is habitually intoxicated, only to find that she has pawned the furniture in order to buy liquor. His hopelessly repeated effort is thus a parallel to Sisyphus' rolling a rock uphill forever.

Cunninghame Graham, Robert Bontine (1852-1936). Scottish traveler, writer, and historian. His grandmother was Spanish. He himself spoke Spanish fluently. He lived in Argentina on a large cattle ranch, steeping himself in the life of South America. Back in England, he became a Labor M.P. and organized the Scottish Labor Party. He was a close friend of W. H. HUDSON, Joseph CONRAD, and Bernard SHAW. He was a rover and an eccentric, a great horseman, and always a fine writer. Among his many books, cf. especially Thirteen Stories (1900) and Rodeo (1936).

Cunstance. In The Man of Law's Tale, one of Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES, a model of resignation, daughter of the Emperor of Rome. The Sultan of Syria, in order to marry her, turns Christian, whereupon his mother murders him, and sets Cunstance adrift on a raft. The raft is stranded on a rock near Northumberland, Cunstance is rescued, and eventually, after having been falsely accused of murder and proved innocent, marries King Ella or Alla. She presents him with a son Maurice, but during the King's absence Ella's mother, angry with Cunstance for introducing Christianity into the land, puts her on a raft with her baby. They are rescued by a senator and taken to Rome, whither Ella, having put his mother to death, goes on pilgrimage to atone for his crime. Here he meets his wife, who returns with him to Northumberland, and lives in peace and happiness the rest of her life.

Cupid (Lat. cupido, desire, passion). The god of love in Roman mythology identified with the Greek Eros; son of Mercury and Venus. He is usually represented as a beautiful winged boy, blindfolded, and carrying a bow and arrows, and one legend says that he wets with blood the grindstone on which he sharpens his arrows.

Ferus et Cupido,
Semper ardentis acuens sagittas.
Horace, 2 Odes, viii. 14, 15.

Cupid and Psyche. An exquisite episode in the GOLDEN ASS of Apuleius. It is an allegory representing the progress of the soul to perfection. William Morris retells the story in his Earthly Paradise (May) and it occurs also in Walter Pater's Marius the Epicurean. See PSYCHE.

Cupid and Campaspe. A well-known lyric by John Lyly that appeared first in his drama Alexander and Campaspe (1586).

Cupid and my Campaspe play'd
At cards for kisses; Cupid paid.

Cupid's golden arrow. Virtuous love.

Cupid's leaden arrow. Sensual passion.

Cuppy, Will (1884-1949). American humorist. How to Be a Hermit (1929); How to Tell Your Friends from the Apes (1931), How to Become Extinct (1941). Critic for over 20 years of detective fiction for the New York Herald Tribune.

Curan. A courtier in Shakespeare's tragedy of KING LEAR.

Curate of Meudon. RABELAIS, who had for a time (1550-1552) the parish of Meudon.

Curé de Meudon, see CURATE OF MEUDON.

Curetes. A mythical people of Crete, to whom the infant Zeus was entrusted by his mother Rhea. By clashing their shields they drowned the cries of the infant, to prevent its father (Cronus) from finding the place where the babe was hid.

curfew bell. A bell that announces curfew (from Fr. couvre-feu "cover fire"), that is, the time at which lights and fires are to be extinguished; especially the bell rung in the reigns of William I and II at sunset in summer and at eight o'clock in winter for this purpose.

The curfew tolls the knell of parting day.
Gray, Elegy.

Curiatii, the. In Roman legendary history, the three brothers who engaged in combat against the three Horatii. See HORATIUS.

Curie, Marie Skłodowska (1867-1934). Polish scientist, best known for her discovery, with her husband, Pierre Curie, of the important cancer cure, radium. She was a winner of the Nobel Prize for chemistry in 1911. Madame Curie (1937) was a best-selling biography, written by her daughter, Eve Curie. It was later made into a moving picture.

Curious Myths of the Middle Ages. See BARING-GOULD, SABINE.

Curle, Richard Henry Parnell (1883-). English writer and traveler. Known as the author of books on the life of his friend Joseph CONRAD.

Curlicism. Literary indecency. From Edmund Curle (1675-1747), English bookseller notorious for publication of A Nun in her Frock and similar books for which he was convicted and fined in 1728. Satirized by Alexander Pope in the DUNCIAD.

Curlylocks. The heroine of a familiar nursery rhyme:

Curlylocks, Curlylocks, wilt thou be mine,
Thou shalt not wash the dishes nor yet feed the swine
But sit on a cushion and sew a fine seam
And feed upon strawberries, sugar and cream.

Curran, John Philpot (1750-1817). Irish orator and judge. Famous for his defense of the leaders of the Irish insurrection of 1798.

Currier and Ives prints. A series of popular lithographs published by the firm of Currier & Ives in New York from 1857 to about 1900. The partners were Nathaniel Currier (1813-1888), who had started the publication of prints in 1835, and James M. Ives (1824-1895), who joined the firm in 1857. The subjects of the prints were contemporary American political, social, and sporting events and figures. Cf. Russel Crouse, Mr. Currier and Mr. Ives (1930).

Curry, John Steuart (1897-1946). American painter, known for his portrayals of Midwestern farm life, especially of the state of Kansas.

curse.

curses, like chickens, come home to roost. Curses fall on the head of the curser, as chickens which stray during the day return to their roost at night.

cursing by bell, book, and candle. See under BELL.

curse of Cain. One who is always on the move and has no abiding place is said to be "cursed with the curse of Cain." The allusion is to God's judgment on Cain after he had slain his brother Abel:

And now art thou cursed from the earth, . . . a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth.—
Gen. iv. 11-12.

curse of Scotland. The nine of diamonds. The two most plausible explanations are these: (1) The nine of diamonds in the game of Pope Joan is called the Pope, the Antichrist of the Scotch reformers. (2) In the game of comette, introduced by Queen Mary, it is the great winning card, and the game was the curse of Scotland because it was the ruin of so many families.

cursive. Said of script and print in which the strokes of the letters run on. The oldest cursive Roman writing goes back to the first century. From it all modern European scripts have developed and also the so-called ITALIC printing face.

Cursor Mundi. A Middle English work, written in the Northern dialect about 1300, of unknown authorship. It is a history in rhymed couplets of the Hebrew and Christian world, based on various Biblical sources.

curtain.

curtain lecture. The nagging of a wife after she and her husband are in bed. See CAUDLE LECTURE.

curtain raiser, see LEVER DE RIDEAU.

ring down the curtain. To bring a matter to an end. A theatrical term. When the play is over, the bell rings and the curtain comes down.

Curtain, The. A London theater in Shoreditch (1576-1625).

Curtana. The sword of mercy borne before the English kings at their coronation; it has no point and is hence shortened (O. Fr. curt, Lat. curtus). It is called the sword of Edward the Confessor, which, having no point, was the emblem of mercy. The royal sword of England was so called to the reign of Henry III.

But when Curtana will not do the deed
You lay the pointless clergy-weapon by,
And to the laws, your sword of justice fly.
Dryden, Hind and Panther, Pt. ii. 419.

Curt-hose or Courte-Heuse (Fr. short-hose). A surname of Robert II (1054?-1134), duke of Normandy, eldest son of William the Conqueror.

Curtin, Jeremiah (1840?-1906). American folklorist and translator of Tolstoy, Sienkiewicz, etc.

Curtis, Cyrus Hermann Kotzschmar (1850-1933). Head of the Curtis Publishing Co., publishers of Ladies' Home Journal (which Cyrus Curtis established in 1876), The Country Gentleman, Saturday Evening Post.

Curtis, George William (1824-1892). American author and journalist. Member of Brook Farm community (1842-1843); editorial writer for Harper's Magazine and editor of Harper's Weekly. Author of Potiphar Papers (1853), Prue and I (1857), etc.

Curtiss, Glenn Hammond (1878-1930). American inventor and aviator. Winner of trophy in first public airplane flight of a mile in U.S. (1908) and New York World's $10,000 prize (1910) for flight from Albany to New York. Founded schools of aviation at Hammondsport, San Diego, Buffalo, Miami, and elsewhere. The Navy-Curtiss (NC) flying boat, known as the "Wasp," that made the first Atlantic crossing (1919), and a variety of other air and water speedcraft were developed by him.

Curtius, Marcus. Roman hero of fourth century B. C. who, according to legend, leaped in full armor on horseback into a chasm that had been opened in the Forum at Rome by an earthquake, because a soothsayer had proclaimed that the sacrifice of Rome's chief treasure, which Curtius interpreted to mean a brave man, would close the fissure. It did.

Curtmantle, Courtmantle. Surname of Henry II of England, from the short Anjou court mantle he wore.

Curwood, James Oliver (1878-1927). American popular "he-man" novelist. Lived much in Canada and the Hudson Bay country. Wrote 26 books in 19 years.

Curzon Line, the. Proposed in 1919 by the Allies, on ethnic grounds, as the boundary between Russia and Poland. The Russo-Polish peace treaty of 1921 (treaty of Riga), however, moved the boundary farther east. In 1939 Poland east of the Curzon line was incorporated into the Soviet Union. The name of the boundary line comes from Lord Curzon of Kedleston, Foreign Secretary in Lloyd George's cabinet.

Cusack, Michael. In James Joyce's ULYSSES, the Dublin "citizen" with whom Leopold Bloom has an altercation in the saloon of Barney Kiernan. Cusack sneers at Bloom for being a Jew and throws a biscuit box at him, at which Bloom hurriedly leaves in order to avoid a fight, while "Garryowen," Cusack's dog, snarls at his heels. In FINNEGANS WAKE, Michael Cusack is referred to as "Nicholas de Cusack," his name being combined with that of NICHOLAS OF CUSA.

Custance, see CUNSTANCE.

Custer, George Armstrong (1839-1876). American general. Renowned as an Indian fighter. Destroyed with his entire force by the Oglalla Sioux in the battle of the Little Big Horn (June 25, 1876).

Custom of the Country, The. A novel by Edith WHARTON (1913), dealing with divorce. The heroine, Undine Spragg, a crude, ambitious Western girl of great physical attractions, is divorced three times before she finally finds her own level and marries the youth from her home town who has become a millionaire.

Cutcliffe Hyne, see HYNE.

Cuthbert. In England, a name given in contempt during World War I to fit and healthy men of military age who, particularly in government offices, were not "combed out" to go into the army; also, to one who actually avoided military service. It was coined by "Poy," the cartoonist of the Evening News, who represented these civilians as frightened-looking rabbits. See also under CUDDY.

Cuthbert, St. See under SAINT.

cutlass. Heavy, curved sword with bowl-shaped guard, used by seamen in battle.

cutpurse. Now called "pickpocket." The two words are of historical value. When purses were worn suspended from a girdle, thieves cut the string by which the purse was attached; but when pockets were adopted, and purses were no longer hung on the girdle, the thief was no longer a cutpurse, but became a pickpocket.

To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cutpurse.—Shakespeare, Winter's Tale, 14. 3.

Moll Cutpurse. The familiar name of Mary Frith (ca. 1585-1660), a woman of masculine vigor, who not unfrequently assumed man's attire. She was a notorious thief and once attacked General Fairfax on Hounslow Heath, for which she was sent to Newgate. She escaped by bribery, and died at last of dropsy in the seventy-fifth year of her age. Middleton's and Dekker's play, The Roaring Girl (1611) is founded on her doings.

Cuttle, Captain. An eccentric, kind-hearted sailor in Dickens' DOMBEY AND SON; simple as a child, credulous of every tale, and generous as the sun. Captain Cuttle was a skipper, has a hook instead of a right hand, and always wears a very hard glazed hat. He is in the habit of quoting, and desiring those to whom he spoke "to overhaul the catechism till they found it"; but, he adds, "When found, make a note of."

Cutty Sark. (1) A character in Robert Burns' Tam O'Shanter's Ride.

(2) The name of a late 19th century American clipper ship which became famous for establishing a speed record on the run from China to England.

Cuvier, Baron Georges Léopold Chrétien Frédéric Dagobert (1769-1832). French naturalist. Educated in France and Germany. Considered by many the founder of comparative anatomy and of paleontology.

Cuzco. Famous Peruvian city of the Incas. Said to have been founded by Manco Capac (early 11th century), the son of the son-god of the Incas. Pizarro desired its treasures.

Cybele. In classic myth (but originally in Phrygia), the wife of Cronus, mother of the gods of Olympus, identified with ΡΗΕΑ. In Rome she became known as the Great Mother of the Gods (Magna Deum Mater), and was one of the most important deities of the Empire.

Cyclades. A group of islands in the Grecian Archipelago. So called because of the belief that they formed a ring or cycle around Delos. One is Andros; cf. Thornton Wilder, The Woman of Andros (1930). Another is Naxos, where Bacchus wooed Ariadne.

Cyclic poets. Epic poets who, on the death of Homer, caught the contagion of his poems, and wrote continuations, illustrations, or additions thereto. These poets wrote between 800 and 550 B.C., and were called cyclic because they confined themselves to the cycle of the Trojan War. The chief were Agias, Arctinos, Eugamon, Lesches, and Stratinos.

Cyclops (Gr., "circular-eye"). One of a group of giants that, according to legend, inhabited Thrace. They had only one eye, and that in the center of their forehead, and their work was to forge iron for Vulcan.

Roused with the sound, the mighty family
Of one-eyed brothers hasten to the shore
And gather round the bellowing Polypheme.
Addison, Milton Imitated.

Cyclopean Masonry. The old Pelasgic ruins of Greece, Asia Minor, and Italy, such as the Gallery of Tiryns, the Gate of Lions at Mycenae, the Treasury of Athens, and the Tombs of Phoroneus and Danaos. They are composed of huge blocks fitted together without mortar, with marvelous nicety, and are fabled to be the work of the Cyclops. The term is also applied to similar structures in many parts of the world.

Cylix. In Greek and Roman antiquity, a drinking cup with a two-handled shallow bowl and a short sturdy stem.

Cyllenius. Mercury. So called from Mount Cyllene, in Peloponnesus, where he was born.

Cymbeline. A mythical prince of Britain. When Caesar invaded the British island, he forced the Britons to pay tribute and took Cymbeline with him as a hostage. Cymbeline was brought up in Rome as a Roman. When he became king of Britain, he lived peacefully with the Romans. After his death his sons Guiderius and Arviragus refused to pay tribute and a new Roman invasion ensued.

Cymbeline. A drama by Shakespeare (ca. 1610). Posthumus, who secretly married Imogen, the daughter of Cymbeline, king of Britain, is banished by the King when he hears of the marriage, and goes to Rome. Here he meets Iachimo, an Italian libertine, and the two, conversing of the fidelity of wives, make a wager concerning Imogen's faithfulness. Iachimo by craftiness secures access to Imogen's bedroom, steals a bracelet from her while she is asleep and convinces Posthumus that he has won the wager. Posthumus orders his servant to put Imogen to death, but instead she escapes in boy's clothing. In a hut in the forest she discovers her two long-lost brothers who had been abducted by Belarius years before. Eventually Iachimo's villainy is exposed, Cymbeline welcomes back his two sons, his daughter and her repentant husband and all ends happily. The plot of Cymbeline is from the Decameron of Boccaccio (Day ii. 9).

Cymochles. In Spenser's Faerie Queene (II, iv, v, vi, and viii), a man of prodigious might, brother of Pyrochles, son of Acrates and Despite, and husband of Acrasia, the enchantress. He sets out to encounter Sir Guyon, but is ferried over the idle lake by Phaedria and forgets himself; he is slain by King Arthur.

Cymodoce. A sea nymph and companion of Venus in Virgil's Georgics (iv, 338) and Aeneid (v, 826). In Spenser's Faerie Queene (III, iv and IV, xii), she is a daughter of Nereus and mother of Marinell by Dumarin. She frees Florimel from the power of Proteus. The word means "wave-receiving."

Garden of Cymodoce. Sark, one of the Channel Islands. It is the title of a poem by Swinburne in his Songs of the Springtides.

Cymry. A collective term for the Gauls; often, but incorrectly, also the Brythonic Celts, that is, the Welsh.

Cynara. The lady to whom the best-known poem of Ernest Dowson is addressed. Each stanza closes, "I have been faithful to thee, Cynara, in my fashion." The poem has a Latin title: Non sum qualis eram bonae sub regno Cynarae.

Cynewulf (750?-825?) Anglo-Saxon poet, whose existence is conjectured on a manuscript signature in ancient Germanic runic characters (see RUNES) forming the name "Cynewulf." Attributed to his authorship are four poems: a life of St. Juliana; Elene, concerning St. Helena (see under SAINTS); Christ, consisting of three separate poems on the Incarnation, the Ascension, and the Last Judgment; and The Fates of the Apostles. The DREAM OF THE ROOD has also been assigned to Cynewulf by some scholars. These poems are said to belong to the "Cynewulfian cycle" of Anglo-Saxon verse. Cf. CAEDMON.

cynic. The ancient school of Greek philosophers known as the Cynics was founded by Antisthenes, a pupil of Socrates, and made famous by his pupil, Diogenes. They were ostentatiously contemptuous of ease, luxury, or wealth, and were given their name because Antisthenes held his school in the Gymnasium, Cynosarges (white dog), so called because a white dog once carried away part of a victim which Diomeos was there offering to Hercules. Hence the term has come to be applied to the sort of person who seems to make it his business to despise everything and to have faith in nothing.

Cynic Tub. The tub from which Diogenes lectured. Similarly we speak of the "PORCH," meaning Stoic philosophy; the "GARDEN," Epicurean philosophy; the "ACADEMY," Platonian philosophy; and the "Colonnade," meaning Aristotelian philosophy.

[They] fetch their doctrines from the Cynic tub.
Milton, Comus, line 708.

Cynosure (Gr. dog's tail). The Pole star; hence, the observed of all observers. It is applied to the constellation called Ursa Minor. As seamen guide their ships by the north star, and observe it well, the word "cynosure" is used for whatever attracts attention, as "The cynosure of neighboring eyes" (Milton), especially for guidance in some doubtful matter.

Cynthia. The moon: a surname of Artemis or Diana. The Roman Diana, who represented the moon, was called Cynthia from Mount Cynthus in Delos, where she was born. Pope, speaking of the inconstant character of woman, "matter too soft a lasting mark to bear," says—

Come, then, the colors and the ground prepare Dip in the rainbow, trick her off in air;
Choose a firm cloud, before it fall, and in it
Catch, ere she change, the Cynthia of the minute.
Epistle, ii. 17-20.

By Elizabethan poets—Spenser, Phineas Fletcher, Raleigh, Ben Jonson, and others—the name was one of the many that were applied to Queen Elizabeth.

Cynthia's Revels. See JONSON, BEN.

Cyprian. Cyprus was formerly famous for the worship of Venus; hence the adjective has been applied to lewd or profligate persons and prostitutes.

Cyprian, St., see ST. CYPRIAN.

Cyrano de Bergerac. A drama by Edmond Rostand (Fr. 1897). The hero, Cyrano de BERGERAC was a real character, a 17th-century French poet contemporary with Molière. In the drama he is valiant and romantic in the extreme, but desperately sensitive regarding the size of his nose. Although he adores the beautiful Roxane, he wins her love, through his ardent, poetical letters, not for himself but for the handsome and stupid Christian de Neuvillette, whom he also prompts to eloquence under Roxane's balcony at night. Christian and Roxane marry and though Christian is killed in battle almost immediately, Cyrano keeps his secret and feeds her love for the dead man by his friendly visits for long years until at last, when he is dying, the truth is disclosed.

Cyrus the Great (d. 529 B. C.). Founder of the Persian empire. He is the ostensible hero of Mlle de Scudéry's long pastoral romance Artamene ou le Grand Cyrus, published in ten volumes (1648-1653). Cyrus is brought up by shepherds under the name of Artamenes, but after a long series of adventures finally gains his rightful position on the throne. Most of the characters are slightly disguised portraits of the author's contemporaries in 17th century France; Cyrus is Louis XIV, and Sappho, Mlle de Scudéry herself. In spite of its length, the romance enjoyed great prestige. It was the source for Dryden's dramas, Secret Love, Marriage à la Mode and Aurengzebe, and for Banks' Cyrus the Great.

The historical Cyrus overthrew Croesus and his kingdom of Lydia (547-546), made a successful conquest of Babylon (540-539), delivered the Jews from their captivity and allowed them to return to Palestine, and was killed in battle.

Cyrus the Younger (424?-410 B. C.) was a Persian prince and satrap of Asia Minor who led a great army against his brother, Artaxerxes, and was defeated and killed. Following the battle came the famous retreat of the Ten Thousand Greeks that XENOPHON; their leader, immortalized.

Cytherea. (1) A name for Venus; so called from Cythera (now Cerigo), a mountainous island of Laconia noted for the worship of Aphrodite (or Venus). The tale is that Venus and Mars, having formed an illicit affection for each other, were caught in a delicate net made by Vulcan, and exposed to the ridicule of the court of Olympus.

(2) A novel by Joseph Hergesheimer (1922).

Czar. See RULERS, TITLES OF.

czardas. A Hungarian dance, in $\frac{3}{4}$ or $\frac{4}{4}$ measure, in which there is a slow, somewhat pensive introduction, called the Lassu, and then a main section, spirited and wild, which is called the Friss.

czarevitch. A son of a Czar of Russia but not the title of the eldest son or heir to the throne, which was cesarevitch. Czarevitch, originally a title, was afterward replaced by Grand Duke.

Czerlaski, Countess. A character in George Eliot's AMOS BARTON.

czigany, tzigany. Hungarian. A gypsy.

Czolgosz, Leon. Assassin of President McKinley at the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo, N.Y. (Sept. 1901). Czolgosz was executed at the end of October.

D

Dacier, Percy. A brilliant young politician in Meredith's novel, DIANA OF THE CROSSWAYS.

dacoit. In India and Burma, a robber and murderer of the kind operating in gangs.

dactyl. In prosody a dactyl is a poetic foot consisting of a long syllable followed by two short ones, as possible, wonderful, laborer. Dactylic verse is verse based on dactyls. Longfellow's EVANGELINE is a well-known example of dactylic hexameter. The Greek word daktylos means "finger." The syllables of the dactylic foot are arranged like the joints of a finger.

This is the forest primaeval, the murmuring pines and the hemlocks.

Longfellow, Evangeline l.i.

Dactyls. Mythic beings connected with the worship of Cybele, in Crete, to whom is ascribed the discovery of iron. Their number was originally three—the Smelter, the Hammer, and the Anvil; but was afterwards increased to five males and five females, whence their name Dactyls or Fingers.

Dadaism. A European movement in art and literature, founded in Zürich in 1916 with an admittedly destructive intent—to mock, pervert, and demolish all the tenets of painting, music, poetry, philosophy, logic, and even reason itself and set up a pretended madness instead, in protest against what the leaders of the movement regarded as the insane and vicious destruction of civilization, life, and thought taking place in the trenches of World War I. Successive manifestoes were issued in which the nihilistic principles of Dadaism were expounded, and mass meetings were held which usually turned into riots. During the meetings, someone would read poetry which would be drowned out by discordant music, chairmen would be elected from the audience, and poems would be composed by the chance selection of words written on separate slips of paper and tossed into a hat. Dadaism was a phenomenon of the war years and lost its force with the signing of the armistice in 1918. It became less violent and bitter and turned to deriding itself, finally dying "of cheerfulness" in the comparatively "cheerful" year of 1920. In Germany, where the movement had been more political than aesthetic, it was absorbed into the Communist movement (see COMMUNISM); in France it took the form of SURREALISM. Among the originators and leaders of Dadaism were Hans Arp, Richard Huelsenbeck, Hugo Ball, and Tristan Tzara, several of whom later became leaders in the Surrealist movement.

Daddy-Long-Legs. A very successful novel by Jean Webster (1912).

Daedalus. Literally, "the cunning worker." In Greek legend, a personification of skill in the mechanical art; the patron of artists' and craftsmen's guilds. As the hero of legends and tales, Daedalus was an inventive Athenian, son of Metion and grandson of Erechtheus, who originated axes, awls, bevels, and the like. He was the architect who built the labyrinth for king Minos of Crete. Imprisoned in it himself, Daedalus fashioned wings for himself and his son ICARUS and escaped to Sicily. Icarus fell into the sea, but his father reached Sicily safely. Daedalus also had a nephew, Perdix, of whose skill he was envious. He tried to kill him by pushing him off a tower, but Minerva intervened, saving the boy's life by changing him into a partridge. His name is perpetuated in the words daedal, skilful, fertile of invention, daedalian, labyrinthine or ingenious, etc.

daemon. A supernatural power intermediary between gods and men and never thought of as clearly personified. Hence, the driving power of the creative genius considered simultaneously as demonic and tutelary. In modern usage, daemon absorbs also the meaning of daimonion, a term used by Socrates to designate a certain power that warned him against one course of action and made him pursue another.

daeva. One of certain malignant demons of Persian mythology, ferocious and gigantic spirits under the sovereignty of Eblis. Also deva, deev, etc.

At Lahore, in the Mogul's palace, are pictures of Dews and Dives with long horns, staring eyes, shaggy hair, great fangs, ugly paws, long tails, and such horrible deformity, that I wonder the poor women are not frightened.—William Finch, Purchas' Pilgrims, vol. 1.

Dafoe, Dr. Allan Roy (1883–1943). Canadian physician. Dr. Dafoe's Guide Book for Mothers (1936) owed its success to the fact that its author had delivered the DIONNE quintuplets (May 28, 1934).

Daffodil Fields, The. A narrative poem by John MASEFIELD.

Daffodils, The. A famous nature poem by William WORDSWORTH, characteristic of English Romanticism in its appreciation of an object of nature for its own sake.

Dagda. Chief god of the pagan Irish, who defeated the Tuatha De Danann (the other gods) and as their king assumed the rank of a Jupiter of the Gaels. His name signifies literally the good god.

Dagnan-Bouveret, Pascal Adolphe Jean (1852–1929). Once popular French painter.

Dago. American nickname for a foreigner of one of the Latin nationalities. From the Spanish proper name Diego; hence, originally, a Spaniard. Now generally restricted again and applied, chiefly in contempt, to an Italian.

Dagobert, see KING DAGOBERT AND ST. ELOI.

Dagon. A god of the Philistines, supposed—from very uncertain etymological and mythological indications—to have been symbolized as half man and half fish.

Dagon his name; sea-monster, upward man
And downward fish; yet had his temple high Rear'd in Azotus, dreaded through the coast
Of Palestine, in Gath and Ascalon,
And Accaron and Gaza's frontier bounds.
Milton, Paradise Lost, i. 462.

Dagonet, Sir. The fool of King Arthur in the Arthurian legends. He was knighted by the King himself.

daguerreotype. A photograph of the kind brought into general use (1839) by the French painter Louis Jacques Mandé Daguerre (1789–1851). The silver plate, on which the exposure was taken, represented the one and only copy of the finished picture. The calotype or talbotype, invented by the Englishman William Henry Fox Talbot (1800–1877), permitted the taking of prints from a “film” of translucent paper (patented 1841).

Dagwood. See BLONDIE.

Dahak. The Satan of Persia. According to Persian mythology, the ages of the world are divided into periods of 1,000 years. When the cycle of “chiliasms” (1,000-year periods) is complete, the reign of Ormuzd will begin, and men will be all good and all happy; but this event will be preceded by the loosing of Dahak, the serpent king, who will break his chain and fall upon the world, and bring on man the most dreadful calamities.

Dahlgren gun. A cast-iron smooth-bore, 11-inch gun, devised in 1851 by the American Lieutenant John A. Dahlgren, much used by the Navy during the Civil War. Lieutenant (later Admiral) Dahlgren (1809–1870) wrote several books on naval ordnance.

Dumb are the dahlgrens and mortars.

H. H. Brownell, The Bay Fight.

Daibutsu. A colossal image of Buddha. The most famous one is at Kamakura. Cf. the poem by Kipling. Cast in bronze, it is 58 ft. tall and 98 ft. around.

Daikoku. One of the seven gods of Good Fortune in the Japanese pantheon. He is invoked specially by artisans. He sits on a ball of rice, holding a magic mallet, each stroke of which confers wealth, and is usually accompanied by a rat. He is one of the most popular of the Japanese gods.

Dail Eireann or Dail. The lower house of the legislature of the Irish Free State. Its membership is fixed on the basis of population; its sessions continue for four years unless dissolved.

daimio or daimyo (Chinese dai myo, great name). A Japanese nobleman.

Daimler, Gottlieb (1834–1900). German inventor. Produced the Mercedes and Daimler-Benz automobiles. The Daimler engine (patented in 1887) marked an important step forward in the development of the automobile.

Dai Nippon (Japanese Great Nippon). Japan, so called by the Japanese. Cf. Great Britain, also Grossdeutschland.

Dain Maroola. In Conrad's LORD JIM, the son of Chief Doramin and Jim's best friend in Patusan.

Daisy, Solomon. The parish clerk in Dickens' BARNABY RUDGE.

Daisy Miller. A short story by Henry JAMES (1878), a pathetic tale of an unsophisticated, “strikingly, admirably pretty” girl from Schenectady who runs athwart European conventions. With her complacent mother and ill-mannered little brother Randolph, she travels about Europe with tragic results.

Dakin's solution, Carrel-Dakin solution. Antiseptic solutions developed during World War I for the treatment of wounds. Named after the English chemist Henry Drysdale Dakin (1880–) and the French surgeon Alexis CARREL (1873–1944).

Daladier, Édouard (1884–). Premier of France (1933, 1934, 1938–1940), who with Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain of England was responsible for the Munich pact with Hitler. Arrested after collapse of French defense in 1940. Daladier's premiership of 1934 lasted eleven days.

Dalai Lama. The Grand Lama, pope of the Lamaists, who has his seat at Lhasa, the Buddhist sacred city of Thibet. See LAMAISM.

Dalcroze, see JAKES-DALCROZE.

Dale, Sir Henry Hallett (1875–). English physiologist. Investigated, in collaboration with the German pharmacologist Otto Loewi (1873–) the chemistry of the transmission of nerve impulses. Shared with Loewi 1936 Nobel prize for physiology.

Dale, Laetitia. A character in George Meredith's novel, THE EGOIST.

Dalgarno, Lord Malcolm of. In Scott's FORTUNES OF NIGEL, a profligate young nobleman. It was for striking Dalgarno with his sword that Nigel was obliged to seek refuge in Alsatia. Dalgarno's villainy to the Lady Hermione excites the displeasure of King James, but he wins forgiveness by marrying her. He is finally shot by Captain Colepepper.

Dalgetty, Dugald. The Laird of Drumthwacket in Scott's LEGEND OF MONTROSE, a soldier of fortune in the service of the Earl of Monteith. He is a pedant and a braggart, one of Scott's most celebrated characters. The original was probably a certain Munro who wrote an account of the campaigns of Scotch and English auxiliaries in the island of Swinemunde in 1630.

Dali, Salvador (1904-). Spanish painter. Ultramodernist, associated with futurism, constructivism, cubism, abstract irrationalism and surrealism. Has collaborated in scenarios of two surrealist moving pictures and written several books including his autobiography. Is noted for foregrounds containing incongruous objects and anatomical curiosities with beautifully painted delicate backgrounds. A master draughtsman, who exploits the irrational.

Dalloway, Mrs. See MRS. DALLOWAY.

Dalmatian or Dalmatian dog. A dog of a large breed with white coat and black or brown spots; also called coach dog from its habit of running between the wheels of a carriage at the heels of the horse. A favorite with Fire Departments.

Daly, Arnold (1875-1927). American actor. Produced Shaw's Candida (1903) and thereafter appeared exclusively in Shaw's dramas. His arrest, trial, and acquittal after the first performance of Mrs. Warren's Profession (1905) is a famous case.

Daly, Augustin (1838-1899). Famous American theatrical manager and playwright. Established Daly's Theater (1879) and assembled a new company including John Drew, Ada Rehan, Otis Skinner, etc.

Daly, Thomas Augustine (1871-1948). American poet best known for his Italian dialect poems and sometimes called the "laureate of the dago." Canzoni (1906); Carmina (1909); Madrigali (1912); McAroni Ballads (1919); etc. See MACARONIC.

Damaged Souls. A collection of biographical sketches by Gamaliel BRADFORD (1923), presenting analyses of P. T. BARNUM, Aaron BURR, Thomas PAINE, and others.

Damascus. A city in Syria on the edge of the desert, famous for its silks and steel. It is referred to in the Old Testament, Gen. xiv. 15, xv. 2. For the rôle it played in the history of Paul, cf. Acts ix.

Damascus, The Gates of. A poem by James Elroy FLECKER.

Damayanti. A heroine of Hindu legend. See NALA.

Dame. A title, corresponding to knight, accorded in England to women appointed to the 1st or 2nd class of the Order of the British Empire.

Dame aux camélias, La. See CAMILLE.

Dame Care (Frau Sorge). A novel by Hermann Sudermann (Ger. 1888). The hero is Paul Meyerhofer, a boy whose struggles against poverty and sordid family difficulties are attended always by Dame Care. At length his prospective marriage to his only love, Elsbeth Douglas, opens up a way of escape.

Damien de Veuster, Joseph. Known as Father Damien (1840-1889). Belgian Roman Catholic missionary noted for his work with the lepers in a government hospital on Molokai Island in the Hawaiian group. Contracted leprosy and died. Cf. the famous essay by Robert Louis Stevenson, Father Damien: An Open Letter to the Rev. Dr. Hyde (1890).

Damnation of Faust, The. See FAUST.

Damnation of Theron Ware, The. A novel by Harold FREDERIC (1896). It describes the development of the character of Theron Ware, an earnest young Methodist clergyman, who is thrown into emotional conflict on discovering the weaknesses and deficiencies of the church and himself. After being unhappily in love with Celia Madden, a rich Catholic, who rejects him, he finds salvation in association with Sister Soulsby, a religious revivalist.

Damocles' Sword. Evil foreboded or dreaded. Damocles, a sycophant of Dionysius the Elder, of Syracuse, was invited by the tyrant to try the felicity he so much envied. Accepting, he was set down to a sumptuous banquet, but overhead was a sword suspended by a hair. Damocles was afraid to stir, and the banquet was a tantalizing torment to him.

Damoetas. A herdsman. Theocritus and Virgil use the name in their pastorals.

And old Damoetas loved to hear our song.
Milton: Lycidas

Damon. The name of a goatherd in Virgil's Eclogues, and hence used by pastoral poets for rustic swains.

Damon, Samuel Foster (1893-). American poet, literary biographer, and university professor. Best-known for his William Blake: His Philosophy and Symbols (1924), (the first edition is now very rare) and his definitive life of Amy Lowell (1935). His poetry is collected in Astrolabe (1927) and Tilted Moons (1929).

Damon and Pythias. Inseparable friends. They were Syracusans of the first half of the 4th century B. C. Pythias, condemned to death by Dionysius the tyrant, obtained leave to go home to arrange his affairs on condition that Damon agree to take his place and be executed should Pythias not return. Pythias was delayed, Damon was led to execution, but his friend arrived just in time to save him. Dionysius was so struck with this honorable friendship that he pardoned both of them.

Spenser fables that in the temple of Venus, Hercules and Hylas, Jonathan and David, Theseus and Pirithous, Pylades and Orestes, Titus and Gesippus, Damon and Pythias whom death could not sever:

All these and all that ever had been tyde
In bands of friendship, there did live for ever.
Faerie Queene, IV. x. 27.

Dampier, William (1652–1715). English navigator and buccaneer. Gave his name to Dampier Archipelago and Dampier Strait. Piloted the expedition which rescued Alexander Selkirk, the prototype of ROBINSON CRUSOE (1709). Among the accounts of his voyages A New Voyage Round the World (1697) is the best-known.

Damrosch, Walter Johannes (1862–). Son of Leopold Damrosch (1832–1885), a famous German conductor, and brother of Frank Heino Damrosch (1859–1937), well-known chorus-master. German-born director of New York Symphony Orchestra (1903–1927); founder and conductor of educational orchestral radio concerts, composer of several operas. American Academy of Arts and Letters.

Dan.

from Dan to Beersheba. From one end of the kingdom to the other; all over the world; everywhere. The phrase is Scriptural, Dan being the most northern and Beersheba the most southern city of the Holy Land.

Dana, Charles Anderson (1819–1897). One of America's greatest journalists. Managing editor New York Tribune (1847–1861), editor Chicago Republican (1866–1868), editor and chief proprietor New York Sun (1868–1897).

Dana, John Cotton (1857–1929). American librarian, Denver, Colo.; Springfield, Mass.; Newark, N.J.

Dana, Richard Henry (1815–1882). American lawyer and author, best known for Two Years Before the Mast (1840), a realistic account of a sea-voyage which had an important influence on later sea-stories. He was active in giving legal help to sailors and escaped slaves, and wrote on international law. His father, Richard Henry Dana, Sr. (1787–1879), was a literary critic and one of the founders of the NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

Danaë. An Argive princess, daughter of Acrisius, King of Argos. He, told that his daughter's son would put him to death, resolved that Danaë should never marry, and accordingly locked her up in an inaccessible tower. Zeus foiled the king by changing himself into a shower of gold, under which guise he readily found access to the fair prisoner, and she thus became the mother of Perseus.

Danaides. The fifty daughters of Danaus, King of Argos. They married the fifty sons of Aegyptus, and all but Hypermnestra, wife of Lynceus, at the command of their father murdered their husbands on their wedding night. They were punished in Hades by having to draw water everlastingly in sieves from a deep well. Hence Danaid's work is endless and purposeless labor.

Dance, A Time to. A book of poems by Cecil DAY-LEWIS.

dance of death. An allegorical representation of death leading all sorts and conditions of men in a dance to the grave, originating in Germany in the 14th century as a kind of morality play, quickly becoming popular in France and England, and surviving later principally by means of pictorial representations, the best-known example of which is in Basel, Switzerland, and in the folksong. There is a series of woodcuts, said to be by Hans HOLBEIN (1538), representing death dancing after all sorts of persons, beginning with Adam and Eve. He is beside the judge on his bench, the priest in the pulpit, the nun in her cell, the doctor in his study, the bride and the beggar, the king and the infant; but is "swallowed up at last."

The 20th-century English poet, W. H. AUDEN entitled a satiric poetic drama on the "decline of the English middle class" The Dance of Death.

Dancing Chancellor. Sir Christopher Hatton (1540–1591). So called because he had attracted Queen Elizabeth's attention by his dancing at a court masque.

Dandie Dinmont. In Scott's GUY MANNERING, a border farmer. He owns two terriers, Mustard and Pepper, reputedly the progenitors of the Dandie Dinmont terriers.

Dandin, George, see GEORGE DANDIN.

Dandolo, Enrico (1108?–1205). Doge of Venice. One of the leaders of the Fourth Crusade and said to have been the first to mount the walls of Constantinople when it was captured by the Christians.

Dane, Clemence. Pseudonym, taken from the church of St. Clements Dane in London, of Winifred Ashton. Leading English novelist, dramatist, and poet. Her best-known play, A Bill of Divorcement (1921) made the reputation of Katharine Cornell; her best-known novels, Regiment of Women (1917) and Broome Stages (1931), about a theatrical family whose history parallels that of the Plantagenet family.

Danegeld, Danegelt. A special tax imposed in early medieval England to buy off the Danish invaders or to raise a force against them. Not leveled under this name after 1163.

Dancelaw. The Danish law in force in the northeastern part of England while it was held by the Danes.

Dangeau, Marquis de. Philippe de Courcillon (1638–1720). French favorite of Louis XIV. His Mémoires, covering the years 1684–1720, are a valuable source of historical detail.

Dangle. In SHERIDAN's comedy The Critic (1779), a gentleman bitten with the theatrical mania, who annoys a manager with impertinent flattery and advice. It is said that Thomas Vaughan, a playwright of small reputation, was the original of this character.

Daniel. A hero of the Old Testament whose deeds and prophecies are recorded in the book of Daniel. He was cast into a den of lions for continuing to pray to his own God while in captivity in Babylon, but was found unhurt the following morning. Daniel was famed as the interpreter of two dreams of Nebuchadnezzar and of the HANDWRITING ON THE WALL. A Daniel come to Judgment is an impartial judge. The phrase is first used by Shylock, in Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice, when he thinks Portia is deciding in his favor, and later by Gratiano to mock the defeated Jew.

Daniel, Arnaud. 12th-century Provençal poet, called by Petrarch gran maestro d'amore, "the great master of love." Inventor of the SESTINA, used by Dante and Petrarch.

Daniel, Samuel (ca. 1562–1619). English poet, known for the purity of his diction—he was called "well-languaged Daniel" by his contemporaries—and for his use of historical material in his verse. His works include: an edition of his sonnets (1592); Complaint of Rosamund (1592), based on the type of legend in the Mirror for Magistrates; Civil Wars (1595), dealing with English history; Defense of Rhyme (1602), a critical essay in answer to the attack by Thomas CAMPION on rhyme; The Vision of the Twelve Goddesses (1604), the first masque written for the new court of Queen Anne.

Daniel Deronda. A novel by George Eliot (1868). The heroine, Gwendolyn Harleth, finds in Daniel Deronda the only man she knows who is indifferent to her charms; and in her efforts to win his regard, especially after her unhappy marriage to the rich but tyrannical Henleigh Grandcourt, she gradually develops her finer qualities. When Grandcourt drowns in the moment of delay before Gwendolyn throws him a rope, she blames herself bitterly and finds comfort only in Deronda's sympathetic advice. Deronda is a man of the highest ideals, who has been brought up by his rich guardian, Sir Hugo Mallinger in the belief that he is a Christian, but learns that he is a Jew. He marries Mirah Cohen (or Lapidoth), a beautiful Jewess whom he had saved from suicide, and in the idealistic Mordecai, who turns out to be Mirah's lost brother Ezra, he finds a friend who inspires him with the cause of Jewish nationalism. After Mordecai's death, he and Mirah go to Palestine to live.

For the character of the hero, see under DERONDA.

Daniels, Jonathan Worth (1902–). Son of Josephus Daniels (1862–1948), secretary of the navy under President Wilson. Himself secretary to Franklin D. Roosevelt, after being assistant director of the Office of Civilian Defense. A journalist and writer on the South whose work is valuable as source material.

Danite. A descendant of Dan (Judges xiii. 2.). Hence, one of an alleged secret association of MORMONS, the Danite Band (1837).

Dannebrog or Danebrog. The national flag of Denmark (brog is Old Danish for cloth). The tradition is that Waldemar II of Denmark saw in the heavens a fiery cross which betokened his victory over the Esthonianians (1219).

order of Danebrog. The second of the Danish orders of knighthood; instituted in 1219 by Waldemar II, restored by Christian V in 1671, and several times modified since.

D'Annunzio, Gabriele (1863–1938). Italian poet, novelist, dramatist, and aviator. His best-known works are La Gioconda (1898); Il Fuoco (THE FLAME OF LIFE) (1900) a novel detailing his liaison with Eleonora DUSE; Franческа da Rimini (1901); Forse Che Sì, Forse Che No (1910). Lost an eye in aerial combat during World War I; in 1919 led an expedition into the city of Fiume and held it for fifteen months, in defiance of the treaty obligations of Italy. Cf. Leonard Bacon's long poem The Furioso, in which D'Annunzio is dissected.

Danny Deever. A well-known ballad by Rudyard KIPPLING (1892), dealing with the military hanging of Danny Deever, a soldier in the British army who "shot a comrade sleepin'."

Dansker. A Dane. Denmark used to be called Danskē. Hence Polonius says to Reynaldo, "Inquire me first what Danskers are in Paris." (Hamlet, ii. 1.)

Dante (short for Durante) Alighieri (b. at Florence in 1265, d. at Ravenna in exile in 1321) may be considered the incarnation of the greatest poetical power known in the history of the human mind. Carlyle said of the Italian poet that "he gave a voice to ten silent centuries." The work in which Dante effected this achievement is his "Comedia," known as La Divina Commedia, "THE DIVINE COMEDY" (ca. 1300)—the epithet "Divine" being attached to the poem in the 16th century. The Divine Comedy, consisting of 100 cantos in TERZA RIMA, reveals a scheme of the universe, a comprehensive moral, religious, and political system, a visionary journey through Hell, Purgatory, and Paradise, and at the same time the way of an individual soul from sin to purification. Between Plato's Dialogues and Shakespeare's Plays the Divine Comedy is, apart from the New Testament, the only exemplar of deeply humane and immediate relationship on every level between soul and soul.

The entire structure of the religious, moral, and political world of the Middle Ages has found its adequate representation in a threefold way: in philosophy, in the all-embracing encyclopedias (summae) of the German Albertus Magnus and the Italian Thomas Aquinas; in art, in the French cathedrals of the 12th and 13th centuries; in poetry, in the Divine Comedy.

The vast encyclopedia of human and divine knowledge embodied in the Divine Comedy has, as if by metamorphosis, been transfigured into unalloyed poetry. There is no English translation which transmits the poetical magic of the poem adequately, or even approximately, whereas Dante's early relation, in verse and commenting prose, of his love for Beatrice, LA VITA NUOVA (The New Life; 1291) has found an almost ideal translator in Dante Gabriel ROSSETTI. In the Divine Comedy Beatrice, in whom the earthly woman is indissolubly merged with the allegory of Grace and divine Theology, leads the Poet through the Heavens. The cantos devoted to Beatrice's praise are the greatest homage ever paid to a mortal woman.

Dante antedates both PETRARCH and BOCACCIO. In addition to the works mentioned, he wrote the Convivio (Banquet; ca. 1300), a philosophical treatise; De Vulgari Eloquentia, a Latin treatise on language and metrics, urging the literary use of the vernacular language; and De Monarchia, a Latin treatise on political theory and the relations between Pope and emperor, favoring strong rule by the emperor. The Tuscan dialect used by Dante in his vernacular writings later became the standard language of Italy.

Dantes, Edmond. The titular hero of Dumas' COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO.

Danton, Georges Jacques (1759-1794). French revolutionary leader. Minister of justice (August 1792); implicated in September massacres (1792). He overthrew Hébert in a joint action with Robespierre by whom he was in turn overthrown himself. Victim of the Reign of Terror. Cf. the dramatic poem Dantons Tod (Danton's Death) by Georg Büchner (Ger. 1835). In a speech (September 2, 1792) inspired by the dangers of the European alliance against revolutionary France, Danton uttered the famous words: "De l'audace, encore de l'audace, et toujours de l'audace."

Danzig, Free City of. The city of Danzig (Ger.), Gdansk (Pol.), or Gedanum (Lithuanian) near the mouth of the Vistula is mentioned as early as 997; it came under the rule of the Teutonic Order (ca. 1310), was a Hanseatic city, fell to Poland (1466) and finally to Prussia (1793). In the 19th century it was Germany's most important Baltic port. Under the Versailles treaty it was established as a free city, which satisfied neither Poland nor Germany. Its severance from the Reich was an important factor in the propagandistic preparation of World War II carried on by the Nazis. The slogan, "Why should we die for Danzig?" has become a symbol of Western, especially French, apathy in the face of the territorial ambitions of the THIRD REICH.

Daphnaida. An elegy by Spenser (1591) on Douglas Howard Gorges, the only daughter of Lord Bindon. In general design and several details it is indebted to Chaucer's BOOK OF THE DUCHESS.

Daphne. In Greek mythology, daughter of a river-god, loved by Apollo. She fled from the amorous god, and escaped by being changed into a laurel, thenceforth the favorite tree of the sun-god.

Daphnis. In Greek mythology, a Sicilian shepherd who invented pastoral poetry. He was a son of Mercury and a Sicilian nymph, was protected by Diana, and was taught by Pan and the Muses.

Daphnis and Chloë. Title of a Greek pastoral, generally ascribed to the sophist Longus (4th or 5th century A. D.). It tells the story of the tender love of Daphnis and Chloë, the children of a goatherd and a shepherd. It owes its fame in modern times to the French version by Amyot (1559). Major works in its later tradition are Tasso's Aminta, Montemayor's Diana, St. Pierre's Paul et Virginie, etc.

Dapper. In Ben Jonson's ALCHEMIST, a lawyer's clerk, who goes to Subtle "the alchemist," to be supplied with a familiar to make him win in horse-racing, cards, and all games of chance. Dapper is told to prepare himself for an interview with the fairy queen by taking "three drops of vinegar in at the nose, two at the mouth, and one at either ear," "to cry hum thrice and buzz as often."

Dapple. The donkey ridden by Sancho Panza, in Cervantes' romance of DON QUIXOTE.

Darby and Joan. The type of loving, old-fashioned, virtuous couples. The names belong to a ballad called The Happy Old Couple, probably written by Henry Woodfall, and the characters are said to be of John Darby, of Bartholomew Close, who died in 1730, and his wife. Woodfall served his apprenticeship as a printer to John Darby. Some authorities attribute the ballad to Matthew Prior.

Darcy. The hero of Jane Austen's PRIDE AND PREJUDICE.

D'Arcy, Bartell. An Irish tenor who appears briefly in both THE DEAD and ULYSSES by James Joyce.

Dardanelles. The ancient Hellespont, a strait between Europe and Asiatic Turkey. During World War I the Allies attacked the Turks here, and suffered defeat. In 1941 it was the gateway to Russia from the Mediterranean but Turkey, as neutral, refused passage of it. Its fortifications were so strong that no attempt on it was made by sea. Russia's traditional ambitions to gain control over the Dardanelles are inspired by the country's need for free access to ice-free waters.

Dare, Virginia (1587- ?). First American-born child of English colonists on Roanoke Island, Virginia (now North Carolina). In 1591, when relief reached the island, all traces of the settlers had vanished.

Dares Phrygius. Author of an early version of the Troilus legend in Latin prose, written about the 6th century A. D. The account is preceded by a forged letter from Cornelius Nepos, claiming to have discovered the manuscript, written in Phrygian characters, in Athens. It purports to be the story of Troy told by a supposed eye-witness, and is biased in favor of the Trojan point of view. Odd quirks are given to the story, including the endowment of Paris with effeminate characteristics and of Briseida, as in later versions, with joined eyebrows. Although now regarded as a literary forgery, the account of Dares was one of the versions by which the story of Troy was known to the Middle Ages. Cf. DICTYS CRETENSIS.

Dargan, Olive Tilford. American poet and novelist. Some of her best work is in the ballad and the poetic drama. Wrote two proletarian novels under the pseudonym of Fielding Burke, Call Home the Heart (1932) and A Stone Came Rolling (1935).

Darien. The Isthmus of Darien is the place from which, according to Keats, "Stout Cortez" first viewed the Pacific. Actually it was Balboa at Darien who stood "silent, upon a peak" first viewing what he called "el mar del sur."

Darío, Rubén (1867-1916). Nicaraguan poet. Outstanding in South American literature. Aristocratic and in many respects rather European than American.

Darius. A Greek form of Persian dara, a king, or of Sanskrit dary, the maintainer. Gushasp or Kishtasp assumed the title on ascending the throne in 521 B. C., and is generally known as Darius the Great.

Legend relates that seven Persian princes agreed that he should be king whose horse neighed first; and the horse of Darius was the first to neigh.

It is said that Darius III (Codomannus), the last king of Persia, who was conquered by Alexander the Great (331 B. C.), when Alexander succeeded to the throne, sent to him for the tribute of golden eggs, but the Macedonian answered, "The bird which laid them is flown to the other world, where Darius must seek them." The Persian King then sent him a bat and ball, in ridicule of his youth; but Alexander told the messengers, with the bat he would beat the ball of power from their master's hand. Lastly, Darius sent him a bitter melon as emblem of the grief in store for him; but the Macedonian declared that he would make the Shah eat his own fruit.

dark.

the Dark Ages. The earlier centuries of the Middle Ages; roughly, the era between the death of Charlemagne and the close of the Carolingian dynasty; so called because of the intellectual darkness supposedly characteristic of the period. Nowadays few writers dare to use the term without the qualification "so-called."

the Dark and Bloody Ground. A name for the State of Kentucky, either (1) from the early warfare with the Indians, or (2) a translation of the Indian name of the State.

the Dark Continent. Africa; concerning which the world was so long "in the dark," and which, also, is the land of dark races.

dark horse. A racing term for a horse of good pretensions, but of which nothing is positively known by the general public. Its merits are kept dark from betters and bookmakers. The term is widely used in the political field for a candidate brought forward at the last minute.

Dark Flower, The. A novel by John Galsworthy (1913) relating the love affairs of Mark Lennan. The "dark flower" is passion.

dark lady of the sonnets. The mysterious person to whom Shakespeare addressed his sonnets. She has been the subject of much interesting speculation. George Bernard Shaw wrote a play entitled The Dark Lady of the Sonnets (1910).

Dark Laughter. A novel by Sherwood Anderson (1925). It deals with the escape of John Stockton, a Chicago newspaperman, from a life he regards as sterile and oppressive, ruled by the machine. He travels by boat down the Mississippi River and eventually takes a job as a laborer, under the name of Bruce Dudley, in a factory in his former hometown in Indiana. There he and Aline Grey, the wife of his employer and a woman similarly dissatisfied with the mechanical civilization of the time, fall in love and elope. The title refers to the animal joy of the Negroes, symbolic of simple, happy, and uninhibited living.

Darley, George (1795-1846). Irish poet. Author of several enduring lyrics, the fairy opera, Sylvia (1827), etc.

Darley Arabian. About 1700 a Mr. Darley, of Yorkshire, imported into England from Aleppo three thoroughbred Arabian stallions which became the founders of the line of thoroughbreds in England. Darley Arabian, the sire of Flying Childers, and great-great-grand sire of Eclipse, was one; the others were Byerby Turk and Godolphin Barb. From the first comes the Herod breed, and from the second the Matchem.

Darling, Grace Horsley (1815-1842). The Farne Islands, off Northumberland county, England, were the scene of the shipwreck of the Forfarshire (1838) and the heroic rescue of nine survivors by young Grace Darling and her father, the keeper of the lighthouse.

Darling, Jay Norwood (1876-). Well-known American cartoonist. Also active in preservation of wild life. His signature reads Ding.

Darling, Wendy, Michael and John. In Barrie's PETER PAN, the children whom Peter teaches to fly with him to Never-Never Land.

Darling of the Graces. (1) Aristophanes (444-380 B.C.).

(2) Heinrich Heine (1789-1856).

Darlington, Lord. In Oscar Wilde's play LADY WINDERMERE'S FAN, the lover of Lady Windermere.

Darmesteter, Agnes Mary Frances, nee Robinson (1857-). English poet and novelist. Wife of the French Orientalist James Darmesteter (1849-1894) and sister-in-law of the lexicographer Arsène Darmesteter (1846-1888) whose Dictionnaire Général de la Langue Française (in collaboration with Adolphe Hatzfeld and Antoine Thomas) came out posthumously (1890-1900) and stands, through the precision of its definitions, as a monument to the proverbial clarity of French thought. Now Mme Duclaux.

Darnay, Charles. In Dickens' TALE OF TWO CITIES, the lover and afterwards the husband of Lucie Manette. He bears a strong likeness to Sydney CARTON.

Darnel, Aurelia. A character in Smollett's novel, THE ADVENTURES OF SIR LAUNCELOT GREAVES (1760).

Darnley, Lord. Henry Stuart (1545-1567). Second husband of MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS. Took part in the murder of Rizzio (1566). Himself murdered, at Kirk o'Field, a solitary house near Edinburgh, which was blown up with gunpowder, possibly with Mary's knowledge.

Darrel of the Blessed Isles. A novel by Irving BACHELLER (1903), concerning an old clock-maker who dwells in the "Blessed Isles" of the imagination.

Darrow, Clarence Seward (1857-1938). American criminal lawyer, humanitarian and author of Crime: Its Cause and Treatment (1922), The Story of My Life (1932), etc. Among his famous cases were his winning of an acquittal for Eugene V. Debs in the American Railway Union strike (1894); another for "Big Bill" Haywood and two other Western Federation of Miners officials; his plea for mitigating circumstances of insanity for Loeb and Leopold (1924); his victory over William Jennings Bryan in the SCOPES case (1925), though he lost the jury verdict in that Tennessee controversy on evolution; and the Negroes in the Scottsboro case (1932). He was a confirmed pessimist and agnostic but also a brave, kindly, and simple man.

D'Artagnan. See THREE MUSKETEERS, THE.

Dartle, Rosa. In Dickens' DAVID COPPERFIELD, companion of Mrs. Steerforth. She loves Mrs. Steerforth's son, but her love is not reciprocated. Miss Dartle is a vindictive woman, noted for a scar on her lip, which tells tales when her temper is aroused. This scar is from a wound given her by young Steerforth, who struck her on the lip when a boy.

Dartmoor. Short for Dartmoor prison, a famous English prison on a table land in South Devonshire.

Dartmouth College. A nonsectarian American college in Hanover, N.H. founded in 1769 by Eleazer Wheelock. Over two thousand students; over two hundred teachers.

Darwin, Charles Robert (1809-1882). Great English naturalist, grandson of Erasmus Darwin. Participated as naturalist in the surveying expedition on the Beagle to South America and Australasia (1831-1836); published Zoology of the Voyage of the Beagle (1840). Published his own and Alfred Russel Wallace's theories of natural selection together (1857). Author of On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection (1859); and The Descent of Man (1871), in which the human race is considered to have descended from an animal of the anthropoids; etc. Buried in Westminster Abbey. The essence of Darwin's theories, often referred to as Darwinism, consists in the idea that, because offspring can vary from the parents and because nature tolerates only the survival of the fittest, the principle of natural selection can explain the evolution of a higher species from a lower one. In its unqualified form, Darwinism is no longer tenable, but Darwin's historical importance remains tremendous. He was a great scientific pioneer and his ideas affected the 19th- and 20th-century faith in universal and continued progress. See also SCOPES TRIAL; MISSING LINK.

Darwin, Erasmus (1731-1802). English physician, botanist, and author of The Botanic Garden (1789 and 1791), a didactic poem in heroic couplets discoursing on plants and flowers according to the theories of LINNAEUS. Darwin's Zoonomia (1794-1796) is a treatise on evolutionary development, not, however, in the sense which Erasmus Darwin's grandson, Charles Robert DARWIN, was to assign to that term.

Dashwood, Elinor and Marianne. Joint heroines of Jane Austen's SENSE AND SENSIBILITY.

date line. A hypothetical line, fixed by convention approximately on the meridian 180° from Greenwich as the place where each calendar day first begins. It is deflected in several places to avoid the inconvenience of different day-reckoning between places in close proximity. Vessels crossing the line to the westward set the date forward by one day. Vessels crossing to the eastward set it back by a day.

Dauber. Title and hero of a narrative poem (1912) by John MASEFIELD, the tragic story of an artist-sailor who is the butt of all his companions' jokes.

Daudet, Alphonse (1840-1897). French novelist of the Naturalist school (see NATURALISM), known for his keen observation and his rendering of characters and incidents, most of which were autobiographical or belonged to the biographies of people he knew. His novels deal with life in Provence, his birthplace, and with the social classes of Paris, both wealthy and poor. The Provençal stories, vigorous and good-humored, include Lettres de mon moulin (1866); Tartarin de Tarascon (1872), Tartarin sur les Alpes (1885), and Port-Tarascon (1890), belonging to the TARTARIN series. Daudet's novels of Parisian manners include THE NABOB (le Nabob) (1877); Numa Roumestan (1881); KINGS IN EXILE (Les Rois en exil) (1879); SAPHO (1884); L'Immortel (1888). Other novels deal with the humbler classes of the metropolitan population in a manner sometimes compared with that of DICKENS. Among these are Fromont jeune et Risler aîné (1874), Jack (1876), and L'Évangéliste. Like the other novelists of the Naturalist group, Daudet often worked fifteen hours a day on his books, and his health was impaired by overwork. His writings are considered to be less somber and less bookish than those of the other Naturalists. His son, Léon Daudet (1867-1942), was a French journalist and writer of novels, books on psychology and medicine, political works and books of literary criticism. He founded with Charles Maurras the royalist journal, L'Action Française (1907).

daughter of Heth. An alien woman. Cf. Gen. xxvi. 34-35. Title of a novel by William Black.

daughter of Jezebel. See JEZEBEL.

Daughter of the Middle Border. See MIDDLE BORDER.

Daughters of the American Revolution (D.A.R.). A patriotic society of American women organized at Washington, D.C. (1890) to preserve in memory those active in achieving American Independence. It has become an extremely conservative and in some respects intolerant organization with emphasis on the social privilege of membership. Cf. Grant Wood's devastating portrayal Daughters of Revolution.

Daumier, Honoré (1808-1879). Famous French caricaturist. Political and bourgeois subjects. On staff of La Caricature and Charivari. His serious work is less well-known.

dauphin. The heir of the French crown under the Valois and Bourbon dynasties. Guy VIII, count of Vienne, was the first so styled, apparently because he wore a dolphin as his cognizance. The title descended in the family till 1349, when Humbert III ceded his seigneurie, the Dauphiné, to Philippe VI (de Valois), one condition being that the heir of France assume the title of le dauphin. The first French prince so called was Jean, who succeeded Philippe; and the last was the Duc d'Angoulême, son of Charles X, who renounced the title in 1830.

Grand Dauphin. Louis, Duc de Bourgogne (1661-1711), eldest son of Louis XIV, for whose use was published the so-called Delphin Latin classics entitled ad usum Delphini.

Second or Little Dauphin. Louis, son of the Grand Dauphin (1682-1712).

Davenport, Griffith. See GRIFFITH DAVENPORT.

Davenport, Marcia (1903-). Daughter of Alma Gluck. Married to Russell W. DAVENPORT. Author of a biography of Mozart and of the novels Of Lena Geyer (1936), The Valley of Decision (1942), etc.

Davenport, Russell W. (1899-). American author and editor. Served overseas in World War I and was twice awarded the Croix de Guerre. Joined Fortune magazine (1930) and became managing editor. Chief editorial writer, Life magazine (1942-1944). Author of My Country: A Poem of America (1944) which aroused considerable controversy and had a wide sale. Davenport is a progressive Republican who worked for Wendell WILLKIE as president before and after his nomination.

David. The shepherd king of the Old Testament (1 Sam. xvi-1 Kings ii), the reputed author of many of the Psalms. He was the youngest son of Jesse, "ruddy and withal of a beautiful countenance and goodly to look upon." David was secretly anointed king by the prophet Samuel while Saul was still on the throne and the stories of his early life are concerned with his immortal friendship for Saul's son Jonathan and Saul's growing jealousy. He killed Goliath, the huge champion of the Philistines, when no one else would venture to respond to the giant's challenge; and with his harp he charmed away the black moods of King Saul. For many years, however, he was forced to flee from Saul's anger.

After the death of Saul and Jonathan, David became king of Israel. His latter years were concerned with his guilty love for BATHSHEBA and his grief over the revolt of his son ABSALOM.

David is the hero of Peele's drama David and Bethsabe (1598), of Drayton's narrative poem David and Goliath (1630), and of two long poems entitled Davidis, one by Abraham Cowley, the other by Thomas Elwood. Stephen Phillips (Eng. 1868-1915) wrote a poetic drama entitled The Sin of David. Elmer Davis has a novel, Giant Killer (1928).

David, in Dryden's satire of Absalom and Achitophel, is meant for Charles II. As David's beloved son Absalom is against him, so the Duke of Monmouth rebels against his father Charles II. As Achitophel is a traitorous counsellor to David, so was the Earl of Shaftesbury to Charles II. As Hushai outwits Achitophel, so Hyde (Duke of Rochester) outwitted the Earl of Shaftesbury, etc.

Auspicious prince,
Thy longing country's darling and desire,
Their cloudy pillar, and their guardian fire . . .
The people's prayer, the glad diviner's theme
The young men's vision, and the old men's dream.
Dryden, Absalom and Achitophel, l. 231-240.

David, Jacques Louis (1748-1825). French painter, "founder of the French classical school." Court painter to Louis XVI. He sympathized with the French Revolution and was connected with Robespierre. After 1804, court painter to Napoleon. At Restoration, exiled to Brussels (1815).

David Balfour, Being Memoirs of His Adventures at Home and Abroad. A novel by Robert Louis STEVENSON (1893), a sequel to KIDNAPPED. It concerns David's efforts to bring about the escape of his Jacobite friend Alan Breck Stewart and his brother, and the love and eventual marriage of David and Catriona Drummond.

David Copperfield. A novel by Charles DICKENS, admittedly largely autobiographical. As a mere boy, after his mother's death David is sent by his harsh stepfather, Mr. Murdstone, to London, where he pastes labels on bottles in a warehouse by day and is the single lodger of the poverty-stricken hopeful MICAWBERS. He finally runs away to his great-aunt Betsy Trotwood at Dover, where he finds a genuine welcome. After a period of school life, he settles down to work with Mr. Wickfield, a lawyer, and finds a warm friend in Wickfield's daughter Agnes. He marries Dora Spenlow, a "child-wife," but after her death he marries Agnes Wickfield. See also PEGGOTTY, STEERFORTH, HEEP.

Davidis. (1) An epic poem in four books by Abraham Cowley (1656) describing the troubles of King David.

(2) A sacred poem by Thomas Elwood (1712).

David Harum. A novel by E. N. Westcott (Am. 1898). The humorous flavor for which the book is noted comes from its chief character, David Harum, the shrewd if unlettered philosopher of the New York country town of Homeville. David is a country banker whose chief recreation is that of horse-trading. A love story is interwoven, the principals of which are Mary Blake and John Lenox, the latter a young man of good antecedents who takes a position in David Harum's bank.

David Levinsky, The Rise of. A novel by Abraham Cahan (Am. 1917) telling the story of a Russian Jew who emigrates to America and becomes, finally, the chief figure in the New York cloak and suit trade.

Davidson, Jo (1883-). American sculptor. His best works are sculptures of Woodrow Wilson, Anatole France, Marshal Foch, General Pershing, Will Rogers, Walt Whitman; and portrait busts of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Rabindranath Tagore, Clemenceau, etc. He is represented in the Luxembourg, Paris, and in the rotunda of the Capitol, Washington, D.C.

Davidson, John (1857-1909). Scottish poet and playwright. Did his best work in the era of the nineties. His Fleet Street Eclogues and several volumes of Ballads were well-known at the time. His pessimistic philosophy is in his Testaments and The Man Forbid. Several of his poems have evinced endurance, notably the Ballad of Hell and A Runnable Stag.

Davidson, Lawrence H. Pseudonym under which David Herbert LAWRENCE published Movements in European History (1921).

Davies, Sir John (1569-1626). English poet, author of epigrammatic and ingenious poetry and treatises in verse, known for the vigor and intelligence of his writing. Among his works are Orchestra (1594), a treatment in poetry of the dance; Epigrams and Elegies (1596); Hymns of Astraea (1599), a collection of acrostic hymns praising Queen Elizabeth; Nosce Teipsum (1599), a philosophical poem on the immortality of the soul; Twelve Wonders of the World (1608), a collection of epigrams.

Davies, Joseph Edward (1876-). American ambassador to Russia (1936-1938). Author of Mission to Moscow (1941), one of the most important gestures of friendship toward the Soviet Union during World War II, later made into a moving picture, sharply criticized for bias and distortion of facts.

Davies, Rhys (1903-). Remarkable Welsh novelist. Withered Root (1928) and many others.

Davies, William Henry (1871-1940). Welsh-born English poet, author of lyrics on nature and love in traditional manner and form, known for their simplicity and feeling. Until he was over thirty, he was a hobo and peddler from choice. His books include Collected Poems (1916, 1923, 1929); Forty-Nine Poems (1929); Love Poems (1935); The Birth of Song (1936). Davies owes his reputation, however, to his Autobiography of a Super-Tramp (1907) with its "splendid, rough, simple, direct prose."

Dávila y Padilla, Agustín (1562-1604). Mexican historian, prior of the Dominican convent at Pueblo de los Angeles, known as the "Chronicler of the Indies." His principal work, the Historia de la provincia de Santiago de Mejico (published at Madrid, 1596), was commissioned by the Mexican government.

Davis, Clyde Brion (1894-). American novelist, who wrote the epic of all average American newspaper men in "The Great American Novel—" (1938). He is one of our best Western writers of realistic and humorous fiction. He claims that his hobbies are "hypochondria and weed-culture."

Davis, Elmer Holmes (1890-). American journalist, essayist, novelist, publicist, radio news commentator. Head of the Office of War Information during World War II. Author of Friends of Mr. Sweeney (1925), Love Among the Ruins (1935) (short stories); Not to Mention the War (essays, 1940), etc.

Davis, Fannie Stearns, see GIFFORD, FANNIE STEARNS DAVIS.

Davis, Harold Lenoir (1896-). American poet and novelist. Winner of Harper and Pulitzer prizes for Honey in the Horn (1935). Writer of uproarious folktales. Owns a cattle ranch.

Davis, Jefferson (1808-1889). President of the Confederate States of America during the American Civil War. Native of Kentucky. Graduate of U.S.M.A., West Point (1828). Frontier army service. House of Representatives (1845-1846). Served in Mexican War. Secretary of War under Pierce; U.S. Senator (1857-1861). Defender of South and the institution of slavery.

Davis, Owen (1874-). American playwright, author of numerous popular melodramas, the most celebrated being NELLIE, THE BEAUTIFUL CLOAK MODEL. He also wrote serious plays, including Detour (1921) and Icebound (1923), a winner of the Pulitzer prize in 1923.

Davis, Rebecca Blaine Harding (1831-1910). American author, mother of Richard Harding DAVIS, known for her attempts to deal in fiction with the life of industrial workers, the Negro problem, and political corruption. Her works include: Margaret Howth (1862), Waiting for the Verdict (1868), and John Andross (1874), novels, and Silhouettes of American Life (1892), a collection of short stories. See also Life in the Iron Mills.

Davis, Richard Harding (1864-1916). American journalist, war correspondent, and author of numerous popular novels, short stories, plays, and accounts of his adventures. He was on the staff of the New York Sun (1889-1890), contributed short stories to Scribner's, and was managing editor of Harper's Weekly for awhile. Davis was an extremely popular personality of his time, reporting the Spanish-American War, the Boer War, the Russo-Japanese War, and World War I. His news stories were vivid and dramatic, but his fiction is considered to be journalistic, slick, and superficial. He is best known as a short-story writer for GALLEGHER first published in Scribner's and appearing in book-form in Gallegher And Other Stories (1891), and his VAN BIBBER stories, in Van Bibber and Others (1892). He was the son of Rebecca H. Davis, and is regarded as a typical personality of the American GILDED AGE.

Davis, Thomas Osborne (1814-1845). Irish poet. Founded, with John Blake Dillon and Charles Gavan Duffy, The Nation (1842). One of the leaders of Young Ireland party.

Davis, William Stearns (1877-1930). American historical novelist and professor of history. Author of A Friend of Caesar (1900); Life on a Mediaeval Barony (1923); The Whirlwind (1929); etc.

Davis cup. An international lawn tennis challenge cup, presented in 1900 by Dwight F. Davis, now representing world team championship. Cup ties are to be played every year in two zones (America and Europe), with the challenge round following in the country that holds the cup.

Davus. A plain, uncouth servitor. A common name for a slave in Greek and Roman plays, as in the Andria of Terence.

His face made of brass, like a vice in a game,
His gesture like Davus, whom Terence doth name.
Tusser, Five Hundred Points of Good Husbandry, liv. (1557).

Davus sum, non Oedipus. I am a homely man, and do not understand hints, innuendoes, and riddles, like OEDIPUS. The proverb is used by Terence, Andria, i, 2, 23.

Davy. In Shakespeare's 2 Henry II, the varlet of Justice Shallow, who so identifies himself with his master that he considers himself half host, half varlet. Thus when he seats Bardolph and Page at table, he tells them they must take "his" good will for their assurance of welcome.

Davy, Sir Humphry (1778-1829). English chemist. Among many experiments and discoveries he demonstrated that chlorine is an element, that the diamond is carbon, advanced the electrical theory of chemical affinity, and invented the miner's safety lamp, known as Davy lamp. Published Elements of Chemical Philosophy (1812), Elements of Agricultural Chemistry, etc. In his nontechnical works, Salmonia (1827) and The Last Days of a Philosopher (1830) Davy displayed unusual descriptive powers and a rich poetical imagination. It has been said of him that "God meant him to be a poet but the world harnessed his talents to science."

Davy Jones. A sailor's name for the evil spirit of the sea. The term seems to be a corruption of Duffy or Duppy Jonah, the word duffy or duppy standing, among the Negroes of the West Indies, for "a haunting spirit or ghost." Jones is a corruption of Jonah, the prophet who was thrown into the sea.

He's gone to Davy Jones' locker is the nautical way of saying that a messmate is dead and has been buried at sea.

Daw, Marjorie, see MARJORIE DAW.

Dawes Plan. A plan evolved by the commission of which General Charles Gates Dawes (1865-), American lawyer, financier, and politician, was chairman, to investigate possibilities as to German payment of reparations after World War I (1923). The plan was put into effect September 1, 1924. The Dawes Plan involved balancing the budget and stabilizing the currency of Germany and had as special features a five-year sliding scale of payments up to 2500 million marks, covered by a mortgage on German industries, etc.

Dawkins, Jack. A character in Dickens' OLIVER TWIST, better known by the sobriquet of the "ARTFUL DODGER."

Dawn Man. See PILTDOWN MAN.

Dawn O'Hara. First novel by Edna FERBER (1911).

Dawson, Coningsby William (1883-). Anglo-American poet and novelist, his best-known novel being The Garden Without Walls (1913).

Day, Clarence Shepard (1874-1935). American author, best known for his humorous autobiographical sketches, God and My Father (1932), Life with Father (1935), Life with Mother (1937), and Father and I (1940), first published in The New Yorker. They portray life in a typical American upper-middle-class family of the 19th century. In 1939, Life with Father was dramatized as a successful comedy, with a record-breaking 3183 performances. From middle age he was crippled by arthritis. His uncle, Benjamin Day (1838-1916), New York printer, invented the BEN DAY process for shading in printed illustrations.

Day, Fancy. Heroine of Thomas Hardy's UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE.

Day, Holman Francis (1865-1935). American novelist and writer of verse. Specialized in Maine types. Wrote the saga of logging and timber-cutting in his best novels, a series begun in King Spruce (1910). Pine Tree Ballads (1902) and Kin o' Ktaadn (1904) contain some of his best doggerel verse.

Day, John (1522-1584). English printer who printed the first church music book in English and the first English edition of John Foxe's ACTS AND MONUMENTS (1563). His name has been taken as the company name of a New York publishing house.

Day or Daye, Stephen (1594?-1668). Printer of the Bay Psalm Book (1640), the first book in English printed in America. The town of Cambridge, Mass., granted him 300 acres of land for "being the first that sett upon printing."

Day-Lewis, Cecil (1904-). Irish-born English poet, a descendant of Oliver GOLDSMITH and associated with W. H. AUDEN and Stephen SPENDER in writing poetry reflecting Marxist convictions during the 1930's. His work makes use of traditional lyric forms to preach the decadence of the bourgeois English society of his time and the promise of a Socialist society. It is chiefly didactic and makes use of 20th-century social and industrial symbols, as does the poetry of Auden and Spender. Critics say, however, that Day-Lewis' work lacks the virtuosity and satirical brilliance of the former and the emotional intensity of the latter. His books of poetry are Transitional Poem (1929); From Feathers to Iron (1931); The Magnetic Mountain (1933); A Time to Dance (1935); Noah and the Waters (1936); Overtures to Death (1938). He was also author of A Hope for Poetry (1934), a critical essay on the aims and techniques of the English Marxist poets, and The Friendly Tree (1936) and Starting Point (1938), novels. Under the pseudonym of Nicholas Blake he wrote detective stories and children's books. Day-Lewis was an active member of the Communist Party in England. He signs his name commonly as Cecil Day Lewis.

Day of Atonement. See YOM KIPPUR.

Day of Doom, The. A celebrated and popular poem by Michael WIGGLESWORTH, published in 1662. It describes the judicial sentencing to punishment in Hell of sinners and infants who died before baptism, as it takes place on Judgment Day. The work was widely read in New England as a theological treatise for a century after publication, being second only to the Bible in popularity. It is reported to have been published in New York as late as 1867.

Day of the Rabblement, The. An attack upon the Irish national theater movement (see IRISH RENAISSANCE) written by James JOYCE (1901). It marked the beginning of life-long hostility between Joyce and the leading figures of the Irish literary Renaissance.

Day's Work, The. A volume of short stories by Rudyard KIPLING (1898).

Dayton trial, see SCOPES TRIAL.

De, de. For such foreign names as De Barrel, De Bracy, etc., see also under BARREL, BRACY, etc.

Deacon's Masterpiece, The. See ONE HOSS SHAY.

Dead, The. A story by James JOYCE in DUBLINERS. It concerns Gabriel Conroy, an Irish school-teacher and author of occasional book reviews who is rapidly approaching middle age, and his wife, Gretta. After a party, Gretta tells him of Michael Furey, a young man, now dead, who once was in love with her and who has been recalled to her memory by a song delivered for their entertainment earlier in the evening. Conroy feels suddenly shut out of his wife's life on hearing this revelation. He becomes more and more aware of the power of the dead as snow, the symbol of death, falls silently outside. This story is analyzed in After Strange Gods, a book of lectures on literary criticism by T. S. ELIOT.

Dead End. A play by Sidney Kingsley (1935), depicting life in New York's slums by means of typical scenes taking place in a dead-end street. The children playing various roles in the stage performance were used in the film version of the play and later in a number of less valuable productions. They came to be known as Dead End Kids, a term now often used for slum urchins reminiscent of the original play.

Deadeye, Dick. In Gilbert and Sullivan's comic opera, PINAFORE, a terrible villain.

dead language. A language no longer used in social intercourse. Greek and classical Latin are dead languages. Hebrew is an interesting example of a dead language that has come to life again.

deadly sins, see SEVEN DEADLY SINS.

Dead Pan. See under PAN.

Dead Sea fruit. The Apple of Sodom. See also under APPLE. The Dead Sea is the Lake of Palestine.

Dead Souls. A humorous novel by N. V. GOGOL (1846). The hero, Chichikov, in order to obtain a large tract of colonization land in southern Russia (the size of the tract offered being dependent on the number of serfs to till it), goes about Russia buying up "dead souls"—that is, serfs (souls) who have died since the last census and are therefore not yet officially dead. His travels and adventures give the author opportunity for portrayal of all classes of Russian society. The schemer is detected and put in prison, but escapes and settles down as a country gentleman.

Deadwood Dick. A hero of dime-novel fame created by Edward L. Wheeler. His adventures appeared in Beadle's Half-Dime Pocket Library from 1884 on, with such titles as Deadwood Dick on Deck, or Calamity Jane, the Heroine of Whoop Up, The Double Daggers or Deadwood Dick's Defiance, etc. He is said to have had a prototype in Robert Dickey (1840-1912), a trapper and fur merchant of the American West, many of whose adventures furnished plots for Wheeler's thrillers.

De Amicitia. Concerning friendship. An essay by Cicero written in the form of a dialogue. The chief interlocutor is Gaius Laelius Sapiens. Hence the essay is also known under the name of Laelius.

Deans, Douce Davie. In Scott's HEART OF MIDLOTHIAN, a cowherd at Edinburgh, full of eccentricities, but affectionate and kind. He is immovable where his devotion to his religious convictions is concerned.

Jeanie Deans. Daughter of Douce Davie, one of Scott's most famous characters. She had a prototype in Helen Walker, to whose memory Sir Walter Scott erected a tombstone in Irongray Churchyard.

Effie Deans. Jeanie's half sister, betrayed by George Staunton and imprisoned for child murder.

Dear Brutus. A comedy by Sir James M. BARRIE (1917). Title from Shakespeare's Julius Caesar I, ii.

Deasy, Mr. In James Joyce's ULYSSES, headmaster of the school at which Stephen DEDALUS teaches and from which he resigns in the early sections of the novel.

Death Angel. Azrael, the angel who, in Jewish and Mohammedan angelology, watches for the coming of death to take the soul away from the body.

Death Comes for the Archbishop. A novel by Willa CATHER, published in 1927. It describes the careers of the French bishop Jean LATOUR and his vicar, Father Joseph VAILLANT, in establishing a diocese in pioneer New Mexico. They have difficulties with the indifferent Indians, the climate, and the Spanish clergy, but at last triumph and win the affection and respect of the natives. The novel is founded on the lives of Bishop Lamy of Santa Fé and his vicar general, Father Machebeuf.

Death in the Afternoon. See HEMINGWAY, ERNEST.

Death in Venice. A famous short story by Thomas MANN, published in 1912. Gustave Aschenbach, a German author, gives up his family and his career in order to be near a beautiful Polish boy, Tadzio, whom he encounters while on a visit to Venice and who symbolizes unattainable beauty and pure art as it is sought by the artist. The city is afflicted with plague, but Aschenbach chooses to remain and die of the fever rather than desert his ideal. This story was one of the first to embody the ideas of pure art, the artist, and society which later filled Mann's writings.

Death of the Hired Man, The. A long poem by Robert FROST, describing the death of Silas, a proud but defeated old New Englander who returns to his former employers in his last hours.

deathwatch. Small black beetle that strikes its head on woodwork in old houses at regular intervals, possibly to attract the attention of its mate. The resultant hollow noise, according to popular belief, presages death.

debacle. Breakdown, collapse. From French débâcle, which in turn seems to come from a Dutch word and might be rendered literally as "unbaking." Originally applied to the breaking up of ice in a stream.

Débâcle, La. A novel by Émile ZOLA (1892), one of the ROUGON-MACQUART series. It deals realistically with the Franco-Prussian War.

debatable land. A tract of land between the Esk and Sark, claimed by both England and Scotland, and for a long time the subject of dispute. It was the haunt of thieves and vagabonds.

debate. A literary form popular in the Middle Ages, in which a dialogue takes place between two persons representing two differing points of view on the subject of philosophy, theology, love (see COURTLY LOVE), religious dogma, the virtues of a soldier or student or the country versus the town, or even a simple, commonplace topic. In Middle English, two of the best-known debates are THE OWL AND THE NIGHTINGALE (12th or 13th century) and The Debate of the Body and the Soul (between 1250 and 1275). In the latter poem, the soul and the body of a dead man destined for punishment in Hell argue spiritedly with each other over which is responsible for the plight of the unfortunate sinner.

De bello Gallico, see COMMENTARIES ON THE GALLIC WAR.

Debonair (Le Débonnaire). Louis I of France (778, 814-840), also called The Pious, son and successor of Charlemagne; a man of courteous manners, cheerful temper, but effeminate and deficient in moral energy.

Deborah. In the Old Testament (Judges iv, v), a Hebrew prophetess who went with Barak to battle against Sisera and afterwards celebrated the victory in a famous song. She was one of the judges of Israel. See also Jael.

Debrett, John (1752-1822). London publisher and original compiler of the Peerage of England, Scotland, and Ireland (1802), and the Baronetage of England (1808).

Debs, Eugene Victor (1855-1926). American socialist leader who began his career as a locomotive fireman. A Hoosier who helped lead the Pullman strike in Chicago in 1894; was arrested and imprisoned for six months. Organized the Social Democratic Party of America (1897). Five times socialist candidate for U.S. presidency (1900-1920). Indicted and sentenced for violation of Espionage Act in 1918 but released by President Harding in 1921. A lovable and sincere friend of the people and a courageous fighter for his principles.

Debussy, Achille Claude (1862-1918). French composer and for a while leader of the musical vanguard in France. His best-known works include L'Enfant prodigue (cantata, 1884), Printemps (symphonic suite), L'Après-midi d'un faune (symphonic poem, 1902), Pelléas et Mélisande (opera, 1902; see also MAETERLINCK), nocturnes, piano compositions, etc.

✓decadents. Narrowly, the group of poets following the lead of Paul VERLAINE, among them Arthur RIMBAUD and Francis Jammes; see also PARNASSIANS; SYMBOLISM. Broadly, and more popularly, the term decadents is applied to the poets and prose writers, chiefly French, of the post-Romantic period of the 19th century, and their followers and successors. They were characterized by morbid and perverse tastes, unconventional and often sensational social behavior, dissolute and frequently perverted morals, hyperaesthetic and neurasthenic temperaments, intense introspection, an attraction to the Roman Catholic religion and the Middle Ages, an interest in esoteric, fantastic, and erotic lore, an emphasis in their writing upon form rather than content and upon the ideal of "pure" art, and a pervading sense of restlessness, boredom, and maladjustment to their environment. BAUDELAIRE, J. K. HUYSMANS, VILLIERS DE L'ISLE ADAM, Verlaine, and Rimbaud were outstanding decadents, and the typical decadent characteristics are well exemplified in DES ESSEINTES, hero of Huysmans' novel Against the Grain. The term probably originated in allusion to the decadence of the Roman Empire. Oscar WILDE and his group brought the movement to England.

Decameron (Gr. deka, ten, hēmera, day). The collection of 100 tales by BOCCACCIO (1353) represented as having been told in ten days during the plague at Florence in 1348. The storytellers are also ten (seven ladies and three gentlemen) and they each tell a tale on each day. The stories are chiefly FABLIAUX and fairy-tales, with ancient analogues in the legendary literatures of Europe and the Orient. The Decameron was widely read in English and other European languages, and its plots were widely imitated; CHAUCER used several in his CANTERBURY TALES, the framework of which is similar to that of Boccaccio's work. Boccaccio himself repudiated the Decameron in his old age as immoral. See also NOVELLA; NOVELLE.

De Casseres, Benjamin (1873-1945). American poet and essayist of SEPHARDIC stock. Disciple of Schopenhauer, Nietzsche, Spinoza. A militant radical individualist; a fantasist of wild dreams.

Decatur, Stephen (1779-1820). American naval officer commanding the squadron which sailed to Algeria in 1815 to force upon the British a peace on American terms. On his return he uttered at a banquet the famous toast: "Our country! In her intercourse with foreign nations may she always be in the right; but our country, right or wrong!"

Decembrist. In Russian history, a member of the group conspiring for constitutional government against the new Emperor Nicholas in December 1825.

Dechartre. A sculptor in THE RED LILY by Anatole France.

De civitate Dei, see CITY OF GOD.

Declaration of Independence, The. The public act by which the Second Continental Congress on July 4, 1776, declared the thirteen North American colonies to be free and independent of Great Britain. New York alone did not ratify the act until July 9. It was signed August 2, 1776, by the representatives of all thirteen colonies. The document was nominally the work of a drafting committee, but actually one of its members, Thomas Jefferson, wrote it practically in its entirety.

Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, The. Famous historical work by GIBBON, volume I of which was published in 1776, volumes II and III in 1781, and the last three volumes in 1788. It covers the periods from the reign of the Emperor Trajan to the disintegration of the western Empire, from the age of Justinian in the East to that of Charlemagne in the West, and thence to the capture of Constantinople by the Turks in 1453. It discusses Christianity, the Germanic tribes, the conquests of Moslem, and the Crusades. Although newer information has supplanted much of this work, it is considered to be the first great contribution to modern historical knowledge. Gibbon's attitude in writing his study was that history consists chiefly of crime and folly.

Decoration Day. A day originally set apart in the United States for decorating the graves of those who fell in the Civil War (1861-1865); now extended to include also the dead of the Spanish-American and the World Wars. It is a legal holiday in most states and is celebrated on May 30th with the following deviations: April 26 in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Mississippi; May 10 in Kentucky, North Carolina; June 3 in Louisiana, Tennessee.

De Corona (Lat.), Peri Stephanou (Gr.). On the Crown. Title of a model speech by Demosthenes.

decorum. The chief literary principle of the neo-Classical period of the latter 17th century and the 18th century. See NEO-CLASSICISM. In accordance with it, literature, especially poetry, was required to be polished, dignified, clear, rational, moderate, conventional, and "elevated," with a tendency toward Latinized diction and toward generality and abstraction in figurative language in order to achieve elegance. The prevailing use of the EPITHET was a direct example of the preference for the general rather than the specific in the tenets of "decorum." Leading exponents of the principle were BOILEAU, POPE, and SAMUEL JOHNSON. The history of the principle goes back to Greece and Rome. With Cicero it was the "all-embracing critical doctrine characteristic of the Latin genius." A fine, though negative, formulation occurs in Goldsmith (The Bee, Oct. 6, 1759): "What must be the entire perversion of scenical decorum, when . . . we see an actress . . . unwieldy with fat endeavoring to convince the audience that she is dying with hunger."

Decoud. A young journalist in Conrad's NOSTROMO.

De Coverley Papers, see SIR ROGER DE COVERLEY PAPERS.

decretals. The name given by ecclesiastical historians to the second part of the canon law, which contains the decrees and decisions of the early popes on disputed points.

The false or forged decretals were designed to support the claim of the popes to temporal as well as spiritual authority, and purport to be the decisions of some thirty popes of the first three centuries. The Isidorian decretals, which form part of them, were compiled in the 9th century, and assigned to Isidore of Seville, who died in 636. They comprise nearly a hundred letters written in the names of the early popes, as Clement and Anacletus, as well as letters from their supposed correspondents and acts of fictitious councils.

The 9th-century forgery known as the Donation of Constantine is also among the false decretals. This purports to relate how Constantine the Great, when he retired to the Bosphorus in 330, conferred all his rights, honors, and property as Emperor of the West on the Pope of Rome and his successors. It is said, also, to have been confirmed by Charlemagne.

Dedalus, Stephen. The hero of James Joyce's novel, A PORTRAIT OF THE ARTIST AS A YOUNG MAN, and second most important character in ULYSSES, regarded as having been based on the character of the author himself. The name is perhaps symbolic of the creative artist. See DAEDALUS. Dedalus is a proud, sensitive, and talented young man, embittered by the poverty and religious orthodoxy of his family, the narrowness of his Roman Catholic upbringing, and the cultural aridness of his native Ireland, wishing to escape, doubting everything but longing to believe. In Ulysses he is brooding upon his mother's death, fighting against a feeling of guilt for having denied her deathbed request that he kneel and pray, thereby reacknowledging the religion he had rebelled against. Estranged from his own father, he corresponds to TELEMACHUS in the Odyssey in his search for a spiritual father, whom he finds for awhile at the climax of the novel in Leopold BLOOM.

Simon Dedalus. Father of Stephen, gay, irresponsible, fond of drinking and singing, with a tendency to neglect his family. He is an admirer of PARNELL.

Dilly Dedalus. Stephen's young sister.

May Goulding Dedalus. Stephen's mother, a frail, sickly woman, who believes staunchly in the teachings of the Roman Catholic Church and is heart-broken at her son's defection. Both Simon and she are considered to be fictional portraits of Joyce's own parents. The deathbed incident in which she figures in Ulysses appears in modified form in Joyce's play Exiles.

Dedannans, see TUATHA DE DANANN.

Dedlock, Sir Leicester, Bart. A personage in Dickens' BLEAK HOUSE who has a general opinion that the world might get on without hills, but would be "totally done up" without Dedlocks. He loves Lady Dedlock, and believes in her implicitly. Sir Leicester is honorable but intensely prejudiced, and proud as "county" can make a man. His pride has a most dreadful fall when the guilt of Lady Dedlock becomes known.

Lady Dedlock. Wife of Sir Leicester, beautiful, cold, and apparently heartless, but she is weighed down with a terrible secret, that before marriage she had had a daughter by Captain Hawdon. This daughter is Esther [Summerson], the heroine of the novel.

deductive method. A method of scientific reasoning by which inferences concerning the parts of a whole are made to depend on one's previous knowledge of the whole. It is a method that proceeds from general principles to specific truths in contrast to the inductive method which is favored by the exact sciences of modern times. The conclusion that man must have an intermaxillary bone because he is a mammal is deductive. The conclusion that he is a mammal because all the characteristics of mammals have been observed in him is inductive.

Dee, John (1527-1608). English mathematician and astrologer. Prosecuted and acquitted on charge of sorcery against Queen Mary (about 1555). Practiced magic at various courts in Bohemia, Poland, etc. Favored by Queen Elizabeth whom he instructed in astrology (1564). Advocated adoption of Gregorian calendar in England. Subject of a novel by Marjorie BOWEN.

Deemster, The. A novel by Hall CAINE. One of two common-law justices on the Isle of Man.

Deeping, George Warwick (1877-). Popular English novelist; best-known for Sorrell and Son (1925), a product of the author's experiences in World War I. His success has a good deal to do with his healthy common sense and simple optimism. "A negative cynicism seems to me to be a form of cowardice."

Deerfield massacre. See BLOODY BROOK.

Deerslayer, The. A historical novel by COOPER (1841) one of the Leatherstocking series. See also LEATHERSTOCKING. It treats of Natty Bumppo, or Leatherstocking, as a young hunter of twenty, of his warm friendship for the Indian Chingachgook, and his blighted love affair with Judith Hutter, a girl who shows the same taint of the settlements that embitters the scout's life under many guises.

Deever, Danny, see DANNY DEEVER.

Defarge. In Charles Dickens' TALE OF TWO CITIES, a revolutionist, keeper of a wine-shop in the Faubourg St. Antoine, in Paris. He is a bull-necked, implacable-looking man.

Mme. Defarge. His wife, a dangerous woman, with great force of character; everlastingly knitting.

Defence of Poesie, The. Title first used for one of the unauthorized editions of Sir Philip Sidney's Apologie for Poetrie 1595.

Defender of the Faith (Fidei Defensor). A title given by Pope Leo X to Henry VIII of England, in 1521, for a Latin treatise On the Seven Sacraments. Many previous kings, and even subjects, had been termed "defenders of the Catholic faith," "defenders of the Church," and so on, but no one had borne it as a title. The sovereign of Spain is entitled Catholic, and of France Most Christian.

Richard II, in a writ to the sheriffs, uses these words: "Ecclesia cujus nos defensor sumus," and Henry VII, in the Black Book, was styled Defender of the Faith.

Defenestration of Prague. (1) The throwing from the windows of the city hall at Prague of the burgomaster and others by the Hussites in 1419.

(2) The throwing of some Bohemian officials from the windows of the palace at Prague in May, 1618. The victims are said to have landed on a dung heap, but the action became the immediate (farcical) occasion of the THIRTY YEARS' WAR.

Défense et illustration de la langue française. A critical treatise by Joachim du BELLAY, written in 1549. It urges the use of French as the language of literary expression instead of Latin, and proposes a number of reforms in poetry, including the use of rhyme, varied meters, and more varied syntax and construction, as well as the deliberate choice of dialect words, archaic words, and terms from the various trades and professions. This treatise had a wide influence, both at home and in England, where the principle of using dialect and archaic words and technical terms was applied enthusiastically in much English poetry of the latter 16th century, culminating in the Metaphysical school. See METAPHYSICAL POETS. As a plea for the vernacular language as a literary vehicle, it ranks with the De Vulgari Eloquentia of Dante.

Defland, Marquise du (1697-1780). Witty and cynical French noblewoman, leader in Parisian social life and literary and philosophical circles. Corresponded with Voltaire, Montesquieu, Horace Walpole, etc.

Deficit, Madame. Marie Antoinette; so called because she was always demanding money of her ministers, and never had any. According to the Revolutionary song:

La Boulangère a des écus,
Qui ne lui content guère.

See also under BAKER.

Defoe, Daniel (1659-1731). English novelist and journalist, one of the first outstanding figures in both the English novel and English journalism. He is known for his frank and dramatic realism in fiction, and the accuracy of observation, vigor, and lucidity of his journalism. He is best known for ROBINSON CRUSOE (1719) and The Fortunes and Misfortunes of MOLL FLANDERS (1722), novels, and his semi-factual JOURNAL OF THE PLAGUE YEAR (1722). Others of his works are: The True-Born Englishman (1701), a satirical poem on English opposition to King William III because of William's foreign birth; An Essay on Projects (1698), a prose collection of suggestions for reform in education, banking, road conditions, the treatment of sailors, and the like, in which Defoe advocates education of women; The Shortest Way with Dissenters (1702), a satire on the Church of England for which he was imprisoned; and several novels other than his most famous, including Memories of a Cavalier (1720), Captain Singleton (1720), The History of Colonel Jack (1722), and Roxana, Or the Fortunate Mistress (1724). Defoe edited a political newspaper, The Review (1704-1713), which anticipated THE TATLER and THE SPECTATOR. He supported King William III and was later an agent of the Tory party. Defoe was also the first author of ghost-stories in modern English literature, an example of which is The Apparition of Mrs. Veal (1706).

Deformed Transformed, The. A drama by Lord BYRON (1824). The hero, Arnold, hates life because he is horribly deformed, but when he is by magic transformed into the shape of his own choice, he goes forth a young Achilles, on adventure bent. He joins the besieging army of Bourbon at Rome, and attempts to rescue the beautiful but disdainful Olimpia, but here the drama breaks off.

de Gaulle, Charles André Joseph Marie (1890–). French general who first made a name for himself by his advocacy of a highly mechanized army. After the French débâcle in World War II he rallied his countrymen to the cause of a Free France, refusing to accept the terms of the armistice with Germany. He was court-martialed in absentia and condemned to death (Aug. 2, 1940). Leader of France after Germany's surrender. President of the fourth French Republic (which took the place of PÉTAIN's French State) until his withdrawal from the political scene, after a series of brawls with the parties of the left, in January, 1946.

Degeneration. A work by the German physician Max Simon NORDAU (2 vols., 1892–1893), in which an attempt is made to connect genius and degeneracy. Cf. the idea that illness and creative power are related and particularly its importance in the work of Thomas MANN.

Degradation of the Democratic Dogma, The. A volume expressing the "dynamic theory of history" held by Henry ADAMS, published in 1920 by his brother, Brooks Adams. It contains A Letter to American Teachers of History, in which Adams applies the second law of thermodynamics, which asserts a continual dissipation of mechanical energy in the universe, to history and finds a growing, universal decrease in spiritual and intellectual energy, making social progress in the future impossible. In another section of the book, entitled The Rule of Phase Applied to History, Adams discusses the rule of phase in physics, first enunciated by Willard GIBBS, and uses it to interpret history as the passing of human thought from one phase to another, under the influence of attraction, acceleration, and volume, as the equilibrium of a chemical substances changes according to pressure, temperature, and physical volume. Adams concludes that only a physicist can properly produce a theory of history, since only he can devise the correct scientific formulae.

Deianira. Wife of Hercules, and the inadvertent cause of his death. Nessus told her that anyone to whom she gave a shirt steeped in his blood, would love her with undying love. She gave it to her husband, and it caused him such agony that he burnt himself to death on a funeral pile. Deianira killed herself for grief.

Dei iudicium (Lat., judgment of God). The judgment by ORDEALS was so called, because it was taken as certain that God would deal rightly with the appellants.

De Imitatione Christi. See IMITATION OF CHRIST and THOMAS À KEMPIS.

Deiphobus. In classic legend, one of the sons of Priam, and, next to Hector, the bravest and boldest of all the Trojans. On the death of his brother Paris, he married Helen; but Helen betrayed him to her first husband, Menelaus, who slew him. He appears in the Iliad and Aeneid, and also in Shakespeare's TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Dei plenus. Full of the god. Inspired, or possessed by frenzy as the MAENADS in Greco-Roman mythology, who celebrated the orgiastic rites of DIONYSUS or the CORYBANTES dancing to CYBELE. See these names.

Deirdre. Heroine of the ancient Irish legend called The Sons of Usnach. She was the daughter of Fedlimid, the harper of King Conchobar of Ulster, and she was raised in seclusion, because the king wished to make her his wife and it had been prophesied that her beauty would bring about disaster. She fell in love with Naoise, the son of Usnach, and was kidnaped by him and his brothers to Scotland. Conchobar eventually slew them, and Deirdre killed herself in sorrow and remorse. She is the heroine of dramas by A. E., YEATS, and SYNGE.

Deism. Belief in a personal God who created the world and will judge mankind but takes no interest and does not participate in any way in the temporal course of events. He does not reveal Himself either in nature or in history and religious experience. "The world is a clock which God made and wound. Then He left and will be back when the clock is run down." The rationalistic movement known as English Deism started in the seventeenth century and lasted almost to the end of the eighteenth. Lord Herbert (1583–1633) is often referred to as "the Father of Deism."

Dekker, Thomas (1570?–1641?). English playwright and pamphleteer. He had a checkered career against the Bohemian and underworld background of Elizabethan London, and earned his living by miscellaneous writings. He is best known for THE SHOEMAKER'S HOLIDAY (1599). Among his other dramas, of which he wrote nearly forty, are Old Fortunatus (1600); The Honest Whore (1604), dealing rather sentimentally with the reform of a prostitute; THE ROARING GIRL (1610), in collaboration with Thomas MIDDLETON; The Virgin Martyr (ca. 1620), a tragedy written with Philip MASSINGER; and The Witch of Edmonton (1621), a murder melodrama, written with Ford and Rowley. Dekker also wrote a number of pamphlets, the best-known of which is THE GULL'S HORNBOOK (1609). Others are The Wonderful Year (1603), a description of the plague in London (see also THE JOURNAL OF THE PLAGUE YEAR); The Seven Deadly Sins of London (1606), a moral allegory, and The Bellman of London (1608). Dekker is known for his vivid, humorous, and realistic pictures of life among the thieves, harlots, craftsmen, and lower middle-class shopkeepers of his time.

De Koven, Reginald (1859-1920). American composer of light operas (as The Begum, 1887; Robin Hood, 1890; Student King, 1906) and the grand opera Canterbury Pilgrims (1917; with a libretto by Percy MacKAYE). Also known for his musical setting for Kipling's Recessional.

de Kruif, Paul (1890-). American bacteriologist and popularizer of scientific subjects. Bacteriologist for Rockefeller Institute (1920-1922). Provided background of science and medicine for Sinclair Lewis's Arrowsmith. Lost position with Institute because of Our Medicine Men (1922). Wrote Microbe Hunters (1926), Hunger Fighters (1928), Men Against Death (1932), Yellow Jack (a play with Sidney Howard, 1934), etc.

Delacroix, Ferdinand Victor Eugène (1799-1863). French painter; identified as the leader of the romantic school. His great murals are in the library of the Chamber of Deputies, in the Louvre, in the Library of the Luxembourg, and in the Salon de la Paix of the Hôtel de Ville in Paris. His best-known canvases include Dante et Virgile (1822), Massacre de Scio (1824), Femmes d'Alger (1834), Prise de Constantinople (1841).

Delafield, E. M. (1890-1943). Pen-name of Elizabeth Monica Dashwood, English novelist, née de la Pasture, of which the name Delafield is an English adaptation. Daughter of Mrs. Henry de la Pasture (Lady Clifford) who wrote numerous novels, and Count Henry de la Pasture of a family that came from France to England after the French Revolution. Her childhood French governesses were models for the Mademoiselle of her delightful Diary of a Provincial Lady (1931). She wrote some twenty books, lectured in America, and her short stories and plays vied with the success of her brilliant novels of manners.

De la Mare, Walter (1873-). English poet, author of sensitive, imaginative lyrics in traditional form, many of them expressing nostalgia for the past. His works include The Return (1910); Peacock Pie (1913); Moley And Other Poems (1918); Collected Poems, 1910-1918 (1920); Memoirs of a Midget (1921), a novel; The Veil And Other Poems (1921); Broomsticks (1925); On the Edge (1930).

Deland, Margaret Ware (1857-1946). American novelist and short-story writer. Established her reputation with a volume of poems, The Old Garden (1887). In the novel, John Ward, Preacher (1888), she made a vigorous attack on the fundamentalist doctrine of eternal damnation. Her other works include Philip and his Wife (1894); The Awakening of Helena Richie (1906); several volumes of Old Chester stories; and the autobiography Golden Yesterdays (1941). As a young girl she had moved from Pennsylvania to Boston and soon became "more Bostonian than the natives."

de la Pasture, see DELAFIELD.

De la Roche, Mazo (1885-). Canadian novelist, author of a popular series of books dealing with the fortunes and the history of a vigorous Canadian family. These include: Jalna (1927); Whiteoaks of Jalna (1929); Finch's Fortune (1931); The Master of Jalna (1933); Young Renny (1935); Whiteoak Harvest (1936); and Whiteoak Heritage (1940). In 1936 Jalna was dramatized as Whiteoaks.

Delaroché, Paul (1797-1856). French historical and portrait painter who founded the Eclectic school to unite the art of design as it was cultivated by the Classic school with the coloration and choice of subject matter of the Romantic school. Great mural in hall of École des Beaux-Arts in Paris.

Delectable Duchy. Cornwall. So called after the novel The Delectable Duchy (1893) by Sir Arthur Thomas Quiller-Couch (1863-1944), a native of Cornwall.

Delectable Mountains. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, a range of hills from the summits of which the Celestial City can be seen. These mountains are beautiful with woods, vineyards, fruits of all sorts, flowers, springs and fountains, etc.

Now there were on the tops of these mountains shepherds feeding their flocks. The pilgrims, therefore, went to them, and leaning on their staffs . . . they asked, "Whose delectable mountains are these, and whose be the sheep that feed upon them?" The shepherds answered, "These mountains are Emmanuel's land, . . . and the sheep are His, and He laid down His life for them."—Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, 1.

Deledda, Grazia (1872-1936). Italian novelist. Nobel prize for literature (1926). Member of Italian Academy of Immortals. Born on Sardinia, the scene of almost all her books, very few of which are available in English.

delf. A variant of delft. Blue china made in Delft, formerly Delf, in Holland. The word is much used in poetry as a very appropriate rhyme for "shelf."

Delia. Any female sweetheart; one of Virgil's shepherdesses; the lady to whom the sonnets by Samuel DANIEL were addressed; the lady-love of Tibullus. The Delia of Pope's Satires (i. 81) is the second Lady Deloraine of Ledwell Park.

Delias. The Delian ship (i.e. the ship of Delos) that Theseus made and on which he went to Crete when he slew the Minotaur. In memory of this it was sent every fourth year with a solemn deputation to the Delian Apollo. During the festival, which lasted thirty days, no Athenian could be put to death, and as Socrates was condemned during this period his death was deferred till the return of the sacred vessel. The ship had been so often repaired that not a stick of the original vessel remained at that time.

Delight of Mankind. Surname of Titus Flavius Sabinus Vespasianus (40?-81 A.D.), Roman Emperor (79-81), whose reign was marked by great beneficence.

Delilah. In the Old Testament (Judges xvi), the woman of the Philistines who betrayed SAMSON; hence any fascinating and deceitful woman.

Delineator, The. The most popular of American women's magazines, founded in 1873 and featuring fashion news, fiction, and articles on problems of interest to women, as well as a definite editorial outlook at times with regard to the contemporary scene. It reached a circulation of over 2,000,000. In 1937, it merged with the magazine Pictorial Review.

Delisle, see LECONTE DE LISLE; ROUGET DE LISLE; VILLIERS DE L'ISLE-ADAM.

Dell, Ethel M. (?-1939). English romantic novelist. The Way of an Eagle (1912), Sown Among Thorns (1939), etc.

Dell, Floyd (1887-). American novelist and journalist, a member of the "CHICAGO GROUP" of writers and first celebrated as a radical during the period of World War I. He was an editor of THE MASSES and The Liberator, and in 1917 was tried for sedition with MAX EASTMAN and JOHN REED because of pacifist writings. He later became known for a number of novels dealing with post-war disillusion, youth in the JAZZ AGE, and the Bohemian life current at the time in GREENWICH VILLAGE. The most popular and most representative of these is MOON-CALF (1920). The Briary-Bush (1921) is a sequel, and Janet March (1923) and Runaway (1925) are other novels of the same type. Dell also wrote Intellectual Vagabondage—An Apology for the Intelligentsia (1926); The Outline of Marriage (1926); An Unmarried Father (1927), dramatized in 1928 as a successful comedy, Little Accident; Love in the Machine Age (1930); and Homecoming (1933), an autobiography.

Della-Cruscans or Della-Cruscan School. A school of poetry started by some young Englishmen at Florence in the latter part of the 18th century. Their silly, sentimental affectations, which appeared in the World and the Oracle, created for a time quite a furor, but were mercilessly gibbeted in the Baviad and Maeviad of Gifford (1794 and 1795). The clique took its name from the famous Academia della Crusca (literally, Academy of Chaff) which was founded in Florence in 1582 with the object of purifying the Italian language—sifting away its "chaff"—and which (in 1611) published an important dictionary. Robert Merry, who signed himself Della Crusca, James Cobb a farce-writer, James Boswell (biographer of Dr. Johnson), O'Keefe, Morton, Reynolds, Holcroft, Sheridan, Colman, the younger, Mrs. H. Cowley, and Mrs. Robinson were the best-known exponents of the school.

Della Robbia ware. Majolica-like enameled reliefs produced in Florence by Luca della Robbia and his family in the fifteenth century.

Delmar, Viña. See BAD GIRL.

Delmare, Colonel. In George Sand's INDIANA, the old husband of the heroine.

Delmonico's. Famous New York restaurant established about 1834 by Lorenzo Delmonico (1813-1881), a Swiss who came to the United States in 1832. Delmonico potatoes, a kind of scalloped potatoes, and the Delmonico steak, a club steak, perpetuate Lorenzo's fame.

Delobelle. An actor in DAUDER's Fromont jeune et Risler aîné (1874). His deformed daughter Desirée Delobelle is the pathetic heroine of the tale.

Deloney, Thomas (1543?-1600?). English prose writer, a silk-weaver and author of numerous BROADSIDE BALLADS. He is best known for his vivid tales of life among the craftsmen and laborers of London. The most famous of these is THE GENTLE CRAFT (1597).

Delorme, Marion. See MARION DELORME.

Delos. A floating island, according to Greek legend, ultimately made fast to the bottom of the sea by Poseidon. Apollo having become possessor of it by exchange made it his favorite retreat. It is the smallest of the Cyclades.

Delphi or Delphos. A town of Phocis at the foot of Mount Parnassus (the modern Kastri), famous for a temple of Apollo and for an oracle which was silenced only in the 4th century A.D. by Theodosius, and was celebrated in every age and country.

Delphin Classics. See under DAUPHIN.

Delphine. A novel by Madame de STAËL (1802), the tale of a girl whose lover is faithless and who dies of a broken heart.

Madame Delphine. A story by G. W. CABLE.

delta. A Greek letter corresponding to the Roman D. Also an alluvial tract at the mouth of a river, which frequently has the shape of the letter delta; first used in this sense for the delta of the Nile.

Deluge, The. (1) The second of a Polish historic trilogy by SIENKIEWICZ. See WITH FIRE AND SWORD.

(2) In the Old Testament, the Flood that destroyed all living creatures but those in NOAH'S ARK.

The French phrase après nous le déluge, after us the Flood, means roughly, "let's enjoy the hour and the devil may take care of the future."

Delville, Mortimer. The hero of Fanny Burney's CECILIA.

Demeter. One of the great Olympian deities of ancient Greece, identified with the Roman CERES. She was the goddess of fruits, crops, and vegetation generally, and the protectress of marriage. Persephone (PROSERPINE) was her daughter. See ELEUSINIAN MYSTERIES.

Demetrius. In James Branch Cabell's DOMNEI, Perion's rival, who keeps Melicent captive for years.

Demetrius. In Shakespeare's MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, a young Athenian in love with Hermia. After the fairies have done their work, he is content to marry his old love, Helena.

De Mille, Henry Churchill (1853-1893). American playwright and collaborator with David BELASCO. Father of William Churchill De Mille (1878-), playwright, and of Cecil Blount De Mille (1881-), moving picture producer, who as president of Cecil B. De Mille Productions, Inc. produced The Ten Commandments, The King of Kings, The Crusades, The Plainsman, etc.

demimonde (Fr., adapted in English as "half-world"). The class of women depicted in DUMAS' play LE DEMI-MONDE. So called because they belong only half to the monde, i.e., polite society. The term seems to have been originated by Dumas. Its usefulness is attested by its spread into many other languages. Hence demi-mondaine, a woman of the demi-monde.

Demi-monde, Le. A comedy by Alexandre DUMAS fils (1855), dealing with a class of women in good circumstances but cut off from virtuous society by public scandal.

Demiurge. Any power or personality that creates a world, real or imaginary. From the Greek for "worker of the people." The modern meaning goes back to PLATO's use of the word for the inferior god who created the world.

Democracy: An American Novel. A novel by Henry ADAMS, published anonymously in 1880. It deals with political and social intrigue in Washington. President Hayes is said to be portrayed in the novel in the character of "Old Granite," a simple lawyer from the Middle West who is elected to the presidency and is forced to yield power to Senator Ratcliffe, a political boss.

Democritus. The laughing philosopher of Abdera (ca. 460-357 B.C.). He should rather be termed the deriding philosopher, because he derided or laughed at people's folly or vanity. It is said that he put out his eyes that he might think more deeply.

Democritus, dear droll, revisit earth,
And with our follies glut thy heightened mirth.
Prior.

Democritus Junior. Pseudonym of Robert Burton (1577-1640) author of THE ANATOMY OF MELANCHOLY.

Demodocus. A minstrel who, according to Homer (Odyss. viii), sang the amours of Mars and Venus in the court of Alcinoüs while Ulysses was a guest there.

Such as the wise Demodocus once told
In solemn songs at King Alcinoüs' feast,
While sad Ulysses' soul and all the rest
Are held, with his melodious harmony,
In willing chains and sweet captivity.
Milton, Vacation Exercise (1627).

Demogorgon. A terrible deity, whose very name was capable of producing the most horrible effects. He is first mentioned by the 4th century Christian writer, Lactantius, who, in so doing, is believed to have broken the spell of a mystery, for Demogorgon is supposed to be identical with the infernal Power of the ancients, the very mention of whose name brought death and disaster, to whom reference is made by Lucan and others:

Must I call your master to my aid,
At whose dread name the trembling furies quake,
Hell stands abashed, and earth's foundations shake?
Rowe, Lucan's Pharsalia, vi.

Hence Milton speaks of "the dreaded name of Demogorgon" (Paradise Lost, ii. 965). According to Ariosto, Demogorgon was a king of the elves and fays who lived on the Himalayas, and once in five years summoned all his subjects before him to give an account of their stewardship. Spenser (Faerie Queene, IV. ii. 47) says that he dwells in the deep abyss with the three fatal sisters. Shelley so calls eternity in Prometheus Unbound.

De Morgan, William (1839-1917). English novelist. His best-known novels are JOSEPH VANCE (1906), ALICE-FOR-SHORT (1907) and It Can Never Happen Again (1909). De Morgan was frequently called "the modern Dickens."

Demosthenes (385?-322 B.C.). Athenian statesman; commonly regarded as the greatest of the Greek orators. Tradition has it that he would walk by the sea shore with pebbles in his mouth to strengthen his voice by trying to make himself heard above the roar of the sea. The name of his three PHILIPPICS, scathing orations attacking Philip of Macedon (351, 344, 341), has become proverbial. He died after taking poison to escape capture by his enemies. There is a portrait-statue of him in the Vatican.

demotic writing. An Egyptian script in the fifth century B.C., employed by the priests of Isis as late as 452 A.D. It was a simplified form of the HIERATIC letters and was written from right to left in horizontal lines.

Dempsey, William Harrison. Known as Jack (1895-). American heavyweight boxer, born in Manassa, Colo., and hence often called the Manassa Mauler. Defeated Jess Willard for heavyweight championship in Toledo (July 4, 1919); lost title to Gene Tunney at Philadelphia (Sept. 23, 1926).

Dempster, Arthur Jeffrey (1886-). Canadian-born physicist, naturalized U.S. citizen (1918). Discovered the existence of U-235 (uranium 235) by means of an "atomic microscope" at the physics laboratory of the University of Chicago. Professor at the University of Chicago (since 1937). Has done research in positive ray analysis of chemical elements, excitation of light and electrical discharge in gases.

Dempster, Janet. The heroine of George Eliot's JANET'S REPENTANCE. Her husband, Robert Dempster, is also a prominent character.

Dendin, Peter. In Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, an old man, who has settled more disputes than all the magistrates of Poitiers, though he is no judge. His plan is to wait till the litigants are thoroughly sick of their contention, and long to end their disputes; then he interposes, and his judgment never fails to be acceptable.

Tenot Dendin. Son of the above. Unlike his father, he always tries to crush quarrels in the bud; consequently, he never succeeds in settling a single dispute submitted to his judgment.

Racine has introduced the same name in his comedy called Les Plaideurs (1669), and La Fontaine in his Fables (1668).

Denham, Ruth. Heroine of T. B. Aldrich's QUEEN OF SHEBA.

Denham, Sir John (1615-1669). English poet, a Royalist during the English Civil War and for a time Surveyor General of Works, in charge of architecture, with the young Christopher WREN as his assistant. Denham was famous in his own day for The Sophy, a melodramatic tragedy, and Cooper's Hill (1642), a didactic poem. The latter work was praised by Dryden, and Pope imitated it in WINDSOR FOREST.

Denikin, Anton Ivanovich (1872-1947). Russian general during World War I. After the Russian Revolution of 1917, he fled to the Caucasus, where he assisted Alekseev and Kornilov in raising a force to fight the Bolsheviks. Set up a South Russian government (1919). Was defeated by Bolshevik troops under Budëny (1920). Lived in France from 1926.

Denis Duval. Titular hero of a novel by THACKERAY (1864). Left unfinished at the author's death.

Denis, St. See under SAINTS.

Denis of Burgundy. In Charles Reade's The Cloister and The Hearth, an arbalester whom Gerard meets on journey to Italy. They become close friends. "Courage, mon ami, le diable est mort!" is his favorite expression.

Dennis, Father. The lovable, hot-tempered, Roman Catholic chaplain of an Irish regiment in India, who appears in Kipling's Mutiny of the Mavericks and other of his stories.

Dennis, Geoffrey Pomeroy (1892-). English novelist and essayist whose fantasy The End of the World (1930) won the Hawthornden prize. The first and best of his novels is Mary Lee (1922). His Coronation Commentary (1937), written at the time of the accession of George VI, which was a violent condemnation of the Duke of Windsor, caused a sensation. It had to be withdrawn when the Duke threatened to sue Dennis for libel.

dénouement (Fr. dénouer, to untie). The untying of a plot; the winding-up of a novel or play.

Densher, Merton. In Henry James' WINGS OF A DOVE, the young journalist who is engaged to Kate Croy but at Kate's urging marries the wealthy Milly Theale.

Denys, St. See under SAINTS.

Deodars, Under The. Tales by Rudyard Kipling (1888). A deodar is a species of evergreen found in the mountains of India. It resembles the cedar of Lebanon.

Deor's Lament. An ancient Anglo-Saxon poem, in which a wandering bard laments his having been cast off by his former lord and seeks consolation in the thought of the greater misfortunes of legendary Germanic heroes and heroines. It is divided into uneven stanzas by a refrain, translated as: "Yet his trouble passed; so can mine."

Depew, Chauncey M. (1834-1928). American lawyer known for his oratory. Secretary of State (1863-1865); general counsel for the Vanderbilt railways (1875); unsuccessful candidate for the Republican presidential nomination (1888); Senator (1899-1911). Notable after-dinner speaker.

de profundis (Lat.). Out of the deep; hence, an extremely bitter cry of wretchedness. Ps. 130 is so called from the first two words in the Latin version. It forms part of the Roman Catholic burial service. Oscar Wilde's personal essay of confession and reminiscence written in prison bore the title of De Profundis (1905).

De Quincey, Thomas (1785-1859). English critic and essayist, for a time a resident of the Lake Country and an associate of WORDSWORTH and COLERIDGE. He wrote numerous essays on politics, philosophy, and literature, as well as personal essays, for BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE, and he is known for his polished style and what he himself called his "impassioned prose." His most famous work is his CONFESSIONS OF AN ENGLISH OPIUM EATER (1821). Well-known single essays are The English Mail-Coach, Murder Considered as One of the Fine Arts, and Joan of Arc.

Derby stakes. Started by Edward Stanley, the twelfth Earl of Derby, in 1780, the year after his establishment of the OAKS STAKES.

Derby Day is the day when the Derby stakes are run for, during the great Epsom Summer Meeting; it is usually either the Wednesday before or the second Wednesday after Whit Sunday. The Derby, known as the "Blue Ribbon of the Turf," is for colts and fillies of three years old only; consequently, no horse can win it twice. The name of the race is pronounced Darby, that of the town and county Durby.

De rerum natura (Of the Nature of Things). A didactic poem in six books by LUCRETIUS, developing the doctrines of EPICURUS and DEMOCRITUS and treating of physics, psychology, and ethics. First published in 1486. Cf. SANTAYANA, Three Philosophical Poets.

Derleth, August William (1909-). American regional poet and writer of weird tales, and novels about his native Wisconsin. He has projected a Sac Prairie Saga which is to include fifty books of all kinds, ultimately constituting a sort of HUMAN COMEDY of Sac Prairie, Wis.

Deronda, Daniel. The hero of George Eliot's DANIEL DERONDA.

His eyes had a peculiarity which has drawn many men into trouble; they were of a dark yet mild intensity, which seemed to express a special interest in every one on whom he fixed them, and might easily help to bring on him those claims which ardently sympathetic people are often creating in the minds of those who need help.—Ch. xxix.

Déroulède, Paul (1846-1914). French writer, politician, and author of patriotic verse. Chants du Paysan (1894). Also a playwright.

Desborough, Colonel. In Scott's Woodstock, one of the parliamentary commissioners.

Desborough, Lucy. Heroine of Meredith's novel, RICHARD FEVEREL.

Descartes, René. Latinized as Renatus Cartesius (1595-1650). French mathematician and philosopher, founder of Cartesianism and father of the modern science of thought through his belief in the possibility of mathematical exactitude in metaphysical reasoning. His Discours de la méthode (Leyden, 1639) is but a short treatise but constitutes a cornerstone of modern philosophy.

Descent of Man, The. The scientific volume, published in 1871, which, together with his earlier Origin of Species, embodies the evolutionary theories of Charles DARWIN, the naturalist.

descent to the underworld. The motif of numerous stories-occurring in the mythology and folklore of all peoples, expressing the human belief that death can be overcome and that the dead may return. Invariably the descent is made to rescue someone either abducted or rightfully dead, to find the answer to a question or discover a secret from the ruler of the underworld, or to seize some treasure. To partake of the food of the dead (or of fairyland in later folklore) prevents the visitor from ever returning. Among the most famous descent stories are the Greek myths of Orpheus and Eurydice, Ceres and Persephone, and Hercules' bringing of Cerberus up from Hades; also well-known are the Babylonian story of Ishtar's descent to rescue Tammuz, the Norse myth of Hermod's journey to Hel to bring back Balder. There are similar tales in Hindu, Chinese, and Japanese writings, and among the Ainu, Melanesians, North American Indians, and Eskimos. Descents to Hell are common also in early Christian literature.

Deschamps, Eustache (1340?-1405). French poet, a friend of CHAUCER, who imitated his work. Deschamps is best known for his Miroir de mariage, a satire on women and the world of the court which he found less stimulating than the taverns he frequented. He also wrote Art de dictier et fere chansons, a critical treatise, called the first of its type in French to be preserved. Among his shorter pieces there are 1175 (!) BALLADES.

Desdemona. Heroine of Shakespeare's OTHELLO.

The soft simplicity of Desdemona, confident of merit and conscious of innocence, her artless perseverance in her suit, and her slowness to suspect that she can be suspected, are proofs of Shakespeare's skill in human nature.—Dr. Johnson

De senectute. Essay in dialogue form in praise of old age. Also known as Cato Major after Cato the censor, one of the interlocutors.

Deserted Village, The. A famous descriptive poem by Oliver GOLDSMITH (1770). See AUBURN.

Des Esseintes. Hero of AGAINST THE GRAIN by J. K. HUYSMANS. He is the typical DECADENT hero—hypersensitive, capricious, irresolute, introspective, constantly restless and depressed, highly neurasthenic and seeking always new and perverse sensations to relieve himself of the burdensome ennui of living. He is believed to have been drawn from Comte Robert de MONTESQUIOU.

de Seversky, Alexander Prokofieff (1894–). Russian-born American aviator and aeronautical engineer. President Seversky Aircraft Corporation (1931–1939). Inventor, among other airplane devices, of a bombsight. Author of Victory Through Air Power (1942) in which the thesis implied in the title is presented from an extremist point of view.

Desgenais. A character who appeared in Alfred de Musset's Confessions of a Child of the Age and whose name and general character were taken over by Barrière in his Marble Heart (originally Les Filles de marbre) (1853), in The Parisians of the Decadence and other plays. He is a cynical philosopher and moralist, who preaches virtue from a sort of enlightened self interest but is convinced of the futility of all moralizing.

Désirée's Baby. A short story by Kate CHOPIN, published in Bayou Folk (1894). It tells of the birth of a child to Désirée, wife of the aristocratic Creole Armand Aubigny, and the discovery that the child gives evidence of Negro blood. Armand accuses his wife of being half black, and heart-broken, she decides to return with the child to her mother. Instead, however, she kills herself and her baby. Later Armand, while burning his wife's effects, discovers a letter which reveals that his own mother was of Negro blood.

Desire Under the Elms. A play by Eugene O'NEILL, produced in 1924. It deals with intrigue, greed, family hate, crime, and adultery on a Puritan New England farm in 1850. Abbie Putnam, the young third wife of miserly old Ephraim Cabot, plots to win her husband's wealth and to do so, seduces his rebellious son Eben. She has a son and Ephraim, thinking that it is his son, declares that the new child will inherit the property. Abbie and Eben kill the child, Abbie confesses, and the two are arrested.

Desmond, Shaw (1877–). Irish journalist, novelist, poet. Author of Democracy (1919), The Drama of Sinn Féin (1923), Reincarnation for Everyman (1939), etc. In 1934 he founded the International Institute for Psychical Research.

Desmoulins, Camille (1760–1794). Prominent pamphleteer during the French Revolution. Called Procureur de la lanterne, i.e., agent of the lantern, for his antiaristocratic pamphlet Le Discours de la lanterne aux Parisiens. See Ca Ira. Deputy to the Convention (1792); he was executed with DANTON by ROBESPIERRE.

de Soto, Hernando (1500?–1542). Spanish explorer in America. Explored country north and west of Florida, and was buried in the Mississippi River, which he had discovered (1541). Note: the mouth of the Mississippi had been discovered by Alonso de Pineda (1519) who had named the river Espirito Santo.

Despair, Giant. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, a giant who lives in Doubting Castle. He takes Christian and Hopeful captives for sleeping on his grounds, and locks them in a dark dungeon from Wednesday to Saturday, without "one bit of bread, or drop of drink, or ray of light." By the advice of his wife, Diffidence, the giant beats them soundly "with a crab-tree cudgel." On Saturday night Christian remembers he has a key in his bosom, called "Promise," which will open any lock in Doubting Castle. So he opens the dungeon door and they both make their escape with speed.

Despréaux, see BOILEAU, NICOLAS.

Desportes, Philippe (1545–1606). French poet, court poet to Henry III. He wrote both worldly and religious devotional verse, chiefly characterized by exaggerated conceits in the Italian tradition. Desportes belonged to a group of poets which was an offshoot of the PLÉIADE.

Dessalle, Jeanne. The heroine of Fogazzaro's novels, The Sinner and The Saint. See MAIRONI, PIERO.

Dessalines, Jean Jacques (1758–1806). Leader of insurgent slaves in Haiti; founder of republic (1804); emperor of Haiti (1804–1806). See TOUSSAINT L'OUVERTURE. Assassinated by Christophe and Pétion. His name was taken from his French master.

Destinn, Emmy (1878–1930). Bohemian operatic soprano. Created leading roles in Puccini's Madame Butterfly and Richard Strauss's Salome in London and Paris respectively. Member Metropolitan Opera Co., New York City (1908–1916).

Destiny, the Man of. Napoleon Bonaparte. See under MAN.

Destouches, Louis Ferdinand (1894-). French physician and novelist who signs his works Louis-Ferdinand Céline. Wrote Journey to the End of the Night (1934), Death on the Installment Plan (1938), etc. Represents a new wave of disillusionment and decadence in French letters. A powerful writer who violates his language as he violates all codes in order to achieve his DALI-esque results.

Destroying Angels. The members of the DANITE Band.

Destruction of Sennacherib, The. A well-known poem by Lord BYRON (1815) describing an invasion of Palestine by the Assyrian king Sennacherib (7th century B.C.): "The Assyrian came down like a wolf on the fold." The story is taken from 2 Kings, 18 ff.

Detailles, Jean Baptiste Edouard (1848-1912). French painter noted for battle and military subjects.

Deterding, Sir Henri (1865-1939). Dutch oil magnate. Became a supporter of the Nazi movement in Germany, possibly because his claims to Russian oil interests had been repudiated by the Soviets.

Deucalion's Flood. The Deluge, of Greek legend. Deucalion was son of Prometheus and Clymene, and was king of Phthia, in Thessaly. When Zeus sent the deluge Deucalion built a ship, and he and his wife, Pyrrha, were the only mortals saved. The ship at last rested on Mount Parnassus, and Deucalion was told by the oracle at Themis that to restore the human race he must cast the bones of his mother behind him. His interpretation of this was the stones of his mother Earth, so the two cast these as directed and those thrown by Deucalion became men, and those thrown by his wife became women.

Bayard TAYLOR has a lyrical drama entitled Prince Deukalion (1878), in which he takes Deukalion and Pyrrha over all the earth and through all ages of history.

Deuceace, Hon. Algernon Percy. One of Thackeray's characters, a worthless rascal who is the hero of The Amours of Mr. Deuceace, and appears in A SHABBY GENTEEL STORY, VANITY FAIR, PENDENNIS and The Raven's Wing. In the first-mentioned, he fleeces an acquaintance out of a huge sum, but is himself fooled into marrying an heiress who loses her wealth by eloping without consent.

Deukalion, see DEUCALION.

deus (Lat.). God. *

deus ex machina. The intervention of some unlikely event in order to extricate one from difficulties; such as, in a novel, a forced incident, like the arrival of a rich uncle from the Indies to help a young couple in their pecuniary embarrassments. Literally, it means "a god (let down upon the stage) from the machine," the "machine" being part of the furniture of the stage in an ancient Greek theater.

Deus vobiscum. God be with you.

Deus vult. God wills it. Specifically, the rallying cry of the First Crusade.

Deuteronomy. The Greek name of the fifth book of the Old Testament. The word means, "the law repeated." So called because it contains a repetition of the law of Moses.

Deutsch, Babette (1895-). (Mrs. Avrahm Yarmolinsky). American poet. Once secretary to Thorstein Veblen. Has given courses on poetry, and has translated from the Russian and German with her husband who is Chief of the Slavonic Division of the New York Public Library. She has written several novels and a book about Walt Whitman. Her poetry, through five or six volumes has steadily gathered strength and definition.

Deutschland. German submarine merchant vessel, first of its class to cross Atlantic. Won fame in World War I for carrying cargoes through Allied blockade.

Deutschland über alles (Ger. "Germany above all"). An expression of German patriotism, taken from the national anthem as written by HOFFMANN VON FALLERSLEBEN in 1841 on Helgoland (then belonging to Great Britain) and sung to the tune (by Haydn; 1797) of the Austrian anthem. The text shows clearly its dependence on a poem by WALTHER VON DER VOGELWEIDE (13th century).

deva, see DAEVA.

Deval, Jacques (1893-). French playwright and novelist. Script writer for Hollywood. Tovarich (1937) his most successful comedy.

de Valera, Eamon (1882-). Irish statesman, born in New York of a Spanish father and Irish mother. President of Sinn Féin (1917-1926). Led Fianna Fail into Free State parliament (August 1927). President of executive council and minister for external affairs (1932-1948).

de Vere, Aubrey Thomas (1814-1902). Irish poet, writing Irish bardic lore and ecclesiastic medievalism. Convert to Catholicism (1851). Friend of Browning and Tennyson.

devices of Cepola. Quips of law, so called from Bartolommeo Cepola, a fifteenth-century Italian lawyer, whose law-quirks, teaching how to elude the most express law, and to perpetuate lawsuits ad infinitum, have been frequently reprinted. They were printed once in 8vo, in black letter, by John Petit (1503).

devil. The name usually given to the chief of devils, known as The Devil, is Satan. He is also called LUCIFER and MEPHISTOPHELES, and is popularly referred to as AULD (or Old) NICK, HORNIE, CLOOTIE, HANGIE, the AULD ANE, etc. See those entries for individualized legendary conceptions and use in literature, also ASMODEUS, ASTAROTTE, BEELZEBUB, SAM-AEL.

The devil is frequently represented with a cloven foot, because by the Rabbinical writers he is called seirizzim (a goat). As the goat is a type of uncleanness, the prince of unclean spirits is aptly represented under this emblem.

Printer's devil. A printer's message boy; formerly, the boy who took the printed sheets from the tympan of the press. Moxon says (1683): "They do commonly so black and bedaub themselves that the workmen do jocosely call them devils." The black slave employed by Aldo Manuzio, Venetian printer, was thought to be an imp. Hence the following proclamation:

I, Aldo Manuzio, printer to the Doge, have this day made public exposure of the printer's devil. All who think he is not flesh and blood may come and pinch him.—Proclamation of Aldo Manuzio, 1490.

the devil's advocate. A carping or adverse critic. From the advocatus diaboli, the person appointed to contest the claims of a candidate for canonization before a papal court. He advances all he can against the candidate, and is opposed by the advocatus Dei (God's Advocate), who says all he can in support of the proposal.

devil may care. Wildly reckless; also a reckless fellow.

devil on two sticks. The English name of Le Sage's novel Le Diable boiteux (1707) in which ASMODEUS plays an important part. It was dramatized by Foote in 1768. As slang the term is applied to a crusty old cripple.

devil's apple. The mandrake; also the thorn apple.

devil's Bible. See DEVIL'S BOOKS below.

devil's bones. Dice, which are made of bones and lead to ruin.

devil's books, or devil's picture-book. Playing cards. A Presbyterian phrase used in reproof of the term King's Books, applied to a pack of cards, from the Fr. livre des quatre rois (the book of the four kings). Also called the devil's Bible.

Devil Dick. A nickname of Richard Porson (1759-1808), the great English Greek scholar.

Robert the Devil, see ROBERT LE DIABLE.

the French Devil. Jean Bart (1651-1702), an intrepid French sailor, born at Dunkirk.

the devil's missionary. A nickname given to Voltaire (1694-1778), and very likely to others.

son of the devil. Ezzelino (1194-1259), the noted Ghibelline leader and Governor of Vicenza; so called for his infamous cruelties.

the White Devil of Wallachia. Scanderbeg, or George Castriota (1403-1468), was so called by the Turks.

Devil and Daniel Webster, The. A popular short story by Stephen Vincent BENÉT, first published in the SATURDAY EVENING POST, collected in Thirteen O'Clock (1937), and adapted as a one-act opera and a motion picture, All That Money Can Buy (the title was later changed). In it, a New England farmer, Jabez Stone, sells his soul to the Devil for material prosperity, but is saved from paying his debt by the oratorical eloquence of Daniel Webster before a demonic jury.

devil dog. A U.S. marine. Supposedly an adaptation of German Teufelshund, a term of abuse applied by German sailors to the marines in World War I.

Devilshoof. The chief of the gipsy band in Balfe's opera, THE BOHEMIAN GIRL.

De Vinne, Theodore Low (1828-1914). American printer, known as head of The De Vinne Press. Responsible for great improvements in American typography. Author of books on printing and typography, especially The Practice of Typography (4 vols., 1900, 1901, 1902, 1904).

De Voto, Bernard Augustine (1897-). American critic, novelist, and editor. Born in Ogden, Utah, of partly Italian, partly Mormon descent. On teaching staff of Harvard University (1929-1936). Editor of "The Easy Chair" in Harper's Magazine (since 1935), editor of the Saturday Review of Literature (1936-1938). Author of Mark Twain's America (1932), opposing the views of Van Wyck Brooks; The Year of Decision, etc.

De Vulgari Eloquentia. See DANTE ALIGHIERI.

Dewey, George (1837-1917). American admiral. Hero of the Battle of Manila Bay in the American-Spanish War (1898).

Dewey, John (1859-). American philosopher and educator. Adherent of Jamesian pragmatism, "the philosophy of the common man." Father of the Progressive School movement in education. A fighter for civil and academic freedom. In the words of Will Durant: "He sees man as an organism in an environment, remaking as well as made." The influence of Dewey's thought upon American philosophy and education has been very great. As a writer his language is unfortunately pedantic.

Dewey, Melvil (1851-1931). American librarian. The "Father of Library Science" in the U.S. Founder of the first library school (Columbia University, 1887). Published Decimal Classification and Relative Index (1876-1929). Ardent advocate of simplified spelling. The "Dewey Decimal System" of library classification is in use in 85% of U.S. libraries. (The Library of Congress system for unusually large collections takes care of another 10%).

Dewey, Thomas Edmund (1902-). American lawyer who came into prominence through his prosecution in the investigation of organized crime in New York in 1935-1937. District Attorney of New York county (1937-1938); governor of New York State (1942). Running for President in 1944, he was defeated by Franklin Delano Roosevelt and, in 1948, by Harry S. Truman.

Dewey Decimal System. See under DEWEY, MELVIL.

Dewy, Dick. Hero of Hardy's UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE.

Dexter, Timothy (1743-1806). American merchant and eccentric of Newburyport, Mass. Called himself "Lord." Cf. Lord Timothy Dexter (1925) by John P. MARQUAND.

Dey. See under RULERS, TITLES OF.

de Young, Michel Harry (1849-1925). American newspaper man. With his brother, Charles de Young (1847-1880) founder and (from 1880) sole owner and editor-in-chief of the San Francisco Chronicle.

Dhu, Roderick. A Highland chieftain and outlaw in Scott's "The Lady of the Lake."

diacritical mark. A "distinguishing" conventional mark added to a letter to modify its phonetic value. The more important diacritical marks are the DIAERESIS in English, the TILDE in Spanish, the CEDILLA in French and Portuguese, the UMLAUT in German, and the various accent marks (', ` , ^ , ~) used in common orthographies and in phonetic transcription.

diaeresis. A DIACRITICAL MARK, consisting of two dots, placed over a vowel to indicate its independence from the preceding syllable. Thus Chloë, the Greek proper name, does not rhyme with either shoe or doe, but is pronounced in two syllables.

Diafoirus, Thomas. In Molière's comedy, LE MALADE IMAGINAIRE, two pompous doctors, father and son, caricatures of the medical men of the period. The younger Dr. Diafoirus is a suitor for the hand of Angelique, but loses her to Cléante.

Diaghilev, Sergei Pavlovich (1872-1929). Russian ballet producer and art critic. Member of the Imperial Russian Theater in Moscow (since 1899), where he collaborated with FOKINE and Léon Bakst in developing the Russian ballet. Through him Rimski-Korsakov's Schéhérazade and Debussy's L'Après-midi d'un faune were used for choreographic purposes. Collaborated with Stravinsky on The Firebird and Pétrouchka. Organized the Ballet Russe in Paris (1909). See also NIJINSKY.

Dial, The. (1) American quarterly magazine, founded in 1840 as the organ of the movement of TRANSCENDENTALISM. Margaret FULLER was editor until 1842, and EMERSON from 1842 until publication ceased in 1844. Essays and articles on literature, religion, and philosophy, expressing Transcendentalist ideas, were published, and contributors included THOREAU, Bronson ALCOTT, Theodore PARKER, EMERSON, Miss FULLER, LOWELL, W. H. CHANNING, and Jones VERY. The magazine was attacked by the press for its "obscurity."

(2) American literary magazine, founded in 1880 in Chicago, conservative in policy until 1918, when it moved to New York and became the outstanding literary review of its time. Until 1920, with the literary aid of Conrad AIKEN, Randolph BOURNE, and Van Wyck BROOKS, it published articles by leading American radicals, including John DEWEY and Thorstein VEBLEN. After 1920, it was devoted to the encouragement of avant-garde authors. Marianne MOORE was editor beginning in 1926. It ceased publication in 1929.

dialectical materialism. The theory that human phenomena, historical, social, economic or psychological, should be interpreted in terms of physical or material causes, arrived at by critical examination of logical consequences springing from natural causes, and by the discrimination of truth from error, with no belief in the supernatural. It is the result of a materialistic application of HEGEL's dialectic with its progression from thesis and antithesis to synthesis.

Dialogues in Limbo. A collection of philosophical discourses, written by George Santayana and published in 1926. In it, the ghosts of six philosophers of the past, among them Democritus, Aristippus, Socrates, and Avicenna, discuss problems of ethics, aesthetics, metaphysics, and political theory.

diamond (Gr. a damao, what cannot be subdued). A corruption of adamant. So called because the diamond, which cuts other substances, can be cut or polished with no substance but itself.

In Spenser's Faerie Queene (Bk. iv), Diamond is one of the three sons of Agape. He was slain by Cambalo. See also TRIAMOND.

a diamond of the first water. A specially fine diamond, one of the greatest value for its size. The color or luster of a diamond is called its "water." Hence, figuratively, "a man of the first water" is a man of the highest merit.

a rough diamond. An uncultivated genius; a person of excellent parts, but without society manners.

the diamond jousts. Jousts instituted by King Arthur, "who by that name had named them, since a diamond was the prize." The story, as embroidered by Tennyson in his Launcelot and Elaine from Malory (Bk. xviii, ch. 9-20) is that Arthur found nine diamonds from the crown of a slain knight and offered them as the prize of nine jousts in successive years. Launcelot had won them all, but when he laid them before the queen, Guinevere, in a fit of jealousy—the result of believing false rumors about Launcelot and Elaine—flung them into the river a moment before the corpse of Elaine passed in the barge.

Diamond Necklace Affair. A famous incident of French history (1783-1785) which centers round Marie Antoinette. Cardinal de Rohan, a profligate churchman, entertained (partly for political reasons) a passion for the queen, and an adventuress, the "Countess" de Lamotte, partly by means of the Queen's signatures, which were forged, induced him to purchase for the Queen, for about £85,000, a diamond necklace, originally made for Mme Dubarry. The cardinal handed the necklace to the countess, who sold parts of it to an English jeweler and kept the money. After futile attempts to recover his money from Rohan, Boehmer, the jeweler, sent his bill in to the Queen, who denied all knowledge of the matter. A nine months' trial ensued which created immense scandal and has been considered one of the proximate causes of the French Revolution.

Diamond Pitt. Thomas Pitt (1653-1726), owner of the famous Pitt Diamond and grandfather of the Earl of Chatham, was so known.

Diamond. The little dog belonging to Sir Isaac Newton. One winter's morning he upset a candle on his master's desk, by which papers containing minutes of many years' experiments were destroyed. On perceiving this terrible catastrophe Newton exclaimed: "Oh, Diamond, Diamond, thou little knowest the mischief thou hast done!" and at once set to work to repair the loss.

Diamond State. Delaware, in reference to its small size.

Diana. (1) An ancient Italian and Roman divinity, later identified with the Olympian goddess Artemis, who was daughter of Zeus and Leto, and twin-sister of Apollo. She was the goddess of the moon and of hunting, protectress of women, and—in earlier times at least—the great mother goddess or nature goddess. See SELENE. The temple of Diana at Ephesus, built by Dinocrates, was set on fire by Erostratus for the sake of perpetuating his name. The Ionians decreed that anyone who mentioned his name should be put to death, but this very decree gave it immortality. The temple was one of the Seven Wonders of the World.

Diana of Ephesus. This statue, a cone surmounted by a bust covered with breasts, we are told, fell from heaven. If so, it was an aerolite; but Minucius (2nd century A.D.), who says he saw it, describes it as a wooden statue, and Pliny, a contemporary, tells us it was made of ebony.

great is Diana of the Ephesians. A phrase sometimes used to signify that self-interest blinds the eyes, from the story told in Acts xix. 24-28 of Demetrius, the Ephesian silversmith who made shrines for the temple of Diana.

tree of Diana. See philosopher's tree under PHILOSOPHER.

(2) The heroine and title of a pastoral by Montemayor, imitated from the Daphnis and Chloë of Longos. Although by a Portuguese author, it was written in Spanish (1560).

Diana à la biche, Diana of the Hind. An antique sculpture in the Louvre at Paris.

Diana of the Crossways. A novel by George MEREDITH (1885). Diana, the witty and charming if somewhat capricious Irish heroine, marries Warwick, but soon finds that he is uncongenial. Hearing her name unpleasantly coupled with that of Lord Dannisburgh, one of the cabinet members, Warwick sues for divorce, but Diana successfully opposes the suit, leaves her husband and becomes celebrated for her novels and her salon. She has an affair with the brilliant young politician Percy Dacier and on one occasion all but elopes with him; later in an impetuous moment she sells to a newspaper a political secret which he has told her in confidence. Although Warwick dies a few days later, her chance of happiness with Dacier is gone, and she finally marries Thomas Redworth, the faithful and worthy suitor who has extricated her from numerous difficulties and has persistently "believed in the soul of Diana."

This novel was based on the career of Caroline Norton, but in his second edition Meredith cautioned his readers against applying its incidents to any individual in a literal fashion.

Diane de Lys. A novel by Alexandre DUMAS fils (1851), dramatized two years later under the same title. It centers about a love affair between the titular heroine and the ardent young sculptor, Paul Aubrey, with Diane's neglectful husband as the third character of importance.

Diane de Poitiers (1499-1566). Very influential mistress of Henry II of France.

Dianora. In Boccaccio's DECAMERON (x. 5), the wife of Gilberto of Friuli, loved by Ansaldo. In order to rid herself of his importunities, she vows never to yield to his suit till he can "make her garden at midwinter as gay with flowers as it was in summer," meaning never. Ansaldo, by the aid of a magician, accomplishes the appointed task; but when the lady tells him her husband insists on her keeping her promise, Ansaldo, not to be outdone in generosity, declines to take advantage of his claim, and from that day forth is the firm and honorable friend of Gilberto. The Franklin's Tale of Chaucer is substantially the same story. See DORIGEN.

Diary of a Nobody. Humorous novel of London middle-class Victorian life ("hero," Mr. Potter) by George and Weedon Grossmith.

diastole and systole. The rhythmical expansion and contraction of the cavities of the heart, causing the circulation of the blood through the body.

Diavolo, Fra, see FRA DIAVOLO.

Díaz, Porfirio (1830-1915). Mestizo Mexican general and statesman. Fought against MAXIMILIAN and opposed JUAREZ. President for seven terms (1876-1911). Forced to abdicate; died in exile in Paris.

Díaz del Castillo, Bernal. See CONQUISTADOR; CORTÉS, HERNANDO.

Dibdin, Thomas Frognall (1776-1847). Pseudonym Reginald Wolfe. Famous bibliographer, nephew of Charles Dibdin (1745-1814), dramatist.

Dichtung und Wahrheit (Poetry and Truth). Current title of Goethe's autobiography (1811, 1812, 1814, 1831), which should not suggest that the work is factually unreliable (though in some details it undoubtedly is) but rather that it was intended, and is, a work of art making use of autobiographical data. It is a beautifully conceived psychological and historical novel in which the hero happens to be the author. The full title is Aus meinem Leben (From my Life), Dichtung und Wahrheit.

Dick, Deadwood, see DEADWOOD DICK.

Dick, Mr. In Dickens' David Copperfield (1849), an amiable, half-witted man, devoted to David's great-aunt, Miss Betsey Trotwood, who thinks him a prodigious genius.

Dick, Ragged. One of the boy heroes of the stories of Horatio ALGER, Jr.

Dick Deadeye, see DEADEYE, DICK.

Dickens, Charles (1812-1870). English novelist, of wide popularity, which he won by journalistic use of the popular devices of sentimentality, melodrama, broad humor, and familiar characters and turns of plot. He is known for his creation of striking types, many of which, such as Pecksniff, Uriah Heep, Micawber, etc., have supplied tag-names for the quirks of character they represent, and for the essential realism of his portrayal of life among the poor and the lower middle-class of England. Critics point out, however, that his characters are most often caricatures, and that his realism is largely diluted by sentimentality or strained for conventional comic effects. His best-known works are PICKWICK PAPERS (1836); OLIVER TWIST (1837-1838); THE OLD CURIOSITY SHOP (1840); A CHRISTMAS CAROL (1843); DAVID COPPERFIELD (1849-1850); A TALE OF TWO CITIES (1859). Dickens was a successful journalist and lecturer, editing the weekly periodical Household Words (1849-1859) and also All the Year Round (1859-1870). In spite of his journalistic, caricaturist's attitude toward his characters, Dickens was regarded highly by DOSTOYEVSKY and TOLSTOY for his portrayals of life among the poor and downtrodden. For other novels by Dickens, see the following entries: NICHOLAS NICKLEBY; BARNABY RUDGE; MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT; THE CHIMES; THE CRICKET ON THE HEARTH; DOMBEY AND SON; BLEAK HOUSE; HARD TIMES; LITTLE DORRIT; GREAT EXPECTATIONS; OUR MUTUAL FRIEND; THE MYSTERY OF EDWIN DROOD.

the modern Dickens. William De Morgan (1839-1917), author of JOSEPH VANCE, ALICE-FOR-SHORT and other novels, was so called because of his Victorian manner and emphasis on character rather than plot.

Dickinson, Emily Elizabeth (1830-1886). American poet, known for her precise and delicate lyrics dealing with personal emotions and states of mind, many mystical in tone. They are considered to have an affinity with the poetry of the Imagists (see IMAGISM), and influenced the women poets of the 1920's, especially Edna St. Vincent MILLAY and Elinor WYLIE. Only two poems were published while the poet was alive, and her work, edited by several different hands over a long period of years, came into prominence only in the 20th century. Volumes published so far include Poems (1890); Poems: Second Series (1891); Poems: Third Series (1896); The Single Hound (1914); Further Poems (1929); Unpublished Poems (1936); Poems: Centenary Edition (1930); Bolts of Melody (1945). Emily Dickinson lived an uneventful and secluded life, carrying on literary correspondence with several prominent critics and authors of her time; she is considered to have been influenced in part by the ideas of EMERSON. Many speculations have been made with regard to unrevealed details of her biography. She is believed to be portrayed as the titular heroine of Helen Hunt Jackson's novel Mercy Philbrick's Choice (1876), and of the play Alison's House (1930), by Susan Glaspell.

Dickinson, Goldsworthy Lowes (1862–1932). English essayist. Best-known for The Greek View of Life (1896). A gentleman and a scholar and a bachelor to the end.

Dickon. In Percy MacKaye's SCARECROW, a "Yankee improvisation of the Prince of Darkness."

Dick's hatband. The crown of England, so referred to in allusion to the short rule of Richard Cromwell, the weak son of Oliver CROMWELL. "As queer as Dick's hatband" is an expression originally meaning how queer it was that the crown had come to this.

Dickson, Carter, see CARR, JOHN DICKSON.

Dick Turpin, see TURPIN, DICK.

Dictator of Letters. VOLTAIRE (1694–1778), called the Great Pan.

Dicte. The cave in the Cretan mountain—center of a prehistoric cult—where the infant Zeus was tended by nymphs. Hence Dicætan.

diction. Manner or mode of verbal expression, particularly with regard to clearness, accuracy, etc. Comparable to style, which, however, is a matter of structure where diction is a matter of form.

In the sure and flawless perfection of his rhythm and diction he [Milton] is as admirable as Vergil or Dante.—Matthew Arnold.

Dictys Cretensis. Reputed author of an eye-witness account in Latin of the siege of Troy, which was one of the versions of the Troilus legend known to the Middle Ages. Both Dictys Cretensis and DARES PHRYGIUS are names mentioned by Homer.

didactic poetry (Gr. didasko, I teach). Poetry which uses the beauties of expression, imagination, sentiment, etc., for teaching some moral lesson, as Pope's ESSAY ON MAN, or the principles of some art or science, as Virgil's Georgics, Garth's Dispensary, or Erasmus Darwin's Botanic Garden.

Diderot, Denis. Nicknamed Pantophile Diderot (1713–1784). French encyclopedist and philosopher. With d'Alembert and others compiler of the ENCYCLOPÉDIE, OU DICTIONNAIRE RAISONNÉ DES SCIENCES, DES ARTS ET DES MÉTIERS (28 vols.). His best-known play is Le Fils naturel (1757), his best-known novel Le Neveu de Rameau (posthumous).

Dido. The name given by Virgil to Elissa, founder and queen of Carthage. She fell in love with Aeneas, driven by a storm to her shores, who, after abiding awhile at Carthage, was compelled by Mercury to leave the hos-pitabile queen, Elissa, in grief, burns herself to death on a funeral pile. (Aeneid, i. 494–iii. 650.) Dido is really the Phoenician name of Astarte (Artemis), goddess of the moon and protectress of the citadel of Carthage. Ovid, in his Heroides, has a letter supposed to be written by Dido to Aeneas, reminding him of all she had done for him, and imploring him to remain. There are several English tragedies on Queen Dido: Dido, Queen of Carthage, by Nash and Marlowe (1594); Dido and Aeneas, by D'Urfey (1721); the opera of Dido and Aeneas, by Purcell (1657); also Dido, an opera, by Marmontel (1703) and Didon Abandonnée, by Metastasio (1724).

Didymus (Gr. the twin). Surname of the apostle Thomas; hence a doubter.

die-hard. In political phraseology die-hards are the crusted members of any party (particularly the Tories who opposed any reform of the House of Lords, and the Unionists who refused to budge an inch in the direction of Irish Home Rule) who stick to their long-held theories through thick and thin, regardless of the changes that time or a newly awakened conscience may bring.

Diego, San. A modification of Santiago (St. James), champion of the red cross and patron saint of Spain. See under SAINT.

Dies Irae (Lat. Day of Wrath). A famous medieval hymn on the last judgment, probably the composition of Thomas of Celano, a native of Abruzzi, who died in 1255. It is derived from the Vulgate version of Joel ii. 31, and used by Catholics in the Mass for the Dead and on All Souls' Day. Scott has introduced the opening into his Lay of the Last Minstrel.

Dies irae, dies illa Solvat saeculum in favilla, Teste David cum Sibylla.

Dietrich of Bern. The name given the German folk epic to Theodoric the Great (454–526), king of the Ostrogoths (Bern = Verona). He appears in many Middle High German poems, especially the NIBELUNGEN-LIED, where he is one of the liegemen of King Etzel.

Dietz, Howard (1896–). American librettist. Dear Sir (with Jerome Kern; 1924); Merry-Go-Round (with Morrie Ryskind; 1927) and other comic operas.

digamma. A letter of the original Greek alphabet, standing for about the sound of English w and looking somewhat like a capital F, in which the Greeks saw two gammas (Γ) on top of each other. Hence the name.

Digby, Sir Kenelm (1603–1665). English philosopher and student of occultism. Discovered the essential function of oxygen in plant life. Among his books are A Treatise Declar- ing the Operations and Nature of Man's Soul (1644) and highly fantastic Memoirs

Digges, Dudley (1880-1947). Irish actor of an old family. A favorite in the United States where he appeared both on the stage and in moving pictures. Most recently played in The Iceman Cometh, by Eugene O'NEILL.

Dignam, Paddy. In James Joyce's ULYSSES, a friend of Leopold Bloom and Simon Dedalus whose funeral Bloom attends early in the action of the novel, in what is considered to be intended as an analogue of Ulysses' visit to Hades in the Homeric legend. Dignam himself represents ELPENOR.

digraph. Two letters representing one sound, as th, sh, etc. Not to be confused with diphthong, which is the sound of two vowels connected by a glide, regardless of whether it is represented by one or several letters.

dilettante. From Italian; literally, "one who takes delight in a thing." Like amateur, which comes from French and means literally, "one who likes a thing," the term dilettante is especially applied with reference to the fine arts. Since mere fondness of an art guarantees neither knowledge nor ability, amateur as well as dilettante have come to mean "one who dabbles in a given subject."

Dillon, George (1906-). American poet. Pulitzer prize winner in 1931. Translated Baudelaire's Fleurs du Mal with Edna St. Vincent MILLAY. Editor of Poetry: A Magazine of Verse.

Dimanche, Monsieur. A dun. The term is from Molière's Don Juan, and would be in English Mr. Sunday.

dimeter. A verse consisting of two metrical feet or of two DIPODIES.

Dimmesdale, Rev. Arthur. In Hawthorne's SCARLET LETTER, the father of Hester Prynne's illegitimate child. After years of cowardly silence he finally makes public confession.

Dimnet, Ernest (1866-). French abbé; lecturer and essayist. Commonly known as Abbé Dimnet. His most popular book, The Art of Thinking (1928).

Dinah. In UNCLE TOM'S CABIN by Harriet Beecher STOWE, the cook in St. Clare's household. The name is a common one for a Negro cook or servant. It is a feminine proper name in the Bible.

Dinarzade. Sister of SCHEHERAZADE.

Dindymus. In ancient geography, a mountain range between Phrygia and Galatia, sacred to CYBELE, the Great Mother of the Gods, often also called Dindymene.

Diners Magny. A restaurant in Paris which was the scene of informal meetings of an "inner circle" of French novelists whose attitudes and aims were in many ways common. Among these novelists were Edmond and Jules de GONCOURT, Théophile GAUTIER, Alphonse DAUDET, Ernest RENAN, and Gustave FLAUBERT, and the critic Charles Augustine SAINTE-BEUVE.

Dinesen, Isak, see BLIXEN.

Ding, see DARLING, JAY NORWOOD.

Ding an sich (Ger. thing in itself). In Kantian philosophy, a thing as it is in its own essence, not distorted by subjective interpretation or sense perception. Contrasted with phenomenon, which is a thing as it is perceived. If all awareness is due to sense perception, it becomes possible to claim that there are no Dinge an sich. The subsequent conclusions to be derived from such a premiss, lead deeply into romantic philosophy and possibly to nihilistic subjectivism.

dingdong theory. See BOWWOW THEORY.

Dingley tariff. A protective tariff in effect from 1897-1909. The Dingley Act governing the tariff was framed by Representative Nelson Dingley of Maine (1832-1899).

Dinmont, Dandie. In Scott's GUY MANNERING, an eccentric and humorous store-farmer at Charlie's Hope. He is called "The Fighting Dinmont of Liddesdale." Dandie Dinmont is considered one of Scott's best-drawn characters.

Dinsmore, Elsie. See ELSIE DINSMORE.

Diocletian, Gaius Aurelius Valerius (245-313). Roman Emperor (284-305 A.D.). Inaugurated the period of the Partnership of Emperors. Ruled Asia and Egypt as one of four associate Caesars. Began a terrible ten year persecution of the Christians (303-313). With Maximian built Baths of Diocletian in Rome (opened 306).

Diogenes. (1) A noted Greek cynic philosopher (about 412-323 B.C.), who, according to Seneca, lived in a tub. Another well-known tale is that he went about in daylight with a lantern, looking for an honest man. When Alexander went to see him, the young King of Macedonia introduced himself with these words: "I am Alexander, surnamed the Great," to which the philosopher replied: "And I am Diogenes, surnamed the Dog." When Alexander asked if he could do the philosopher any favor, Diogenes replied, "Yes, move out of my sunshine," to which Alexander is said to have answered, "If I were not Alexander, I should be Diogenes."

The whole world was not half so wide
To Alexander, when he cried
Because he had but one to subdue,
As was a paltry narrow tub to Diogenes.
Butler, Hudibras, i. 3.

(2) Surname of Romanus IV, Emperor of the East (1067-1071).

Diomedes or Diomed. (1) In Greek legend, a hero of the siege of Troy, king of Aetolia, brave and obedient to authority. He survived the siege, but on his return home found his wife living in adultery, and saved his life by living an exile in Italy. His horses were Dinos and Lampon. See HORSE.

(2) In later versions of the TROILUS legend, Diomedes is the forthright Greek warrior for whom Cressida betrays her promise to Troilus.

Diomedean swop. An exchange in which all the benefit is on one side. The expression is founded on an incident related by Homer in the Iliad. Glaucus recognizes DIOMED on the battlefield, and the friends change armor:

For Diomed's brass arms, of mean device,
For which nine oxen paid (a vulgar price),
He gave his own, of gold divinely wrought,
An hundred beeves the shining purchase bought.
Pope, Iliad, vi.

Dione. A Titaness; daughter of Oceanus and Tethys, and mother by Jupiter of Venus. The name has been applied to Venus herself, and Julius Caesar, who claimed descent from her, was hence sometimes called Dionaeus Caesar.

So young Dioné, nursed beneath the waves,
And rocked by Nereids in their coral caves. . . .
Lisp'd her sweet tones, and tried her tender smiles.
Darwin, Economy of Vegetation, ii.

Dionne quintuplets. Cécile, Yvonne, Annette, Émilie, and Marie Dionne, born May 28, 1934, to Ovila and Elzire Dionne of Calander, Northern Ontario, Canada. See also DAFOE.

Dionysia. See BACCHANALIA.

Dionysus. The Greek name of BACCHUS.

Dioscuri (Gr. Dious kouroi, "son of Zeus"). CASTOR and POLLUX.

Diotima. An Arcadian priestess, probably fictitious, teacher of Socrates, quoted by him in Plato's Symposium.

diphthong. Two vowel sounds in one syllable connected by a continuous glide (and regardless of its representation in spelling by one or several letters). The use of the word diphthong for DIGRAPH is erroneous.

dipody. In prosody, a measure of two feet.

Dipsas (Gr. dipsa, thirst). A serpent, so called because those bitten by it suffered from intolerable thirst. Milton refers to it in Paradise Lost, x, 526.

Dipsychus. See CLOUGH, ARTHUR HUGH.

diptych. In Roman antiquity, a two-leaved hinged writing tablet. Hence an altar piece consisting of two painted tablets hinged together. When there are three tablets, the altar piece is called a triptych.

Dircaean Swan. Pindar; so called from Dirce, a fountain in the neighborhood of Thebes, the poet's birthplace (518-442 B.C.).

The fountain is named from Dirce, who was put to death by the sons of Antiope for her brutal treatment of their mother, and was changed into the spring by Bacchus.

direct discourse. A discourse literally quoted, as: He says, "I am hungry." Opposed to indirect discourse in which the quotation is changed by grammatical subordination, as: He says that he is hungry.

Directoire. French for DIRECTORY. Used in English as an adjective designating a style of dress prevalent at the time. High waistline, long skirt, low neckline, puffed sleeves.

Director, Our. A musical march by John Philip Sousa.

Directory, The. In French history, the constitution of 1795, when the executive was vested in five "Directors," one of whom retired every year. After a sickly existence of four years, it came to an end at Napoleon's coup d'état of 18 Brumaire (November 9), 1799.

Dis. A name for PLUTO and hence the lower world.

Proserpine gathering flowers,
Herself a fairer flower, by gloomy Dis
Was gathered.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iv, 270.

Disastrous Peace, the (La Paix malheureuse). A name given to the Treaty of Cateau-Cambrésis (1559), which followed the battle of Gravelines. It was signed by France, Spain, and England, and by it France ceded the Low Countries to Spain, and Savoy, Corsica, and 200 forts to Italy.

Discharge Bible. See under BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Discobolus (from Gr. a discus thrower). Name of a famous Greek statue by Myron (5th century B.C.), representing a youth about to throw a discus. The original is lost. Restored copies are in the Vatican Museum, the British Museum, and in the Palazzo Lan- ceolotti. The last of these is now held to be nearest the original.

Samuel Butler introduces the Discobolus in A Psalm of Montreal with the amusing refrain, "O God, O Montreal!", claiming to have found it consigned to a lumber room because it is considered indecent.

disestablishment. The act of withdrawing a church from its position or privileges in relation to the state. The Irish Church was disestablished by an act of Parliament in 1869. The Church of England was disestablished in Wales by several acts in 1920.

Dishart, Gavin. The titular hero of Barrie's LITTLE MINISTER. He also appears in Auld Licht Idylls.

dissecta membra. Scattered limbs, referring to the MAENADS dismembering Pentheus.

Hence in literature the literary remains of a poet or writer.

Dismas or Dysmas. The name usually given, in the apocryphal gospels, to the penitent thief who was crucified with Jesus. The impenitent thief is commonly known as Gestas or Gestas. Longfellow, in his Golden Legend, calls the penitent Titus and his fellow thief Dumachus.

Disney, Walt (1901-). American producer of animated moving-picture cartoons in which he created the immortal characters of Mickey Mouse and Donald Duck. His best-known full-length pictures, also in animated technique and in technicolor, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs (1938), Pinocchio (1940), Fantasia (1940), Dumbo (1941).

dispensation (Lat. dispensatio, from dis and pendere, to weigh). The system which God chooses to dispense or establish between Himself and man. The dispensation of Adam was that between Adam and God; the dispensation of Abraham, and that of Moses, were those imparted to these holy men; the Gospel dispensation is that explained in the Gospels.

papal dispensation. Permission given by the Pope to dispense with something enjoined; a license to do what is forbidden, or to omit what is commanded by the law of the Church, as distinct from the moral law.

Disraeli, Benjamin, 1st Earl of Beaconsfield (1804-1881). English novelist and statesman, Prime Minister of England in 1868 and from 1874 to 1880. His literary works include Vivian Grey (1826-1827); Contarini Fleming (1832); The Infernal Marriage (1834); Venetia (1837); Coningsby (1844); Sybil (1845); Tancred (1847); Lothair (1870); Endymion (1880). Disraeli based many of his characters on his contemporaries, and his novels are marked by their presentation of types of persons in the social and political life. He also wrote biography and political studies. Nicknamed Dizzy.

D'Israeli, Isaac (1766-1848). Father of Benjamin DISRAELI and son of Benjamin D'Israeli, a Jewish merchant descended from a family of Spanish refugees who went to England in 1748. Published anonymously Curiosities of Literature (6 vols., 1791-1834), Amenities of Literature (3 vols., 1841), and other works.

dissenter, Dissenter. In England, a non-conformist Protestant (of Catholic) who disputes the authority of the Church of England.

Dissertation on Roast Pig, A. One of the most famous of the Essays of Elia by Charles Lamb. See ELIA.

distaff. The staff for holding flax, tow, or wool to be spun. Since the 15th century an attachment to the spinning wheel but originally constituting the complete spinning apparatus. Hence a woman or the female sex. The phrase distaff side or distaff side of the house is an old collective for the female members of the family. Saint Distaff's Day or Distaff Day is January 7, the day after Twelfth Day (January 6), when the women used to resume their normal work after the Christmas holidays.

Distaffina. The heroine of Rhode's burlesque, BOMBASTES FURIOSO.

distemper. In art, a method of painting with the pigments tempered with an emulsion of egg yolk, size or white of egg. Cf. Browning's poem Pacchiarotto or How he Worked in Distemper.

distich. A strophic group of two lines. The modern rhymed distich is called a couplet. An elegiac distich, so called because it was in classical times favored as a strophic form for elegies, consists of a hexameter followed by a pentameter. Goethe and Schiller are the principal poets of distichs in modern times. One by Schiller, which is at the same time a characterization of the distich, reads in Coleridge's translation:

In the hexameter rises the fountain's silvery column,
In the pentameter aye falling in melody back dithyrambic (Gr., dithyrambos, a choric hymn). Dithyrambic poetry was originally a wild, impetuous kind of Dorian lyric in honor of Bacchus, traditionally ascribed to the invention of Arion of Lesbos (about 620 B. C.), who was thereafter called the father of dithyrambic poetry.

Ditmars, Raymond Lee (1876-1942). American naturalist. Curator of reptiles, later in charge of department of mammals, in the New York Zoological Park. Author of The Book of Living Reptiles (1936), etc.

Ditrichstein, Leo (1865-1928). Hungarian-American actor and playwright. Created the rôle of Zou-Zou in the stage version of Du Maurier's Trilby (1895). Successful in adaptations of French and German stage hits.

Ditzen, Rudolf. See FALLADA, HANS.

Diver, Colonel. In Dickens' MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT, editor of the New York Rowdy Journal, in America.

Diverting History of John Gilpin, The. See JOHN GILPIN.

Dives (Lat., rich). The name popularly given to the rich man in Jesus' parable of "The Rich Man and Lazarus" (Luke xvi. 19-31). It is taken from the Vulgate, where the word dives occurs.

divide and govern. An old maxim of politics, now usually associated with MACHIAVELLI's reiteration of it. It implies that if you divide a nation into parties, or set your enemies at loggerheads, you have a better chance of having your own way. It is often quoted in one of these variant Latin forms: divide et impera; divide ut imperes; divide ut regnes.

Divine, the. Epithet variously applied to Ariosto (1474-1533), Italian poet; Raphael (1483-1520), the painter; Luis de Morales (1509-1586), a Spanish religious painter; Ferdinand de Herrera (1534-1567), the Spanish lyric poet; Sarah Bernhardt (1844-1923), etc.

Divine Comedy (Divina Commedia). An epic poem in TERZA RIMA by DANTE ALIGHIERI, divided into three parts: Inferno (1300), Purgatory (1308), and Paradise (1311). Dante called it a comedy, because the ending is happy and his countrymen added the word divine from admiration of the poem. The poet depicts a vision, in which he is conducted, first by Virgil (human reason) through hell and purgatory; and then by Beatrice (revelation) and finally by St. Bernard through the several heavens, where he beholds the Triune God.

Hell or the Inferno is represented as a funnel-shaped hollow, formed of gradually contracting circles, the lowest and smallest of which is the earth's center. Purgatory is a mountain rising solitarily from the ocean on that side of the earth which is opposite to us. It is divided into terraces, and its top is the terrestrial paradise. From this "top" the poet ascends through the seven planetary heavens, the fixed stars, and the "primum mobile," to the empyrean or seat of God.

The Divine Comedy is considered the greatest literary production of the Middle Ages, and has been compared to a Gothic cathedral in its scope, its detail, the sublimity of its aspiration, and its character as a monument to the entire culture. As a vision and an account of a living man's visit to Hell, Purgatory, and Heaven, it is in the tradition of a form which had a very wide vogue in the popular religious literature of the medieval period. See ST. PATRICK'S PURGATORY. Much of the Aristotelian philosophy of St. Thomas Aquinas (see under SAINT) is used in the cosmology and the theological and metaphysical concepts embodied in the poem, and many actual historical personages appear, as well as Greek and Latin authors and philosophers admired by Dante and famous legendary figures. Dante's own friends and enemies in his political career are especially to be found in his representation of the Other World, respectively exalted or damned. The characterization, vivid and imaginative visualization, dramatic presentation of individual scenes, and poetic distinction of the poem have made it famous through the centuries. For a full discussion, cf. Dante, by T. S. Eliot, and Mediaeval Culture, by Karl Vössler.

Divine Doctor. Jean de Ruysbroeck. See under DOCTOR.

Divine Fire, The. A novel by May Sinclair (Eng., 1905), a study of temperamental genius. The hero, Savage Keith Rickman, a young Cockney poet, is said to have been drawn in some measure from the poet Ernest Dowson.

Divine Pagan. Hypatia (370?-415), who presided over the neo-Platonic School at Alexandria. See also NEO-PLATONISM.

divine right of kings. The notion that kings reign by direct ordinance of God, quite apart from the will of the people. This phrase was much used in the 17th century on account of the pretensions of the Stuart kings. The idea arose from the Old Testament, where kings are called "God's anointed," because they were God's vicars on earth, when the Jews changed their theocracy for a monarchy.

The right divine of kings to govern wrong
Pope, Dunciad, iv. 188.

Divine Sarah, the. Sarah BERNHARDT.

divine speaker. See THEOPHRASTUS.

Divorcement, A Bill of. Title of a play by Clemence DANE.

Dix, Dorothy. Pseudonym of Elizabeth Meriwether Gilmer (1870-). American newspaper writer, author of a widely syndicated column of advice on love and domestic problems which was begun in 1896 in the New Orleans Picayune.

Dixie or Dixie's Land. An ideal country, a sort of Utopia in the southern part of the United States; hence a general term for the states south of the Mason and Dixon line. The term was popularized by the song Dixie, written by D. D. Emmett and first sung in public by Bryant's Negro Minstrels in New York in 1859. During the Civil War, the song became a great favorite with the Confederate soldiers.

Originally, however, Dixie referred not to the South, but to Manhattan Island, and this use of the term was said to be current for about fifty years before the song was written. According to the account usually given, Dixie was a slave-holder of Manhattan Island, who removed his slaves to the southern states, where they had to work harder and fare worse, so that they were always sighing for their old home, which they called "Dixie's Land." Imagination and distance soon advanced this island into a sort of Delectable Country or Land of Beulah.

Dixon, Thomas (1864-1946). American Baptist clergyman. Democrat but anti-Communist and opponent of New Deal. Wrote The Leopard's Spots (1902), The Clansman (1905), etc. The latter painted the Ku Klux Klan as a band of dedicated knights and was the basis of D. W. Griffith's epochal silent film, The Birth of A Nation (1914).

Dizzy. A nickname of Benjamin DISRAELI.

Djabal. In Browning's tragedy, THE RETURN OF THE DRUSES, a man who poses as divine from patriotic motives and stabs himself when his scheme is uncovered.

Djinnestan, see JINNISTAN.

Dmitri Fyodorovich, see KARAMAZOV, DMITRI FYODOROVICH.

Dmitri Rudin. A novel by TURGENEV (1860), a keen study of a man whose colossal vanity leads him to think himself a genius, but who is contented with fascinating a few ladies and talking endlessly.

Dobbin, Captain, afterwards Colonel. In Thackeray's VANITY FAIR, the faithful friend of George Osborne and lover of Amelia Sedley. He is ungainly and self-effacing; for years he devotes himself to Amelia's welfare without demanding anything in return. At last he is rewarded with her hand. Dobbin's sterling qualities place him in sharp contrast with many of the other, more worldly, self-assertive characters of the book.

Dobell, Bertram (1842-1914). English book-seller and man of letters. Friend of James THOMSON, for the publication of whose The City of Dreadful Night (1880) he was responsible. Editor of works of Thomas TRAHERNE.

Dobell, Sydney (1824-1874). English poet and critic. In private life a wine merchant at Cheltenham (1848-1874). Wrote The Roman (1850) and Balder (1854). Best-known single poem Keith of Ravelston. See also under FIRMILAN.

Dobie, Charles Caldwell (1881-1943). American fiction writer and playwright. He was called "a professional San Franciscan," "a conservative interpreter of San Francisco."

Dobie, J. Frank (1888-). American writer and folklorist. Professor of English, University of Texas. Apache Gold and Yaqui Silver (1939) etc.

Döblin, Alfred (1878-). German nerve specialist and writer. His major work, Berlin Alexanderplatz (1929), was a valuable experiment in a realistic cinematographic technique undertaken by a man who had learned a good deal as an expressionistic poet. It was translated into five languages.

Doboobie, Dr. Demetrius. In Scott's KENILWORTH, a doctor who taught Wayland SMITH something of his art.

Dobrée, Bonamy (1891-). English authority on Restoration drama. Restoration Comedy (1924), Restoration Tragedy (1929).

Dobson, Henry Austin (1840-1921). English poet and prose-writer, a scholar of 18th-century literature, which he depicted in prose sketches and biographies. Among his works are Vignettes in Rhyme (1873); Proverbs in Porcelain (1877); The Ballad of Beau Brocade (1892); The Story of Rosina (1895); and Carmena Votiva (1901).

doctor. A scholastic or honorary title conferred by a university. The word doctor is commonly synonymous with physician, from the degree M.D., Doctor of Medicine. In the medieval universities doctors were advanced students who were usually also teachers. The degree Ph.D., Doctor of Philosophy, is regularly conferred by American universities on the satisfactory completion of the equivalent of about three years' study beyond the BACHELOR's degree including the presentation of an original thesis.

Other doctors' degrees than the Ph.D. such as LL.D., Doctor of Law, Litt.D., Doctor of Literature—are generally honorary and conferred by a university for high distinction in any field, often regardless of whether the recipient has done academic work at that or any other university.

In the Middle Ages, the Schoolmen or theologians who lectured in the cloisters and cathedral schools were called doctors, and many of them became known under special titles, as:

Admirable Doctor (Doctor Mirabilis). Roger BACON (1214?-1294), the English medieval philosopher.

Angelic Doctor. Thomas Aquinas (1224-1274), also known as the Angel of the Schools, was so called, because he discussed the knotty points in connection with the being and nature of angels.

Authentic Doctor. A title bestowed on the scholastic philosopher, Gregory of Rimini (d. 1358).

Divine Doctor. Jean de Ruysbroeck, also called the ECSTATIC DOCTOR.

Eloquent Doctor. Peter Aureolus (14th century), archbishop of Aix, a schoolman.

Ecstatic Doctor. Jean de Ruysbroeck, the mystic (1294-1381).

Enlightened Doctor. Raymond Lully of Palma (about 1234-1315), a Spaniard, and one of the most distinguished of the 13th century scholastic philosophers.

Evangelic Doctor. John Wyclif (1320-1384), "the morning star of the Reformation."

Illuminated Doctor. (1) Raymond Lully. Also called the ENLIGHTENED DOCTOR.

(2) Johannes Tauler (1294-1361), the German mystic.

Invincible Doctor. William of Occam (d. 1347), or Ockham (a village in Surrey), the scholastic philosopher. He was also called Doctor Singularis, and Princeps Nominalium, for he was the reviver of NOMINALISM.

Irrefragable Doctor. Alexander Hales (d. 1245), an English Franciscan, author of Summa Theologiae, and founder of scholastic theology.

Mellifluous Doctor. St. Bernard (1091-1153), whose writings were called a "river of Paradise."

Profound Doctor. Thomas Bradwardine, Richard Middleton, and other 14th century scholastic philosophers were given this title.

Most Profound Doctor. Aegidius de Columna (d. 1316), a Sicilian schoolman.

Seraphic Doctor. St. Bonaventura, the scholastic philosopher (1221-1274), placed by Dante among the saints of his Paradiso.

Singular Doctor. William Occam, Doctor Singularis et Invincibilis. See INVINCIBLE DOCTOR.

Subtle Doctor. The Scottish schoolman and Franciscan friar, DUNS SCOTUS.

Universal Doctor. Alain de Lille (1114-1203), one of the schoolmen.

Well-founded Doctor. Aegidius de Columna (1247?-1316).

Doctor. For titles beginning with Doctor, see also under DR.

Dr. Faustus, see under FAUST.

Dr. Fell, see FELL.

Doctors' Commons. Site near St. Paul's Churchyard in London, occupied (till 1867) by a group of buildings of the same name. In them were the offices attending to marriage licenses, divorces, and the like. Their name goes back to the time when they were occupied by the Association or College of Doctors of Civil Law. The commons of the doctors was originally their common table and then their dining hall.

Doctor of Physic's Tale or Physicians Tale. In Chaucer's Canterbury Tales. See VIRGINIA.

Doctors of the Church. Certain early Christian Fathers, especially four in the Greek (or Eastern) Church and four in the Latin (or Western) Church.

(a) Eastern Church. St. Athanasius of Alexandria (331), who defended the divinity of Christ against the Arians; St. Basil the Great of Caesarea (379) and his co-worker St. Gregory of Nazianzus (376); and the eloquent St. John Chrysostom (398), Archbishop of Constantinople.

(b) Western Church. St. Jerome (420), translator of the Vulgate; St. Ambrose (397), bishop of Milan; St. Augustine (430), bishop of Hippo; and St. Gregory the Great (604), the pope who sent St. Augustine, the Apostle of the Anglo-Saxons, to England.

Dodd, David. An important character in Charles Reade's Love Me Little, Love Me Long (1859) and in its sequel, Hard Cash (1864). He is a seaman, completely at home on shipboard but extremely ill at ease on land. The first mentioned novel treats of his successful wooing of Lucy Fountain. In the latter his struggles to bring home a large sum in "hard cash" result in his losing his mind, and as "Silly Billy Thompson" he escapes from a burning lunatic asylum to a frigate and lives through a series of exciting adventures before fate restores to him his reason, his wife and daughter and his bank account of "hard cash." This novel was written as an exposure of conditions in the private lunatic asylums of England and as such aroused much discussion.

Julia Dodd. David's daughter, the exuberant young heroine of Hard Cash.

Dodd, Lee Wilson (1879-1933). American poet, playwright, and novelist. The Changelings (1923; play), The Book of Susan (1920; novel).

Dodd, William Edward (1869-1940). Historian and diplomat. Ambassador to Germany (1933-1937); resigned and returned to lecture against the Nazis. His German diary, Ambassador Dodd's Diary, was published in 1941. Wrote Statesmen of the Old South (1911), Woodrow Wilson and His Work (1920); with Ray Stannard Baker editor of The Public Papers of Woodrow Wilson (1924-1926).

Dodd Family Abroad, The. A satiric romance by Charles Lever (1806-1872), ridiculing English travelers in Europe. The Dodds are Anglo-Irish.

Dodge, Esq., Steadfast. In Cooper's novels, Homeward Bound and Home as Found, an American journalist typical of all the unpleasant qualities which Cooper saw in his fellow countrymen after his own travels abroad. This character and others of a similar nature did much to involve Cooper in controversies, legal and otherwise, and to dull his popularity.

Dodge, Mabel, see LUHAN, MABEL DODGE.

Dodge, Mary Mapes (1831-1905). American writer and editor of St. Nicholas Magazine (1873-1905). Her books for children, Hans Brinker, or the Silver Skates (1865) and Donald and Dorothy (1883) are classics.

Dodgson, Charles Lutwidge, see CARROLL, LEWIS.

Dodona. A famous oracle in the village of Dodona in Epirus, and the most ancient of Greece. It was dedicated to Zeus, and the oracles were delivered from the tops of oak and other trees, the rustling of the wind in the branches being interpreted by the priests. Also, brazen vessels and plates were suspended from the branches, and these, being struck together when the wind blew, gave various sounds from which responses were concocted. Hence the Greek phrase Kalkos Dodones (brass of Dodona), meaning a babbler, or one who talks an infinite deal of nothing.

black pigeons of Dodona. Two black pigeons, we are told, took their flight from Thebes, in Egypt; one flew to Libya, and the other to Dodona. On the spot where the former alighted, the temple of Jupiter Ammon was erected; in the place where the other settled, the oracle of Jupiter was established, and there the responses were made by the black pigeons that inhabited the surrounding groves. This fable is probably based on a pun upon the word peleiai, which usually meant "old women," but in the dialect of the Epirots signified pigeons or doves.

Dods, Meg. In Scott's novel, ST. RONAN'S WELL, landlady of the Clachan, or Mowbery Arms inn at St. Ronan's Old Town. The inn was once the manse, and Meg Dods reigns there despotically, but her wines are good and her cuisine excellent. She is considered one of the best low comic characters in the whole range of fiction.

She had hair of a brindled colour, betwixt black and grey, which was apt to escape in elf-locks from under her mutch when she was thrown into violent agitation, long skinny hands terminated by stout talons, grey eyes, thin lips, a robust person, a broad though fat chest, capital wind, and a voice that could match a choir of fishwomen.—Sir W. Scott, St. Ronan's Well, i.

Dodsley, Robert (1703–1764). English poet, playwright, and bookseller. Editor of a collection of Old Plays (12 vols., 1744), beginning with a morality play, which went through several revised and enlarged editions.

Dodson and Fogg, Messrs. In Dickens' Pickwick Papers, two unprincipled lawyers, who undertake on speculation to bring an action against Mr. Pickwick for "breach of promise," and file accordingly the famous suit of "Bardell v. Pickwick." The names Dodson and Fogg are frequently used as synonymous with unscrupulous or dishonest solicitors.

Dodsworth. A novel by Sinclair LEWIS, published in 1929 and later dramatized as a play and a motion picture. It tells of Samuel Dodsworth, a rich automobile manufacturer in the Midwestern city of ZENITH, who retires and goes to Europe with his frivolous wife Fran. Fran becomes involved in several love affairs with European adventurers, and Dodsworth, lonely and unhappy, meets Edith Cortright, an American widow who teaches him to appreciate the traditions of Europe. After complications, he leaves his wife for the more mature companionship of Edith. Dodsworth appears briefly in the novel BABBITT, and George F. Babbitt in turn appears briefly in Dodsworth.

Doe, John and Richard Roe. Any plaintiff and defendant in an action of ejectment. They were sham names used at one time to save certain "niceties of law"; but the clumsy device was abolished in 1852. Any mere imaginary persons, or men of straw are so called.

Doeg. In the satire of ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL, by Dryden and Tate, Doeg is meant for Elkanah Settle, a poet who wrote satires upon Dryden, but was no match for his great rival. Doeg in the Biblical narrative was Saul's herdsman, who had charge of his mules and asses. He told Saul that the priests of Nob had provided David with food; whereupon Saul sent him to put them to death, and eighty-five were ruthlessly massacred. (1 Sam. xxi. 7; xxii. 18.)

Doeg, though without knowing how or why,
Made still a blundering kind of melody . . .
Let him rail on; let his invective Muse
Have four-and-twenty letters to abuse,
Which if he jumbles to one line of sense,
Indict him of a capital offence.

Absalom and Achitophel, Part II.

dog. Dogs as the best loved of all animals figure prominently in legend and fiction. In medieval art they symbolize fidelity. A dog is represented as lying at the feet of St. Bernard, St. Benignus, and St. Wendelin; as licking the wounds of St. Roch; as carrying a lighted torch in representations of St. Dominic. In monuments the dog is placed at the feet of women to symbolize affection and fidelity, as a lion is placed at the feet of men to signify courage and magnanimity. Many of the Crusaders are represented with their feet on a dog, to show that they followed the standard of the Lord as faithfully as a dog follows the footsteps of his master.

Among the many dogs whose names have become proverbial are ARGUS; Aubry's dog or the Dog of MONTARGIS; Beautiful Joe; BETH GELERT; BOATSWAIN; BOB SON OF BATTLE; BRAN; BUCK; DIAMOND; JIP; KATMIR; and TOBY. See also MAHABHARATA.

a black dog has walked over him. Said of a sullen person. Horace tells us that the sight of a black dog with its pups was an unlucky omen, and the devil has been frequently symbolized by a black dog.

a cat and dog life. See under CAT.

a dead dog. Something utterly worthless. A Biblical phrase (cf. 1 Sam. xxiv. 14, "After whom is the king of Israel come out? After a dead dog?"). See also thy servant, etc., below. There is no expression in the Bible of the fidelity, love, and watchful care of the dog.

a dog in a doublet. A bold, resolute fellow. In Germany and Flanders the strong dogs employed for hunting the wild boar were dressed in a kind of buff doublet buttoned to their bodies. Rubens and Sneyders have represented several in their pictures. A false friend is called a dog in one's doublet.

a dog in the manger. A churlish fellow, who will not use what is wanted by another, nor yet let the other have it to use. The allusion is to the well-known fable of a dog that fixed his place in a manger, and would not allow an ox to come near the hay.

a dog's life. A wretched life or a life of debauchery.

Gingham dog. See under GINGHAM.

a living dog is better than a dead lion. The meanest thing with life in it is better than the noblest without. The saying is from Eccles. ix. 4.

between dog and wolf. "Entre chien et loup." The hour of dusk.

I am his Highness' dog at Kew; Pray tell me, sir, whose dog are you? Frederick Prince of Wales had a dog given him by Alexander Pope, and these words are said to have been engraved on his collar. They are still sometimes quoted with reference to an overbearing, bumptious person.

is thy servant a dog, that he should do this thing? Said in contempt when one is asked to do something derogatory or beneath one. The phrase is (slightly altered) from 2 Kings viii. 13.

it was the story of the dog and the shadow. A case of one who gives up the substance for its shadow, of one who throws good money after bad, of one who gives certa pro incertis. The allusion is to the well known fable of the dog who dropped his bone into the stream because he opened his mouth to seize the reflection of it.

let sleeping dogs lie; don't wake a sleeping dog. Let well alone; if some contemplated course of action is likely to cause trouble or land you in difficulties you had better avoid it.

It is nought good a sleping hound to wake,
Nor yeve a wight a cause to devyne.

Chaucer, Troilus and Criseyde, iii. 764.

love me, love my dog. If you love me you must put up with my faults, my little ways, or (sometimes) my friends.

St. Roch and his dog. Two inseparables. See under SAINT.

rain cats and dogs. Pouring rain.

wake a sleeping dog. See LET SLEEPING DOGS LIE.

try it on the dog! A jocular phrase used of medicine that is expected to be unpalatable, or of food that is suspected of being not quite fit for human consumption.

Dog Beneath the Skin, The, Or, Where Is Francis? A satiric drama in verse and prose by W. H. AUDEN and Christopher ISHERWOOD (1935). Parodying traditional fairy-tale themes and the technique of the popular 20th-century musical comedy, it concerns the quest for Sir Francis Crewe, the missing heir to the holdings of the Crewe family, typical of the English country gentry. According to the will of old Sir Bingham Crewe, half the family's ancestral possessions and the hand of Iris, the Crewe daughter, are offered for the discovery and return of Francis, a candidate being chosen each year by lottery from among the villages. As the play opens, Alan Norman is chosen for the quest and sets off on his journey accompanied by a dog that is actually the missing Francis himself, in the disguise in which he has spent the ten years of his "absence" circulating about the town and finding out what the people are really like. The credulous Alan and his companion have a number of adventures, in which the authors satirically attack European royalty, Fascism, corrupt finance capitalism, the English public-school system, and the like. Francis eventually is forced to reveal himself to Alan, and the two return to the Crewe manor, only to find a celebration in progress in honor of Iris' forthcoming wedding to someone other than Alan. Francis reveals his identity to the assembled townspeople, denounces Iris and the English middle class in general, and inspires five youths of the village to depart with him and Alan, their goal presumably being a Socialist state: "To each his need: from each his power." Like numerous other poems and verse dramas of Auden's earlier literary period, this play was intended to represent the conversion of younger members of the English middle class to the doctrines of COMMUNISM.

Dogberry and Verges. In Shakespeare's MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING, two ignorant conceited constables, who greatly confound their words. Dogberry calls "assembly" dissembly; "treason" he calls perjury; "calumny" he calls burglary; "condemnation," redemption, "respect," suspect. When Conrade says, "Away! you are an ass"; Dogberry tells the town clerk to write him down "an ass." "Masters," he says to the officials, "remember I am an ass." "Oh that I had been writ down an ass!"

dog days. Days of great heat. The term comes from the Romans, who called the six or eight hottest weeks of the summer caniculares dies. According to their theory, the DOG STAR or Sirius, rising with the sun, added to its heat, and the dog days (about July 3 to August 11) bore the combined heat of the Dog Star and the sun.

Doge. See RULERS, TITLES OF.

dog fall. A fall in wrestling, when the two combatants touch the ground together.

doggerel. A word of unknown origin, probably not to be connected with dog. Originally applied to poetry of loose, irregular measure, like that of HUDIBRAS, but now implying baseness and deficiency. See also KNIT-TELVERS.

dog grass. Couch grass (Triticum repens), which is eaten by dogs when they have lost their appetite; it acts as an emetic and purgative.

dog head. The part of a gun which bites or holds the flint.

dog Latin. Pretended or mongrel Latin. An excellent example is Stevens' definition of a kitchen:

As the law classically expresses it, a kitchen is "camera necessaria pro usus cookare; cum saucepannis, stewpannis, scullero, dressero, coalholo stovis, smoakjacko; pro rostandum, boilandum, fryandum et plum-pudding-mixandum. . . ."—A Law Report (Daniel v. Dishclout).

Dog of Montargis. See under MONTARGIS.

Dog Star. Sirius, the brightest star in the firmament, whose influence was anciently supposed to cause great heat, pestilence, etc. It was called Dog Star (Caniculus) because it belongs to the constellation Canis Major (larger dog). See DOG DAYS.

Doheny, Edward Laurence (1856-1935). American oil magnate, involved in the TEA-POT DOME scandals; accused (1924) of bribing Senator Fall; was indicted with Fall on charges of conspiracy and bribery; acquitted.

Doherty, Reginald Frank (1872-1911) and Hugh Laurence Doherty (1875-1919). Famous early English tennis champions. Authors of On Lawn Tennis (1903).

Dolan, Father. In James Joyce's A PORTRAIT OF THE ARTIST AS A YOUNG MAN, the Jesuit at Clongowes Wood College who punishes young Stephen DEDALUS unjustly for not doing his lessons, when the boy has broken his glasses and is unable to see. Stephen appeals to the higher authority of Father CONMEE and is vindicated. Father Dolan is said to have been based on a Father Daly, who punished James Joyce as a child in a similar situation.

dolce stil nuovo, il (It. the sweet new style). Designation by DANTE of the school of Italian poets of the 13th century which replaced that of the Sicilian poets under Emperor Frederick II and carried the tradition of COURTLY LOVE to a higher artistic development. The first great figure of the new school was Guido GUINICELLI (or Guinizelli). Dante himself was a member, his VITA NUOVA being considered to mark the victory of the new movement over the old, and others were his friends, Guido CAVALCANTI, Lapo Gianni, and Cino da PISTOIA.

Dolet, Étienne (1509-1546). French renaissance scholar and printer. Issued many remarkable works from his Lyons plant; was accused and found guilty of heresy for printing a translation of Plato; suffered a martyr's death at the stake.

Dollar, The Almighty, see ALMIGHTY DOLLAR.

dollar diplomacy. Diplomacy on a commercial basis between nations, for national gain and aggrandizement. The term was coined for the foreign policy of the U.S. in the early 20th century.

Dollfuss, Engelbert (1892-1934). Austrian statesman. Proclaimed dictatorship (1933) as a last resort to maintain Austrian independence. Killed by National Socialist rebels.

Dolls, Mr. In Dickens' novel OUR MUTUAL FRIEND, a nickname for the drunken old father of Jenny WREN.

Doll's House, A. A drama by Henrik IBSEN (1879). The "doll," Nora Helmer, with a naive innocence of the realities of life that is the result of her petted existence, commits forgery to secure money for her sick husband. The results of her act awaken her to a new world. When the danger from the law is past, her resentment at being treated as a doll forces her to leave home to learn something about life for herself.

Doll Tearsheet. A coarse, violent-tempered female character in Shakespeare's King Henry the Fourth.

Dolly Varden fashions. See VARDEN, DOLLY.

dolmen. A prehistoric monument, probably used as a tomb, consisting of unhewn stones arranged in the form of a chamber. The dolmen known as the Pierre Couverte near Saumur in France is 64 feet long, 14 feet wide and about 6 feet high. See also CROM-LECH.

Doltaire. A dashing Frenchman in Gilbert Parker's SEATS OF THE MIGHTY.

Dombey and Son. A novel by Charles DICKENS (1846).

Mr. Dombey. A purse-proud, self-contained London merchant, living in Portland Place, Bryanstone Square, with offices in the City. His god is wealth; and his one ambition is to have a son, that the firm may be known as "Dombey and Son." When Paul is born, his ambition is attained; his whole heart is in the boy, and the loss of the mother is but a small matter. The boy's death turns his heart to stone, and he treats his daughter Florence not only with utter indifference, but as an actual interloper. Mr. Dombey marries a second time, but his wife elopes with his manager, James Carker.

Paul Dombey. Son of Mr. Dombey; a delicate, sensitive little boy, quite unequal to the great things expected of him. He is sent to Dr. Blimber's school, but soon gives way under the strain of school discipline. In his short life he wins the love of all who know him, and his sister Florence is especially attached to him. His death is one of the famous passages of fiction. During his last days he is haunted by the sea, and is always wondering what the wild waves are saying.

Florence Dombey. Mr. Dombey's daughter; a pretty, amiable, motherless child, who incurs her father's hatred because she lives and thrives while her younger brother, Paul, weakens and dies. Florence hungers to be loved, but her father has no love to bestow on her. She marries Walter Gay.

Domdaniel (Lat. domus, house or home; Danielis, of Daniel). A fabled abode of evil spirits, gnomes, and enchanters, "under the roots of the ocean" off Tunis, or elsewhere. It first appears in Chaves and Cazotte's Continuation of the Arabian Nights (1788-1793), was introduced by Southey into his Thalaba, and used by Carlyle as synonymous with a den of iniquity.

Domesday Book. The book containing a record of the census or survey of England, giving the ownership, extent, value, etc., of all the different holdings, undertaken by order of William the Conqueror in 1086. It is in Latin, is written on vellum, and consists of two volumes. The value of all estates is given, firstly, as in the time of the Confessor; secondly, when bestowed by the Conqueror; and, thirdly, at the time of the survey. It is also called The King's Book, and The Winchester Roll because it was kept there. It was printed in facsimile in 1783 and 1816.

The book was so called from A.S. dōm, judgment, because every case of dispute was decided by an appeal to these registers. Edgar Lee Masters gave the title to a volume of poetry (1920), a sort of sequel to his Spoon River Anthology in which the coroner investigating the mysterious death of Elenor Murray searches out all the remote causes.

Domett, Alfred (1811-1887). English poet and colonial administrator; subject of Browning's poem Warning.

Domiduca. The Roman deity who presided over infants when they were away from their parents.

Dominic, St. See under SAINT.

Dominicans. An order of preaching friars, instituted by St. Dominic in 1215, and introduced into England (at Oxford) in 1221. They were formerly called in England Black Friars, from their black dress, and in France Jacobins, because their mother-establishment in Paris was in the Rue St. Jacques.

dominie. A schoolmaster, a pedagogue. Chiefly Scots. As Dominie Sampson in Scott's Guy Mannering.

Dominick, Friar or Father. The titular hero of Dryden's comedy, THE SPANISH FRIAR, a kind of ecclesiastical Falstaff, a most immoral, licentious Dominican, who for money would prostitute even the Church and Holy Scriptures.

He is a huge, fat, religious gentleman . . . big enough to be a pope. His gills are as rosy as a turkey-cock's. His big belly walks in state before him, like a harbinger; and his gouty legs come lumping after it. Never was such a tun of devotion seen.—Dryden, The Spanish Fryar, ii. 3.

Dominion Day. In Canada a legal holiday, July 1, celebrated as the anniversary of the proclamation of the Dominion in 1867.

Domnei, A Comedy of Woman Worship. A novel by James Branch CABELL (1920) originally published, in 1913 under the title The Soul of Melicent. It is a story of the unconquerable love of Perion and Melicent, two medieval lovers who are separated by a rival lover, Demetrios of Anatolia, who keeps Melicent captive for long years; but the true lovers win through to happiness at last. The scene is laid in PORCIESME and the heroine, Melicent, is the daughter of Count Manuel, the hero of FIGURES OF EARTH.

Domus Aurea (Lat.). Golden House. A palace of the emperor Nero at or near the site of the Colosseum; site of many banqueting orgies.

Domus Procerum (Lat.). House of Lords.

don. A man of mark, an aristocrat. At the universities the masters, fellows, and noblemen are termed dons. The word is the Spanish form of Lat. dominus.

Don Adriano de Armado. A pompous Spaniard in LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST by Shakespeare. He has "a mint of phrases in his brain."

Donald and Dorothy. A famous children's book by Mary Mapes DODGE.

Don Alvaro. The husband of MENCIA OF MOSQUERA in Le Sage's Gil Blas; also a character in Verdi's opera, LA FORZA DEL DESTINO.

Donatello. Real name DONATO DI NICCOLÒ DI BETTO BARDI (1386?-1466). Italian sculptor of early Renaissance. Deserves to be called the founder of modern sculpture on account of his realistic characterization and stress on dynamic action. Associate of Ghiberti and Brunelleschi. His best works are in Florence, others in Padua, Naples, and Siena.

Donatello, Count. The irresponsible faun-like Italian who gives the title to Hawthorne's MARBLE FAUN.

Donati, Gemma. Wife of DANTE ALIGHIERI, married some time before 1298. She is believed to be the "second lady" in LA VITA NUOVA, who takes pity on the poet when BEATRICE dies.

Donation of Constantine. See DECRETALS.

Donati's comet. An unusually brilliant triple-tailed comet discovered in 1858 by G. B. Donati. Its period is about 2,800 years.

Donatus. Short for Donatus de octibus partibus orationis. Also known as Donatus pro puerilis. The most famous Latin grammar, the only book without pictures issued as a BLOCK BOOK. Named after its author Aelius Donatus, Roman grammarian of the fourth century, who was one of the instructors of St. Jerome. Original title Ars grammatica.

Don Carlos. (1) The name of several tragedies, notably one by SCHILLER (1786), based on the life of Don Carlos, son of Philip II of Spain, and dealing with his unhappy love for Elizabeth of Valois, who for reasons of state marries his father, and his fatal connection with the revolt against his father in the Netherlands. There is an opera by Verdi (1867) based on Schiller's tragedy. Other dramas on the same theme include one by Otway in English (1672), by M. de Chénier in French (1789) and by Alfieri in Italian about the same time.

(2) Don Carlos (Charles V) is one of the chief characters in Victor Hugo's drama HERNANI and Verdi's opera Ernani, founded on the play.

(3) In Verdi's opera LA FORZA DEL DESTINO, Leonora's revengeful brother is named Don Carlos di Vargas.

Don César de Bazan. (1) The chivalrous bandit chief in Victor Hugo's Ruy Blas. Hero of a French comedy of this name, and of an opera by Massenet.

(2) Title of a French comedy by Dumanoir and D'Ennery (1844).

(3) Title of an opera by Massenet (1872).

Don Florestan, see FLORESTAN.

Don Giovanni. An opera by MOZART (1787), book by Da Ponte. The plot deals with the adventures of the Spanish libertine DON JUAN. After he and his servant Leporello have put through one piece of villainy after another, the statue of a nobleman Don Juan has murdered appears and takes him off to the infernal regions. A second title of the opera is The Marble Guest.

Donizetti, Gaetano (1797-1848). Italian composer. His best-known operas are LUCREZIA BORGIA, LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR and LA FAVORITA.

Don Juan. Don Juan Tenorio, the hero of a large number of plays and poems, as well as of Mozart's opera, DON GIOVANNI, was the son of a leading family of Seville in the 14th century, and killed the commandant of Ulloa after seducing his daughter. To put an end to his debaucheries the Franciscan monks enticed him to their monastery and killed him, telling the people that he had been carried off to hell by the statue of the commandant, which was in the grounds.

His name has become a synonym for a rake, roué or aristocratic libertine, and in Mozart's opera (1787), Don Giovanni's valet, Leporello, says his master has "in Italy 700 mistresses, in Germany 800, in Turkey and France 91, in Spain 1,003." His dissolute life was first dramatized by Gabriel Tellez in the 17th century, then by Molière in his Don Juan ou le festin de Pierre, also by Corneille, Shadwell, Grabbe (German), Dumas, and others, and in the 20th century by George Bernard Shaw (third act of Man and Superman, 1903), Bataille, and Rostand (La Dernière nuit de Don Juan).

In Byron's well-known poem Don Juan (1819-1824), when Juan is sixteen years old he gets into trouble with Donna Julia, and is sent by his mother, then a widow, on his travels. His adventures in the Isles of Greece, at the Russian Court, in England, etc., form the story of the poem, which, though it extends to sixteen cantos and nearly 16,000 lines, is incomplete.

Byron's Don Juan is not the legendary character except in name and in the fact that he is a young Spanish aristocrat. His adventures include amatory episodes, but his restless, romantic, gloomy temperament is quite distinct from the gallant frivolity of the traditional Don Juan. See also HAIDEE; DUDU.

Donkin. A Cockney sailor in Conrad's NIGGER OF THE NARCISSUS.

Donn-Byrne, Brian Oswald (1889-1928). Irish-American novelist, writing under the name of Donn Byrne. He was the author of novels and tales marked by imagination and fantasy, including Messer Marco Polo (1921); The Changeling (1923); Blind Raftery (1924); Hangman's House (1926); Destiny Bay (1928); and Field of Honor (1929).

Donne, John (1572-1631). English poet, greatest of the METAPHYSICAL POETS, imitated often with small success by a number of the younger poets of his day. Donne was Roman Catholic in early life, but was converted to Anglicanism in 1614 and ordained in 1615, six years later becoming Dean of St. Paul's. His poetry, including both his early ironic and erotic verse and his later religious poems, is marked by intellectual power, deep learning, and intense emotion. His imagery, to which the adjective "metaphysical" was chiefly applied, is powerful and striking, drawn from Scholastic philosophy (see SCHOLASTICISM), the science of the day, trades and professions, and the simple, commonplace things of everyday life ignored by the Elizabethan lyric poets. His meter is irregular and dramatic, censured by conservative critics but praised by others. His sermons, widely celebrated in their day, show similar characteristics to his poetry.

Donne's poems were published in 1633 and were very popular during the next generation. He was almost unknown, however, during the 18th century and was disapproved of by Samuel Johnson. A few of the Romantics liked him, but it was only in the 20th century that interest in him was revived to any considerable extent. Critics publicized his work, among them T. S. Eliot being the most outstanding, and a number of young poets, notably Hart Crane and the AGRARIANS, came under his influence. The use of a quotation from one of his Devotions in the title of the best-selling novel For Whom the Bell Tolls, by Ernest Hemingway (1940) brought Donne to the attention of a new audience. Among his most famous poems are Go and Catch a Falling Star; Twickenham Garden; The Flea; The Ecstasy; The Relic; Death, Be Not Proud; The Progress of the Soul (1601), a satire dealing with metempsychosis and heresy, left incomplete; and numerous elegies, epistles, satires, and the like.

Donnerwetter (Ger.). Literally, thunderstorm. An exclamation of astonishment. A more emphatic form is Himmel Herrgott Donnerwetter.

Donnithorne, Arthur. A prominent character in George Eliot's Adam Bede.

Donnybrook Fair. This fair, held in August from the time of King John, till 1855, was noted for its bacchanalian orgies and light-hearted rioting. Hence it is proverbial for a disorderly gathering or a regular rum-pus. The village was a mile and a half southeast of Dublin, and is now one of its suburbs.

Donovan, William Joseph (1883-). American army officer, known as "Wild Bill." In World War I, as an infantry colonel, he was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor. In World War II, he was United States co-ordinator of Information (1941-1942) and head of the Office of Strategic Services. Brigadier general (1943).

Don Pasquale. The title and hero of a comic opera by Donizetti (1845).

Don Q. A fictional Spanish outlaw and sequestrador, in stories by Hesketh Prichard (1904, 1906, 1909). Filmed by Douglas Fairbanks.

Don Quixote de la Mancha. A satirical novel by CERVANTES, published at Madrid, Pt. i, 1605, Pt. ii, 1615. Don Quixote is a gaunt country gentleman of La Mancha, gentle and dignified, affectionate and simple-minded, but so crazed by reading books of knight-errantry, especially the Amadis, that he believes himself called upon to redress the wrongs of the whole world, and actually goes forth to avenge the oppressed and run a tilt with their oppressors. Hence, a Quixotic man, or a Don Quixote, is a dreamy, unpractical, but essentially good, man—one with a "bee in his bonnet."

Don Quixote's lady love is the fair DULCINEA. He engages for his squire Sancho Panza, a middle-aged ignorant rustic, selfish but full of good sense, a gourmand but attached to his master, shrewd but credulous. The knight thinks wind-mills to be giants, flocks of sheep to be armies, inns to be castles, and galley-slaves oppressed gentlemen; but the squire sees them in their true light. Ultimately, the knight is restored to his right mind, and dies like a peaceful Christian. See also WINDMILLS.

It seemed unto him [Don Quixote] very requisite and behooveful . . . that he himself should become a knight-errant, and go throughout the world, with his horse and armour, to seek adventures, and practise in person all that he had read was used by knights of yore; revenging all kinds of injuries, and offering himself to occasions and dangers, which, being once happily achieved, might gain him eternal renown.—Cervantes, Don Quixote (Shelton's tr. 1612).

It is generally agreed that Cervantes meant his novel to be a satire on the exaggerated chivalric romances of his time, but some critics have interpreted it as an ironic story of an idealist frustrated and mocked in a materialistic world, a forerunner of Voltaire's Candide, Sancho Panza representing the materialist viewpoint.

Don Sebastian. A tragedy by DRYDEN (1690). The hero is Sebastian, king of Portugal, defeated and taken prisoner by the Moors in 1574. See also SEBASTIAN.

Dony. Florimel's dwarf. Cf. Spenser, Faerie Queene, III, v. V, ii.

doodlesack (Ger. Dudelsack, literally "tootling bag"). The Scotch bagpipe.

Dooley, Mr. A famous humorous personage created by the American journalist, F. P. DUNNE. A middle-aged Irish-American and the presiding genius of a saloon in Archey Road, Chicago, Mr. Dooley is never at a loss for an occasion or a topic on which to exercise his ready wit and common sense. His friend, Mr. Hennessey, usually meets him half way, and his neighbor, Mr. McKenna, is full of skeptical questions. Mr. Dooley's reputation was made in the newspapers at the time of the Spanish-American War. Mr. Dooley in Peace and War appeared in 1898. It was followed by Mr. Dooley in the Hearts of His Countrymen (1899), Mr. Dooley's Philosophy (1900), Mr. Dooley's Opinions (1901), Observations by Mr. Dooley (1902), Mr. Dooley's Dissertations (1906), Mr. Dooley Says (1910) and Mr. Dooley: On Making a Will and Other Necessary Evils (1919).

Doolin of Mayence. The hero of a French CHANSON DE GESTE of the 14th century, and of a 15th century prose romance. He was the father of OGIER THE DANE.

Doolin's sword is Merveilleuse (literally, wonderful).

Doolittle. The picturesque, disreputable old dustman in Shaw's drama, PYGMALION.

Doolittle, Hilda, see H. D.

Doolittle, Lt. Gen. James Harold. In World War II awarded Congressional Medal of Honor for leading a carrier-based bombing raid over Tokyo on April 18, 1942. At 1500 ft. 16 tons of bombs and incendiaries were dropped. The Japanese were caught completely unaware. Eight of the pilots who did not successfully crash-land in China, were captured and put to death by the Japanese.

Doomsday Book, see DOMESDAY BOOK.

Doon. A river in Ayrshire, Scotland, celebrated in the poems of Robert BURNS.

Doone, Lorna, see LORNA DOONE.

Dop Doctor, The (1910). A novel by Richard Dehan, pseudonym of Clotilde GRAVES (1863-1932). The term dop doctor, as used in South Africa, stands for a quack who prescribes brandy for every disease.

Dopey. A lovable character in Walt Disney's production of Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs.

Doppelgänger (Ger. doubleganger). A double, especially one of the kind favored by romantic authors like E. T. A. HOFFMAN, in whom the distinction between reality and apparition is blurred.

Dora. (1) The child-wife of David Copperfield. See SPENLOW, DORA.

(2) A narrative poem by TENNYSON (1842).

Dorado, El, see EL DORADO.

Doramin. The old native chief in Conrad's LORD JIM.

Dorante. A name introduced into three of Molière's comedies. In Les Fâcheux he is a courtier devoted to the chase. In the play L'École des femmes he is a chevalier. In Le Bourgeois gentilhomme he is a count in love with the Marchioness Dorimène.

Dorax. In Dryden's tragedy, DON SEBASTIAN, the assumed name of Don Alonzo of Alcazar, when he deserts Sebastian, king of Portugal, turns renegade, and joins the emperor of Barbary.

Dorcas Society. A woman's circle for making clothing for the poor. So called from Dorcas, in Acts ix. 39, who made "coats and garments" for widows.

Doré, Paul Gustave (1833-1883). French illustrator of Rabelais, Balzac, The Divine Comedy, Paradise Lost, The Bible, etc.

Dorgan, Thomas Aloysius (1877-1929). American cartoonist and sports writer in the San Francisco Bulletin and New York Journal. Known as Tad.

Doria, Andrea (1468?-1560). Genoese admiral; called "Father of Peace" and "Liberator of Genoa." One of the main characters in SCHILLER's Fiesko.

Dorian Gray, The Picture of. See WILDE, OSCAR.

Dorian mode. One of the four principal modes of ancient Greek music. Its character is bold and grave. See also LYDIAN MODE, PHRYGIAN MODE; MYXOLYDIAN MODE.

Doric. Pertaining to Doris, one of the divisions of ancient Greece, or to its inhabitants, a simple, pastoral people.

Doric dialect. The dialect spoken by the natives of Doris, in Greece. It was broad and hard. Hence, any broad dialect like that of rustics. Bloomfield and Robert Burns are examples of British Doric.

Doric land. Greece, Doris being a part of Greece.

Doric order. The oldest, strongest, and simplest of the Grecian ORDERS of architecture.

the Doric reed. Pastoral poetry. Everything Doric was very plain, but cheerful, chaste and solid.

Dorigen. The heroine of Chaucer's Franklin's Tale, which was taken from Boccaccio's DECAMERON (X. v), the original being in the Hindu Vetāla Panchavinsati. She is married to Arviragus, but was greatly beloved by Aurelius, to whom she has been long known. Aurelius tries to win her, but Dorigen will not listen to him till the rocks round the coast of Britain are removed "and there n'is no stone yseen." Aurelius, by the aid of a magician, causes them all to disappear, and claims his reward. Dorigen is very sad, but her husband insists that she keep her word, and she goes to meet Aurelius, who, when he sees her grief and hears what Arviragus has counseled.

says he would rather die than injure so true a wife and noble a gentleman. See DIANORA.

Dorimant. A witty, aristocratic libertine in Etherege's comedy, The Man of Mode (1676), said to have been drawn from the Earl of Rochester. See WILMOT, JOHN. The name later came to be used for any gay, unprincipled young man.

Dorimene. In Molière's comedy Le Mariage Forcé (1664), a young girl who marries SGANARELLE, an old man of sixty-three. In Le Cocu imaginaire, she is Sganarelle's wife.

Dormouse, The. A character in Alice in Wonderland. Thrust into a teapot by the Mad Hatter and March Hare.

The word dormouse means probably "sleeping mouse" (from Fr. dormir "to sleep"). Cf. Ger. Schlafratte "sleeping rat" for the same animal.

Dorothea. The heroine of Goethe's poem HERMANN AND DOROTHEA.

Dorothea, St. See under SAINT.

Dorothy la Desirée. In Cabell's JURGEN, the girl whom Jurgen loves as a young man. She jilts him to become a countess, but when he is given his year of renewed youth, he sees once more by magic the young and beautiful girl of his ideals. Dorothy la Desirée is one of the daughters of MANUEL, the hero of FIGURES OF EARTH.

dorp. A hamlet. Rare or poetic.

No neighbouring dorp, no lodging to be found,
But bleak plains, and bare unhospitable ground.
Dryden, Hind and Panther.

As a word of Dutch origin, meaning village, still alive in South Africa.

Dorrit, Amy. Heroine of Dickens' novel, LITTLE DORRIT.

Dorr's Rebellion. A rising in Rhode Island (1842) headed by Thomas Wilson Dorr (1805-1854) seeking to modernize the state constitution, extend suffrage, etc. Dorr was elected governor in 1842. The opposition elected Samuel King and both men were inaugurated. Dorr's attempt to seize the arsenal at Providence was frustrated by King. The Supreme Court sentenced Dorr, but he was released. Cf. the long poem on Dorr by Winfield Townley Scott.

Dorset, Thomas Sackville, Earl of, see SACKVILLE, THOMAS.

Dorsey, George Amos (1868-1931). American anthropologist. Curator at Field Museum, Chicago (1898-1915). Lecturer New School for Social Research, New York (from 1925). Wrote Why We Behave like Human Beings (1925), etc.

Dory, John, see JOHN DORY.

Doryphorus (Gr., a spear-bearer). A statue of an athlete bearing a spear by the Greek sculptor Polyclitus (5th century B.C.). It embodies the "correct," i.e., the conventionally accepted proportions, called the CANON, of the athletic type. The best-known replica was found in the palaestra at Pompeii.

do-see-do. In mountain dances, for dos-à-dos (Fr. back to back). To dance do-see-do refers to a figure in which the partners pass back to back.

Dos Passos, John Roderigo (1896-). American novelist and poet, best known for his stylistic and structural experimentation in prose, which is outstandingly exemplified in his trilogy U.S.A. (1938), consisting of The 42nd Parallel (1930), 1919 (1932), and The Big Money (1936). His technique suggests the influence of James Joyce and achieves an almost poetic stylization in its rigid detachment and the absence of any mediation by the author between his story and his audience. Dos Passos developed from a preoccupation with the conflict between the sensitive individual and the conventions of society, to a broader, sociological outlook, influenced by Marxian and Communist doctrines. (See MARXISM IN LITERATURE; PROLETARIAN LITERATURE.) Later he lost faith in the Communist program. In addition to U.S.A., his works include One Man's Initiation (1920) and THREE SOLDIERS (1921), war novels; A Pushcart at the Curb (1922), poems; Rosnante to the Road Again (1922), essays on Spain; Streets of Night (1923) and MANHATTAN TRANSFER (1925), fiction; Orient Express (1927), a travel book; The Garbage Man (produced as The Moon Is a Gong) (1926), Airways, Inc. (1929), and Fortune Heights (1933), dramas, collected as Three Plays (1934); In All Countries (1934) and Journeys Between Wars (1938), travel books; Adventures of a Young Man (1939; see YOUNG MAN, ADVENTURES OF), a novel; and THE GROUND WE STAND ON (1941), historical essays and sketches. Dos Passos is considered one of the most original and most important of 20th-century American novelists.

Dostoyevsky, Fyodor Mikhailovich (1821-1881). Russian novelist, considered one of the greatest European novelists of the 19th century. His books are distinguished by their skillful character studies, especially in the realm of abnormal psychology, their sympathy for the poor and the defeated, their dramatic dialogue and passages of intense introspection, and their penetrating portrayals of life in 19th-century Russia, especially among the intellectual and revolutionary classes. Many of his novels reflect his own experiences, for Dostoyevsky was an epileptic, like several of his best-known characters, and he himself was active in the revolutionary movement in Russia. In 1849 he was condemned to death and was actually standing before the firing squad when his sentence was commuted to hard labor in the Siberian salt mines.

Among Dostoyevsky's works are Poor Folk (1846); THE HOUSE OF THE DEAD (1861); Letters from the Underworld (1864); CRIME AND PUNISHMENT (1866); The Insulted and Injured (1867); THE IDIOT (1868-1869); THE POSSESSED (1871); A Raw Youth (1871); Journal of an Author (1876-1877); THE BROTHERS KARAMAZOV (1879-1880). His stories, published in various editions, include The Double, An Honest Thief, White Nights, Nyetochka Nyezhuvanov, The Friend of the Family, The Gambler, The Eternal Husband.

Dostoyevsky was an admirer of Charles DICKENS, and several of his comic, hypocritical, or villainous characters suggest a development of Dickens' method of characterization.

Dot. In Dickens' Cricket on the Hearth. See PEERYBINGLE.

Dotheboys Hall. A school in Dickens' NICHOLAS NICKLEBY where boys are taken in and done for by Mr. Wackford Squeers, a puffing, ignorant, overbearing brute, who starves them and teaches them nothing.

It is said that Squeers was a caricature of a Mr. Shaw, a Yorkshire schoolmaster; but Mr. Shaw has been defended as a kind-hearted man, whose boys were well fed, happy, and not ill taught. Like Squeers he had only one eye, and one daughter. The ruthless exposure of this kind of "school" led to the closing or reformation of many of them.

Douai Bible. See also under BIBLE, THE ENGLISH. The English college at Douai was founded by William Allen (afterwards cardinal) in 1568. The Douai Bible translates such words as repentance by the word penance, etc., and the whole contains notes by Roman Catholic divines.

Doubleday, Abner (1819-1893). American army officer of Huguenot descent. Reputedly inventor, while attending school at Cooperstown, N.Y., of baseball (adoption of diamond-shaped field, assignment of playing positions, etc.). Buried in Arlington National Cemetery.

Double Dealer, The. A comedy by Congreve (1693). The hero is the sinister scoundrel Maskwell whose double-dealing was more than the public was ready to accept in a comedy.

Double Trouble. A novel by Herbert Quick (1905).

Doubting Castle. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, the castle of GIANT DESPAIR, into which Christian and Hopeful are thrust, but from which they escape by means of the key called "Promise."

doughboy. An American soldier. The term was in use long before World War I, when it was popularized. Probably—though for no very clear reason—from doughboy in the sense of "a boiled dumpling of raised dough" of the kind served in the navy.

Doughty, Charles Montagu (1843-1926). English traveler and author, best known for his Travels in Arabia Deserta (1888), in which his curious style combines the archaic English of the Chaucerian and Elizabethan periods with Arabic.

Douglas. A family famed in Scotch history, legend and romance. There were two branches, the Black Douglasses or senior branch and the Red Douglasses, who came to the fore later. They are prominent in Scott's novels, notably the following:

(1) Sir James, the first of the Black Douglasses, hero of CASTLE DANGEROUS known as "the Good Sir James." This was also the Douglas which was such a terror to the English that the women used to frighten their unruly children by saying they would "make the Black Douglas take them." He first appears in Castle Dangerous as "Knight of the Tomb." The following nursery rhyme refers to him:

Hush ye, hush ye, little pet ye;
Hush ye, hush ye, do not fret ye;
The Black Douglas shall not get thee
Sir W. Scott, Tales of a Grandfather.

(2) Archibald the Grim, natural son of "the Good Sir James." He is prominent in The Fair Maid of Perth.

(3) James Douglas, earl of Morton, one of the Red Douglasses. He figures prominently in THE MONASTERY and THE ABBOT.

(4) Ellen Douglas. Heroine of Scott's narrative poem, The Lady of the Lake.

the Douglas larder. The flour, meal, wheat, and malt of Douglas Castle, emptied on the floor by good Lord James Douglas, in 1307, when he took the castle from the English garrison. Having staved in all the barrels of food, he next emptied all the wine and ale, and then, having slain the garrison, threw the dead bodies into this disgusting mess, "to eat, drink, and be merry." Scott gives the story in his Tales of a Grandfather.

See also BELL THE CAT.

The Douglas Tragedy. A ballad in Scott's Border Minstrelsy, telling how Lord William steals away Lady Margaret Douglas and is pursued by her father and two brothers. A fight ensues; the father and his two sons are sore wounded; Lord William, also wounded, creeps to his mother's house and there dies; and the lady dies next morning.

† Douglas, Gawain or Gavin (1474?-1522). Scottish poet, Bishop of Dunkeld. He was the author of The Palace of Honor (1553?) and King Hart (first printed in 1786), two allegorical poems, and a translation of the Aeneid (1553) which is called the earliest translation of the Latin classics into English. Douglas was a member of the group called the SCOTTISH CHAUCERIANS.

Douglas, George Norman (1868–). English novelist, best-known as the author of SOUTH WIND (1917). His other works include: They Went (1921); Together (1923); Fountains in the Sand (1925); Experiments (1925); Old Calabria (1928); Birds and Beasts of the Greek Anthology (1929); One Day (1929); Three of Them (1930); Goodbye to Western Culture (1930); Summer Islands (1931); Looking Back (1933), an autobiographical volume; and several treatises on zoology, geology, and archeology. His books deal chiefly with the ancient, semi-Greek islands south of Italy in the Mediterranean Sea, Douglas having lived for some time on the island of Capri.

Douglas, Lloyd Cassel (1877–). American Lutheran clergyman, author of best-selling novels of a piously didactic, inspirational character. The best-known are Magnificent Obsession (1929), Green Light (1935), and The Robe (1943), a phenomenal best-seller.

Douglas, Stephen Arnold (1813–1861). American Democratic political leader. Famous for platform debates with Abraham Lincoln on slavery (1858), upholding the doctrine of squatter sovereignty in the Territories. Defeated by Lincoln but afterwards faithful supporter of his opponent's administration. Nicknamed "the little giant."

Douglas fir. A tall evergreen, the most important timber tree in the Western U.S., known in the lumber trade as red fir or Oregon pine. Like the Douglas squirrel, named after the Scottish botanist David Douglas (1798–1834), who discovered it in 1825.

Douglass, Frederick (1817?–1895). American Negro lecturer and writer. Called in consultation by Lincoln. The Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass (1845) is his autobiography, relating his experiences as the illegitimate son of a white man and a Negro slave and his final escape to freedom.

Dove Cottage. Home of William and Dorothy WORDSWORTH at Grasmere in the English Lake Country from 1799 to 1807.

Dove Dulcet. Literally, the "sweet-sounding dove." A pseudonym used by Christopher Morley for some of his columnar contributions.

Dover Beach. A well-known poem by Matthew ARNOLD (1867), expressing his pessimism with regard to the future of industrial and scientific civilization:

And we are here as on a darkling plain
Swept with confused alarms of struggle and flight,
Where ignorant armies clash by night.

Dove's Nest, The. An unfinished short story by Katherine MANSFIELD, published in 1923. It presents a satirical picture of Mrs. Fawcett and her daughter Mildred, two Englishwomen living together on the French Riviera, who are thrown into a flurry of excitement on the visit of Mr. Walter Prodder, a touring American.

Dowden, Edward (1843–1913). Irish Shakespearean critic. Shakspeare, his Mind and Art (1875). Also author of a Life of Shelley (1886).

Dowel, Dobet, Dobest. Allegorical characters in PIERS PLOWMAN (passus ix).

Dowie, John Alexander (1847–1907). American leader of a religious sect, born in Scotland. Built a wooden tabernacle in Chicago in 1890 and attracted a large following through his faith healing. Cf. William Vaughn Moody's play The Faith Healer (1909) which may have been inspired by Dowie.

Dowland, John (1563?–?1626), and his son Robert Dowland (1585?–?1641). English lutenists. Cf. the poem by MILTON to John Dowland.

Dowlas, Mr. A generic name for a linen-draper, who sells dowlas, a coarse linen cloth, so called from Daoulas, in Brittany, where it was manufactured.

Mrs. Quickly. I bought you a dozen of shirts to your back.

Falstaff. Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made bolters of them.

Quick. Now, as I am true woman, holland of eight shillings an ell.

Shakespeare, 1 Henry IV, iii. 3.

Downing Street. A name often given to the heads of the British Government collectively, from No. 10 Downing Street (Westminster), the official town residence of the Prime Minister, where the meetings of the Cabinet are usually held. The street was named in honor of Sir George Downing (d. 1684), a noted Parliamentarian and ambassador, who served under both Cromwell and Charles II.

Down the River. A narrative poem by Roscoe W. Brink (1922), in free verse, divided into short sections, by seasons, and telling a realistic story. It is somewhat like the New England poems of Amy Lowell called The Overgrown Pasture.

Dowsabell. A common name for a sweetheart, especially an unsophisticated country girl, in poems of Elizabethan times. It is the Fr. douce et belle, sweet and beautiful.

It were not good . . . to cast away as pretty a dowsabell as any could chance to see in a summer's day.—The London Prodigal, IV, i (1605).

Drayton wrote a poem, The Ballad of Dowsabell.

Dowson, Ernest (1867–1900). English poet, associated with the Aesthetic movement in England during the latter part of the 19th century which was led by Walter PATER and Oscar WILDE. Dowson is best known for his poem CYNARA (1896), properly entitled Non Sum Qualis Eram . . . , with the following refrain: "I have been faithful to thee, Cynara, in my fashion."

doxology. A short hymn or psalm expressing praise of God. The greater doxology is the Gloria in Excelsis. The lesser doxology is the Gloria Patri, or especially the stanza, from the closing lines of two hymns by Bishop Ken (1637–1711):

Praise God from whom all blessings flow!
Praise him all creatures here below!
Praise him above, Ye heavenly host!
Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost!

doxy. A mistress or sweetheart. Generally in a bad sense.

Doyle, Sir Arthur Conan (1859–1930). English novelist, best known for his series of novels and short stories concerning Sherlock HOLMES and for his historical novels, Micah Clarke (1889) and The White Company (1891). Doyle was much interested in spiritualism and wrote a History of Spiritualism (1926). His Professor CHALLENGER and Brigadier GERARD are also notable creations.

Doyle, John. A pseudonym used by Robert GRAVES in publishing The Marmosite's Miscellany (1925), a book of poetry.

D'Oyly Carte, see CARTE, RICHARD D'OYLY.

Dr. For titles beginning with Dr., see also under DOCTOR.

Drachenfels (Ger. Dragon-rock). So called from the legend that it was the home of the dragon slain by Siegfried, the hero of the NIBELUNGENLIED.

The castled crag of Drachenfels
Frowns o'er the wide and winding Rhine,
Whose breast of waters broadly swells
Between the banks which bear the vine.
Byron, Childe Harold. iii. 55.

Dr. Adrian. A novel by Couperus. See SMALL SOULS.

Draconian code. One very severe Draco was an Athenian law-maker of the 7th century B. C., and the first to produce a written code of laws for Athens. As nearly every violation of his laws was a capital offense, Demades the orator said "that Draco's code was written in blood."

Draft of XXX Cantos, A. See CANTOS.

Draft Riots. Demonstrations in opposition to the draft for the Federal Army, in New York City, July 13–16, 1863. About 1000 people were killed. The property damage was great. Suppressed by police and militia.

dragoman. In the Near East, an interpreter, chiefly one in the employ of an embassy or consulate or hired as a guide by tourists.

dragon. The Greek word draḗon comes ultimately from a verb meaning "to see," to "look at," and more remotely "to watch" and "to flash."

A dragon is a fabulous winged crocodile, usually represented as of large size, with a serpent's tail; whence the words serpent and dragon are sometimes interchangeable. The word was used in the Middle Ages as the symbol of sin in general and paganism in particular, the metaphor being derived from Rev. xii. 9, where Satan is termed "the great dragon" and Ps. xci. 13, where it is said that the saints "shall trample the dragon under their feet." Hence, in Christian art the dragon symbolizes Satan or sin, as when represented at the feet of Christ and the Virgin Mary; and St. John the Evangelist is sometimes represented holding a chalice, from which a dragon is issuing.

flyng dragon. A meteor.

Chinese dragon. In China, a five-clawed dragon is introduced into pictures and embroidered on state dresses as an amulet. See also DRAGON THRONE.

The Dragon of Wantley. See WANTLEY.
sow dragons' teeth. To foment contentions; to stir up strife or war; especially to do something that is intended to put an end to strife but which brings it about later. See CADMUS.

Among the many saints who are usually pictured with dragons may be mentioned St. Michael, St. George, St. Margaret, Pope Sylvester, St. Samson (Archbishop of Dol), St. Donatus, St. Clement of Metz; St. Romain of Rouen, who destroyed the huge dragon, La Gargouille, which ravaged the Seine; St. Philip the Apostle, who killed another at Hierapolis, in Phrygia; St. Martha, who slew the terrible dragon, Tarasque, at Aix-la-Chapelle; St. Florent, who killed a dragon which haunted the Loire; St. Cado, St. Maudet, and St. Pol, who did similar feats in Brittany; and St. Keyne of Cornwall.

Among the ancient Britons and Welsh the dragon was the national symbol on the war standard; hence the term, PENDRAGON for the dux bellorum, or leader in war (pen = head or chief).

See also FAFNER; GRENDL.

Dragon Throne. The imperial throne of China. The dragon (Chinese lung) is a symbol of good fortune and hence, as a representation of the beneficent being yang, of the emperor.

dragoon. A mounted infantryman. Usually restricted to soldiers of certain regiments. Originally so called after the type of musket, called dragoon, with which they were equipped. Dragoon is historically a different form of the word dragon. The musket was given that name because it spat fire.

Drake, Joseph Rodman (1795-1820). American poet of the early national period. His best-known poem is The Culprit Fay.

Drake, an English Epic. A long narrative poem by Alfred Noyes (Eng. 1880-), dealing with the adventures of the famous English sailor and explorer, Sir Francis Drake (1545?-1596).

Drake's drum. A ghostly warning. From a popular legend according to which Sir Francis Drake's drum is heard whenever England is in danger. Immortalized by Sir Henry Newbolt in his poem Drake's Drum (1914).

Druma, Father of (French, Spanish, etc.), see under FATHER.

dramatic irony. A theatrical device, consisting in the conscious production by the author of an ironical situation, i.e., a marked incongruity between a character's words and the action; as for instance in Schiller's Wallenstein when the hero (not aware of the plot on his life of which the audience has been informed) says before going to bed: "I intend to take a long rest." The understanding of the unintentional play on words imparts to the audience for a moment the rôle of "an omniscient god of the drama."

dramatic unities. See under UNITIES.

dramatis personae. The characters of a drama, novel, or (by extension), of an actual transaction. Often abbreviated to dram. pers.

Dramatis Personae is the title of a collection of poems by Robert BROWNING (1864).

dramaturgy. Science or art of dramatic composition or stage performance.

Drang nach Osten (Ger. pressure toward the East). The German policy of imperialistic expansion toward the East, much talked of before and during World War I, and also during Germany's rearmament during the 1930's under Adolf HITLER.

Draper, John William (1811-1882). British-born American scientist. Helped found medical school of New York University; renowned for researches in photochemistry, spectrum analysis, etc.; made portrait photography possible through improvements on Daguerre's process.

Draper's Letters. A series of letters written by Dean SWIFT to the people of Ireland and published in 1724, advising them not to take the copper money coined by William Wood. The patent had been granted to him by George I through the influence of the Duchess of Kendal, the king's mistress, and Wood and the Duchess were to share the profits (40 per cent). These letters, which were signed "M. B. Drapier," crushed the infamous job and the patent was canceled.

Draupadi. A heroine of the great Hindu epic, the MAHABHARATA, the wife won by Arjuna and shared by the five Pandavas.

Draupnir. In Scandinavian mythology, Odin's magic ring, from which every ninth night dropped eight rings equal in size and beauty to itself. It was fashioned by the dwarfs.

Dravot, Daniel. Hero of Kipling's MAN WHO WOULD BE KING.

Drawcansir. A burlesque tyrant in Buckingham's Rehearsal (1671); hence, a blustering braggart. The character was a caricature of Dryden's Almanzor in Conquest of Granada. Drawcansir's opening speech (he has only three) is:

He that dares drink, and for that drink dares die,
And, knowing this, dares yet drink on, am I.
Rehearsal, iv. 1.

which parodies Almanzor's:

He who dares love, and for that love must die,
And, knowing this, dares yet love on, am I.
Conquest of Granada, iv. iii.

See also BAYES, BOBADIL.

Drayton, Michael (1563-1631). English poet, considered one of the most representative of the Elizabethan period. His style changed with the changes in taste that took place in his lifetime, and he experimented in all the poetic forms popular in his day, including sonnet, drama, ode, mythological poem, Biblical paraphrase, historical tale, pastoral, and so on. Among his works are Idea, the Shepherd's Garland (1593); Idea's Mirror (1594); England's Heroical Epistles (1597), historical poems modeled on Ovid's Heroides which were his most successful poems; Sonnets to Idea (1619); Polyolbion (1612, 1622), a topographical poem celebrating the beauty and the heroic glory of England; Nymphidia (1627); The Battle of Agincourt (1627); and The Muses' Elysium (1630).

Dr. Breen's Profession. A novel by W. D. HOWELLS (1881). The heroine, Grace Breen, as the outcome of an unhappy love affair, plunges into the profession of medicine in the effort to make herself of some real service in the world and so find the peace that is otherwise denied her.

dreadnought. Any battleship of the class of the Dreadnought which was commissioned by the British navy in 1907.

Dream-Children: A Reverie. One of the best-known essays of Charles LAMB (1822), prompted by the death of the author's brother James. In it, Lamb describes an imaginary conversation held with the children he has never had.

Dreamer, the Immortal. John Bunyan (1628-1688).

Dream Life. A sequel to Donald G. Mitchell's REVERIES OF A BACHELOR.

Dream of Gerontius, The. Title of a poem by Cardinal Newman. It was set to music in an oratorio by Sir Edward Elgar (1900).

Dream of John Ball, A (1888). A book describing a socialist commonwealth in England, by William Morris. The real John Ball (d. 1381) was an English priest; expounder of the doctrines of Wycliffe; influential in stirring up Wat Tyler's rebellion; executed.

Dream of the Rood, The. An Anglo-Saxon poem, attributed to CYNEWULF in the later years of the 8th century, which describes with intense religious motion a vision seen by the poet of the Crucifixion.

Dream Pedlary. A famous poem by Thomas Lovell Beddoes.

dreams, the gates of. There are two, one of ivory and one of horn. Dreams which de-lude pass through the Ivory Gate, those which come true pass through the Gate of Horn.

That children dream not the first half-year; that men dream not in some countries, with many more, are unto me sick men's dreams; dreams out of the ivory gate, and visions before midnight.—Sir Thos. Browne, On Dreams.

This fancy depends upon two puns: ivory in Greek is elephas, and the verb eliphairo means "to cheat with empty hopes"; the Greek for horn is keras, and the verb karanoō means "to accomplish."

Anchises dismisses Aeneas through the ivory gate, on quitting the infernal regions, to indicate the unreality of his vision.

Dred. A novel by Harriet Beecher Stowe (1856). Dred, the hero, is a runaway slave.

Dred Scott Decision. A famous decision of the U.S. Supreme Court (1856) ruling that a slave was property and had no personal rights. The problem had come up through the fact that Dred Scott, a Negro slave whom his master had taken with him to live on free soil, had sued for his freedom.

Dreikaiser Bund (Ger. three Emperors' alliance). Cooperation between the emperors of Germany, Austria and Russia during the years 1872-1879.

Dreiser, Theodore Herman Albert (1871-1945). American novelist and journalist, known for the extreme realism and bitter frankness of his writing, which is in the tradition of NATURALISM. Many critics regard his style as awkward and "muddy." His first novel, SISTER CARRIE (1900), was banned, as was THE 'GENIUS' (1915), because its theme was considered objectionable at the time of publication, and also his most famous novel, AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY (1925), met with the disapproval of the censors and the conservative public. His works include Jennie Gerhardt (1911); a "trilogy of desire," designed to illustrate the effects of lust for power and for women and consisting of The Financier (1912), The Titan (1914) (see COWPERWOOD, FRANK), and THE 'GENIUS'; Plays of the Natural and Supernatural (1916) and The Hand of the Potter (1919), dramas; A Hoosier Holiday (1916), an account of an automobile trip from New York to Indiana; Free And Other Stories (1918) and Twelve Men (1919), short story collections; Hey-Rub-a-Dub-Dub! (1920) and The Color of a Great City (1923), essays; Dreiser Looks at Russia (1928), an account of a trip to the U.S.S.R.; A Gallery of Women (1929), a collection of novelettes; Fine Furniture (1930); Tragic America (1932), studies of the U.S. during the depression of the time. Moods (1926) and Epitaph (1930), poetry; A Traveler at Forty (1913), A Book about Myself (1922), and Dawn (1931), autobiographical volumes; The Bulwark (1946), a novel, and The Stoic (1947), another COWPERWOOD novel. Dreiser was a sensational figure during the 1920's and had a wide influence at that time, inaugurating in An American Tragedy the use of actual case-history material in fiction. His brother was Paul Dresser, a composer of popular songs of the Tin Pan Alley variety during the first decade of the 20th century. The two collaborated in the composition of On the Banks of the Wabash Far Away, a song popular at the time of the Spanish-American War. After Dreiser's death, Howard Mumford Jones wrote in the New York Times: "The death of Theodore Dreiser removes from the American scene something primary, brooding and enormous. It is as if a headland crumbled and slid into the sea."

Dreiser Protest. A petition signed by nearly five hundred American writers (1916) protesting the banning by the courts of Dreiser's novel THE 'GENIUS'.

Dresden ware or china. A decorated porcelain made in the former kingdom of Saxony in factories near Dresden and Meissen. Originated by Johann Friedrich Böttger or Böttiger (1682-1719) who, according to a local story, was employed by the Saxon king to make gold.

Dresser, Paul. See under DREISER, THEODORE.

Dressler, Marie (1873-1934), stage name of Leila Koerber, Canadian-born American actress (comédienne). Success on stage and in motion pictures, e.g., Anna Christie, Tillie's Punctured Romance (with Charlie Chaplin) and several Tugboat Annie films. Made famous a song, "Heaven Will Protect the Working Girl."

Drew, Daniel (1797-1879). American financier. Defeated Cornelius Vanderbilt in the stock-market battle known as the "Erie War" (1866-1868). With James Fisk and Jay Gould he reaped a fortune by raising the price of gold and causing a country-wide depression. Later bankrupt.

Drew, John (1827-1862). Irish-born American actor. On American stage, he gained success as portrayer of Irish rôles, notably as Sir Lucius O'Trigger in Sheridan's Rivals. His wife Louisa Drew (1820-1897) was also an actress. Their son, John Drew (1853-1927), born in Philadelphia, was a notable actor and leading man. Excelled in comedies of manners. Uncle of Ethel, John, and Lionel BARRYMORE.

Dreyfus, Alfred (1859-1935). An officer of the French artillery, of Jewish descent, who was convicted in 1894 on a charge of having betrayed military secrets, degraded and sent to Devil's Island. In 1899 the first trial was annulled. He was brought back to France, retried, and again condemned, but shortly afterwards pardoned, though it was not until 1914 that he was finally and completely rehabilitated. See also BERGERET.

Feeling with regard to the Dreyfus case was strong in France, especially among the intellectuals. Émile ZOLA, the novelist, wrote a pamphlet entitled l'Accuse (1898), heatedly attacking the military authorities who had indicted Dreyfus, with the result that Zola himself was sentenced to prison and had to flee to England for a time. Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST gives an excellent picture of the alignment of French opinion on the case and of the way in which Dreyfusards and Jews were regarded by the fashionable society of the time.

D'ri and I. A novel by Irving Bacheller (Am. 1901). The hero is the hired man, Darius Olin, nicknamed D'ri and the story centers about his adventures and those of his employer's son, Ramon Bell, during the War of 1812.

driver of Europe (cocher de l'Europe). So the Empress of Russia used to call the Duc de Choiseul (1719-1785), minister of Louis XV, because he had spies all over Europe, and thus ruled its political cabals.

Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, see under JEKYLL.

Dr. Lavendar's People. A volume of stories by Margaret Deland. See under LAVENDAR.

Dr. Luke of the Labrador. A narrative by Norman Duncan based on the career of Sir Wilfred Grenfell, a medical missionary in Labrador.

Dr. Marigold's Prescriptions, Christmas number of All the Year Round (1865) by Dickens. Dr. Marigold is an itinerant Cheap Jack, called "doctor" in compliment to the medical man who attended at his birth and would only accept a tea-tray for his fee. The death of little Sophy in her father's arms, while he is convulsing the rustic crowd with his ludicrous speeches, is the central incident of the tale.

Drogheda (the bridge over the ford). In Eire, seaport on the Boyne, 26 miles north of Dublin. Cromwell massacred its garrison in September, 1649.

Dromio of Ephesus and Dromio of Syracuse. Two brothers exactly alike, who served two brothers exactly alike. The mistakes of masters and men form the fun of Shakespeare's COMEDY OF ERRORS based on the Menaechmi of Plautus.

Drood, Edwin. The hero of a novel called The Mystery of Edwin Drood, by DICKENS. Only eight numbers appeared. They were published in 1870, the year of the author's death.

droshky (Russian drozhky). Originally a low four-wheeled open carriage used in Russia. Generally, in many European countries, any horse-drawn cab or hackney coach. Cf. German Droschke, Swedish droska, Danish Droske, etc.

drove. See under COVEY.

Dr. Sevier. A story of life in New Orleans (1885) by G. W. Cable (1844-1925). Dr. Sevier is a physician of New Orleans, of high-minded but somewhat severe character and manner.

Dr. Syntax, see SYNTAX.

Dr. Thorne. A novel by Anthony Trollope, one of his Chronicles of Barsetshire. See BARSETSHIRE; THORNE.

Drugger, Abel. In Ben Jonson's comedy THE ALCHEMIST, a seller of tobacco; artless and gullible in the extreme. He is building a new house, and comes to Subtle "the alchemist," to know on which side to set the shop-door, how to dispose the shelves so as to ensure most luck, on what days he may trust his customers, and when it will be unlucky for him so to do.

Druid. A member of the ancient Gaulish and British order of priests, teachers of religion, magicians, or sorcerers. The word is the Lat. druidae or druides (always plural), which was borrowed from the Old Irish drui and Gaelic draoi. The druidic cult presents many difficulties, and practically our only literary sources of knowledge of it are Pliny and the Commentaries of Caesar, whence we learn that the rites of the Druids were conducted in oak groves and that they regarded the oak and the mistletoe with peculiar veneration; that they studied the stars and nature generally; that they believed in the transmigration of souls, and dealt in "magic." Their distinguishing badge was a serpent's egg (see below), to which very powerful properties were credited. The order seems to have been highly organized, and, according to Strabo, every chief had his druid, and every chief druid was allowed a guard of thirty men.

In Butler's HUDIBRAS (III. i) there is an allusion to the Money by the Druids borrowed,

In t'other world to be restored.

This refers to a legend recorded by one Patricius (St. Patrick?) to the effect that the Druids were wont to borrow money to be repaid in the life to come. His words are, "Druidae pecuniam mutuo accipiebant in posteriore vita reddituri."

The Druids' egg. This wonderful egg was hatched by the joint labor of several serpents, and was buoyed into the air by their hissing. The person who caught it had to ride off at full speed, to avoid being stung to death; but the possessor was sure to prevail in every contest, and to be courted by those in power. Pliny says he had seen one of them, and that it was about as large as a moderate-sized apple.

drum. A popular name in the 18th century—and later—for a crowded evening party, so called from its noise with, perhaps, a side allusion to the tea-kettle and kettle-drums.

This is a riotous assembly of fashionable people, of both sexes, at a private house, consisting of some hundreds, not unaptly stiled a drum, from the noise and emptiness of the entertainment.—Smollett, Advice, a Satire (1746).

John (or Jack) Drum's entertainment. Turning an unwelcome guest out of doors.

O! for the love of laughter, let him fetch his drum; he says he has a stratagem for 't. When your lordship sees the bottom of his success in 't, and to what metal this counterfeit lump of ore will be melted, if you give him not John Drum's entertainment, your inclining cannot be removed.—Shakespeare, All's Well, iii. 6.

Marston wrote a comedy with the title Jack Drum's Entertainment (1600), in which he is supposed to have satirized Ben Jonson.

drummer. An Americanism for a commercial traveler, his vocation being to collect customers as a recruiting officer "drums up" recruits.

Drummond, William Henry (1854-1907). Irish-born Canadian poet noted for French-Canadian dialect verse, as in the collections The Habitant (1897); Johnny Courteau* (1901), etc.

Drummond of Hawthornden, William (1585-1649). Scotch-born English poet, owner of an extensive library and ardently Royalist in politics. He translated and imitated French and Italian lyric poetry, especially the work of Ronsard, Passerat, and Desportes. He is known for the grace and smoothness of his verse. Friend of Ben Jonson.

Drunken Parliament. See under PARLIAMENTS.

Drury Lane. This famous London street (and, consequently, the theater) is named from Drury House, built in the time of Henry VIII by Sir William Drury. It stood on a site about in the middle of the present Aldwych. The theater is the fourth of the name, the first having been opened in 1663.

Druses. A people and sect of Syria, living about the mountains of Lebanon and Anti-Libanus. Their faith is a mixture of the Pentateuch, the Gospel, the Koran, and Sufism. They offer up their devotions both in mosques and churches, worship the images of saints, and yet observe the fast of Ramadan. Their name is probably from that of their first apostle, Ismail Darazi, or Durzi (11th century A. D.). Browning has a tragedy THE RETURN OF THE DRUSES.

dryad. In classical mythology, a tree-nymph (Gr. drus, a tree) who was supposed to live in the trees and die when the trees died. Eurydice, the wife of Orpheus the poet, was a dryad. Also called hamadryads (Gr. hama, with).

Dryasdust. The name given by Scott to the fictitious "reverend Doctor," a learned pundit, whom he had sign the prefaces, etc., of many of his novels: hence, a heavy plodding author, very prosy, very dull, and very learned; an antiquary.

The Prussian Dryasdust, otherwise an honest fellow, and not afraid of labor, excels all other Dryasdusts yet known. . . . He writes big books wanting in almost every quality; and does not even give an Index to them.—Carlyle.

Dryden, John (1631-1700). English poet, dramatist, and critic, outstanding figure in letters during the Restoration period and literary dictator of his age. He won official court favor by altering his political and religious views and celebrating in his poetry in turn Oliver Cromwell (by Heroic Stanzas, 1659), Charles II (by Astraea Redux, 1660), and James II (by The Hind and the Panther, 1685). His poetry shows the characteristic restraint and finish of NEO-CLASSICISM, his prose is lucid and simple, and he established the heroic couplet (see COUPLET) as the vehicle for satire and didactic poetry for the next century. Dryden's works include: The Indian Queen (1664), The Indian Emperor (1665), Aurengzebe (1676), ALL FOR LOVE (1678) and Don Sebastian (1690), all plays in verse; ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL (1681), The Medal (1682), MacFlecknoe (1682), Religio Laici (1682), and THE HIND AND THE PANTHER (1685), all political, literary, or religious satires; Annus Mirabilis (1667), a poem describing the momentous happenings in England in the year 1665-1666, such as the plague, the London fire, the Dutch War, etc.; and such celebrated lyrics as A Song for St. Cecelia's Day (1687), the ode To Mrs. Killigrew, and Alexander's Feast (1697). Dryden had a great influence on Alexander POPE, his disciple. He was made Poet Laureate in 1670 and held numerous royal offices until he refused allegiance to King William III in 1688. Cf. John Dryden, by Mark Van Doren.

Dryfoos, Conrad. A leading character in Howells' HAZARD OF NEW FORTUNES. His father and sisters are also prominent in the novel.

Dryope. In Greek legend, sister of Iole and wife of Andraemon. For having plucked inadvertently the lotus into which the nymph Lotis had been changed, Dryope herself was changed into a lotus.

d.t. An abbreviation, used as a euphemism, for delirium tremens.

du. For names beginning with the particle du, see under the simple form.

dualism. A philosophical theory or religious doctrine which considers the ultimate nature of the universe to be constituted by two mutually irreducible elements as mind and matter, good and evil, etc. Opposed to monism and pluralism. Manichaeism and Zoroastrianism are instances of religious dualism.

Duat. In Egyptian mythology, one of the abodes of the dead in the underworld through which the sun passed by night.

Du Barry, Comtesse, Marie Jeanne Bécu (1746-1793). Adventuress and mistress of Louis XV from 1768 to his death (1774). Ruled king and court. Famous for her prodigality as a patron of artists and men of letters. Guillotined under Robespierre (December 7, 1793).

Dubliners. A collection of short stories and sketches by James JOYCE, published in 1914. Roughly divided in subject-matter into childhood, adolescence, maturity, and public life, they deal with incidents in the lives of people living in the city of Dublin, in character mean, petty, or tragic. The style is simple and moving, in the manner of Anton CHEKHOV rather than in that of the author's more famous works. Several of the characters later appearing in ULYSSES are introduced in these sketches, among the outstanding of which are COUNTERPARTS, THE DEAD, and IVY-DAY IN THE COMMITTEE ROOM. It has been pointed out that Dubliners represents one of the first uses of a short-story technique which was to become standardized later, especially in the magazine THE NEW YORKER. See also WINESBURG, OHIO.

Joyce had difficulty in finding a publisher for this book, and after publication it was severely attacked because the names of actual people and places in Dublin are mentioned in it.

Du Bois, William Edward Burghardt (1868-). American educator and novelist of Negro ancestry. Editor of the Crisis, a "Record of the Darker Races" (1910-1932). An official of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters.

Dubuque, The Old Lady from. A phrase coined by THE NEW YORKER magazine meaning "an unintelligent and easily-shocked provincial."

ducat. Name of a number of old coins, the first apparently being the one struck in silver in 1140 by Roger II of Sicily with the motto "sit tibi, Christe, datus, quem tu regis, iste ducatus" (let this duchy which thou rulest be dedicated to thee, O Christ).

Du Chaillu, Paul Belloni (1835-1903). French-American explorer of the interior of Equatorial Africa. Author of books on travel and adventure. Stories of the Gorilla Country (1868); The Country of the Dwarfs (1871); etc.

Duchamp-Villon, Raymond (1876-1918). French Cubist sculptor. His brother, Marcel Duchamp-Villon (1887-), Dadaist painter.

Duchess de Langeais, The. A story by BALZAC (1834) usually published as part of The Thirteen (L'Histoire des treize). See also under LANGEAIS.

Duchess of Malfi, The. A drama by John WEBSTER (ca. 1618). The Duchess is twin-sister of Ferdinand, Duke of Calabria. She falls in love with Antonio, her steward, and gives thereby mortal offense to her twin-brother Ferdinand, and to her brother the cardinal. She and her children are finally strangled but not before she has been made to endure a series of horrible tortures of mind and body.

duck. In World War II, a soldiers' term for an amphibious landing craft.

a lame duck. See under LAME.

To make ducks and drakes of one's money. To throw it away as stones with which "ducks and drakes" are made on water. The allusion is to the sport of throwing stones to skim over water for the sake of seeing them ricocheting or rebounding.

Mr. Locke Harper found out, a month after his marriage, that somebody had made ducks and drakes of his wife's money.—Dinah M. Craik, Agatha's Husband, chap. xxiii.

ducking stool. A chair used for the punishment of common scolds, disorderly women, dishonest apprentices, etc. It was so fastened to a beam projecting over a pond or river that the culprit seated in it could be submerged at will. The term cucking stool (from O.E. cuck, "to void excrement"), so called because it resembled a closetool, was sometimes used for the same apparatus, but more often for a stool in which dishonest tradesmen were exposed in front of their shops to the pelting and hooting of the mob.

Now, if one cucking-stool was for each scold,
Some towns, I fear, would not their numbers hold.
Poor Robin (1746)

Duckling, Ugly, see UGLY DUCKLING.

Duclos, Charles Pinot (1704–1772). French historian and man of letters. Remembered as author of Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire des mœurs du XVIII^e siècle (1751). As secretary of the Académie Française, he supervised the publication of its famous dictionary.

Dudley, Robert. 1st Earl of Leicester (1532?–1588). English courtier, politician, and general. Chief favorite of Queen Elizabeth. Recalled for incompetence from command of the English army assisting the States-General against Spain (1587), but appointed captain-general of the queen's armies against the Spanish Armada (1588).

Dudu. In Byron's DON JUAN, one of the three beauties of the harem, into which Juan, by the sultana's order, has been admitted in female attire. Next day, the sultana, out of jealousy, orders that both Dudu and Juan be stitched in a sack and cast into the sea; but, by the connivance of Baba, the chief eunuch, they effected their escape.

A kind of sleeping Venus seemed Dudu . . .
But she was pensive more than melancholy . . .
The strangest thing was, beauteous, she was holy,
Unconscious, albeit turned of quick seventeen.
Don Juan, Canto vi. 42–44.

duende (Span.). A goblin or house-spirit. CALDERON wrote a comedy called La Dama Duenda.

duergar. A Norse name for the dwarfs of Scandinavian mythology; they dwell in rocks and hills, and are noted for their strength, subtlety, magical powers, and skill in metallurgy. According to the Gylfaginning they owe their origin to the maggots in the flesh of the first giant, Ymir. Cf. the English word durgan, a dialectal variant of "dwarf."

Duessa (Double-mind or Falsehood). In Spenser's Faerie Queene (Bk. I) the "scarlet woman," typifying the Roman Catholic Church, and (Bk. V) Mary Queen of Scots. She is the daughter of Deceit and Shame, and assumes divers disguises to beguile the Red Cross Knight. In Bk. I she is stripped of her gorgeous disguise, is found to be a hideous hag, and flees into the wilderness for concealment.

Du Gard, Roger Martin (1881–). French novelist, best known for LES THIBAUTS (1922–1936), ten volumes in length, a characteristic ROMAN-FLEUVE of 20th-century French literature. The World of the Thibaults (1941) completes the story of the family. In 1937 Du Gard was awarded the Nobel prize for literature.

Du Guesclin, Bertrand (1320?–1380). French commander who distinguished himself in the campaigns against the English and Pedro the Cruel of Castile. Surnamed "the Eagle of Brittany." He was made marshal of Normandy in 1364 and constable of France in 1369.

Duhamel, Georges (1884–). French author. Pseudonym Denis Thévenin. From 1906 worked and wrote for 2 years with a literary group in the "Abbaye," 11 kilometers from Paris. A doctor by profession, became a surgeon at the front in World War I. Emerged after the war as a mature novelist. His Pasquier Chronicles (from 1933) are important. Member of French Academy (1936) and Academy of Medicine.

Dujardin, Édouard (1861–). French poet and novelist, associated with the movement of SYMBOLISM and a close friend of Stéphane MALLARMÉ. He is best known as the author of the experimental novel Les Lauriers sont coupés (1887), published in the U.S. as We'll to the Woods No More (1939) and considered to be the first making use of the STREAM-OF-CONSCIOUSNESS technique, although it is perhaps more properly in the form of an INTERIOR MONOLOGUE. Dujardin also experimented in free verse and the verset form—the latter being used by T. S. Eliot in MURDER IN THE CATHEDRAL and THE FAMILY REUNION—and helped publicize in his lectures the theories of the Symbolists.

Duke's Children, The. A novel by Anthony TROLLOPE (1880). See also OMNIUM, DUKE OF.

Dukhobors or, in the Russian form, Dukhobortsy (literally, spirit-wrestlers). A fanatical Russian sect founded (1785) by the soldier Procope Loupkin. The Dukhobors hold that their knowledge of the true spirit of Christianity imposes upon them the duty to reject the use of images, rites, and ceremonies, to dispense with an ordained clergy, and to deny the divinity of Christ as well as the authority of Scriptures. Accused of ritual murders and cruelties, they were removed to the Caucasus in 1841; because of continued persecution thousands emigrated to Canada in 1898. They continue to believe in an inner light and several divine incarnations.

Dulcamara, Doctor. A wandering physician in the opera L'Elisir d'Amore by Donizetti (1832). He is a typical charlatan and pompous ass.

dulcarnon. The horns of a dilemma (or sylogismum cornutum); a puzzling question. From an Arabic word meaning "the possessor of two horns." The 47th proposition of the First Book of Euclid is called the Dulcarnon, as the 5th is the Pons Asinorum, because the two squares which contain the right angle roughly represent horns.

be at dulcarnon. To be in a quandary, or on the horns of a dilemma.

Dulce et Decorum Est. A poem by Wilfred OWEN, published in 1920, bitterly denouncing war. The title is a quotation from Horace (Odes, III, 2): "Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori" ("It is sweet and fitting to die for one's country").

dulcimer. An old instrument with metal wires over a trapezoidal sounding board, played with two hammers with hard and soft sides held in the hands. It is particularly interesting as a prototype of the modern piano which might be described as a dulcimer with keyboard hammer action. See HARPSICHORD. In the Southern Mountains of the U.S., a "dulcimore" is more like a guitar.

It was an Abyssinian maid,
And on her dulcimer she played,
S. T. Coleridge, Khubla Khan.

Dulcinea. A lady-love. Taken from DON QUIXOTE's amie du coeur. Her real name is Aldonza Lorenzo, but the knight dubs her Dulcinea del Toboso. "Her flowing hair," says the knight, "is of gold, her forehead the Elysian fields, her eyebrows two celestial arches, her eyes a pair of glorious suns, her cheeks two beds of roses, her lips two coral portals that guard her teeth of Oriental pearl, her neck is alabaster, her hands are polished ivory, and her bosom whiter than the new-fallen snow."

I must ever have some Dulcinea in my head—it harmonises the soul.—Sterne.

"Sir," said Don Quixote, "she is not a descendant of the ancient Cail, Curtii, and Scipios of Rome; nor of the modern Colonas and Orsini; nor of the Rebillas and Villanovas of Valencia; neither is she a descendant of the Palafoxes, Newcas, Rocabertis, Corellas, Lunas, Alagones, Ureas, Fozes, and Gurreas of Aragon; neither does the Lady Dulcinea descend from the Cerdas, Manriquez, Mendozas, and Guzmans of Castile; nor from the Alencastros, Pallas, and Menezes of Portugal; but she derives her origin from a family of Toboso, near Mancha." (Bk. ii., ch. v.)

Sancho Panza says she is "a stout-built sturdy wench, who could pitch the bar as well as any young fellow in the parish."

Dulcy. A character created by the columnist F. P. A. and later made the titular heroine of a comedy by George S. KAUFMAN and Marc CONNELLY (1921). In the course of her well-meaning self-appointed task of helping her husband put through an important business deal, Dulcy makes one blunder after another, but is blissfully unaware of her own limitations and gathers in all the credit when the deal goes through.

dulia, see LATRIA.

dulse. A coarse red seaweed used as food in certain northern countries. In Iceland it is stored in casks to be eaten with fish. In Kamchatka a fermented liquor is made from it. Also eaten in Scotland and New England.

Duma, also Douma. The Russian Council of State, or Parliament, created by an imperial ukase of August 19, 1905 and dissolved by the Bolshevik revolution in 1917. As a common name, Russian duma stands for any council or assembly; it is of Teutonic origin and related to English doom, "judgment."

Dumachus. See under DISMAS.

Dumain. In Shakespeare's LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST, a French lord in attendance on Ferdinand, king of Navarre. He agrees to spend three years with the King in study, during which time no woman is to approach the court. Of course, the compact is broken as soon as it is made, and Dumain falls in love with Katharine.

Dumas, Alexandre, known as Dumas père (1802-1870). French novelist and dramatist, best known for his historical romances of the swashbuckling variety. He maintained a corps of collaborators with the assistance of whom he turned out almost three hundred books. He used the works of earlier memoir-writers as sources for his material, and has been accused of altering historical fact to suit his fictional purposes. Critics point out Dumas' excessive melodrama, the over-simplicity of his characters, and his poor style.

Among Dumas' plays, which were very successful and for which he is known in France if not in English-speaking countries, are Henri III et sa cour (1829); Christine (1830); Napoléon Bonaparte (1831); Antony (1831); and La Tour de Nesle (1832). These are violent and melodramatic, dealing with historical periods and with the adventures of the typical Romantic hero. Of Dumas' historical novels, whose contemporary popularity continues, especially in the theater, the motion picture and the juvenile library, the best known are THE THREE MUSKETEERS (Les Trois mousquetaires) (1844), THE COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO (1844) and THE BLACK TULIP (1845).

Dumas was the son of a part-Negro general of the French army and was of a wild and robust nature, alternating between fantastic luxury and heavy debt.

Dumas, Alexandre, known as Dumas fils (1824-1895). French dramatist, the natural son of the historical novelist Alexandre DUMAS père. His plays are characterized by a realistic technique (see REALISM) and frequent moralizing, dealing chiefly with adultery and intrigue, both sexual and financial, in the higher social classes. The best-known is La Dame aux Camélias (1852), translated as CAMILLE. Other plays include Le Demi-Monde (1855); Un Père Prodigue (1859); La Question d'Argent (1857); Les Idées de Mme Aubray (1867); L'Ami des Femmes (1864). DIANE DE LYS (1851) is a novel.

du Maurier, George Louis Palmella Busson (1834-1896). English novelist and illustrator of a family of French émigrés. Best known as the author and illustrator of Peter Ibbetson (1891) and Trilby (1894). His granddaughter Daphne du Maurier (1907-), daughter of the noted actor Sir Gerald du Maurier (1873-1934), is an extremely successful novelist, author of the bestsellers Rebecca (1938; somewhat reminiscent in its theme of Vera by ELIZABETH Countess Russell), and The King's General (1945).

Dumbiedikes, the old laird of. In Scott's HEART OF MIDLOTHIAN, an exacting landlord, taciturn and obstinate.

The laird of Dumbiedikes had hitherto been moderate in his exactions . . . but when a stout, active young fellow appeared . . . he began to think so broad a pair of shoulders might bear an additional burden. He regulated, indeed, his management of his dependents as carters do their horses, never failing to clap an additional brace of hundred-weights on a new and willing horse.

the young laird of Dumbiedikes. A bashful young laird, in love with Jeanie Deans. Jeanie marries the Presbyterian minister, Reuben Butler.

Dumb Ox, the. St. Thomas Aquinas (1224-1274), known afterwards as "the Angelic Doctor" or "Angel of the Schools." Albertus Magnus, the tutor of the "dumb ox," said of him: "The dumb ox will one day fill the world with his lowing." The name was given to him by his fellow students at Cologne from his taciturnity and dreaminess.

Dumont, Lewis. The hero of William Gillette's drama, Secret Service.

dum sola (Lat.). While single or unmarried. A legal term applied to women. The phrase dum sola et casta, "while single and chaste" occurs as a condition in wills.

dum spiro, spero (Lat.). Literally, while I breathe, I hope; while there's life, there's hope. It is the motto of the Viscounts Dillon of the Irish royalist family Dillon.

dum vivimus vivamus (Lat.). While we live, let us enjoy life. The motto adopted by Dr. Doddridge (1702-1751), who translated and expanded it into the subjoined epigram:

"Live, while you live," the epicure would say,
"And seize the pleasures of the present day."
"Live, while you live," the sacred preacher cries,
"And give to God each moment as it flies."
Lord, in my views let each united be;
I live in pleasure, when I live to thee.

Dunbar, Paul Laurence (1872-1906). American Negro poet, author of verse chiefly on Negro themes and in Negro dialect. Among his books of poetry are Lyrics of Lowly Life (1896); Lyrics of the Hearthside (1899); Lyrics of Love and Laughter (1903); Lyrics of Sunshine and Shadow (1905).

Dunbar, William (1465?-1530?). Scottish poet, for a time a Franciscan friar and later a diplomatic agent for James IV of Scotland. His works include The Thistle and the Rose (1503), a political allegory; The Dance of the Seven Deadly Sins (between 1503 and 1508), a religious dream-vision; The Golden Targe (ca. 1508), an allegory in the tradition of the Romance of the Rose; Lament for the Mak-ers ("makers" meaning poets) (ca. 1508), an elegy on the death of great poets of the past which has been compared to the poetry of François VILLON; and The Two Married Women and the Widow (ca. 1508), a satire on women. Dunbar is considered one of the best of the SCOTTISH CHAUCERIANS.

Duncan. In Shakespeare's tragedy, MACBETH, the King of Scotland, murdered by Macbeth.

Duncan, Isadora (1878-1927). American dancer. Acclaimed in London, Paris, and on the Continent. Established a German school of dancing near Berlin (1904), and later one in Moscow. Wrote autobiography, My Life (1926-1927). Rendered compositions by Tchaikovsky and Chopin in the dance. Strangled in an automobile accident when her scarf was caught in a wheel.

Duncan Gray. A ballad by BURNS (1792) with the refrain "Ha, ha! the wooing o't." Duncan woos a young lass called Maggie, but she "coost her head fu' high, looked asklent," and bids him behave himself. "Duncan fleeced, and Duncan prayed," but Meg is deaf to his pleadings; so Duncan takes himself off in dudgeon. This is more than Maggie meant, so she falls sick and seems about to die. As Duncan "could na be her death," he comes back and all ends happily.

Duncan Phyfe. A style of furniture named after the Scottish-born New York City cabinet maker Duncan Phyfe (1768-1854). In the U.S., all Empire styles are so called. In a more restricted sense, it is a modified DIRECTOIRE.

Dunciad. The dunce-epic, a satire by Alexander POPE, first published in 1728 with Theobald figuring as the Poet Laureate of the realm of Dullness, but republished with an added fourth part in 1741 with Colley Cibber in that rôle. His installation is celebrated by games, the most important being the proposal to read, without sleeping, two voluminous works—one in verse and the other in prose; as everyone falls asleep, the games come to an end. The Laureate is later taken to the temple of Dullness, and is lulled to sleep on the lap of the goddess; and, during his slumber, sees in a vision the past, present, and future triumphs of the empire. Finally, the goddess, having destroyed order and science, establishes her kingdom on a firm basis, gives directions to her several agents to prevent thought and keep people to foolish and trifling pursuits, and Night and Chaos are restored, and the poem ends.

Dundreary, Lord. The impersonation of a good-natured, indolent, blundering, empty-headed swell, from the chief character in Tom Taylor's Our American Cousin (1858). E. A. Sothern created the character by the genius of his acting and the large additions he made to the original text, in which this English personage had been given only forty-seven lines.

Hence Dundreary whiskers, the style of whiskers worn by this character.

Dun Edin. Poetical name of Edinburgh.

Dunkers or Tunkers (Ger., "Dippers"). A religious sect akin to the Baptists, founded in Germany in 1708 by Alexander Mack. In 1719 a party of them emigrated to Pennsylvania. They follow Bible teaching as closely as possible and adhere to the simplicity of the primitive Church. They practice immersion; hence their name.

Dunmow flitch, the. The flitch of bacon mentioned below.

eat Dunmow bacon. To live in conjugal amity, without even wishing the marriage knot to be less firmly tied. The allusion is to a custom said to have been instituted by Juga, a noble lady, in 1111, and restored by Robert de Fitzwalter in 1244; which was, that any person from any part of England going to Dunmow, in Essex, and humbly kneeling on two stones at the church door, may claim a gammon of bacon, if he can swear that for twelve months and a day he has never had a household brawl or wished himself unmarried.

Between 1244 and 1772 eight claimants were admitted to eat the flitch. Allusions to the custom are very frequent in 17th and 18th century literature; and in the last years of the 19th century it was revived. Later it was removed to Ilford. The oath administered is in doggerel, somewhat as follows:

You shall swear, by the custom of our confession,
That you never made any nuptial transgression
Since you were married man and wife,
By household brawls or contentious strife;
Or, since the parish clerk said "Amen,"
Wished yourselves unmarried again;
Or, in a twelvemonth and a day,
Repented not in thought any way,
If to these terms, without all fear,
Of your own accord you will freely swear,
A gammon of bacon you shall receive,
And bear it hence with our good leave.
For this is our custom at Dunmow well known—
The sport is ours, but the bacon your own.

Dunne, Finley Peter (1867–1936). American humorist, creator of Mr. DOOLEY.

Dunsany, Lord Edward John Moreton Drax Plunkett (1878–). Irish dramatist and writer of short tales, associated with the Abbey Theater (see IRISH RENAISSANCE). He is known for the imaginative fantasy of his writing, in which wit and satire are combined with a romantic, fairy-tale atmosphere. He has been compared with James Branch CABELL. His works include The Glittering Gate (1914); The Gods of Pegana (1916); A Dreamer's Tales (1917); Plays of Gods and Men (1917); Tales of War (1918); Nowadays (1918), an essay on the author's theory of literature; Unhappy Far-Off Things (1919); If, A Play (1922); Plays of Near and Far (1923); Time and the Gods (1924); The Charwoman's Shadow (1926); The Blessing of Pan (1927); The Travel Tales of Mr. Joseph Jorkens (1931); The Curse of the Wise Woman (1933); Jorkens Remembers Africa (1934); Mr. Faithful, A Play (1935); My Talks with Dean Spanley (1937); and Rory and Bran (1937).

Duns Scotus, John (1265?–?1308). Scottish scholastic theologian, born in Duns, Scotland. Known as Doctor Subtilis because of his great dialectical skill. He wrote a philosophical grammar, commentaries on the Bible, Aristotle, etc. Founded a scholastic system known as Scotism. It was from the opposition of his followers to the classicism of the Renaissance that his name—in the form of dunce—assumed the connotations of sophist and blockhead.

Dunstan, St. See under SAINT.

Dunster-ville, Major General Lionel Charles (1866–1946). Childhood friend of KIPLING. See STALKY AND CO. In World War I, Dunster-ville "bluffed the Turks out of the Baku oil fields with a handful of men."

duodecimo (from Lat. *duodecim*us, twelfth, in the phrase in duodecimo). A book whose sheets are folded into twelve leaves each, often called "twelvemo," from the contraction 12mo. The book is naturally a small one, hence the expression is sometimes applied to other things of small size, such as a dwarf.

Dupes, Day of (Fr. journée des Dupes). In French history, November 11, 1630, when Marie de Medici and Gaston, Duc d'Orléans extorted from Louis XIII a promise that he would dismiss his minister, the Cardinal Richelieu. The cardinal went in all speed to Versailles, the king repented, and Richelieu became more powerful than ever. Marie de Medici and Gaston, the "dupes," had to pay dearly for their short triumph.

Dupin, Aurore, see SAND, GEORGE.

Dupin, C. Auguste. A brilliant amateur detective of Paris who appears in Poe's Murders in the Rue Morgue, The Mystery of Marie Rogét and The Purloined Letter. He is said to have been drawn from a real character, a certain C. Auguste Dupont, whose exploits were reported to Poe by a friend.

Du Pont de Nemours, Pierre Samuel (1739-1817). French economist, friend and disciple of the PHYSIOCRAT François Quesnay. Was imprisoned in the French Revolution and emigrated to the U.S. (1799). At Jefferson's request he prepared a scheme for national education which was never adopted in the U.S. but influenced the French educational code. Returned to France (1802-1815) but again emigrated to the U.S. two years before his death. His son Éleuthère Irénée Du Pont de Nemours (1771-1834) came to the U.S. in 1799 and founded in Wilmington, Del., the powerful gunpowder and textile firm of E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co. (1802-1804).

Durandana or Durindana. Orlando's sword, given him by his cousin Malagigi. It once belonged to Hector, was made by the fairies, and could cleave the Pyrenees at a blow.

Nor plaited shield, nor tempered casque defends,
Where Durindana's trenchant edge descends.
Orlando Furioso, Bk. v.

Durant, William James. Known as Will Durant (1885-). American author and journalist, in his early years associated with Lola RIDGE and Upton SINCLAIR in the Socialist movement. He was active in experimental education and as a lecturer on philosophy and art. He is best known as the author of The Story of Philosophy (1926), a popular account of the lives and ideas of the world's great philosophers.

Duranty, Walter (1884-). English-born American journalist, best known for I Write as I Please (1935), a best-selling account of his experiences as a newspaperman in Russia, and one of the first books by foreign correspondents to become popular with the public in the days of growing crisis in Europe before World War II. He also wrote One Life, One Kopek (1937), a novel, and Babies Without Tails (1937), short stories.

Durbeyfield, Tess. Heroine of Hardy's novel, TESS OF THE D'URBERVILLES.

Durdles, Stony. In Dickens' unfinished novel The Mystery of Edwin Drood, a stonemason who is usually intoxicated, but knows the secrets of the cathedral crypt.

Durendal. The sword of Roland, given him by Charlemagne, in legend. Identical with DURANDANA.

Dürer, Albrecht (1471-1528). Famous German painter, engraver and woodcut artist. Traveled in Italy and carried a new conception of his art back over the Alps. Leader of German Renaissance school of painting. Regarded as inventor of etching. His copperplates Ritter, Tod, und Teufel (Knight, Death, and Devil) and Melancholia are the most popular of his numerous works. Wrote Von menschlicher Proportion (On the measurements of the human figure; 1528); a study on Fortification (1527); etc.

Durfey, Tom. Originally Thomas D'Urfey (1653-1723). English song writer and dramatist of French Huguenot descent. His songs were collected in six volumes as Wit and Mirth or Pills to Purge Melancholy (1719-1720).

Durga. One of the names of the Hindu goddess KALI, the wife of Siva.

Durgin, Jeff. The hero of Howells' The Landlord at Lion's Head (1898).

Durham, Henrietta. Heroine of Flotow's opera, MARTHA.

Duronceray, Marie Justine Benoîte. See under FAVART.

Durrie, James and Henry Durrie. Two brothers, principal characters in Stevenson's MASTER OF BALLANTRAE.

Duruy, Victor (1811-1894). French historian. Author of many school histories, a history of the Roman people in seven volumes and one of Greece in three volumes.

Durward, Quentin, see QUENTIN DURWARD.

Dusantes, The. A sequel to F. R. Stockton's Casting Away of Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine.

Duse, Eleonora (1859-1924). Famous Italian actress. Toured Europe and America. Close friend of Gabriele D'ANNUNZIO till 1899. Interpreted Sardou, Ibsen, Sudermann, D'Annunzio, Maeterlinck.

Dust Bowl. The region, along the western border of the Great Plains, in Colorado, Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, and New Mexico, where overgrazing or uncontrolled cultivation made it possible for the droughts in the 1930's to bring about complete denudation so that the topsoil was blown away in terrible dust storms. See also OKIES. Cf. the novel by Feike Feikima, The Golden Bowl.

dustman. In folklore the genius of sleep, so named because a sleepy child will wink and rub his eyes as though he had dust in them. Also called sandman. Cf. French marchand de sable.

Dutch. In a number of phrases the adjective Dutch has an opprobrious or humorous application, possibly in consequence of the long struggle for supremacy of the seas waged by England against the Netherlands in the seventeenth century and in part also due to the traditional association of the Dutch with boorishness and lack of polish.

Dutch auction. An "auction" in which the bidders decrease their bids till they come to the minimum price. Dutch gold is no gold at all; Dutch courage is no real courage; Dutch concert is no music at all, but mere hubbub; and Dutch auction is no auction, or increase of bids but quite the contrary.

Dutch comfort. The comfort derivable from the consideration that, however bad the evil which has befallen you may be, a worse evil is at least conceivable.

Dutch concert. A great noise and uproar, like that made by a party of Dutchmen in sundry stages of intoxication, some singing, others quarreling, speechifying, wrangling, and so on. Cf. also Dutch nightingale, "a frog."

Dutch courage. The courage excited by drink; pot valor.

Dutch door. A door divided horizontally, so that the lower part can be shut while the upper part is open. A phrase in which, by exception, the word Dutch has no unpleasant connotations. Dutch doors are also found in Ireland.

Dutch treat. Refreshments paid for individually; each one "treats" only himself. Hence to go Dutch.

Dutch uncle: I will talk to you like a Dutch uncle, I will reprove you smartly.

Dutch wife. A frame of cane used in the East Indies in hot weather to rest the arms and legs on while trying to keep cool in bed.

Well, I'm a Dutchman! An exclamation of strong incredulity.

Dutch Republic, Rise of the. See under RISE.

Duun, Olav (1876-1939). Norwegian novelist, called "the greatest living spokesman for the peasant mind." His books, among them the series The People of Juvik (6 vols.; 1918-1923) are written in the landsmaal, the spoken language of Norway, and not in the traditional literary Dano-Norwegian riksmaal.

Duval, Claude. A highwayman, famed in legend and ballad. He was hanged at Tyburn in 1670 and provided with an epitaph beginning:

Here lies Du Vall: Reader, if male thou art
Look to thy purse, if female, to thy heart.

Duval, Madame. In Fanny Burney's novel EVELINA, the heroine's vulgar old grandmother.

Duvarney, Alixe. The heroine of Gilbert Parker's SEATS OF THE MIGHTY.

Duveen, Joseph, Baron Duveen of Milbank (1869-1939). English art connoisseur and dealer. Donor of the gallery housing the Elgin Marbles and benefactor of the National Gallery in London.

Dvořák, Anton (1841-1904). Czech composer; director of the National Conservatory of Music in New York City (1892-1895). Head of the Conservatory in Prague (1901). Wrote many operas and symphonies (among these the New World Symphony), symphonic poems, overtures, rhapsodies, nocturnes, scherzos, concertos, and choral works. His piano music includes the widely known Humoresque.

dwarf. Dwarfs have figured in the legends and mythology of nearly every race, and Pliny gives particulars of whole races of them, possibly following travelers' reports of African pigmies. Among the Teutonic and Scandinavian peoples dwarfs held an important place in mythology. They generally dwelt in rocks, caves, and recesses of the earth, were the guardians of its mineral wealth and precious stones, and were very skilful in the working of these. They had their own king, as a rule were not inimical to man, but could, on occasion, be intensely vindictive and mischievous. They play an important role in the RING DES NIBELUNGEN.

In England diminutive persons—dwarfs—were popular down to the 18th century as court favorites or household pets; and in later times they have frequently been exhibited as curiosities at circuses, etc.

the black dwarf. A gnome of the most malignant character, once held by the dalesmen of the border as the author of all the mischief that befell their flocks and herds. Scott has a novel so called (1816), in which the name is given to Sir Edward Mauley, alias Elshander, the recluse, Cannie Elshie, and the Wise Wight of Mucklestane Moor.

See also ALBERICH; TOM THUMB.

Dwight, Harrison Griswold (1875-). American writer born in Turkey. Special assistant in U.S. Department of State (1920-1925). Wrote Stamboul Nights (1916), Persian Miniatures (1917), The Emperor of Elam and Other Stories (1920), etc.

Dwight, Timothy (1752-1817). American poet and clergyman, a grandson of Jonathan Edwards and leader of the HARTFORD WITS. He was a Calvinist in religion and a Federalist in politics. Dwight is best known for several popular poems: THE CONQUEST OF CANAAN (1785); Greenfield Hill (1794); The Triumph of Infidelity (1788); and a song of the American Revolution, Columbia, considered by a few critics to be his best composition from the standpoint of literary value. Dwight's other works in prose include The True Means of Establishing Public Happiness (1798); The Duty of Americans, at the Present Crisis (1798); Essay on the Stage (1824), attacking the theater; and Theology, Explained and Defended (1818-1819), a collection of 173 sermons. Dwight was president of Yale University (1805-1826) and helped develop the staff and curricula of the college.

Dyce, Alexander (1798-1869). Scottish dramatic editor. Edited works of Peele, John Webster, Greene, Shirley, Middleton, Beaumont and Fletcher, Marlowe, Richard Bentley and Shakespeare. His reputation is based on his edition of Shakespeare and on his notes on Shakespeare. Author of Recollections of the Table Talk of Samuel Rogers (1856).

Dyer, Sir Edward (d. 1607). English poet of the Elizabethan period, best known for his lyric beginning "My mind to me a kingdom is."

Dykes, John Bacchus (1823-1876). English musician and theologian. His hymn tunes are regarded as the best in modern music.

Dying Gaul, the. A famous marble statue of the Pergamene school in the Capitoline Museum at Rome. Formerly known as the Dying Gladiator.

Dymphna, St. See under SAINT.

Dynamo. A play by Eugene O'NEILL.

Dynasts, The. A dramatic poem of epic scope by Thomas HARDY (published 1903-1908) dealing with the Napoleonic Wars.

Dysmas, see DISMAS.

Dzugashvili, Iosif Vissarionovich, see STALIN, JOSEPH.

E

eagle.

Thy youth is renewed like the eagle's (Ps. ciii. 5). This refers to the ancient superstition that every ten years the eagle soars into the "fiery region," and plunges thence into the sea, where, moulting its feathers, it acquires new life. Cf. PHOENIX.

She saw where he upstarted brave
Out of the well. . . .
As eagle fresh out of the ocean wave,
Where he hath left his plumes all hory gray,
And decks himself with fethers youthly gay.
Spenser, Faerie Queene, I, xi. 34.

the American Eagle. A widely used national symbol. See SPREAD EAGLE.

The Golden Eagle and the Spread Eagle are commemorative of the crusades; they were the devices of the emperors of the East, and formerly figured as the ensigns of the ancient kings of Babylon and Persia, of the Ptolemies and Seleucides. The Romans adopted the eagle in conjunction with other devices, but Marius made it the ensign of the legion, and confined the other devices to the cohorts. The French under the Empire assumed the same device.

In Christian art, the eagle is emblematic of St. John the Evangelist, because, like that bird, he looked on "the sun of glory."

St. Augustine, St. Gregory the Great, and St. Prisca are also often shown with an eagle. In heraldry, it signifies fortitude.

the Eagle. Gaudenzio Ferrari (1481-1549), the Milanese painter.

the Eagle of the doctors of France. Pierre d'Ailly (1350-1420), French cardinal and astrologer, who calculated the horoscope of our Lord, and maintained that the stars foretold the deluge.

Eagle of Brittany. Bertrand du Guesclin (1320-1380), constable of France.

Eagle of Divines. St. Thomas Aquinas (1225-1274).

Eagle of Meaux. Jacques Bénigne Bossuet (1627-1704), Bishop of Meaux, the grandest and most sublime of the pulpit orators of France.

Eagle of the North. Count Axel Oxenstierna (1583-1654), the Swedish statesman, was so called.

two-headed eagle. The German eagle has its head turned to our left hand, and the Roman eagle to our right hand. When Charlemagne was made "Kaiser of the Holy Roman Empire," he joined the two heads together, one looking east and the other west; consequently, the late Austrian Empire, as the direct successor of the Holy Roman Empire, included the double-headed eagle in its coat of arms.

In Russia it was Ivan Vasilievitch who first assumed the two-headed eagle, when, in 1472, he married Sophia, daughter of Thomas Palaeologus, and niece of Constantine XIV, the last Emperor of Byzantium. The two heads symbolize the Eastern or Byzantine Empire and the Western or Roman Empire.

Eagle, Solomon, see SOLOMON EAGLE.

Eaker, Ira Clarence (1896-). Major General and head of U.S. army air force in Europe (1943). Pilot of army plane "Question Mark" which set world's endurance record (1929). Made first transcontinental blind flight (1936).

Eakins, Thomas (1844-1916). Noted American painter and sculptor. One of the finest of our American painters. Some of his best works are Clinic of Dr. Gross, Clinic of Dr. Agnew, The Chess Players, and Max Schmitt in a Single Scull. He did the reliefs on the battle monument in Trenton, N.J.

Earhart, Amelia (1898-1937). Leading American aviatrix. First woman pilot to cross Atlantic Ocean in an airplane (June 17, 1928). Married George Palmer Putnam, the publisher. Author of several books, notably Last Flight (1938; edited by her husband). Lost in attempt to fly across the Pacific (July, 1937).

Earle, John (1601?-1665). English prose-writer, one of the CHARACTER WRITERS. His Microcosmography (1628) deals with "characters" as seen from an academic point of view, such as "a pretender to learning," "an antiquary," etc.

Early, Stephen (1889-). American journalist and secretary to President Franklin Delano Roosevelt (from 1937).

Earnshaw, Catherine. The heroine of Emily Brontë's WUTHERING HEIGHTS.

Ear of Dionysius. In a quarry of Syracuse, Sicily, an ancient cavern tapered to a hole above where the tyrant Dionysius (d. 367 B. C.) listened to the conversation of prisoners below. Also an invention of Leonardo da Vinci for the same purpose for the tyrant of Milan. Hence the phrase has been used for an ear trumpet.

Ears to Ears Bible. See under BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Earthly Paradise, The. In medieval times it was a popular belief that paradise, a land—or island—where everything was beautiful and restful, and where death and decay were unknown, still existed somewhere on earth and was to be found for the searching. It was usually located far away to the east; Cosmas (7th century) placed it beyond the ocean east of China, in 9th century maps it is shown in China itself, and the fictitious letter of PRES-TER JOHN to the Emperor Emmanuel Comnenus states that it was within three days' journey of his own territory—a "fact" that is corroborated by Mandeville. The Hereford map (13th century) shows it as a circular island near India, from which it is separated not only by the sea, but also by a battlemented wall. See also BRANDAN, ST.

The Prologue to William Morris' collection of narrative poems with this title (1868–1870) tells how a party of adventurers leaves a Scandinavian port during a pestilence to search for the Earthly Paradise. After many misadventures the remnant of the band discovers it, are hospitably received, and regale their hosts each month with versified renderings of old world stories from classical and Scandinavian legend.

Earwicker, Humphrey Chimpden. Protagonist of James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE. In his literal metamorphosis, he is a middle-aged keeper of a public-house in Dublin, a Protestant Irishman of Scandinavian descent and hence another of the strangers in Ireland preferred by Joyce as characters. See BLOOM, LEOPOLD. At various times Earwicker is also the following characters: Tim FINNEGAN; Finn MAC COOL; ADAM, LUCIFER, and HUMPTY DUMPTY, because of their legendary falls (see FINNEGAN); Howth Castle, sometimes signified by the Norse name Jarl van Hoothe (Earl of Howth); Persse O'Reilly; and in general, the masculine principle of the universe, as opposed to the feminine principle, represented by his wife. See MAGGIE EARWICKER below. Throughout the book the initials HCE, either alone or embodied in names or phrases, serve as a constant LEITMOTIF for Earwicker, as ALP stand in similar usage for Anna Livia Plurabelle, or his wife. During Earwicker's epic dream, there are recurring allusions to and representations of an unknown crime committed by him in PHOENIX PARK and about which he is apparently worried, and to latent, subconscious tendencies toward incest and homosexuality with reference to his children.

Earwicker is supposedly a Scandinavian name, said to be a corruption of Erikr, a poetic form of the name Erik, and also, possibly, to mean "dweller in Ireland" (from Eire, Ireland, A.S. wician, to dwell) according to the technique of popular etymology practiced by Joyce himself. The name in addition contains an allusion to earwigs, which, referred to frequently throughout the book, are interpreted as another symbol of Earwicker himself, because falling (see FINNEGAN, TIM) is a familiar movement of the insects.

Maggie Earwicker. Wife of Humphrey, ultimately the feminine principle of the universe, who chiefly takes the form of ANNA LIVIA PLURABELLE, the personification of the river LIFFEY. In the opening section of Finnegans Wake, the courtship of husband and wife is depicted in a series of symbolical episodes, in which the symbols of male and female are, respectively, Howth Castle and the Liffey ("lord of the heights" and "lady of the valley"), a tree and a stone, a cloud and a hill, a river and a city, and so on. Basically, the two are also Adam and Eve, the ancestors of humanity, comprising "the city-building resourcefulness of mankind and the vital fertility of womankind" (Harry Levin, James Joyce). The novel closes with a dream-soliloquy by Maggie, or rather, Anna Livia Plurabelle (see ULYSSES; BLOOM, MOLLY), which is broken on the last page in the midst of a sentence and continued in the broken sentence with which the novel opens on page one, so that the structure is circular.

Jerry Earwicker. One of H. C. Earwicker's twin boys, Jerry and Kevin. Jerry appears most frequently as Shem, from the name Seumas, or James. He is considered to represent the author himself, since he is the problem-child of the family, continually writing and continually being accused of impiety and a lack of patriotism, as was Joyce throughout his whole career. Jerry is referred to as "Shem the Penman." It is also believed that Jerry, or Shem, is identified with Dean SWIFT, the phrase "Mr. O'Shem the Draper" occurring on one occasion. See DRAPIER'S LETTERS.

Kevin Earwicker. The second of H. C. Earwicker's twin boys, who appears as Shaun (from Sean) and is called "Shaun the Post." He seems destined for success in later life, as a statesman, a businessman in America, or a priest. He is interpreted as the man of action ("Jno Citizen"), as opposed to the artist, or the man of feeling ("Jas Pagan"). See ONDT AND THE GRACEHOPPER, THE. It is believed that the scenes of battle and the allusions to warfare throughout the novel, especially those associated with the Crimean War, serve to present the brothers in conflict with each other. One Buckley kills a Russian general at one point, an incident interpreted as follows:

The Russian general, alias "General Jinglesome," alias "Mr. Jinglejoys" may well be Shem, whose writing is caviar to the general Buckley, pronounced somewhat like the Gaelic bouchalleen bawn ("fair-haired boy") may again be Shaun, taking his stand for young Ireland.

Harry Levin, James Joyce.

Ultimately, it is said, Jerry and Kevin, or Shem and Shaun are Cain and Abel, Jacob and Esau, and even their father himself, or mankind struggling against itself in accordance with the principle of DUALISM held by Giordano BRUNO.

Isobel Earwicker. Earwicker's daughter, who appears as Iseult (see TRISTAN AND ISEULT) and is symbolized by Chapelizod, a village on the river Liffey which is the scene of the action in the second section of Finnegans Wake. She is regarded as the "second heroine" of the book, the second feminine object of Earwicker's love. Cf. the two Iseults of Tristan. One passage in which Shaun, or Kevin (see above), is presented as preaching a sermon on chastity to twenty-nine young girls is interpreted as a dream-distortion of the lover's manner in which her father subconsciously would like to speak to her. His pet name for her is "PPT," and she and her mother at times may correspond to STELLA and VANESSA, the two women between whom Swift's affections were torn.

Easiest Way, The. A drama by Eugene Walter (Am. 1908). The heroine, Laura Murdock, an actress with a past, has been genuinely drawn to John Madison, a reckless, care-free Western newspaper reporter, and has promised to marry him. While Madison, whose love steadies him, is saving money for the venture, Laura goes back to the stage and soon takes to "the easiest way" in spite of her resolves. She attempts to lie to Madison when he comes for her unexpectedly, but he learns the truth and leaves her.

East. Regions and countries lying to the east, specifically:

the Far East. China, Japan and neighboring sections of the Orient.

the Middle East. A term used somewhat loosely to designate the region between the Near and Far East.

the Near East. The countries that were comprised in the Turkish empire before the World War.

From the point of view of, let us say, a Californian, the Far East is nearer than the Near East, unless he insists on getting there traveling east rather than west. The expressions East, Far East, etc. originated in Europe.

down East. In New England.

East and West Poems. A volume by Bret HARTE. See PIKE.

Easter. The name was adopted for the Christian Paschal festival from A.S. eastre, a heathen festival held at the vernal equinox in honor of the Teutonic goddess of dawn, called by Bede Eostre (cognate with Lat. aurora and Sanskrit ushas, dawn). On the introduction of Christianity it was natural for the name of the heathen festival to be transferred to the Christian, the two falling about the same time.

Easter Sunday is the first Sunday after the Paschal full moon, i.e. the full moon that occurs on the day of the vernal equinox (March 21) or on any of the next 28 days. Consequently, Easter Sunday cannot be earlier than March 22, or later than April 25. This was fixed by the Council of Nice, A. D. 325.

It was formerly a common belief that the sun danced on Easter Day.

But oh, she dances such a way,
No sun upon an Easter day
Is half so fine a sight.

Sir John Suckling, Ballad upon a Wedding.

Eastlake, Sir Charles Lock (1793-1865). English painter and art critic. Made sketches of Napoleon as prisoner aboard H.M.S. Bellerophon from which he developed two large portraits. Keeper of National Gallery (1843-1847), director (1855). Known for pictures of Italian banditti and several paintings of episodes in the life of Christ.

East Lynne. A novel by Mrs. Henry Woor (1861) which was immensely popular, particularly in a dramatic version. Its heroine, Lady Isabel Vane, after running off with another man, returns to her remarried husband, completely disguised as a nurse hired to care for her own children, and successfully keeps up the pretense over a considerable period of time. In the end she and her husband are reconciled.

Eastman, Charles Alexander (1858-1939). American physician of Sioux Indian descent. Indian name Ohiyesa. Wrote half a dozen books on Indian life. Married the poet Elaine Goodale.

Eastman, George (1854-1932). American inventor and industrialist. Inventor of the portable hand camera known as Kodak (1888). Treasurer and general manager, Eastman Kodak Co. Founded Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N.Y.

Eastman, Max Forrester (1883-). American literary critic, editor, and essayist. He showed an early tendency toward radicalism, and he was a founder of the magazine THE MASSES in 1912, editing it until 1917, when he was tried for sedition, along with Floyd DELL and John REED, for anti-war writings. He founded The Liberator, another radical periodical, in 1918, editing it until 1922. He was a member of the American COMMUNIST PARTY for a time, but was expelled for being a defender of TROTSKY; his Trotskyist sympathies continued thereafter, although his main interest was literature. Among his works are Child of the Amazons, And Other Poems (1913), Colors of Life (1918), and Kinds of Love (1931), books of poetry; The Enjoyment of Poetry (1913), his best-known work; Journalism versus Art (1916); Understanding Germany (1916); The Sense of Humor (1921); Leon Trotsky (1925); Marx and Lenin: The Science of Revolution (1926); Venture (1927), a novel; The Literary Mind: Its Place in an Age of Science (1931); Art and the Life of Action (1934); Artists in Uniform (1934); The Enjoyment of Laughter (1936); The End of Socialism in Russia (1937); Heroes I Have Known (1942) and several translations from the Russian, including Gabriel (1929), by PUSHKIN, and three works by Trotsky—The Real Situation in Russia (1928), History of the Russian Revolution (1932), Revolution Betrayed (1937). See also THE CULT OF UNINTELLIGIBILITY.

East Side, the. The East-side tenement districts of Manhattan, inhabited almost entirely by foreigners. Synonymous with the slums. Corresponds to the London East End.

Eatanswill Gazette. A journal of some importance in Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS, the persistent opponent of the Eatanswill Independent.

Eaton, Walter Prichard (1878–). American dramatic critic. Has taught pioneer playwriting classes at Yale, taking over from George Pierce BAKER. (Now retired.) Author of many books of dramatic criticism, nature essays, and juvenile and adult fiction.

Eaton, Wyatt (1849–1896). Canadian American painter, chiefly of portraits. One of the founders of the Society of American Artists (1877).

Ebb Tide, The. A novel by Robert Louis STEVENSON, in collaboration with Lloyd OSBOURNE.

Eben Holden. A novel by Irving BACHELER (1900). The chief interest of the book lies in the character and quaint sayings of Eben Holden, the sturdy and loyal "hired man." There is a love affair in which the orphaned William and Hope Brower, the daughter of the kindly couple who have given Eben Holden and William a home, are the principals.

Eberhart, Mrs. Mignon (Good) (1899–). American detective story writer. Many of her books center around Nurse Sarah Keate, a character of her invention.

Ebert, Friedrich (1871–1925). German Social Democratic leader and first president of the German Reich (1919–1925). Rose from humble beginnings as saddle maker and inn-keeper. Suppressed the Kapp Putsch (1920) and the Hitler-Ludendorff attempt to establish a dictatorship in Bavaria (1923).

Ebert, Karl Egon von (1801–1882). Author in German of the Bohemian national heroic poem and epic Wlasta (1829).

Eblis. A jinn of Arabian mythology, the ruler of the evil genii, or fallen angels. Before his fall he was called AZAZEL. When Adam was created, God commanded all the angels to worship him; but Eblis replied, "Me thou hast created of smokeless fire, and shall I reverence a creature made of dust?" God was very angry at this insolent answer, and turned the disobedient angel into a Sheytân (devil), and he became the father of devils.

Another Mohammedan tradition has it that before life was breathed into Adam all the angels came to look at the shape of clay, among them Eblis, who, knowing that God intended man to be his superior, vowed never to acknowledge him as such and kicked the figure till it rang.

When he said unto the angels, "Worship Adam," all worshipped him except Eblis.—Koran, ii.

Eblis had five sons, viz. (1) Tir, author of fatal accidents; (2) Awar, the demon of lubricity; (3) Dasim, author of discord; (4) Sut, father of lies; and (5) Zalambur, author of mercantile dishonesty.

Ecbasis cuiusdam Captivi, per Tropologiam (The Running-Away of a Certain Captive, with Allegorical Significance), normally called Ecbasis Captivi. A medieval Latin allegory in the tradition of the beast-epic (see under REYNARD), composed in the 10th century. It deals with a calf who decides to run away from his stable, does so, and falls into the hands of a wolf, being threatened with mortal danger until rescued by a fox. This is supposed to be connected with the movement of Clunian reform (see CLUNY), the calf representing an errant monk who breaks his vows and is in danger of committing great sin until rescued by the new disciplinary movement. The enmity of the fox and the wolf in the beast-epics is considered to date from this early version, which contains classical quotations from Horace and Virgil and is believed to have been written by a learned member of the clergy, probably in Germany.

ecce homo (Lat., Behold the man). The name given to many paintings of our Lord crowned with thorns and bound with ropes, as He was shown to the people by Pilate, who said to them, "Ecce homo!" (John xix. 5), especially those by Correggio, Titian, Guido, Van Dyck, Rembrandt, Poussin, and Albrecht Dürer. In 1865 Sir John Seeley published a survey of the life and work of Christ with the title Ecce Homo. This is also the title of an essay by Friedrich NIETZSCHE, describing his life, ideas, and theories of art, and calling himself ANTICHRIST.

Eccles, Robert. A character in Meredith's RHODA FLEMING, weak and dissipated but likable.

Ecclesiastes. One of the books in the Old Testament, formerly ascribed to Solomon, because it says (verse 1), "The words of the Preacher, the son of David, king in Jerusalem," but now generally assigned to an unnamed author of the 3rd century B.C. The Hebrew name is Kohleth, which means "the Preacher." The refrain of the book is "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity."

Ecclesiastical History of the English People (Historia Ecclesiastica Gentis Anglorum). A Latin history by the Venerable BEDE, completed in 731. It deals with the period from the invasion of Britain by Julius Caesar, up to the year 731. It was based on the works of Pliny and other Latin authors, and is the best-known source of the famous Anglo-Saxon simile which compares man's life to the flight of a bird out of darkness through a lighted hall and into darkness again.

Ecclesiasticus. One of the books of the Old Testament Apocrypha, traditionally (and probably correctly) ascribed to a Palestinian sage named Ben Sirah, or Jesus, the Son of Sirach.

Echegaray, José (1833-1916). Spanish dramatist. His best-known play is THE GREAT GALEOTO. Echegaray was a recipient of the Nobel prize.

Echidna. A monster of classical mythology, half woman, half serpent. She was mother of the Chimaera, the many-headed dog Orthos, the hundred-headed dragon of the Hesperides, the Colchian dragon, the Sphinx, Cerberus, Scylla, the Gorgons, the Lernaean hydra, the vulture that gnawed away the liver of Prometheus, and the Nemean lion.

Spenser makes her the mother of the BLATANT BEAST.

Echidna is a Monster direfull dred,
Whom Gods doe hate, and heavens abhor to see;
So hideous is her shape, so huge her hed,
That even the hellish fiends affrighted bee
At sight thereof, and from her presence flee:
Yet did her face and former parts professe
A faire young Mayden full of comely glee;
But all her hinder parts did plaine expresse
A monstrous Dragon, full of fearfull ugliness.
Faerie Queene, VI, vi. 10.

Echo. The Romans say that Echo was a nymph in love with NARCISSUS, but because her love was not returned, she pined away till only her voice remained.

Sweet Echo, sweetest nymph, that liv'st unseen
Within thy airy shell,
By slow Meander's margent green. . . .
Canst thou not tell me of a gentle pair
That liketh thy Narcissus are?

Milton, Comus, 230.

Eckelied, Das. A Middle High German epic of the theodoric cycle, written toward the end of the thirteenth century and commonly known as Eckes Ausfahrt. It was used by Wagner as a secondary source for his RING DES NIBELUNGEN.

Eckermann, Johann Peter (1792-1854). Friend and literary assistant to Goethe. Helped him prepare the Ausgabe letzter Hand (final edition) of his works. His Gespräche mit Goethe (English edition, Conversations with Goethe, in 3 vols., 1836-1848) are daily records of Goethe's personal talks with Eckermann and constitute in their remarkable authenticity a monument to the ideal amanuensis.

Eckhardt. Eckhardt, in German legends, appears on the evening of Maundy Thursday (in the week before Easter) to warn all persons to go home, that they may not be injured by the headless bodies and two-legged horses which traverse the streets on that night, or by Frau Holle or HULDA leading the dead.

Hence the phrase, a faithful Eckhardt, who warneth everyone.

Eclectics (from Gr. ek-legein, to choose, select). The name given to those who do not attach themselves to any special school (especially philosophers and painters), but pick and choose from various systems, selecting and harmonizing those doctrines, methods, etc., which suit them.

École des beaux-arts (Fr., literally, school of the beautiful arts). Endowed school of fine arts in Paris, founded in 1648.

École des femmes, L' (The School for Wives). A comedy by Molière. For the plot, see AGNES.

École des maris, L' (The School for Husbands). A comedy by Molière (1661). For the plot, see SGANARELLE.

Ecstatic Doctor. See under DOCTOR.

Ector, Sir. In Arthurian romance, the foster-father of King Arthur, and father of Sir Kay. Tennyson gives this rôle to Sir Anton instead.

The child was delivered unto Merlin, and he bare it forth unto Sir Ector, and made a holy man to christen him, and named him Arthur; and so Sir Ector's wife nourished him with her own pap.—Malory, Le Morte d'Arthur, I, iii.

Edda. This name—which may be from Edda, the great-grandmother in the Old Norse poem Rigsthul, or from the old Norse odhr, poetry—is given to two separate works or collections, viz. The Elder or Poetic Edda, and The Younger Edda, or Prose Edda of Snorri. The first-named was discovered in 1643 by an Icelandic bishop, and consists of mythological poems dating from the 9th century and supposed to have been collected in the 13th century. They are of unknown authorship, but were erroneously attributed to Saemund Sigfusson (d. 1133), and this has hence sometimes been called Saemund's Edda. The Younger Edda is a work in prose and verse by Snorri Sturluson (died 1241), and forms a guide to poets and poetry. It consists of the Gylfaginning (an epitome of Scandinavian mythology), the Bragaraeour or sayings of Bragi, the Skaldskaparmal (a glossary of poetical expressions, etc.), the Hattatal (a list of meters, with examples of all known forms of verse), with a preface, history of the origin of poetry, lists of poets, etc.

Eddington, Sir Arthur Stanley (1882-1944). English astrophysicist. His principal fields as an astronomer are relativity, stellar evolution and the motions of stars. Author of many works, the best known non-technical book being The Nature of the Physical World (1928).

Eddy, Mary Morse Baker (1821-1910). Founder of the Church of Christ, Scientist (1879). Influenced by Dr. P. P. Quimby. Mrs. Eddy's teachings took a religious bent, and Dr. Quimby's son later repudiated any connection between Dr. Quimby and Christian Science. The Christian Science Church is strongly opposed to mesmerism and similar forms of autosuggestion. Mrs. Eddy also wrote Science and Health, with Key to the Scriptures and founded Christian Science Publishing Society.

Eddy, Sherwood (1871-). American publicist and Y.M.C.A. official (till 1931). Joined Socialist Party and worked and lectured much among students of Near and Far East. He has been called "a fearless and dynamic writer and speaker."

edelweiss (Ger., literally, "noble white"). A small perennial herb growing in the Alps and Pyrenees. Its blossom is the floral emblem of Switzerland. Coveted by tourists as proof of alpine prowess because it grows principally in situations difficult of access.

Eden. Paradise, the country and garden in which Adam and Eve were placed by God (Gen. ii. 15). The word means delight, pleasure. It is often used to describe a place of charming scenery. In Dickens' MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT Eden was a dismal swamp somewhere in the United States, the climate of which generally proves fatal to the poor dupes who are induced to settle there through the swindling transactions of General Scadder and General Choke. So dismal and dangerous is the place, that even Mark Tapley is satisfied to have found at last a place where he can "come out jolly with credit."

Eden, Robert Anthony (1897-). English statesman. Resigned as secretary of state for foreign affairs in disagreement with policy of Chamberlain government after Munich conference. Secretary of state for dominions (1939-1940), war secretary (1940), again secretary of state for foreign affairs (1940). Important in Churchill government and England's representative at the San Francisco Conference.

Edenhall, Luck of. A goblet which is the property of the Musgrave family of Edenhall in England. It is said to have been left by the little folk at St. Cuthbert's Well. The luck of the family depends on its possessing the cup.

If this cup either break or fall,
Farewell the luck of Eden Hall.

One of the best-known ballads by UHLAND (Ger., 1787-1862) is called Das Glück von Edenhall.

Ederle, Gertrude (1907-). American swimmer. First woman to swim across English Channel (Aug. 6, 1926). Time (from France to England): 14 hrs 31 min.

Edgar. The hero of SCOTT'S BRIDE OF LAMMERMOOR, the master of Ravenswood, son of Allan of Ravenswood, a shabby Scotch nobleman. The story also forms the substance of Donizetti's opera, Lucia di Lammermoor. In the novel Edgar perishes in the quicksands at Kelpies Flow, but in the opera he stabs himself.

Edgar Huntley, Or Memoirs of a Sleepwalker. A once-famous detective story by Charles Brockden BROWN (1801).

Edgett, Edwin Francis (1867-1946). For thirty-seven years, literary editor of the Boston Evening Transcript; dean of American book editors at the time of his death. Author of an autobiography, I Speak for Myself; wrote more than eighty articles for the Dictionary of American Biography. Originally joined the Transcript staff, upon graduation from Harvard (1894), as dramatic critic and remained always interested in the theater.

Edgeworth, Maria (1767-1849). English novelist, author of CASTLE RACKRENT (1800) and other novels, most dealing with Irish life, among them Belinda (1801); THE ABSENTEE (1812); Ormond (1817); Frank (1822); Harry and Lucy (1825).

Edison, Thomas Alva (1847-1931). Famous American inventor. Patented over a thousand inventions, including the incandescent electric lamp, the microphone, the phonograph, the Edison accumulator, etc., etc. In 1913 he produced talking motion pictures. His biography is a typical example of the "story of a poor boy who became famous." At the age of twelve he was a newsboy on the Grand Trunk Line running into Detroit. When he died, his name had become synonymous with "inventive genius." He is said to have defined genius as 99% perspiration and 1% inspiration.

Edman, Irwin (1896-). American philosopher. Professor at Columbia since 1935. His philosophy has been called a blend of Plato, Santayana, and Manhattan. His Philosopher's Holiday (1938) is a semi-autobiographical causerie.

Edmonds, Walter Dumaux (1903-). American novelist specializing in stories about his native state of New York. Rome Haul (1929), Mostly Canallers (1934), Drums along the Mohawk (1936), etc.

Edmund. In Shakespeare's KING LEAR, the natural son of the Earl of Gloucester. Both Goneril and Regan, daughters of King Lear, are in love with him. Regan, on the death of her husband, plans to marry Edmund, but Goneril, out of jealousy, poisons her.

Edricson, Alleyne. Hero of A. Conan Doyle's WHITE COMPANY.

Education of Henry Adams, The. An autobiographical work by Henry ADAMS, privately printed in 1907 and again issued in 1918. It is subtitled A Study of 20th-Century Multiplicity, and serves as a companion to MONT-SAINT-MICHEL AND CHARTRES. In it, the author uses his own life as an example of the difficulties of the individual in contact with a hostile and complex world. The book presents a vivid picture of the time in which Adams lived and the places he visited, and gives penetrating analyses of people and events along with the author's subtle, intricate, and thoroughly pessimistic ideas on the course of historical development.

Edward. A famous English folk-BALLAD of the "domestic relations" type, considered one of the best examples of its form. Through a dramatic dialogue structure, the bitter hatred of Edward, a son who has killed his father, is revealed to be directed against his mother, the other person who participates in the dialogue, who has apparently urged him to his deed. A poem by Robinson JEFFERS, Such Counsels You Gave to Me, is a modern version of the old ballad.

Edward II. King of England (1284-1327). Christopher MARLOWE's historical drama of this title (1594) is generally considered his masterpiece.

Edward IV. King of England (1442-1483). He is introduced into Shakespeare's historical dramas, 2 and 3 Henry VI and Richard III and appears in Scott's Anne of Geierstein.

Edward VI. King of England (1537-1553). As Prince of Wales he is the "prince" in Mark Twain's story for children, THE PRINCE AND THE PAUPER.

Edwards, Harry Stillwell (1855-1938). American writer and journalist. Awarded Chicago Record $10,000 prize (1896) for Sons and Fathers. Wrote excellent Negro stories.

Edwards, Jonathan (1703-1758). American philosopher, mystic, and Puritan theologian. In his early youth he was a precociously brilliant scholar, showing a keen interest in scientific observation. His early philosophical thought tended toward IDEALISM under the influence of LOCKE, and many of his ideas resembled those of BERKELEY, whose work he did not at that time know. As a Puritan clergyman, after his conversion to CALVINISM, Edwards was one of the most violent and merciless exponents of the doctrines of predestination and the total depravity of mankind. His famous sermon, Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God (1741), is considered the apotheosis of Puritanism in its expression of hatred and contempt for erring humanity. Edwards was prominent in the GREAT AWAKENING and defended it in a series of controversial pamphlets exchanged with critics of the movement. Among his works are A Faithful Narrative of the Surprising Work of God in the Conversion of Many Hundred Souls in Northampton (1737); Discourse on Various Important Subjects (1738); The Distinguishing Marks of the Work of the Spirit of God (1741); An Inquiry into the Modern Prevailing Notions Respecting that Freedom of the Will Which Is Supposed to be Essential to Moral Agency (1754); Dissertation Concerning the End for Which God Created the World (1765). Edwards is regarded as the greatest intellect of pre-Revolutionary America.

Edwin and Angelina. The hero and heroine of a famous ballad by Oliver Goldsmith (1767), called The Hermit. Angelina is the daughter of a wealthy lord "beside the Tyne." Her hand is sought in marriage by many suitors, among whom is Edwin, "who had neither wealth nor power, but he had both wisdom and worth." Angelina loves him, but "trifled with him," and Edwin, in despair, leaves her, and retires from the world. One day, Angelina, in boy's clothes, asks hospitality at a hermit's cell; she is kindly entertained, tells her tale, and the hermit proves to be Edwin. From that hour they never part again.

A correspondent accuses me of having taken this ballad from The Friar of Orders Gray . . . but if there is any resemblance between the two, Mr. Percy's ballad is taken from mine. I read my ballad to Mr. Percy, and he told me afterwards that he had taken my plan to form the fragments of Shakespeare into a ballad of his own.—Signed, O. Goldsmith (1767).

Two familiar lines are from this ballad:

Man wants but little here below,
Nor wants that little long.

Edyrn. Son of Nudd; called the "Sparrowhawk," in Tennyson's Marriage of Geraint (Idylls of the King), which was founded on the story of Geraint, Son of Erbin, in Lady Charlotte Guest's translation of the MABINOGION. He ousted Yniol from his earldom, and tried to win Enid, the earl's daughter, but was overthrown by Geraint and sent to the court of King Arthur, where his whole nature was completely changed, and "subdued to that gentleness which, when it weds with manhood, makes a man."

Effendi. A Turkish title, about equal to the English "Mr." or "Esq." but always following the name. It is given to emirs, men of learning, the high priests of mosques, etc.

Efficiency Engineer, The. Title of a long poem by Florence Converse. The duties of an efficiency engineer involve the scientific analysis of business management with a view to its more efficient operation and the elimination of waste.

effigy. An image or representation of a person. The term is used most commonly in phrases like "to burn or hang in effigy." The maltreatment of an image in place of the absent culprit can be linked up with the old belief that a thing is vitally connected with its representation and can be affected through it.

e.g. (Lat. exempli gratia). By way of example; for instance. Often read as "example given."

Egan, Maurice Francis (1852-1924). American writer and diplomat and journalist. Created the character of Sexton Maginnis, an Irish-American about whom he wrote a number of stories (1902-1905).

Egan, Pierce (1772-1849). English sports writer, author of the monthly serial Boxiana or Sketches of Modern Pugilism (1818-1824); Book of Sports (1832); etc.

Egeria. In Roman legend, the nymph who instructed Numa in his wise legislation; hence, a counsellor, adviser, especially a woman advising and influencing a statesman.

Egeus. Father of Hermia in Shakespeare's MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

Eggleston, Edward (1837-1902). American novelist and Methodist minister, known for his novels depicting pioneer life in Indiana in a realistic manner. The most famous is THE HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER (1871). Others include The End of the World (1872); The Circuit Rider (1874); Roxy (1878); and The Hoosier Schoolboy (1883).

Egil. Brother of Wieland or Volund the Vulcan of Northern mythology. Egil was a great archer, and in the Saga of Thidrik there is a tale told of him the exact counterpart of the famous story about William TELL and the apple.

Eglamour. In Shakespeare's TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA, the person who aids Silvia, daughter of the Duke of Milan, in her escape.

Eglantine, Madame. The name of the PRIORESS in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales.

Egmont. A historical tragedy by GOETHE (1788). The hero is the Count of Egmont (1522-1568), a Flemish general and patriot who was executed for his opposition to Philip II. Goethe has departed from history by making him fall in love with the beautiful but low-born Clarchen.

Egoist, The. A novel by George MEREDITH (1879). The "egoist" is Sir Willoughby Patterne of Patterne Hall, possessed of good looks, wealth and all the virtues except humility and a sense of humor. He invites his fiancée, Clara Middleton, and her father, a clergyman who loves good food and wine, to spend a month at the Hall where he is the idol of his two old aunts. Clara, "a rogue in porcelain" as Mrs. Mountstuart Jenkinson, the clever widow who regulates the social life of the countryside, pronounces her, is soon longing to extricate herself from the attentions of her self-centered lover. She is thankful for the diversion of Patterne's gay Irish guest, De Craye, who makes violent love to her, but gives her confidence to Vernon Whitford, Patterne's cousin and secretary, tutor to the lazy and impish young Crossjay. Patterne, who has had a sad experience previously, is in mortal dread of being jilted by Clara and to preserve his dignity proposes to his former worshiper Laetitia Dale, whom he had made use of for this same purpose before. Many complications arise, but Vernon and Clara finally confess their love and Patterne is forced to plead with the now thoroughly disillusioned Laetitia to become the mistress of Patterne Hall.

Egyptian bondage. Cruel servitude, such as that of the Israelites in Egypt.

Egyptian darkness. Great darkness, from Exod. x. 22.

Egyptian disposition. A thieving disposition. Egyptian, as used in this phrase, is the same as GYPSY.

Egyptian Solomon. Rameses III (ca. 1200 B.C.) of the 20th Egyptian dynasty.

Ehrenbourg, Ilya (1891-). Russian novelist, poet and journalist. Joined Bolshevik Party in 1906. Best-known for Out of Chaos (1934) and his thrilling news dispatches from the front during the Russo-German war. Excels by his wit, his caustic satire, and skill in giving shallow thoughts the appearance of depth. He has been called a modern HEINE. Flew to U.S. (1946) with Konstantin SIMONOV and General Mikhail Galaktionov to be interviewed by American Society of Newspaper Editors.

Ehrlich, Leonard (1905-). American novelist, best known for a fictionalized biography of John Brown called God's Angry Man (1932).

eidillion or cidyllion (Gr.). A short pastoral poem. Also a form of comedy.

Eiffel Tower. An iron tower 984.25 feet high built for the Paris Exposition of 1885 on the Champ de Mars. It was named for the engineer Alexandre Gustave Eiffel (1832-1923) who also built the framework for the Statue of Liberty and designed the locks for the Panama Canal.

Eightfold Path. See BUDDHISM.

Eighth wonder of the world. See under WONDER.

Eight Immortals. In Taoist mythology, eight characters who have found the elixir of life.

Eiker, Mathilde (1893-). American novelist. Mrs. Mason's Daughters (1925), etc.

Eike von Repgow (13th century). A Saxon noble, compiler of the Sachsenspiegel, the first attempt (in Latin) at codifying the German law.

Eikon Basiliké (Gr., "royal likeness"). A book originally published in 1649 (1648?) as by Charles I, purporting to set forth the private meditations, prayers, thoughts on the political situation, etc., of the king during and before his imprisonment. Its authorship was claimed by John Gauden at the time of the Restoration (when he was seeking to obtain a bishopric, and was made Bishop of Worcester), but who was the actual author is still an open question.

... an incomparable picture of a steadfast prince, who acknowledges his weakness yet asserts the purity of his motives, the truth of his political and religious principles, the supremacy of his conscience. Such a dramatic presentment would not be above the ability of Gauden, and it is quite possible that he had before him, when he wrote, actual meditations, prayers and memoranda of the king, which perished when they had been copied and had found their place in the masterly mosaic.—W. H. Hutton, in Camb. Hist. of Eng. Lit., vol. VII, ch. vi (1911).

Eilshemius, Louis Michel (1864-1941). Amazingly versatile American painter and writer. Famous only in his later years.

Eine feste Burg (Ger. A mighty fortress). Name and first words of a hymnic version of Psalm xlii by Martin LUTHER.

Einstein, Albert (1879-). Famous European theoretical physicist. Enunciated theory of relativity (1905), etc. Nobel prize for physics (1922). Born in Germany, Swiss citizen at the age of fifteen, re-naturalized German citizen, and finally, as a refugee from Nazi Germany, naturalized American.

Eisenhower, Dwight David (1890-). American army man, native of Texas. Commander-in-Chief of U.S. forces in European theater and Lieutenant General (1942). Commander of allied forces in invasion of Northwest Africa (Nov. 1942). Promoted to general, and named supreme allied commander in North Africa (Feb. 1943). In command of invasion of Sicily and Italy. Transferred from Mediterranean to become Supreme Allied Commander in Western Europe. Organized eisteddfod (Welsh, "a sessions," from eistedd, to sit.). The meetings of the Welsh bards and others now held annually for the encouragement of Welsh literature and music.

D-Day invasion of France and Allied landing in Normandy, etc. Chief of Staff (1945). Resigned (1948) to become president of Columbia University.

Ekdal, Hjalmer. A character in Ibsen's WILD DUCK. His supposed daughter, Hedwig, is the heroine.

Elaine. In Arthurian romance the name is given to two maidens, both of whom were in love with Launcelot. The first was the daughter of King Pelles, who wished her to marry Launcelot. When Launcelot refused, Elaine was made by magic to assume the form of Guinevere. She became, through this deception, the mother of Sir Galahad.

The other Elaine is known as the "lily maid of ASTOLAT" who in Tennyson's Lancelot and Elaine (Idylls of the King), in which he follows Malory (Bk. xviii, ch. 9-20), loved Sir Launcelot "with that love which was her doom." Sir Launcelot's love was bestowed on the queen, and Elaine, realizing the hopelessness of her situation, died. By her request her dead body was placed on a barge; a lily was in her right hand, and a letter avowing her love and showing the innocence of Launcelot in the left. An old servitor rowed, and when the barge stopped at the palace entrance, Arthur ordered the body to be brought in. The letter was read and Arthur directed that the maiden should be buried like a queen, with her sad story blazoned on her tomb. Tennyson has told her story in his Lady of Shalott also.

élan vital. See under CREATIVE EVOLUTION.

El Dorado (Sp. the gilded). Originally the name given to the supposed King of Manoa, the fabulous city of enormous wealth localized by the early explorers on the Amazon. He was said to be covered with oil and then powdered with gold dust, an operation performed from time to time so that he was permanently, and literally, gilded. Many expeditions, both from Spain and England (two of which were led by Sir Walter Raleigh) tried to discover this king, and the name was later transferred to his supposed territory. Hence any extraordinarily rich region, or vast accumulation of gold, precious stones, or similar wealth.

Edgar Allan Poe wrote a poem called Eldorado (1849). Voltaire makes Candide visit El Dorado in his satiric romance, CANDIDE, and Milton describes it in Paradise Lost vi. 411.

Eleanor Crosses. The crosses erected by Edward I to commemorate his queen, Eleanor, whose body was brought from Nottinghamshire to Westminster for burial. At each of the following places, where the body rested, a cross was set up: Lincoln, Newark, Grantham, Leicester, Stamford, Geddington, Northampton, Stony Stratford, Woburn, Dunstable, St. Albans, Waltham, West Cheap (Cheapside) and Westminster.

Eleanor of Aquitaine (1122?-1204). Queen of Louis VII of France (married 1137, divorced under pretext of consanguinity (1152) and of Henry II of England (1152-1204). Known as "Damsel of Brittany." As heiress of Guienne or Aquitaine, she brought to England one half of Southern France which possession started the contention between France and England that lasted for some four hundred years. Mother of Richard Cœur de Lion, John Lackland and other sons. Backed rebellion of her sons against her unfaithful husband and was held in honorable confinement by her husband for twelve years (1173-1185). Secured succession of Richard and protected his interests from his brother John while Richard was on a crusade. Protected her son King John's interests against her grandson Arthur. Published a compilation of maritime laws called the Laws of Oléron.

Elberich. The most famous dwarf of German romance. See ALBERICH.

Elderton, William. A lawyer and actor of the Elizabethan period, known for his composition of BROADSIDE BALLADS. Many jokes were made concerning his red nose.

Elector (Ger. Kurfurst). A prince who had a vote in the election of the Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire. In 1806 Napoleon broke up the old Empire, and the College of Electors was dissolved.

the Great Elector. Frederick William of Brandenburg (1620-1688).

Electra. (1) One of the PLEIADES, wife of Dardanus. She is known as "the Lost Pleiad," for it is said that she disappeared a little before the Trojan war, that she might be saved the mortification of seeing the ruin of her beloved city. She showed herself occasionally to mortal eye, but always in the guise of a comet.

(2) Another, better known Electra of classic myth is the daughter of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra, sister of Iphigenia and of Orestes. She assisted Orestes in avenging their father's death by slaying their mother, Clytemnestra. For the use of this legend in drama, see ORESTES.

* Electra complex. In psychoanalysis, the love of a daughter for her father. The female form of an Oedipus complex.

Eleemon. The hero of Southey's ballad, ALL FOR LOVE OR A SINNER SAVED.

elegiacs. Verse consisting of alternate HEXAMETERS and PENTAMETERS, so called because it was the meter in which the elegies of the Greeks and Romans were usually written. See also DISTICH. In Latin it was commonly used by Ovid, Catullus, Tibullus, and others. The following is a good specimen of English elegiacs:

Man with inviolate caverns, impregnable holds in his nature,
Depths no storm can pierce, pierced with a shaft of the sun:
Man that is galled with his confines, and burdened yet more with his vastness, Born too great for his ends, never at peace with his goal.
Sir William Watson, Hymn to the Sea (1899)

elegy. A poem of lament over someone who is dead. Among the great English elegies are Milton's LYCIDAS, Shelley's ADONAIs, Tennyson's IN MEMORIAM and Matthew Arnold's THYRSIS. A reflective poem in plaintive or sorrowful mood is also called an elegy. Gray's Elegy in a Country Churchyard (1750) is the most celebrated of this latter type.

element. A word of unexplained origin that cannot be traced beyond Latin elementum. The most appealing (though probably incorrect) theory derives it from LMN as a name for the alphabet, which agrees nicely with the meaning "rudiments of a thing," quite parallel to the modern ABC, as "the ABC of physics," etc.

The meaning "ultimate constituent" is at the base of the distinction of the four elements fire, water, air, and earth, which were considered by the ancients to constitute the building materials of the universe. From this, modern chemistry derived its use of element which, until the breakdown of atoms came about, could be defined as a kind of matter not decomposable into other kinds.

Elena. Heroine of Turgenev's On the Eve.

elephant.

King of the White Elephant. The proudest title borne by the old kings of Ava and Siam. In Ava the sacred white elephant bore the title of "lord," and had a minister of high rank to superintend his household.

only an elephant can bear an elephant's load. An Indian proverb: Only a great man can do the work of a great man; also, the burden is more than I can bear; it is a load fit for an elephant.

land of the White Elephant. Siam.

have a white elephant to keep. To have an expensive and unprofitable dignity to support, or some possession the expense or responsibility of which is more than it is worth. The allusion is to the story of a King of Siam who used to make a present of a white elephant to courtiers whom he wished to ruin.

Elephant in the Moon, The. A satire by the 17th-century Samuel BUTLER, directed against the ROYAL SOCIETY. In it, what is apparently an elephant is discovered on the face of the moon as seen through the telescopes of the time, but it is revealed to be only a mouse which was somehow imprisoned in the instrument.

Eleusinian Mysteries. The religious rites in honor of Demeter or Ceres, performed originally at Eleusis, Attica, but later at Athens as part of the state religion. There were Greater and Lesser Eleusinia, the former being celebrated between harvest and seed-time and the latter in early spring. Little is known about the details, but the rites included sea bathing, processions, religious dramas, etc., and the initiated attained thereby a happy life beyond the grave.

eleven.

at the eleventh hour. Just in time; from the parable in Matt. xx.

Eleven Thousand Virgins. See URSULA under SAINT.

elf. Originally a dwarfish being of Teutonic mythology, possessed of magical powers which it used either for the benefit or to the detriment of mankind. Later the name was restricted to a malignant kind of imp, and later still to those airy creatures that dance on the grass in the full moon, have fair golden hair, sweet musical voices, magic harps, etc.

Elgar, Sir Edward (1857-1934). English composer. His most notable compositions include the oratorios DREAM OF GERONTIUS (1900); The Apostles (1903); Pomp and Circumstance, march (1902); The Kingdom (1906); Enigma Variations (1899). Symphonies, songs, sonatas, etc.

Elgin marbles. A collection of Greek sculptures, mainly of the Phidian School (see PHIDIAS), including the bulk of the surviving plastic decoration of the Parthenon. Removed from Athens (1803-1812) by Lord Elgin and purchased by the British Government (1816). Now in the British Museum, London.

Elia. The assumed name of Charles LAMB, author of the Essays of Elia, contributed to the London Magazine between 1820 and 1825.

Elidure. A legendary king of Britain, who, according to some accounts, was advanced to the throne in place of his elder brother, Arthgallo (or Artegal), supposed by him to be dead. Arthgallo, after a long exile, returned to his country, and Elidure resigned to him the throne. Wordsworth has a poem on the subject (Artegal and Elidure); and Milton (History of Britain, Bk. i) says that Elidure had "a mind so noble, and so moderate, as is almost incredible to have been ever found."

Eligius, St. See ELOI under SAINTS.

Elihu. In the book of Job, the young man who attempts to reason with Job about his troubles after the three false comforters have finished speaking.

Elijah. In the Old Testament, a prophet who lived in the days of Ahab, king of Israel. During a drought which he foretold, he was fed by ravens by the brook Cherith (1 Kings xviii. 6). He opposed the prophets of Baal and challenged them to a dramatic contest on Mount Carmel, where two altars were built, one to Baal and one to Jehovah. Baal was deaf to the repeated cries of his prophets, but Jehovah answered Elijah by sending fire from heaven. The story of Elijah's discouragement under the juniper tree is well known. Elijah did not die, but was carried up to heaven in a whirlwind. He cast his mantle on Elisha whom he had anointed prophet in his stead; hence Elijah's mantle signifies succession to any office.

Eliot, Charles William (1834-1926). American educator. President of Harvard (1869-1909). Helped establish Radcliffe College for women (1894). Developed elective system of undergraduate courses. Editor of the FIVE-FOOT SHELF of the Harvard Classics.

Eliot, George. Pseudonym of Mary Ann Evans (1819-1880). English novelist, known for her scholarly accomplishments, her intellectual power, her studies of character, and her treatment of social problems in her novels. Her works include SCENES FROM CLERICAL LIFE (1857); ADAM BEDE (1859); THE MILL ON THE FLOSS (1860); STILAS MARNER (1861); ROMOLA (1863); FELIX HOLT (1866); MIDDLE-MARCH (1871-1872); and DANIEL DERONDA (1876). George Eliot was opposed to organized religion, and was widely criticized during her lifetime for her unconventional alliance with George Henry Lewes, a distinguished scholar and critic of her time.

Eliot, George Fielding (1894-). Army officer, serving with an Australian contingent in World War I, writer on military affairs, and radio commentator. Author of The Ram-parts We Watch (1938), and Bombs Bursting in Air (1939).

Eliot, Sir Thomas, see ELYOT, Sir THOMAS.

Eliot, Thomas Stearns (1888-). American poet and critic, beginning in 1914 a resident of England, of which he became a naturalized subject in 1927. Descendant of Sir Thomas ELYOT. Because of the disillusionment and despair and the repugnance toward the industrial and materialistic civilization of the 20th century which Eliot expressed in his most famous poems, The Love Song of J. Alfred PRUFROCK, THE WASTE LAND, and THE HOLLOW MEN, he became the most influential poet of his generation, being considered the spokesman of the young writers disillusioned by World War I and frustrated in their search for culture in the U.S. Eliot became associated with the Anglo-Catholic Church in the late 1920's and began to affirm religious orthodoxy in his writings, announcing himself to be, as well as "an Anglo-Catholic in religion," "a classicist in literature and a royalist in politics." During the period of the 1930's, he was attacked by sociological critics for his religious and academic leanings. He received the NOBEL PRIZE for literature in 1948.

In his poetry Eliot shows the influence of the Elizabethans, the METAPHYSICAL POETS, and the French Symbolists (see SYMBOLISM); in ideas, that of the Harvard Humanists (see HUMANISM), Henry ADAMS, T. E. HULME, the 17th-century English theologians, and DANTE Alighieri. His poetry is marked by irony, trenchancy of phrasing, a dramatic use of symbols, and wide learning, which often takes the form of the abstraction of whole passages from an older source for incorporation into a current poem by the author. Eliot's criticism has been praised for its keenness of analysis and its insight, and especially favors Dryden, Elizabethan drama, early 17th-century figures, and the Middle Ages.

Eliot's volumes of poetry are PRUFROCK, AND OTHER OBSERVATIONS (1917); Poems (1920); THE WASTE LAND (1922); THE HOLLOW MEN (1925); Poems, 1909-1925 (1926); ASH WEDNESDAY (1930); SWEENEY AGONISTES; FRAGMENTS OF AN ARISTOPHANIC MELODRAMA (1932); THE ROCK (1934), MURDER IN THE CATHEDRAL (1935), and THE FAMILY REUNION (1939), poetic dramas; Collected Poems (1936); OLD POSSUM'S BOOK OF PRACTICAL CATS (1939), a collection of humorous verse on cats; East Coker (1940); Burnt Norton (1936); The Dry Salvages (1941). His criticism includes TRADITION AND THE INDIVIDUAL TALENT; The Sacred Wood (1920); Homage to John Dryden (1924); Shakespeare and the Stoicism of Seneca (1928); For Lancelot Andrewes (1928); Dante (1929); Thoughts After Lambeth (1931); Selected Essays (1932); The Use of Poetry and the Use of Criticism (1933); After Strange Gods (1934); Elizabethan Essays (1934); Essays Ancient and Modern (1936); The Idea of a Christian Society (1939); Points of View (1941). Eliot was editor of THE CRITERION for a number of years. For a critical discussion, cf. The Achievement of T. S. Eliot, by F. O. Matthiessen, and The Talent of T. S. Eliot, by G. Williamson.

Elisha. One of the prophets of the Old Testament, successor to Elijah. He worked many miracles. See NAAMAN, SHUNAMMITE.

Elissa. Step-sister of Medina and Perissa, and mistress of Hudibras in Spenser's Faerie Queene (II, ii). She typifies moral deficiency and moroseness; she evermore did seeme

As discontent for want of merrth or meat;
No solace could her Paramour intreat
Her once to show, ne court nor dalliance,
But with bent lowering browes, as she would threat,
She scould, and frowd with froward countenance,
Unworthy of faire ladies comely governance,
Faerie Queene, II, ii, 35.

Elivagar. In Scandinavian mythology, a cold venomous stream which issued from Niflheim, in the abyss called the Ginnunga Gap, and hardened into layer upon layer of ice.

elixir of life. The potion of the alchemists that would prolong life indefinitely. It was imagined sometimes as a dry drug, sometimes as a fluid. Elixir (Arabic, a powder for sprinkling on wounds) also meant among alchemists the philosopher's stone, the tincture for transmuting metals, etc., and the name is now given to any sovereign remedy for disease—especially one of a "quack" character.

Eliza. The lady to whom Laurence STERNE addressed his Letters to Eliza (1775). She was a Mrs. Draper, wife of a counsellor of Bombay.

Elizabeth. (1) The heroine of Wagner's opera TANNHÄUSER.

(2) Queen of England (1533-1603). Succeeded Mary on the throne, 1558. Signed death warrant of Mary Queen of Scots, saw Spanish Armada defeated, gave her name to one of the greatest literary ages of England.

She is a prominent character in Scott's KENILWORTH. According to Scott her character was "strangely compounded of the strongest masculine sense with those foibles which are chiefly supposed proper to the female sex. Her subjects had the full benefit of her virtues, which far predominated over her weaknesses, but her courtiers and those about her person had often to sustain sudden and embarrassing turns of caprice, and the sallies of a temper which was both jealous and despotic."

In the 20th century there was a resurgence of interest in Queen Elizabeth, marked by such best-selling biographies as Elizabeth and Essex, by Lytton STRACHEY, and such popular plays as Elizabeth the Queen, by Maxwell ANDERSON. See ELIZABETHAN; VIRGIN QUEEN.

(3) Countess Russell, nee Mary Annette Beauchamp (1866-1941). English novelist, best known as the author of Elizabeth and Her German Garden (1898), a best-selling autobiographical novel in diary form, describing her life in Germany as the wife of the Prussian Count von Arnim. In it, she calls her husband "the Man of Wrath," and her children are the "April," "May," and "June" babies. She wrote popular novels, gay and lightly satirical, including The Pastor's Wife (1910); Vera (1921); The Enchanted April (1922), which was dramatized as a successful play; Love (1925); and Father (1931). "Elizabeth" was a cousin of Katherine MANSFIELD. Her second husband, Francis, second Earl Russell, was a brother of Bertrand RUSSELL.

(4) Queen of Rumania (1843-1916). Writer under the pseudonym of CARMEN SYLVA.

(5) Elizabeth Angela Marguerite Bowes-Lyon (1900-). Full name of Queen of George VI, King of England.

(6) Elizabeth Stuart (1596-1662). Called "Queen of Hearts." Eldest daughter of James I of England. Her marriage to Frederick V of Bohemia commemorated in Epithalamium by John Donne. Mother of brilliant children: Elizabeth of Bohemia, abbess of Herford; Prince Rupert of the Rhine; Sophia, electress of Hanover, etc. The son of the last-named was George I of England, 1st of the kings of the House of Hanover. Elizabeth is also celebrated in a poem by Sir Henry Wotton.

Elizabeth or the Exiles of Siberia. A novel by Sophie Cottin (Fr. 1805), concerning a Polish family exiled in Siberia for political reasons. Elizabeth made a long and dangerous journey on foot to seek pardon for her parents from the Czar Alexander at the Russian court.

Elizabethan. After the style of things in the reign of Queen Elizabeth (1558-1603). Elizabethan architecture is a mixture of Gothic and Italian, prevalent in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I, and when referring to literature Elizabethan is generally held to include the writers of the time of James I. By Elizabethan drama is meant the drama of the period from the accession of Queen Elizabeth until the closing of the theaters in 1642.

Elia or Alla, King. The husband of CUNSTANCE in Chaucer's Man of Law's Tale, one of the Canterbury Tales.

Elle et Lui. A novel by George SAND (1859) depicting the author's relations with Alfred de Musset twenty-five years before. Alfred de Musset had died two years before the publication of this book, but his brother Paul wrote Lui et Elle in protest at George Sand's interpretation of her breaking off with De Musset.

Ellida. Heroine of Ibsen's drama, THE LADY FROM THE SEA.

Ellinham, Gertrude. The heroine of Bronson Howard's drama, SHENANDOAH.

Elliott, Anne. The gentle heroine of Jane Austen's PERSUASION.

Elliott, Ebenezer (1781-1849). English poet called the "Corn-Law Rhymers." Active Chartist. Wrote Corn-Law Rhymes (1831); The Splendid Village (1833-1835); and many miscellaneous poems.

Ellis, Havelock (1859-1939). English author and literary critic, best known for his studies in sexual psychology, a subject to which his contributions were considerable, although he emphasized biology at a time when the clinical methods of the Freudians (see FREUD, SIGMUND) were attracting most attention. Ellis' works include The New Spirit (1891), critical literary essays; Studies in the Psychology of Sex (6 vols.; 1900-1910); Man and Woman (1894); Affirmations (1897); A Study of British Genius (1904); The Soul of Spain (1908); The Philosophy of Conflict (1919); The Dance of Life (1923), his most popular book, in which the dance is made to symbolize the vital rhythm of the universe; Sonnets, with Folk-Songs from the Spanish (1925), poetry; The World of Dreams (1926); Marriage of Today and Tomorrow (1929); The Fountain of Life (1930); From Rousseau to Proust (1935); and My Life (1939), an autobiography.

Ellison, Kitty. Heroine of W. D. Howells' CHANCE ACQUAINTANCE. She also appears in Their Wedding Journey.

Ellsberg, Edward (1891-). American naval officer and sea writer. Director of salvage operations for raising U.S. Submarine S-51 from sea bottom (1926). On the Bottom (1929), Thirty Fathoms Deep (1930), Pigboats (1931; made into the moving picture, Hell Below); Hell on Ice (1938); Captain Paul (1941; see JONES, JOHN PAUL).

Ellsworth, Lincoln (1880-). American polar explorer and writer. Transpolar flight in airship Norge with Amundsen and Nobile (1926). Transarctic submarine expedition with Hubert Wilkins (1931). His 2300-mile airplane flight across Antarctic (1935) enabled him to claim 300,000 square miles of previously undiscovered land for the U.S. (roughly one-tenth of present area).

Ellwood, Thomas (1639-1714). English Quaker. Milton's friend and Latin reader. Said to have suggested writing of Paradise Regained (1665). Author of several books, among them his autobiography (1714).

Elm City. New Haven. See under CITY.

Elm Tree on the Mall, The. A novel by Anatole FRANCE. See also under BERGERET.

Elohim. The plural form of the Heb. eloah, God, sometimes used to denote heathen gods collectively (Chemosh, Dagon, Baal, etc.), but more frequently used as an intensive singular denoting one god, or God Himself.

Elohistic and Jehovistic Scriptures Elohim and Jehovah (Jahveh or Yahvè) are two of the most usual of the many names given by the ancient Hebrews to the Deity, and the fact that they are both used with interchangeable senses in the Pentateuch gave rise to the theory, widely held by Hebraists and Biblical critics, that these books were written at two widely different periods. The Elohistic paragraphs, being more simple, more primitive, more narrative, and more pastoral, are held to be the older; while the later Jehovistic paragraphs, which indicate a knowledge of geography and history, seem to exalt the priestly office, and are altogether of a more elaborate character, were subsequently enwoven with these. This theory was originally stated by Jean Astruc, the French scholar, in his Conjectures sur les mémoires originaux, dont il parait que Moïse s'est servi pour composer le livre de la Genèse (1753), a book which formed the starting-point of all modern criticism of the Pentateuch.

Eloi or Eligius, St. See under SAINT.

Eloisa. The supposed writer of Pope's Epistle from Eloisa to Abelard (1717). She is better known as HÉLOÏSE.

Elpenor. In the Odyssey, a member of the crew of ULYSSES who falls from a roof and is killed, preceding the others on their visit to Hades. See also DIGNAM, PADDY.

Elsa, princess of Brabant. Bride of LOHENGRIN.

Elshender. Scotch form of Alexander. One of the names given to Sir Edward Mauley, hero of Scott's BLACK DWARF and usually known as "the Black Dwarf."

Elsie. The heroine of Longfellow's Golden Legend, a farmer's daughter who offers to sacrifice her life to cure Prince Henry of Hoheneck of leprosy but becomes his bride instead. The tale first appeared as a medieval romance called HEINRICH VON AUE.

Elsie Dinsmore. Title of one of the 26 "Elsie Books" by Martha Finley (Am.; real name, Martha Farquharson; 1828-1909) dealing with the trials and adventures of Elsie Dinsmore. Elsie is a pious little prig and remains a paragon of all the virtues although she is persecuted by associates, relatives, and even her father. Her story proved so popular with 19th-century girl readers that the series was continued until long after she had become a grandmother.

Elsie Venner. A novel by Oliver Wendell HOLMES (1861). The heroine shows both physical and moral manifestations of a snake-like nature, supposedly caused by a rattler bite from which her mother suffered just before her birth. Stimulated by a love affair she struggles against this nature and eventually conquers it, but dies as a result.

Elsmere, Robert, see ROBERT ELSMERE.

Elssler, Fanny (1810-1884) and her sister, Therese Elssler (1808-1878). Austrian ballet dancers. Fanny amassed a fortune and retired from the stage in 1831. Therese contracted a morganatic marriage with prince Adalbert of Prussia and was made baroness von Barnim by king Frederick William IV.

Elstir. In Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST a painter of landscapes, much admired by the narrator Marcel and frequently referred to throughout the novels. He is believed to have been based in part on the French Impressionist painter (see IMPRESSIONISM) MONET.

Elton, Mr. and Mrs. In Jane Austen's novel EMMA, a young clergyman and his wife.

Elves, see ELF.

Elvino. In Bellini's opera, LA SONNAMBULA, a wealthy farmer, in love with Amina the somnambulist.

Elvira. (1) The heroine of Bellini's opera, I PURITANI.

(2) The heroine of Verdi's opera, ERNANI.

Elvsted, Thea. A leading character in Ibsen's HEDDA GABLER.

Elyot, Sir Thomas (1499?-1546). English prose writer, at one time during his life ambassador from the English court to the court of the Emperor Charles V. Elyot is best-known for his Book of the Governor (1531), a treatise on education and politics of classic influence, regarded as one of the important 16th-century contributions to the development of English prose. He also did a number of translations from Latin and Greek which did much to spread the reading of the classics throughout the educated classes of England. Elyot is said to have been an ancestor of the 20th-century American poet T. S. ELIOT, in whose long poem East Coker (1940) some critics have found quotations from and allusions to the work of Sir Thomas.

Elysium. The abode of the blessed in Greek mythology; hence the Elysian Fields, the Paradise or Happy Land of the Greek poets. Elysian means happy, delightful.

Elzevir. Family of Dutch publishers and printers flourishing in the 17th century. A style of type was named Elzevir after this family. Books of their printing are of special value. The best are editions of classical and French authors. The Elzevir imprint is found in 1213 books: 968 Latin, 44 Greek, 126 French, 32 Flemish, 22 Oriental, 11 German, 10 Italian.

em. A unit of measure in printing. The standard is a pica em, and the width of a line is measured by the number of pica m's laid on their sides— $\Xi \Xi \Xi$ —that would equal the measure required. A system was introduced later, the unit of which is a "point" equal to one-seventy-second of an inch; all letters, spaces, rules, etc., are multiples of this "point," and the system is known as the "point system." A pica is 12 point. The point system gradually superseded the older method.

Embla. In Norse mythology, the first woman, created out of an elder by the gods Odin, Vili, and Ve. The first man was Ask.

emblem books. During the Elizabethan period in England, a popular form of literature consisting of books containing a motto, a picture (usually a woodcut), and a short poem, all combining to expound a moral of some sort. The first emblem book was Emblematus Libellus (1522), by Andrea Alciati, a Milanese author. The best-known English writers of emblem books were George Wither and Francis Quarles.

Emerald Isle. Ireland. This term was first used by Dr. Drennan (1754-1820), in the poem called Erin. Of course, it refers to the bright green verdure of the island.

Emerson, Ralph Waldo (1803-1882). American essayist and poet, one of the most influential figures of the 19th century. He was one of the founders of TRANSCENDENTALISM, a movement to which he was introduced by his association with WORDSWORTH, COLERIDGE, and CARLYLE during a visit to Europe in 1832. He was also influenced by NEO-PLATONISM, Oriental religion and philosophy, the English Idealist philosophers, and SWEDENBORG. His own system of thought is a combination of Puritanism and Romanticism and is characterized by an emphasis on pantheism, optimism, a love of nature, mysticism, ethical responsibility, and extreme individualism. His poetic style is simple, plain, compact, and epigrammatic, and has been compared to that of the English METAPHYSICAL POETS.

Emerson's works include NATURE (1836); THE AMERICAN SCHOLAR (1837), an oration; Essays (1841 and 1844); Representative Men (1850), a series of lectures; Poems (1847); Addresses and Lectures (1849); English Traits (1856), The Conduct of Life (1860), and Society and Solitude (1870), lectures. Among his most famous essays are Friendship, COMPENSATION, and THE OVERSOUL. Emerson outstandingly influenced THOREAU, WHITMAN, and Emily DICKINSON.

Émile. A famous educational romance by Jean Jacques ROUSSEAU (1762) describing in loose, story form the bringing-up of the boy Émile according to the so-called principles of nature. It had a notable influence on pedagogical theory. The fifth and last book deals with the education of Sophie, a girl intended for Émile's wife.

Emilia. (1) In Shakespeare's OTHELLO, wife of Iago, the ancient of Othello in the Venetian army. She is induced by Iago to purloin a certain handkerchief given by Othello to Desdemona. Iago then prevails on Othello to ask his wife to show him the handkerchief; but she cannot find it, and Iago tells the Moor she has given it to Cassio as a love-token. At the death of Desdemona, Emilia, who till then never suspected the real state of the case, reveals the truth of the matter, and Iago rushes on her and kills her.

(2) The heroine of Chaucer's Knight's Tale, beloved by Palamon and Arcite. See Palamon.

(3) An attendant in Shakespeare's WINTER'S TALE.

(4) The lady-love of Peregrine Pickle, in The Adventures of Peregrine Pickle, by Smollett (1751).

See also SANDRA BELLONI.

Emilia, Dona. The wife of Charles Gould in Conrad's NOSTROMO.

Emilie. The "divine Emilie," to whom Voltaire wrote verses, was the Marquise du Châtelet, with whom he lived at Cirey for some ten years, between 1735 and 1749.

Emir. See under RULERS, TITLES OF.

Em'ly, Little. In Dickens' David Copperfield. See under PEGGOTTY.

Emma. A novel by Jane Austen (1816). The heroine, Emma Woodhouse, is wealthy, and with no responsibilities other than her devotion to her invalid father, finds time heavy on her hands. To divert herself she plays with other people's affairs, but makes one well-meaning blunder after another. She encourages Harriet Smith to aspire to the hand of a young clergyman, Mr. Elton, but the latter finally brings home as Mrs. Elton a wife who has been described as "the finished type of a feminine bore." Other moves, notably interference in the love affairs of Jane Fairfax and Frank Churchill, are not much more successful. When Harriet transfers her affections to Emma's brother-in-law Knightly, a middle-aged landowner of frank and generous, if somewhat dictatorial, nature, Emma discovers that her long friendship for Knightly has grown into something stronger and marries him herself. The best-drawn character in Emma is the good-hearted, talkative village spinster, Miss Bates.

Emmerich. In James Branch Cabell's novels of medieval POICTESME, the son and successor of Count Manuel.

Emmet, Robert (1778-1803). Irish nationalist; led a rising in Dublin (1803); tried and hanged. His brother Thomas Addis Emmet (1764-1827) was released on condition that he would leave the country. Became a lawyer in New York (1804).

empathy. Imaginative and involuntary projection of one's self into an object or being leading to sympathetic understanding or vicarious experience of events witnessed. The theory of empathy tries to account for the observer's expansive mood in viewing wide open spaces, his experience of the "feel" of motion at the sight of a flying sea gull, etc. and is particularly enlightening for the psychology of poetic imagery.

Empedocles. One of Pythagoras' scholars, who threw himself secretly into the crater of Etna, that people might suppose the gods had carried him to heaven; but alas! one of his iron pattens was cast out with the lava, and recognized.

He who to be deemed
A god, leaped fondly into Etna flames, Empedocles.

Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 469.

Matthew Arnold published a dramatic poem called Empedocles on Etna (1853).

Emperor. See RULERS, TITLES OF.

Emperor Jones. (1) A drama by Eugene O'NEILL (1920). Emperor Jones is a lordly American Negro who has landed by chance in Africa, set up an empire in miniature and made himself rich trading on the superstitions of the natives. The drama shows him making his escape through the dense forest with the terrible drum of the now infuriated savages sounding behind him. As the strain begins to tell on him, layer after layer of his cocksure feeling of civilized superiority is stripped off, until finally he becomes the victim of his own terror.

(2) Opera, based on O'Neill drama, by Louis Gruenberg (1932).

Empire State. New York.

empiricism. The pursuit of knowledge by observation and experiment. In philosophy, the theory of particular importance, from Locke to Hume, which attributes the origin of all our knowledge to experience, implying that there are no innate conceptions and that the mind is at birth a TABULA RASA.

empirics. An ancient Greek school of medicine founded by Serapion of Alexandria, who contended that it is not necessary to obtain a knowledge of the nature and functions of the body in order to treat diseases, but that experience is the surest and best guide (Gr. empeiros, experienced, from peira, trial). The empirics were opposed to the dogmatic school founded by Hippocrates, which made certain dogmas or theoretical principles the basis of practice. Hence any quack or pretender to medical skill is called an empiric.

empyrean. According to Ptolemy, there are five heavens, the last of which is pure elemental fire and the seat of deity; this fifth heaven is called the empyrean (Gr. empyros, fiery); hence, in Christian angelology, as employed, for instance, by DANTE in his DIVINE COMEDY, the abode of God and the angels.

Now had the Almighty Father from above
From the pure empyrean where He sits High throned above all height, bent down his eye.
Milton, Paradise Lost, iii. 56.

Enceladus. In classic mythology, the most powerful of the hundred-armed giants, sons of Tartarus and Ge, who conspired against Zeus (Jupiter). The king of gods and men cast him down at Phlegra, in Macedonia, and threw Mount Etna over him. The poets say that the flames of the volcano arise from the breath of this giant. Longfellow wrote a poem called Enceladus.

So fierce Enceladus in Phlegra stood.
Hoole, Jerusalem Delivered.

I tell you, younglings, not Encelados,
With all his threat'ning band of Typhon's brood . . .
Shall seize this prey out of his father's hands.
Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus, iv. 2.

encyclopedia (Gr. enkyklios paideia, "instruction in the circle of arts and sciences"). A work in which various topics covering a specific field or all fields of knowledge are treated in separate entries, now normally arranged in alphabetical order. The first encyclopedia we know about is that by Marcus Porcius Cato (234-149 B.C.). The oldest encyclopedia entirely extant is the Historia Naturalis (37 books) of Pliny the Elder (23-79 A.D.). The modern idea of an encyclopedia goes back to the eighteenth century. See also ENCYCLOPÉDISTES. The Encyclopædia Britannica, for instance, began as a "dictionary of arts, sciences, and general literature," first published in Edinburgh from 1768 to 1771.

a walking encyclopedia is a person of inexhaustible factual knowledge, generally somewhat dusty.

Encyclopédie, ou dictionnaire raisonné des sciences, des arts et des métiers ("Methodical Dictionary of the Sciences, Arts, and Trades"). A French ENCYCLOPEDIA, based originally on a French translation of Chambers' Cyclopædia, developed by Diderot, d'Alembert, and the other encyclopédistes into an organ of the most advanced and revolutionary opinions of the time, mirroring the French brand of eighteenth-century skepticism which contributed a large share to the preparation of the French Revolution. Appeared at Paris in 28 volumes (1751-1772) with a supplement of five volumes (1776-1777) and an analytical index in two volumes (1780).

Endicott, John (1589?-1665). First colonial governor of Massachusetts (1628-1630); acted until Governor Winthrop (appointed by the Crown in 1629) arrived to take charge. Continued as assistant and deputy and later was governor again four times. A zealous Puritan. Four Quakers were executed in Boston under his administration.

Endor, witch of. See under WITCH.

Endymion. In Greek mythology, a beautiful youth, sometimes said to be a king and sometimes a shepherd, who, as he slept on Mount Latmus, so moved the cold heart of Selene, the moon goddess, that she came down and kissed him and lay at his side. He woke to find her gone, but the dreams which she gave him were so strong and enthralling that he begged Zeus to give him immortality and allow him to sleep perpetually on Mount Latmus. Other accounts say that Selene herself bound him by enchantment so that she might come and kiss him whenever she liked. Keats used the story as the framework of his long allegory, Endymion (1817), and it forms the basis of Lyly's comedy, Endymion, the Man in the Moone (1585). Longfellow has a poem so called. Disraeli gave the name Endymion to one of his political novels (1835). The hero is Endymion Farrars.

enfant terrible (Fr.). Literally, a terrible child. A precocious child; one who says or does awkward things at inconvenient times and "gives his elders away."

en garçon (Fr.). As a bachelor. "To take me en garçon," without ceremony, as a bachelor fares in ordinary life.

Engels, Friedrich (1820-1895). German socialist; collaborated with Moses Hess as editor of Gesellschaftsspiegel (Mirror of Society; 1845-1846), with Karl Marx in the Communist Manifesto (1847). Was a manufacturer in Manchester, England (1850-1869); edited and published Marx's works. His most important independent contribution is a study of the development of socialism "from Utopia to Science": Entwicklung des Sozialismus von der Utopie zur Wissenschaft (ca. 1880).

Englander. A name applied, now only humorously or somewhat contemptuously, by foreigners to Englishmen.

Little Englander. One who would rather see England small, contented, and as self-contained as possible than have her the head of a world-wide empire, the possession of which might be a source of trouble and danger to her; the opposite to an Imperialist. The term came into prominence at the time of the South African War of 1899-1902.

England's Helicon. One of the miscellanies (see TOTTEL'S MISCELLANY), or collections of poetry, published in the Elizabethan period. It was published in 1600 and is distinguished by the good taste shown in the selection of its contents. It contains poems by SHAKESPEARE, SIDNEY, SPENSER, DRAYTON, LODGE, and others.

English. (1) The language of the people of England; also the people themselves. Middle English is the language as used from about 1150 to 1500; Old English, also called Anglo-Saxon, is that in use before 1150.

the King's or Queen's English. English as it should be spoken; pure, grammatical, or "correct" English. The term is found in Shakespeare (Merry Wives, i. 4), but it is older and was evidently common.

These fine English clerkes wil saih thei speake in their mother tonge, if a manne should charge them for counterfeiting the Kinges Englishe.—Wilson, Arte of Rhetorique (1553).

The notion, if not the term, is found in Chaucer's Prologue:

God save the king, that is lord of this language.

plain English. Plain, unmistakable terms. To tell a person in plain English what you think of him is to give him your very candid opinion without any beating about the bush.

For the English Rabelais, the English Solomon, etc., see under RABELAIS, etc.

(2) In printing, a size of type, equivalent to 14-pt. type.

(3) In billiards, a spinning rotary motion given to a ball by striking it to the right or left of its center in order to increase or reduce the angle at which it will rebound upon hitting a cushion or another ball.

English, Thomas Dunn (1819-1902). American physician and lawyer; author of novels, plays, and poems. Mainly remembered for his song Ben Bolt.

English Bards and Scotch Reviewers. A long satiric poem by Lord BYRON (1809), written in heroic couplets and expressing a neo-Classical attitude. It was occasioned by a harsh review of Byron's first book of poems, Hours of Idleness, appearing in BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE. In it, Byron attacks his critics, and also attacks the older generation of English Romantic poets, including WORDSWORTH, COLERIDGE, SCOTT, and SOUTHEY. See also EPISTLE TO DR. ARBUTHNOT.

Enid. In Tennyson's Idylls of the King the wife of GERAINT.

enjambment (Fr. enjambement, "a striding, encroaching"). In prosody, the continuation of the sense and hence the grammatical construction in a phrase beyond the end of a verse or couplet. This run-on device, contrasted with end-stopped, can be very effective when it is not used as a mere mannerism, as in:

In cock-wattle sunset or grey Dawn when the dagger
Points again of longing . . .

Enlightened Doctor. See under DOCTOR.

ennead (from Gr. ennea, "nine"). A group, system, or the like, of nine units, as, for instance, in Egyptian religion, any one of several groups or cycles of nine gods.

The title The Enneads was given to the works of the neo-Platonist PLOTINUS because each of the six books contains nine chapters.

Enniskilleners, also Inniskillings. A famous cavalry regiment (6th Dragoons) of the British service, so named because it was first organized from the defenders of Enniskillen (1689) during the armed conflict of the Irish Protestants and Catholics.

Ennius. The earliest of the great epic poets of Rome (about 239-169 B.C.), and chief founder of Latin literature.

the English Ennius. Layamon (fl. about 1200), who made a late Anglo-Saxon paraphrase of Wace's Roman de Brut, has been so called, but the title is usually given to Chaucer.

the French Ennius. Guillaume de LORRIS (ca. 1235-1265), author of the Romance of the Rose. Sometimes Jean de Meun (ca. 1260-1318), who wrote a continuation of the romance, is so called.

the Spanish Ennius. Juan de Mena (d. 1456), born at Cordova.

Enoch Arden. A narrative poem by TENNYSON (1864). The hero is a seaman who has been wrecked on a desert island, and returning home after an absence of several years, finds his wife married to another. Seeing her both happy and prosperous, he resolves not to make himself known, so he leaves the place, and dies of a broken heart.

Enormous Room, The. An autobiographical volume by E. E. CUMMINGS (1922). It describes a period of imprisonment in a French military concentration camp near Paris (1917-1918), to which the author was sentenced on a mistaken charge of treason. The personalities of the various prisoners are presented, and their individual psychological reactions to their harsh treatment and their squalid surroundings. The structure of the book is modeled on that of PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

en papillotes (Fr.). In a state of undress; literally, in curl-papers. Cutlets with frills on them are en papillotes.

en pension (Fr.). Pension is payment for board and lodging; hence, a boarding-house. "To live en pension" is to live at a boarding-house or at a hotel, etc., for a charge that includes board and lodging.

Enquiry Concerning Political Justice. A political treatise, by William GODWIN (1793), in which the author examines the systems of government, law, and religion of his day, and concludes that monarchy is corrupt and all government, in fact, an obstacle in the development of mankind. It urges the abolition of all social and political institutions created by man, including government, law, wealth, and marriage, and places total confidence in the fundamental perfectibility of humanity. See J. J. ROUSSEAU. This treatise was regarded with horror by the conservative elements of the day, and had a great influence upon the English Romantic poets, especially P. B. SHELLEY.

En Route. A novel by J. K. HUYSMANS (1895), dealing with the religious experiences of a blasé and dissipated young Parisian named Dortal, who yields to the esthetic spell of Christian mysticism. It is the middle volume of a trilogy.

entablature. In classical architecture, the wall above the columns, supporting the roof (that is, the triangular "pediment" when situated on the front and the roof plate when situated on the flank of the building). It consists normally of three horizontal divisions: the architrave, above it the frieze, and uppermost the cornice.

entelechy (Gr. telos, "fulfillment, end"). Aristotle's term for the complete realization or full expression of a function or potentiality; the result of the union of Matter (potentiality) and Form (reality); e.g., the soul, considered as an end that is attained, is the Entelechy of the body.

In Rabelais' Gargantua and Pantagruel (Bk. V, ch. xix), entelechy is the name given to the Kingdom of the Lady Quintessence. The argument on the name, whether it is entelechy (perfecting and coming into actuality) or endelechy (duration) reflects the fierce disputes that took place among the medieval schoolmen on these two words.

entente.

entente cordiale (Fr.). A cordial understanding between nations; not quite amounting to an alliance, but something more than a rapprochement. The term is not new, but is now usually applied to the entente between England and France that was arranged largely by the personal endeavors of Edward VII in 1906.

Triple Entente. A friendly alliance between Great Britain, France and Russia before World War I. During the war Great Britain, France and Italy were referred to as the Entente.

Little Entente. An alliance between Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Rumania entered into after the signing of the Treaty of the Trianon (1920), with the avowed purpose of defeating any Hungarian plan for a restoration of the Hapsburgs.

entomology. The science of insects. The word is ultimately related to tome, "a volume," literally "a piece cut off," and is derived from Greek entomon, "insect," so called (in Greek as well as in Latin and English) because it is virtually cut in two. The word entomology is often confused, erroneously or for a humorous effect, with etymology, the science of the derivation of words.

entr'acte or, occasionally, interact. The interval between two acts of a play. Also an intermezzo performed during that interval.

colian harp. A harp played by the wind.

Eolus, see AEOLUS.

eon, see AEON.

Eothen or Traces of Travel Brought Home from the East. A book by Alexander William Kinglake (1844), considered one of the classics of travel.

Épée, Charles Michel de l' (1712-1789). French abbé and pioneer in ways of communication for the deaf and dumb. His one-hand sign alphabet, still in use, was developed to help his two deaf sisters.

Ephesian letters. Magic characters. The Ephesians were greatly addicted to magic. Magic characters were marked on the crown, cincture, and feet of Diana, and, at the preaching of Paul, in Ephesus, many converts who had used "curious" or magical books burned them. (Acts xix. 19.)

Ephesian poet. Hipponax, born at Ephesus in the 6th century B. C.

Ephialtes. A giant, who was deprived of his left eye by Apollo, and of his right eye by Hercules. The Greek word is from a verb meaning "to leap upon" and it used to be given to the supposed demon which caused nightmares.

[We refer unto sober examination] what natural effects can reasonably be expected, when to prevent the Ephialtes or night-Mare we hang up an hollow stone in our stables, when for amulets against Agues we use the chips of Gallows and places of execution. —Sir Thos. Browne, Pseudodoxia Epidemica, V, xxxii.

epic. A poem of dramatic character dealing by means of narration with the history, real or fictitious, of some notable action or series of actions carried out under heroic or supernatural guidance. Epic poetry may be divided into two main classes: (a) the popular or national epic, including such works as the Greek Iliad and Odyssey, the Sanscrit Mahabharata, and the Teutonic Nibelungenlied; and (b) the literary or artificial epic, of which the Aeneid, Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered, and Milton's Paradise Lost are examples.

father of epic poetry. See under FATHER.

EPIC. A program with the slogan End Poverty in California, advanced by Upton Sinclair in 1934, calling for increase of inheritance taxes, seizure of idle factories for operation by the unemployed, etc.

Epicene, or the Silent Woman. One of the comedies of Ben Jonson (1609), produced by Garrick in 1776. For the plot, see MOROSE.

Epictetus. Greek Stoic philosopher, originally a slave. Taught in Rome until 90 A. D., when an edict of Emperor Domitian banished all philosophers. He left no writings, but his philosophy is known through a manual written by his pupil Flavius Arrianus. The essence of his doctrine states that it is wise to desire nothing but freedom and contentment, that evil is only apparent, and that happiness depends only on man's free will with which even Jupiter cannot interfere.

Epicurus. The Greek philosopher (340-270 B. C.) who founded the Epicurean school. His axiom was that "happiness or enjoyment is the summum bonum of life." His disciples corrupted his doctrine into "Good living is the object we should all seek." Hence, epicure, one devoted to sensual pleasures, especially those of the table; epicurean, pertaining to good eating and drinking, etc.

the Epicurus of China. Tao-Tse (6th century B. C.).

Epigoni. See under THEBES.

epigram. A brief, pithy, pointed, often witty saying or poem, popular as a literary form in classic Latin literature and in European and English literature of the Renaissance and the neo-Classical era. See NEO-CLASSICISM. Cf. Coleridge's delightful, though inadequate, definition:

What is an epigram? A dwarfish whole,
Its body brevity, and wit its soul.

epilogue. In rhetoric, the last of the five divisions of a typical speech; hence, the final plea of an actor for courteous treatment by critics and audience as practiced on the seventeenth and eighteenth century stage. Also, a last section of any literary work functioning as a summary, and the opposite of preface, introduction, or the like. A free use of the term occurs in Goethe's Epilogue to Schiller's Bell (Epilog zu Schillers Glocke), written in commemoration of the younger poet's death.

Epimenides. A Cretan poet and philosopher of the 7th century B. C. who, according to Pliny (Natural History) fell asleep in a cave when a boy, and did not wake up for fifty-seven years, when he found himself endowed with miraculous wisdom. See also RIP VAN WINKLE.

Epimetheus. In classic myth, the brother of Prometheus and husband of Pandora. The name signifies "afterthought," in contrast to Prometheus, "forethought."

Épinay, Louise Florence Pétronille de la Live d' (1726-1783). French author. Friend of Diderot, d'Alembert, Holbach, Melchior Grimm, and others. For Rousseau she built a cottage in the garden of her château near Montmorency. Voltaire was her guest (1757-1759) in the château itself. Her Mémoires et correspondance was published in 1818. SAINT-BEUVE remarked: "Les mémoires de Mme d'Épinay ne sont pas un ouvrage, ils sont une époque."

Epinicia (Latin, from Greek). Odes of victory in national games, as the Olympic, Pythian or Delphic, Nemean, and Isthmian games. There are among PINDAR's extant works 44 Epinicia.

Epiphany (Gr. epiphaneia, "an appearance, manifestation"). The time of appearance, meaning the period when the star appeared to the wise men of the East. January 6th is the Feast of the Epiphany in commemoration of this event.

Epipsychidion (Gr., literally, "a little poem on the soul"). A poem by Shelley (1821).

episode (Gr. coming in besides—i.e., adventitious). Originally, the parts in dialogue which were interpolated between the choric songs in Greek tragedy; hence, an adventurous tale introduced into the main story which can be naturally connected with the framework but which has not necessarily anything to do with it.

In music, an intermediate passage in a fugue, where the subject is for a time suspended.

Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot. A satirical poem by ALEXANDER POPE (1735) in the form of a dialogue between the poet and Dr. John Arbuthnot (1667-1735), a physician and man of letters who was a friend of Pope. The poem gives a judgment of Pope's work by Pope himself, and attacks his contemporaries, especially ADDISON and Lord John Hervey.

Epistolae obscurorum virorum (1515 and 1517; "letters of unknown men"). A satire in the form of letters supposedly written by uneducated and worthless Roman Catholic priests addressed to the humanist Reuchlin during his feud with the converted Jew Pfefferkorn.

Epithalamion. A lyric poem written by SPENSER (1595) to celebrate his marriage to Elizabeth BOYLE. It has been called his highest poetic achievement. It is quoted and used for ironic contrast in T. S. Eliot's THE WASTE LAND. The word epithalamion (Greek) or epithalamium (Latinized) signifies "nuptial song." The Song of Songs is an epithalamium.

Sappho, the Greek poetess, devoted a book to epithalamia.

epithet. A descriptive word or phrase, usually referring to the outstanding quality of a person or thing, as Homer's "rosy-fingered dawn." The epithet was used frequently in classic epics and universally during the neo-Classical period in English literature. There, in compliance with the principle of DECORUM of the time, epithets reached absurd extremes. In order to avoid using the common nouns of the language, which they considered "low" and unworthy of the dignity of their subject-matter, the neo-Classical poets would devise by means of the epithet clumsy and elaborate circumlocutions which they would use instead of the original word. Thus "fish" would be called "the finny tribe," "gun" would become a "leveled tube," and so on.

e pluribus unum (Lat.). One unity composed of many parts. The motto of the United States of America; taken from Moretum (line 103), a Latin poem attributed to Virgil.

eponym. A personal name, also the person (real or mythical) bearing the name, used to designate a place, era, family, race, etc. Brute is the mythical eponym of Britain; Amerigo the historical one of America.

Epsom Races. English horse races originally instituted by Charles I, and held on Epsom Downs for four days in May. The second day (Wednesday) is "DERBY DAY," and on the fourth the "OAKS" is run.

There are other races held at Epsom besides the great four-day races—for instance, the City and Suburban and the Great Metropolitan (both handicap races).

Epstein, Jacob (1880-). American sculptor of Russo-Polish descent. Settled in London (1905); worked in New York and elsewhere in the U.S. (since 1927). His best-known works include eighteen symbolical figures on the British Medical Association Building in London (1907-1908); the tomb of Oscar Wilde (1909); a marble Genesis (1931), and a huge alabaster Adam (1939). Most of his portraits are cast in bronze. He is the author of The Sculptor Speaks (1931).

Epworth League. A Methodist youth organization, founded in Cleveland, Ohio (1889), and named after the birthplace of John WESLEY, the small town of Epworth in Lincolnshire, England.

Equality State. Wyoming. See under STATES.

equinox. The time of year, recurring twice, when day and night are everywhere of equal length. The two yearly equinoxes (vernal equinox, about March 21; autumnal equinox, September 23) together with the two SOLSTICES (summer solstice, June 22; winter solstice, December 22) divide the year into four equal parts. The equinoxes are traditionally expected to be ushered in by violent storms and other meteorological excesses.

equivoque. An ambiguous term, a word susceptible of two or several interpretations; often used for puns of the type cultivated by traveling salesmen.

era. (1) A count of years beginning from a specific starting point. The Christian era begins with the birth of Christ.

The era of Abraham begins Oct. 1, 2016 B. C.
the era of Actium, Jan. 1, 30 B. C.
the era of Alexander the Great, 324 B. C.
the era of American Independence,

July 4, 1776 A. D.
the era of Armenia, July 9, 552 A. D.
the era of Augustus, 27 B. C.
the era of the Chinese, 2697 B. C.
the era of Diocletian, Aug. 29, 284 A. D.
the era of the Foundation of Rome, 753 B. C.
the era of the French Republic, Sept. 22, 1792 A. D.
the era of the Greek Olympiads, 776 B. C.
the era of the Hegira, July 16, 622 A. D.
the era of the Maccabees, 166 B. C.
the era of Nabonassar, 747 B. C.
the era of the Seleucidae, 45 B. C.
the era of Tyre, Oct. 19, 125 B. C.
the era of the Yezdegird, June 16, 632 A. D.

(2) A period of time characterized by some distinctive feature. The Mundane era, or the supposed number of years between the Creation and the Nativity is:

according to the modern Greek Calendar, 7,388 years;
according to Josephus, 5,829 years;
according to the ancient Greek Church, 5,508 years;
according to Professor Hales, 5,411 years;
according to l'Art de vérifier les dates, 4,968 years;
according to Archbishop Ussher, 4,004 years;
according to Calmet, 4,000 years;
according to the Jews, 3,760 years.

the era of good feeling. A name given to the period between 1817 and 1824 in American history because of the absence of political strife.

Jazz era, see under Jazz.

See also AGE.

Erasmus, Desiderius. Actual name Gerhard Gerhards or Geert Geerts (1466?-1536). A noted Dutch scholar and humanist of the Renaissance. The love story of his parents is told in Reade's CLOISTER AND THE HEARTH, and the young Erasmus is introduced in the latter part of the novel. Erasmus favored the Reformation at first, but opposed it when it seemed to develop the characteristics of a revolution. Erasmic aloofness, horror of violence and devotion to quiet scholarship have become proverbial. His most generally known book is the wisely satirical Praise of Folly (Encomium Moriae), and his most important contribution to scholarship is his edition of the Greek text of the New Testament. The classical refinement of his Latin style (especially in his letters) is admirable, but—ironically—contributed largely to the decline of Latin as a language fit for vernacular use.

Erato. In Greek mythology, one of the nine MUSES; the muse of erotic poetry; usually represented holding or playing a lyre.

Erceldoune, Thomas of, see THOMAS THE RHYMER.

Erckmann-Chatrian. Joint pen-name of Émile Erckmann (1822-1899) and Alexandre Chatrian (1826-1890). French authors of many historical romances and also of several plays. Their collaboration (begun in 1847) was unusual in that Erckmann did most of the creative writing while Chatrian worked as an editor and also adapted the material for the stage.

Erda. In Wagner's Ring, the earth goddess HERTHA.

Erebus. In Greek mythology, the son of Chaos and brother of Night; hence darkness personified. His name was given to the gloomy cavern underground through which the Shades had to walk in the course of their passage to Hades.

Érec et Énide. A medieval chivalric romance by CHRÉTIEN DE TROYES. It tells of Érec, a knight at the court of King ARTHUR, who goes out in search of adventure and stays overnight at a run-down castle, where he meets the beautiful daughter of the baron who is the master of the castle. Érec asks her hand, marries her, and then retires from the active life of a knight to enjoy the pleasures of home life. His reputation soon begins to suffer from this, however, and one day he overhears his wife bemoaning the situation. The knight thereupon blames her for the state of affairs in which they find themselves and sets out once more in search of adventure, forcing the lady to accompany them. They have amazing adventures, in which Érec proves himself to be of prodigious strength and valor, although he is harsh in his treatment of his wife. Eventually she is kidnaped by a robber-baron while the knight lies in an apparent state of death, but he revives in time to rescue her, and at length they are reconciled.

Erechtheum or Erechtheion. A temple of the tutelary deities of Athens. It derived its name from King Erechtheus, the mythical son of Gaea and Hephaestus (Vulcan), who built the Erechtheum and is also remembered for having invented the four-wheeled chariot. He is the subject of a poetic drama by Swinburne.

Eretrian bull. Menedemus of Eretria, in Euboea, a Greek philosopher of about 350-270 B. C., who founded the Eretrian school, a branch of the Socratic.

Erewhon. The name of the ideal commonwealth in Samuel BUTLER's philosophical novel of the same name (1872). It is, of course, an anagram on "Nowhere." A sequel, Erewhon Revisited, was published in 1901.

Ericson or Ericsson, Leif, that is, Leif, the son of Eric. Norse navigator who sailed westward and discovered (ca. 1000) a land which he called VINLAND because of the grapevines he found there. It has been variously identified as Labrador, Newfoundland, New England, etc. At any rate, Leif spent a season there, and it may be claimed that he set foot on American soil some 500 years before Columbus. His father Eric founded a colony (986) on Greenland which was named by him; he became the hero of an Icelandic saga, Eric the Red.

Ericsson, John (1803-1889). Swedish-born American engineer. Invented the ironclad Monitor (1862) which started a new era of naval engineering.

Erie War. See under DREW, DANIEL.

Erigena, Johannes Scotus (815?-877). Irish philosopher and theologian, doubtless of Scottish parentage. His major work, De Divisione Naturae, teaches a monistic fusion of God and Nature which has been labeled as Neoplatonic.

Erik Dorn. A novel by Ben HECHT published in 1921. The action takes place against a background of radical activities and unconventional Bohemian life in Chicago, New York, and Europe immediately preceding and following World War I. Erik Dorn, the hero, is a cynical and sophisticated journalist. He leaves his wife to live with an artist, Rachel Laskin, is deserted by Rachel, becomes a celebrated author, is involved in revolutionary plots in Germany, and eventually commits murder in self-defense.

Erin. Poetic form of Eire. See also under MAVOURNIN.

Erinyes. In Greek mythology, daughters of Ge (Earth), avengers of wrong; the Furies. See EUMENIDES.

Eris. The goddess of discord, sister of Ares or Mars. At the wedding of Peleus and Thetis, Eris, being uninvited, threw into the gathering an apple bearing the inscription "For the Fairest," which was claimed by Juno, Venus, and Minerva. Paris, being called upon for judgment, awarded it to Venus. See also apple of discord, under APPLE.

Erisichthon or Erysichthon. In classic myth, an impious person who profaned a grove sacred to Ceres by cutting down a great oak. He was punished by terrible, incessant hunger.

Erlanger, Abraham Lincoln (1860-1930). American theatrical manager and producer. The Theatrical Syndicate, which he helped form in 1896, had virtual monopoly of American theatrical business.

erlking, Ger. Erlikönig. In German legend, a malevolent goblin who haunts forests and lures people, especially children, to destruction. His appearance in folklore is secondary to his literary career (a rare and interesting phenomenon). There was a Danish ellerkonge, "king of the elves," whose name was mistranslated into German by HERDER as Erlkönig, "king of the alders." The idea that alders, especially when looked at through a dense fog, should have folkloristic potentialities, struck GOETHE so forcibly that he created his famous ballad Der Erlkönig, in which a father riding home with a delirious and dying child in his arms is pursued by the goblin.

Erlynne, Mrs. In Oscar Wilde's play, LADY WINDERMERE'S FAN, the leading character, mother of Lady Windermere.

Ermeline, Dame. Reynard's wife, in the tale of REYNARD THE FOX.

ermine. Several species of weasels that assume a pure white coat in the winter, except for the end of the tail that remains black. The fur of the ermine (often used with the black tailends inserted at regular intervals), being a favorite material for official and ceremonial garments (e.g., the robes of English judges) has come to be regarded as a symbol of dignity and authority.

Law and gospel both determine
All virtues lodge in royal ermine.
Swift, On Poetry.

Erminia. A heroine of Tasso's Italian epic JERUSALEM DELIVERED (1575). She falls in love with Tancred, and when the Christian army besieges Jerusalem, arrays herself in Clorinda's armor to go to him. After certain adventures, she finds him wounded, and nurses him tenderly; but the poet has not told us what is the ultimate lot of this fair Syrian.

Ernani. An opera by Verdi (1844) founded on Victor Hugo's drama HERNANI. In the opera, the heroine is called DORNA Elvira instead of Donna Sol, and the hero stabs himself instead of taking poison.

Ernest Maltravers. A novel by Bulwer LYTTON (1837), which, with its sequel, ALICE, OR THE MYSTERIES, relates the story of a talented poet. His first love is Alice, the innocent young daughter of a burglar. After many vicissitudes, including several other love affairs, one of which is with Alice's daughter, Evelyn Cameron, he finds the long-lost Alice and marries her.

Ernst, Morris (1888-). New York lawyer, associated with liberal causes and the combating of censorship. Counsel of Dramatists' Guild and Authors' League of America; attorney for American Newspaper Guild. Author of numerous books: To the Pure (1928; with William Seagle); Censored (1930; with eschatology. From Greek eschatos, "uttermost, furthest." In theology, the doctrine of the last or final things, as death, resurrection, immortality, the second advent of Christ, Judgment Day, the millennium, and the future state of existence.

Escoffier, Auguste (1847?-1935). One of the most famous chefs; a Parisian.

Escorial. A vast structure, 27 miles northwest of Madrid, Spain, royal palace, mausoleum, church, college and monastery, containing a celebrated library and art collection. It was erected in 1563-1584 by Philip II who had vowed to do so during the battle of St.-Quentin in 1557. It has the general form of a gridiron in memory of the martyrdom of St. Lawrence to whom Philip had made the vow.

Esculapius, see AEscULAPIUS.

Esenin, Sergei Aleksandrovich (1895-1925). Russian poet, founder of the Russian imagist group (1919). His first wife was Isadora Duncan; the second, a granddaughter of Tolstoi. Esenin became insane and committed suicide. He has been called the "poet laureate of the Revolution."

Esmeralda. In Victor Hugo's novel, NOTRE DAME DE PARIS, a beautiful gipsy-girl, who, with tambourine and goat, dances in the square before Notre Dame de Paris, and is looked on as a witch. Quasimodo conceals her for a time in the church, but she is finally gibbeted.

Esmond, Henry or Harry. The hero of Thackeray's HENRY ESMOND.

Francis Esmond. The supposed heir to the Castlewood estate, who brings up Henry with his own children but allows him to believe he is an illegitimate son of the dead Viscount to whom the estate belonged.

Rachel Esmond (Lady Castlewood). The wife of Francis. After his death she marries Henry Esmond.

Frank Esmond. Son of Francis and Rachel and, like Henry, an ardent supporter of the Pretender.

Beatrix Esmond. In Henry Esmond, a beautiful coquette, the daughter of Francis and Rachel Esmond. After numerous affairs, notably one with James Stuart the Pretender which destroys his chances for the throne, she marries Tusher, her brother's tutor, and succeeds in having him made bishop. "She was imperious," says the author, "she was light-minded, she was flighty, she was false. She had no reverence for character and she was very, very beautiful." In The Virginians, she has become Baroness Bernstein, a clever, sharp-tongued and wicked old lady.

esoteric (Gr.). Those within, as opposed to exoteric, those without. The term originated with Pythagoras, who stood behind a curtain when he gave his lectures. Those who were allowed to attend the lectures, but not to see his face, he called his exoteric disciples; but those who were allowed to enter the veil, his esoterics.

Aristotle adopted the same terms; those who attended his evening lectures, which were of a popular character, he called his exoterics; and those who attended his more abstruse morning lectures, his esoterics.

esoteric Buddhism, see THEOSOPHY.

Espard, Marquise de. A despotically coquettish woman of the world who appears in several of the novels of Balzac's COMÉDIE HUMAINE. She is married and separated from her husband early in life; and with a fortune of her own and no warmer emotions than the desire to dominate, she rules the social world from her salon.

Esperanto. A universal language invented (1887) and promoted by Dr. Esperanto, in reality Dr. L. Zamenhoff of Poland.

Espionage Act. An act of Congress (June 15, 1917) providing measures and penalties against spying and SABOTAGE. It was amended by a second Seditious Act (May 16, 1918).

Esquemeling, Alexander Olivier (1645?-1707). Dutch buccaneer. His book, De Americaensche Zeerovers (The Buccaneers of America; 1678), has become an important source for the history of piracy.

Essay Concerning Human Understanding (1690). See LOCKE.

Essay on Man, An. The best-known poem of Alexander POPE (1733), the source of most quotations from the author. Written in heroic couplets (see COUPLET), it is divided into four Epistles which deal respectively with man's relation to the universe, to himself, to society, and to happiness. The poem was suggested to Pope by a friend, Henry St. John, Lord Bolingbroke, and expresses a Deistic philosophy (see DEISM) loosely derived from LEIBNITZ, being intended "to vindicate the ways of God to man." It is optimistic and shows the characteristic neo-Classical faith in reason and respect for tradition and authority.

Essay on Projects, An. See DEFOE, DANIEL.

Essay Towards a New Theory of Vision (1709). See BERKELEY.

Essen. A city in the Prussian Rhine Province, near the Ruhr, 19 miles northeast of Düsseldorf. Its minster, consecrated in 873, was one of the oldest German churches and had a remarkable early-Romanesque cloister. Essen, situated in the center of a large coal-mining district, was the seat of the KRUPP cast-steel works, which were important in World Wars I and II.

Essenes. A sect or order of Jews of Palestine, from 2nd century B.C. to 2nd century A.D. Strictest asceticism on a rigidly communistic basis.

estates of the realm. The powers that have the administration of affairs in their hands. The three estates of the English realm are the Lords Spiritual, the Lords Temporal, and the Commons; popularly speaking, the public press is termed the FOURTH ESTATE.

Estella. The heroine of Dickens' GREAT EXPECTATIONS.

Esterhazy, Marie Charles Ferdinand Walsin (1847-1923). French army officer. Confessed in 1899 that he forged the documents which had led to the conviction of Alfred DREYFUS. After that lived in exile in England.

Esther. A heroine of the Old Testament, whose story is told in the book bearing her name. After the Persian king, Ahasuerus, put away Queen VASHTI, he chose the beautiful Jewish maiden, Esther, as his Queen. Esther kept her nationality secret, on the counsel of her uncle and guardian, Mordecai, until the jealous, evil-minded Haman conceived a plot to destroy all the Jews who were in captivity throughout the kingdom. Then Esther courageously pled for her people with the King; and as a result Haman was hanged on a high gallows which he had made for his enemy Mordecai. This story is the subject of Racine's famous drama Esther (1689).

Esther Waters. A novel by George MOORE (1894). Its heroine is an English servant and the novel deals with her long struggle to bring up her illegitimate son. The boy's father, William Latch, who had been footman in the horse-racing household where Esther had her first position, finally turns up as a bookmaker and innkeeper and marries her, but her happy married life is only an interlude in a life of troubles.

Estmere, King. Hero of one of the ballads given in Percy's Reliques. He is a king of England who requests permission to pay suit to the daughter of King Adland. He is answered that Bremor, King of Spain, has already proposed to her and been rejected; but when the lady is introduced to the English king she accepts him. King Estmere starts home to prepare for the wedding, but has not proceeded a mile when the king of Spain returns to press his suit, and threatens vengeance if it is not accepted. Estmere is requested to return, and, with his brother, rides into the hall of King Adland in the guise of a harper. Bremor bids them leave their steeds in the stable. A quarrel ensues in which the "sowdan" is slain, and the two brothers thereupon put the retainers to flight.

Estrildis. In Geoffrey of Monmouth's HISTORY OF THE KINGS OF BRITAIN, the daughter of a German king, and handmaid to the mythical King Humber. When Humber is drowned in the river that bears his name, Locrine falls in love with Estrildis, and would have married her, were he not betrothed already to Guendoloena; but he has by her a daughter named Sabrina.

Etchepars. The central figure in Brieux's RED ROBE, a peasant accused of murder and helpless in the coils of the law.

Eteocles and Polynices. The two sons of Oedipus. After the expulsion of their father, these two young princes agreed to reign alternate years in Thebes. Eteocles, being the elder, took the first turn, but at the close of the year refused to resign the scepter to his brother. This incident was the cause of the famous "Seven against Thebes." See under THEBES. The two brothers met in combat, and each was slain by the other's hand.

Eternal, The. God.

the Eternal City. Rome. The epithet occurs in Ovid, Tibullus, etc., and in many official documents of the Empire; also Virgil (Aeneid, i. 79) makes Jupiter tell Venus he would give to the Romans imperium sine fine (an eternal empire). Hall Caine has taken the phrase as the title of one of his novels, dealing with the establishment of an ideal state, in Rome, based on the principles of human brotherhood.

Ethan Brand. An allegorical tale by Hawthorne, published in The Snow Image (1851). It presents the hero, Ethan Brand, a lime-burner, who has been guilty of the Unpardonable Sin. This is intellectual pride and, literally, a "heart of stone," for Brand, depressed over his unpopularity with the townspeople, burns himself to death in his lime-furnace, and when his skeleton is found inside, the ribs enclose a piece of marble shaped like a human heart.

Ethan Frome. A short novel by Edith WHARTON (1911). As a young farmer unable to do more than make a scant living, Ethan Frome devotes himself to his old mother, and after her death to his fretful and self-absorbed invalid wife, Zeena. Mattie, a young cousin of Zeena's, delicate and left without means of support, comes to live with them, and as time goes on, Mattie and Ethan find each other's companionship meaning much to them. Zeena on the pretext that a doctor has advised more complete rest and a strong hired girl, now declares that Mattie cannot stay. On the way to the station Mattie and Ethan take one final coast down the long hill, at the foot of which is a great elm, a challenge to skilful steering. In the overwhelming mood of the moment they agree to put an end to things by running into the elm. But long years afterward all three are still living on the barren farm, Mattie a helpless invalid with a broken back, Ethan a taciturn cripple.

Ethelberta. Heroine of Hardy's HAND OF ETHELBERTA.

Etherege, Sir George (1635?-?1691). English dramatist. Began period of Restoration Comedy; invented comedy of intrigue; led the way for the comedy of manners of Congreve and Sheridan. His private life is not without interest. In 1676 he had to leave England after a disgraceful brawl. He had started on a diplomatic career and was sent to The Hague and later to Ratisbon where he disgusted the Germans by his debauchery and libertinage. He fled to Paris where he seems to have died.

Ethiopians. From Greek aihiops, either derived from or popularly associated with aithein, "to burn" and ops, "face." The country of the Ethiopians lay south of Egypt, close to the stream of Ocean. Cepheus, husband of Cassiopeia and father of Andromeda, was one of their kings. Memnon, the son of Aurora and Tithonus, who fell in the Trojan war as an ally of the Trojans, was another.

Ethnic plot. The name Dryden gave in his ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL to the POPISH PLOT. Charles II is called David, the Royalists the Jews, and the Papists Gentiles or Ethnoi, whence the name.

Saw with disdain an Ethnic plot begun . . .
'Gainst form and order they their power employ,
Nothing to build, and all things to destroy.
Pt. i, 518, 532-3.

Ethnogenesis. A poem by HENRY TIMROD, written in 1861 for the meeting of the first Confederate Congress. It celebrates the glories of the South and hails the victorious future of the Confederate nation.

ethos (Gr., "character"). In art and literature, the moral and intellectual tenor of a work as distinguished from transitory emotional or pathetic elements.

Etna. The famous Italian volcano. Virgil (Aeneid, iii, 578, etc.) ascribes its eruption to the restlessness of Enceladus, a hundred-headed giant, who lies buried under the mountain, where also the Greek and Latin poets placed the forges of Vulcan and the smithy of the Cyclops.

Eton College. Famous PUBLIC SCHOOL for boys at Eton in Buckinghamshire, England. It was founded in 1440 by Henry VI. The Duke of Wellington said, "The battle of Waterloo was won on the playing fields of Eton."

Ettare. (1) For the story told by Tennyson in his Pelleas and Ettare, one of the Idylls of the King, see under PELLEAS.

(2) Heroine of Cabell's CREAM OF THE JEST.

She is one of the daughters of Count Manuel, the hero of FIGURES OF EARTH.

Ettrick shepherd, the. A name given in the NOCTES AMBROSIANAE to James Hogg, the poet (1772-1835), who was born in the forest of Ettrick, in Selkirkshire, and in early life was a shepherd.

et tu, Brute. According to Suetonius, Lives of the Caesars, Julius Caesar, on being stabbed by Brutus, whom he had counted among his trusted friends, exclaimed: Et tu, Brute fili (You also, O Brutus, my son). Shakespeare (Julius Caesar, III, i, 77) immeasurably heightened the effect of the passage by adding to it an expression of utter despair at such ingratitude: "Et tu, Brute! Then fall, Caesar!" The phrase is currently used as an expression of amazement at a sudden revelation of treachery or ingratitude.

Etzel. The name given in German heroic legend to Attila (d. 453 A.D.), king of the Huns, a monarch ruling over three kingdoms and more than thirty principalities. In the NIBELUNGENLIED he is made very insignificant, and sees his liegemen, and even his son and heir, struck down without any effort to save them, or avenge their destruction. He marries Kriemhild, the widow of Siegfried, called Gudrun in the VOLSUNGA SAGA, where Attila figures as Atli.

Eucharist. Ultimately from a Greek word meaning thanksgiving. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

Eucken, Rudolf Christoph (1846-1926). German philosopher and historian of religion and philosophy. Nobel Prize in literature (1908). His own tenets can be described as representing a metaphysical idealism of ethical activism.

Euclid (fl. 300 B.C.). Greek geometer who lived and taught at Alexandria. Elements (of Geometry) in 13 books. Basis of future geometry.

Euclid alone has looked on beauty bare Edna St. Vincent Millay.

Eugene Aram. A novel by Bulwer LYTTON (1832) founded on a famous murder case. The real Eugene Aram (1704-1759) was a Knaresborough schoolmaster convicted of murdering a shoemaker, Daniel Clarke, to whom he owed money. Bulwer Lytton makes the youthful Aram commit murder to secure money to further his own idealistic purposes. He goes free for a time, falls in love, all unknowingly, with a relative of the murdered man, and is in his wedding clothes when he is accused of the crime.

Eugene of Savoy (1663-1736). Prince and Austrian General. Because of banishment of his mother by Louis XIV, fought for the Austrian Emperor. Fought against the Turks, whom he defeated at Zenta (1697) and forced to accept the treaty of Carlowitz (1699). Active in the coalition against Louis XIV (1689-1697). With Marlborough won Blenheim (1704), Oudenarde (1708), and Malplaquet (1709). "Prinz Eugen, der edle Ritter" (Prince Eugene, the noble knight) is a figure of almost folkloristic import in many Austrian and German songs about the man who saved Vienna and Western Europe from the Turks.

Eugénie Grandet. A novel by BALZAC (1833). See under GRANDET.

Eugénie Marie de Montijo de Guzmán (1826-1920). Married Napoleon III. Empress of the French (1853-1870). Her feminine charm added brilliance to the French court. She became a leader of fashion. In her influence over her husband she showed no interest in liberal and democratic ideas. After the downfall of the Empire, she was befriended by Queen Victoria in England.

Eugenius. The friend and counsellor of Yorick in Sterne's TRISTRAM SHANDY. He is intended for John Hall-Stevenson (1718-1785), author of Crazy Tales, and a friend of Sterne.

Eulalie, St. See under SAINT.

Eulenspiegel (i.e., "Owl-glass"), Tyll. A 14th-century villager of Brunswick round whom clustered a large number of popular tales of all sorts of mischievous pranks, first printed in 1515. The work has been attributed (probably erroneously) to Thomas Murner (1475-1530); it was translated into many languages and rapidly achieved wide popularity. Richard STRAUSS based his tone-poem, Tyl Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks, on the adventures of this rogue. See also under Charles de COSTER.

eulogy. An oration in commendation; an encomium or panegyric.

Eumæus. The slave and swineherd of Ulysses; hence, a swineherd.

Eumenides (Gr., the good-tempered ones). A name given by the Greeks to the Furies, as it would have been ominous and bad policy to call them by their right name, ERINYES.

Eunoe. In Dante's DIVINE COMEDY, a river of Purgatory, a draught of which makes the mind recall all the good deeds and good offices of life. It is a little beyond Lethe or the river of forgetfulness.

Lo! where Eunoe flows,
Lead thither; and, as thou art wont, revive
His fainting virtue.

Dante, Purgatory, xxxiii.

eunuch. From a Greek word meaning chamberlain. Since (in Asia and elsewhere in the Greek empire) chamberlains employed in harems and palaces were generally castrated, the word eunuch developed the meaning of a castrated man. The famous Byzantine general Narses (478?-573) was a eunuch.

euphemism. Word or phrase substituted to soften down offensive expressions. Pope refers to the use of euphemisms in his lines:

To rest the cushion and soft dean invite,
Who never mentioned hell to ears polite.
Moral Essays, epist. iv, 49.

"His Satanic majesty"; "light-fingered gentry"; "a gentleman on his travels" (one transported); "she has met with an accident" (has had a child before marriage); "not quite correct" (a falsehood); "an obliquity of vision" (a squint) are common examples. See EUMENIDES above.

euphony. Harmony or beauty of sound. In philology the term has little or no significance. The French do not stick an l between ou and on for reasons of euphony; Italian is not intrinsically more euphonic than Yiddish; etc. In rhetoric, euphony may be said to be conditioned by a functionally well-proportioned pattern of sounds. The implied judgment is subjective.

Euphrasia. (1) Heroine of Beaumont and Fletcher's PHILASTER. She assumes boy's attire and calls herself Bellario in order to serve Philaster as a page.

(2) The heroine of Murphy's Grecian Daughter (1772), who nurses her starving father, Evander, king of Syracuse, with milk from her own breast when he is imprisoned by Dionysius the younger. The incident is not historical, but is related of other heroines of legend.

Euphrosyne. In classic mythology, one of the three GRACES.

Euphues. The chief character of John Lyly's Euphues: Or The Anatomy of Wit (1579) and Euphues and his England (1580). He is an Athenian, who goes to Naples and attempts to win the governor's daughter Lucilla, the fiancée of his friend Philautus. This procedure estranges him from Philautus, but when Lucilla marries a third lover, the two friends are united in their disillusionment regarding all the opposite sex. There is little plot in either romance; the interest lies chiefly in their long philosophic discussions and in the elaborated and affected style that gave rise to the words Euphuism and Euphuist. The book undoubtedly had a marked influence upon prose style, and for a time Euphuism, or stilted, fine writing was in great vogue. See also GONGORISM.

eureka (Gr., more correctly heureka, I have found it). An exclamation of delight at having made a discovery; originally that of Archimedes, the Syracusan philosopher, when he discovered how to test the purity of Hiero's crown. The tale is that Hiero delivered a certain weight of gold to a smith to be made into a votive crown, but, suspecting that the gold had been alloyed with an inferior metal, asked Archimedes to test it. The philosopher did not know how to proceed, but in stepping into his bath, which was quite full, observed that some of the water ran over. It immediately struck him that a body must remove its own bulk of water when it is immersed; silver is lighter than gold, therefore a pound-weight of silver will be more bulky than a pound-weight of gold, and would consequently remove more water. In this way he found that the crown was deficient in gold; and Vitruvius says:

When the idea flashed across his mind, the philosopher jumped out of the bath exclaiming, "Heureka! heureka!" and, without waiting to dress himself, ran home to try the experiment.

Eureka! The motto of California, in allusion to the gold discovered there.

Euripides. Greek playwright of the 5th century B. C., born on the island of Salamis, according to popular tradition, on the day of the great sea battle (Sept. 480 B. C.). Ranked with Aeschylus and Sophocles as the greatest of Greek dramatists. He has been characterized as the Racine of antiquity. Eighteen of his reputed seventy-five plays are extant, among them Alcestis, Medea, Hippolytus, Hecuba, Andromache, Tion, Iphigenia at Aulis, and Bacchae.

Euroclydon. A tempestuous northeast wind of the Mediterranean. Also called gre-gale, i.e., the wind from Greece. The first part of Euroclydon is EURUS, the east wind of classical antiquity. The second part is clydon, "a wave." The word occurs Acts xxvii. 14 and may be a popular adaptation of the manuscript variant (now preferred) Euraquilo, in which the second part is Aquilo, "the north wind."

Europa. In classic myth, a daughter either of Phoenix or of Agenor, famed for her beauty. Jupiter in the form of a white bull carried her off and swam with her to the island of Crete. She was the mother of Minos, Rhadamanthus and Evandros, and, according to some forms of the legend, of the MINOTAUR.

Europeans, The. A novel by Henry JAMES (1878), a study in contrasting cultures. The plot centers about the visit of "the Europeans," Felix Young, a temperamental artist and his sister Eugenia, themorganatically married Baroness Münster, to the farm of their New England relatives, the Wentworths. The Europeans hope to gain much from their American cousins, but find their schemes difficult of attainment because of the New England standards by which they are judged.

Eurus. The southeast or east wind; connected with Gr. eos and Lat. aurora, the dawn. See also EURECLYDON.

Eurydice. See ORPHEUS.

Eurylochus. In classic myth, the only companion of Ulysses whom CIRCE was unable to change into a hog.

Eurystheus. The cousin of HERCULES, who, on the urging of Juno, imposed upon that hero his twelve famous labors.

eurythmics. The art of expressive bodily movements, normally exercised in conjunction with music on the basis of a system like that originally devised by JAKES-DALCROZE.

Eurytion. In Greek legend, the Centaur, who, at the marriage feast of Pirithous with Hippodamia, became intoxicated and offered violence to the bride, thus causing the celebrated battle of the Lapithae and Centaurs. Eurytion was also the name of the giant guarding Geryon's cattle and slain by Hercules.

Eusebio. Hero of CALDERÓN's drama The Devotion to the Cross (La Devoción de la Cruz; 1634). He is a man of many crimes who nevertheless is saved by his religious devotion.

Eusebius of Caesarea (260?-340). Theologian. Called "father of ecclesiastical history." Wrote a Christian Church history in ten books and also a universal history.

Eustace Diamonds, The. A novel by Anthony TROLLOPE. The principal character, Lady Elizabeth Eustace, is described in his autobiography as "a cunning little woman of pseudo fashion . . . a second Becky Sharp."

Eutaw. A historic novel by W. G. SIMMS (1856) dealing with the American Revolution. See KATHERINE WALTON.

Euterpe. One of the nine MUSES; the inventor of the double flute; the muse of Dionysiac music; patroness of joy and pleasure, and of flute-players.

euthanasia. An easy, happy death. The word occurs in the DUNCIAD, and Byron has a poem so called. Euthanasia generally means a harbor of rest and peace after the storms of life. Now applied also to so-called "mercy-killings."

Euxine. The Black Sea. Literally, the hospitable sea.

Eva, Little, see LITTLE EVA.

Evadne. (1) In Greek legend, wife of CAPANEUS. She threw herself on the funeral pile of her husband, and was consumed with him.

(2) One of the principal characters of Beaumont and Fletcher's drama, The Maid's Tragedy (1610), the sister of Melantius. Aminator was compelled by the King to marry her, although he was betrothed to Aspasia, the "maid" whose death forms the tragical event of the drama.

Evander. In classic myth, a son of Mercury and an Arcadian nymph. According to legend he was banished from Arcadia about sixty years before the Trojan war and led a group of colonists into Italy. In the Aeneid, this old man welcomes Aeneas to Italy after his escape from Troy.

evangelical. Contained in or relating to the Four Gospels or their record of Christ's life. The term is specifically applied to those Christian denominations that profess to base their tenets only on Scripture and that consequently are primarily concerned with the doctrines of man's corrupt nature, of atonement by Christ, justification by faith, etc.

Evangelic Doctor. See under DOCTOR.

Evangeline. A narrative poem by LONGFELLOW (1847). The subject of the tale is the expulsion of the inhabitants of Acadia (Nova Scotia) from their homes by order of George II. Evangeline is the daughter of Benedict Bellefontaine, the richest farmer of Acadia. At the age of seventeen she is legally betrothed by the notary public to Gabriel, son of Basil, the blacksmith. Next day all the colony is exiled by order of George II, and their houses, cattle, and lands are confiscated. Gabriel and Evangeline are parted, and for years she wanders from place to place to find her betrothed. At length, grown old in this hopeless search, she goes to Philadelphia and becomes a Sister of Mercy. The plague breaks out in the city, and as she visits the almshouse she sees an old man smitten down with the pestilence. It is Gabriel. He tries to whisper her name, but death closes his lips. He is buried, and then Evangeline lies beside him in the grave.

Evangelists. The four Evangelists, Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, are usually represented in art as follows:

Matthew. With a pen in his hand, and a scroll before him, looking over his left shoulder at an angel. This Gospel was the first, and the angel represents the Being who dictated it.

Mark. Seated writing, and by his side a couchant winged lion. Mark begins his gospel with the sojourn of Jesus in the wilderness, amidst wild beasts, and the temptation of Satan, "the roaring lion."

Luke. With a pen, looking in deep thought over a scroll, and near him a cow or ox chewing the cud. The latter part refers to the eclectic character of St. Luke's Gospel. He is also frequently shown as painting a picture, from the tradition that he painted a portrait of the Virgin.

John. A young man of great delicacy, with an eagle in the background to denote sublimity.

Evan Harrington. A novel by George MEREDITH (1860). The hero, Evan Harrington, is the son of Melchisedec Harrington, the tailor, "the great Mel." Mel, who is ambitious, has succeeded in marrying his three daughters into good society and with their assistance proposes to make of Evan a gentleman. Through the scheming manipulations of his sister the Countess de Saldar, "the most consummate liar in literature," Evan is introduced under false pretenses among the guests at a house party at the home of the high-born Rose Jocelyn. Evan and Rose fall in love; she half suspects the truth; he tries to confess it. Meantime "the great Mel" has died, leaving huge debts, and the sensible and forthright Mrs. Mel makes every effort to persuade her son to assume the business. The truth comes out at last, but the romance survives the shock.

Evans, Caradoc (1883?-1945). Welsh anti-Welsh novelist, playwright, and journalist. Has been called "the greatest satirist of his own people since Swift."

Evans, Mary Ann. See ELIOT, GEORGE.

Evans, Maurice (1901-). English actor. Has been a success in many Shakespearean rôles. Now an American citizen.

Evans, Robley Dangleison (1846-1912). American Admiral, remembered as "Fighting Bob Evans." His ship fired the first gun at the Spaniards at Santiago (1898). Commander in chief of U.S. fleet on its voyage around the world (1907). Wrote A Sailor's Log (1901) and An Admiral's Log (1910).

Evans, Sir Hugh. In Shakespeare's MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR, a pedantic Welsh parson and schoolmaster of extraordinary simplicity and native shrewdness.

Evans, William. The giant porter (d. 1632) of Charles I, who carried about in his pocket Sir Jeffrey Hudson, the king's dwarf. He was nearly eight feet high. Fuller speaks of him in his Worthies, and Scott introduces him in PEVERIL OF THE PEAK:

As tall a man as is in London, always excepting the king's porter, Master Evans, that carried you about in his pocket, Sir Geoffrey, as all the world has heard tell.—Ch. xxxiii.

Evarts, Hal George (1887-1934). Popular writer of Western fiction. One of his best books is Spanish Acres (1925).

Eve. Literally, "living, life." The first woman; the "mother of all living." An Eve is a temptress, so called because Eve persuaded Adam to eat the forbidden fruit. See ADAM AND EVE.

Mark TWAIN has a humorous satire called Eve's Diary. There is a well-known poem by Ralph Hodgson entitled Eve.

Evelina or The History of A Young Lady's Entrance into the World. A novel by Fanny BURNLEY (1778). The heroine, Evelina, is brought up in the country by a guardian. She and her lover, Lord Orville, are kept apart by the mystery surrounding her parentage, by the mortifications caused her by her vulgar cousins, the BRANGHTONS and by numerous misunderstandings; but she turns out to be the daughter of Sir John Belmont and all ends happily.

Evelyn, John (1620-1706). English diarist, contemporary of PEPYS. His Diary (1640-1706) is of great historical value although or because it was written by a strong Royalist. He was a prominent member of the Royal Society, at one time its secretary (1672), and author of over thirty works on numismatics, architecture, landscape gardening, etc.

Evelyn Hope. A poem by Browning in his Men and Women (1855).

Evelyn Innes. A novel by George MOORE (1898), dealing with the career of a beautiful and talented singer and her struggle between worldly and spiritual attachments. In the sequel, Saint Theresa (1901), she has become a nun.

Evening Post. A New York newspaper, founded in 1801 by Federalists. Drake and HALLECK contributed to it the Croaker Papers. William Cullen Bryant was its editor from 1829 to 1878, and made it the mouthpiece of Jacksonian Democracy. The Villard family took it over in 1881, and E. L. Godkin and Carl Schurz edited it. The Post was always a crusading paper. Mr. Villard sold it in 1918. It was for an interim edited by Edwin F. Gay and then sold to the Curtis Publishing Company. Its name was altered in 1934 to the New York Post, and it became the property of Dorothy S. Thackrey. Its columnists include Dorothy Thompson, Edgar Ansel Mowrer, Samuel Grafton, Marquis W. Childs, and others.

Eve of St. Agnes, The. A poem by John KEATS (1819), based on the medieval superstitions surrounding St. Agnes Eve. See under SAINT. It describes the elopement of Madeline, a baron's daughter, with Porphyro, her lover and the enemy of her father. Some of Keats's most striking sensuous imagery is found in this poem.

Eve of St. John, The. A ballad by Sir Walter SCOTT (1799), concerned with the visit made by Sir Richard of Coldingham, slain in the battle of Ancram Moor (1545) by the Baron of Smaylho'me, to the bower of the Baron's wife, at the lady's urgent invitation. The ghost curses the Baron for murder and the lady for adultery, and the two end their days repentantly as a nun and a monk.

Eve of St. Mark. An unfinished poem by John KEATS.

Everdene, Bathsheba. Heroine of Hardy's FAR FROM THE MADDING CROWD.

Everglade State. Florida. See under STATES.

Everlasting Mercy, The. A narrative poem by John MASEFIELD (1911), the story of the conversion of Saul Kane, a drunkard.

Ever Victorious Army, the. A force of Chinese, officered by Europeans and Americans, raised in 1861, and placed under the charge of Gordon. See CHINESE GORDON. By 1864 it had stamped out the Taëping rebellion, which had broken out in 1851.

Everyman. An old morality play of about the time of Edward IV, depicting man's progress through life. Everyman is symbolic of humanity, and the characters he meets with are personified vices and virtues. The subtitle reads A Treatise how the hye Fader of Heaven sendeth Deth to somon every creature to come and gyve a counte of theyr lyves in this Worlde.

Every Man in His Humor. A comedy by Ben JONSON (1598). For the use of the word humor as a peculiarity of temperament, see HUMOR. The persons to whom the title of the drama apply are: Captain Bobadil, whose humor is bragging of his brave deeds and military courage and who is thrashed as a coward by Downright; Kately, whose humor is jealousy of his wife and who is befooled and cured by a trick played on him by Brainworm; Stephen, whose humor is verdant stupidity and who is played on by everyone; Kno'well, whose humor is suspicion of his son Edward, which turns out to be all moonshine; Dame Kately, whose humor is jealousy of her husband, but she, like her husband, is cured by a trick devised by Brainworm.

Everyman's Library. A series of books, popularly priced, including among its 1000 items all the best works of the greatest authors of the past. The idea of the Library was conceived by Ernest RHYS. The first fifty items appeared in 1905. It is published by J. M. Dent & Sons in London (original publishers) and E. P. Dutton & Co. in New York.

evil eye. It was anciently believed that the eyes of some persons darted noxious rays on objects which they glared upon. The first morning glance of such eyes was certain destruction to man or beast. Virgil speaks of an evil eye making cattle lean.

Evil May Day. The name given to the serious rioting made on May 1, 1517, by the London apprentices, who fell on the French residents. The riot was put down with difficulty. Sir Thomas MORE, and the Earls of Shrewsbury and SURREY were among those who assisted. Two hundred and seventy-eight of the rioters were arrested, of whom fifteen were hanged, drawn, and quartered. The insurrection forms the basis of the anonymous Elizabethan play, Sir Thomas More.

Evoc. Pseudonym of Edmund George Valpy KNOX.

Évolution créatrice, L', see CREATIVE EVOLUTION.

Évremond, see SAINT-ÉVREMOND.

Ewald or Evald, Johannes (1743-1781). Danish national lyric poet and dramatist. Author of the first original Danish tragedy Rolf Krage (1770) and the national festival drama, The Fishers (1779), containing the song, King Christian Stood by the Lofty Mast, which has become a Danish national song.

ewe lamb. A single possession greatly prized; in allusion to the story told in 2 Sam. xii, 1-14.

Ewing, Juliana Horatia (1841-1885). English writer of children's stories.

exarch. See RULERS, TITLES OF.

Excalibur. The name of Arthur's sword (O.Fr., Escalibor), called by Geoffrey of MONMOUTH Caliburn, and in the MABINOGION Caledwulch. There was a sword called Caladbolg famous in Irish legend, which is thought to have meant "hard-belly," i.e., capable of consuming anything; this and the name Excalibur are probably connected.

By virtue of being the one knight who could pull Excalibur from a stone in which it had been magically fixed (from which has been put together another so-called derivation of the name, viz., Lat. ex cal [ce] liber [are], to free from the stone) Arthur was acclaimed as "the right born king of all England." After his last battle, when the king lay sore wounded, it was returned at his command by Sir Bedivere to the LADY OF THE LAKE, who, according to some accounts, had given it to him herself. Sir Bedivere threw it into the water and an arm clothed in white samite appeared to receive it.

ex cathedra. With authority. The Pope, speaking ex cathedra, is said to speak with an infallible voice—to speak as the successor and representative of St. Peter, and in his pontifical character. The words mean "from the chair"—i.e., the throne of the pontiff—and are applied to all dicta uttered by authority, and ironically to self-sufficient, dogmatic assertions.

excelsior (Lat., "higher"). Aim at higher things still. It is the motto of the United States, and has been made popular by Longfellow's poem so named (1842).

Excelsior State. New York. See also under STATE.

excommunication. (1) The greater is exclusion of an individual from the seven sacraments, from every legitimate act, and from all intercourse with the faithful. (2) The lesser excommunication is sequestration from the services of the Church only. See also under BELL.

Excursion, The. A long didactic poem in blank verse by WORDSWORTH, forming part of The Recluse (1814). It includes discussions of virtue, religious faith, the industrial revolution and its social effects, and the education of children. Wordsworth is sometimes called "the poet (or bard) of The Excursion."

exemplum. In the religious literature of the Middle Ages, a short tale which is used for a didactic purpose, as to illustrate one of the Seven Deadly Sins. Several of Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES are exempla.

Exeter Book. A MS. collection of Anglo-Saxon poetry, presented about 1060 by Bishop Leofric to Exeter Cathedral, and still preserved in the library there. It includes poems and "riddles" by CYNEWULF (8th century), the legends of St. Guthlac and St. Juliana, Widsith, The Wanderer, DEOR'S LAMENT, etc.

The EXON or EXETER DOMESDAY is also sometimes called the "Exeter Book."

Exiles. A play by James JOYCE (1918) in the tradition of IBSEN. It concerns Richard Rowan, an Irish writer who has been living in Italy and returns to Ireland to visit his dying mother from whom he has been estranged because of his religious dissidence; his wife, Bertha; Beatrice Justice, a music teacher whom he loved as a young man; and Robert Hand, a journalist and man of action attracted to Bertha. Richard Rowan is considered to be based on the character of the author himself, and the psychological and spiritual problems presented in the play are similar to those treated in THE DEAD, A PORTRAIT OF THE ARTIST AS A YOUNG MAN, and ULYSSES. The spiritual relationship of Beatrice to Richard and its contrast with the relationship implied between Bertha and Robert have caused the play to be interpreted by some as a variation on the story of Dante and Beatrice. See BEATRICE.

existentialism. A somewhat unsystematic system of philosophy in vogue after World War II in France and developed by Jean Paul Sartre on the basis of the teachings of the German philosopher, Heidegger, who in turn owes a great deal to the Dane, Søren Kierkegaard. The basic tenet of existentialism seems to be that "we and things in general exist, and that is all that there is to this absurd business called life." Since Sartre is a novelist and playwright as well, existentialism came to play an important part in French letters after World War II. It proved an ideal vehicle for the basic concept of "absurde" of the new lost generation.

ex libris. Literally, from the (collection of) books. The phrase is written in the books or printed on the bookplate, and is followed by the name of the owner in the genitive. Hence, a bookplate is often called an ex libris.

ex luce lucellum. Literally, "Out of light a little profit." Coined by William Pitt in reference to the tax on windows and suggested by Robert Lowe, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, as a motto for match boxes when it was proposed (in 1871) that lucifer matches should be taxed.

Exodus (Gr. exodos, a journey out). The second book of the Old Testament, which relates the departure of the Israelites from Egypt under the guidance of Moses; hence, not capitalized, a going out generally, especially a transference of population on a considerable scale.

Exon Domesday. A magnificent MS. on 532 folio vellum leaves, for long preserved among the muniments at Exeter Cathedral, containing the survey of Wilts, Dorset, Somerset, Devon, and Cornwall. In 1816 it was published by Sir Henry Ellis as a supplement to the DOMESDAY BOOK.

Expectation Week. Between the Ascension and Whit Sunday, when the Apostles continued praying "in earnest expectation of the Comforter."

ex pede Herculem. From this sample you can judge of the whole. Plutarch says that Pythagoras calculated the height of Hercules by comparing the length of various stadia in Greece. A stadium was 600 feet in length, but Hercules' stadium at Olympia was much longer; therefore, said the philosopher, the foot of Hercules was proportionately longer than an ordinary foot; and as the foot bears a certain ratio to the height, so the height of Hercules can be easily ascertained. Ex ungue leonem, a lion (may be drawn) from its claw, is a similar phrase.

expressionism. A movement in art of about the time of World War I, at its height of influence during the first years of the 1920's. It involves an expression of the author's or artist's state of mind, thoughts, emotions, dreams, and the like, by means of projection through a set of external objects, situations, events, etc., which have a public reference and which are not otherwise related to one another. See also SYMBOLISM. It originated in painting, was utilized in literature, and was most widely exemplified in the theater, in stage design and dramatic technique, especially in Germany. American expressionistic plays include THE ADDING MACHINE and THE EMPEROR JONES.

expurgate. To divest of objectionable elements. Especially applied to books divested of obscene or morally noxious elements. See also AD USUM DELPHINI; INDEX.

Expurgatory Index. See under INDEX.

Exter. That's Exter, as the old woman said when she saw Kerton. A Devonshire saying, meaning "I thought my work was done, but I find much still remains before it is completed." "Exter" is the popular pronunciation of Exeter, and "Kerton" is Crediton. The tradition is that the woman in question was going for the first time to Exeter, and seeing the grand old church of Kerton (Crediton), supposed it to be Exeter Cathedral. "That's Exter," she said, "and my journey is over"; but alas! she had still eight miles to walk.

extravaganza (It.). A musical or dramatic composition characterized by extravagant irregularity. Hence, a caricature, burlesque, etc.

Extreme Unction. (1) One of the seven sacraments of the Catholic Church, founded on James v. 14, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the Church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord."

(2) Title of a famous poem by Ernest Dowson.

extrovert or extravert. In psychological parlance, one whose interest is centered in external objects and phenomena, in physical rather than mental activities, etc. See also the opposite, INTROVERT; JUNG, CARL GUSTAV.

Eyck, Jan van (1370?-1440) and his brother Hubert van (1366?-1426). Founders of the Flemish School of painting who introduced, according to tradition, a new technique of oil painting with a drying varnish. In their famous altarpiece at Ghent one of the panels is occupied by a picture of St. Anthony in the midst of a group of his monks who follow their master in his adoration of the Lamb of God.

eye.

the eye of a needle. A reference to the words of Christ in Matt. xix. 24:

It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

the eye of Greece. Athens.

Athens, the eye of Greece, mother of arts.

Milton, Paradise Regained, iv. 240.

the eye of the Baltic. Gotland, in the Baltic.

the eye of the storm. An opening between the storm clouds.

almond eyes. The Chinese, from the shape of their eyes.

bull's eye. The center of a target.

evil eye, see EVIL EYE.

eye-opener. Something that furnishes enlightenment, or food for astonishment; also, a strong, mixed drink, especially a morning pick-me-up.

eye-wash. Flattery; soft sawder; fulsome adulation given for the purpose of blinding one to the real state of affairs.

an eye for an eye. Retribution in kind. Deut. xix. 21.

in the eye of the wind. Almost directly opposed to the wind.

Eyolf, Little, see LITTLE EYOLF.

Eyre, Jane, see JANE EYRE.

Eyre, Simon. A merry English shoemaker, who built Leadenhall and gave it to the city of London. He had a political career which took him from the position of alderman to that of sheriff and finally to that of Lord Mayor in 1445. His story is told in THE GENTLE CRAFT (1597) by Thomas Deloney, and he also appears in THE SHOEMAKER'S HOLIDAY by Thomas Dekker.

Ezzelin, Sir. In Byron's LARA, the gentleman who recognizes Lara at the table of Lord Otho, and charges him with being Conrad, the corsair. A duel ensues, and Ezzelin is never heard of any more.

F

Fabian. Servant to Olivia in Shakespeare's TWELFTH NIGHT.

Fabian Society. An association of socialists founded in January, 1884, by a small group of middle-class "intellectuals," which included George Bernard SHAW and Sidney WEBB, among others. As announced in its prospectus, it aims at "the reorganization of society by the emancipation of land and industrial capital from individual and class ownership, and the vesting of them in the community for the general benefit" . . . and at "the transfer to the community of the administration of such industrial capital as can conveniently be managed socially."

The name is derived from Quintus Fabius (275-203 B.C.), surnamed CUNCTATOR, the Roman general, who won his way against Hannibal by wariness, not by violence, by caution, not by defiance.

Fabius. See CUNCTATOR, and FABIAN SOCIETY above.

the American Fabius. Washington (1732-1799), whose military policy was similar to that of Fabius. He wearied out the English troops by harassing them, without coming to a pitched battle.

Fabius of the French. Anne, Duc de Montmorency, grand constable of France; so called from his success in almost annihilating the imperial army which had invaded Provence, by laying the country waste and prolonging the campaign (1493-1567).

Fable for Critics, A. A satire in verse by James Russell LOWELL, published anonymously in 1848. It contains critical estimates of Lowell's literary contemporaries, including EMERSON, POE, LONGFELLOW, Margaret FULLER, Bronson ALCOTT, THOREAU, and others. Amy LOWELL's Critical Fable is a 20th-century imitation of this.

fable. The term means historically a narrative or story. This sense survives in the use of the word as a synonym of falsehood as also of the plot of a play or poem. In the more restricted sense, a fable, i.e., an Aesopic fable is a story conveying a principle of behavior through the analogy of fictitious, though plausible, actions of animals, men, gods, or inanimate objects. In form the typical fable is brief and epigrammatic. It may or may not wind up with an explicit statement of its moral. The most important authors of fables are listed under Aesop.

fabliaux. Ribald and often obscene stories of the Middle Ages, an important part of the literature of the common people. They usually concern sexual intrigue and adultery, women and the clergy most often being the objects of satirical attack, as well as practical jokes and tricks of revenge. See Chaucer's MILLER'S TALE. They are very ancient in origin, many analogues to popular European fabliaux having been found in the literature of the Orient, and were transmitted from age to age by oral tradition; a number of 20th-century "smoking-room" stories and off-color vaudeville jokes are direct descendants of medieval stories. Boccaccio's DECAMERON, Chaucer's CANTERBURY TALES, and Balzac's Droll Stories contain outstanding representatives of fabliaux.

Fabre, Jean Henri (1823-1915). French naturalist; author of Souvenirs entomologiques (1879-1907) in 10 volumes, parts of which have appeared in English, translated by A. Teixeira de Mattos and Bernard Miall. His work was crowned by the Institute of France.

Fabricius. A Roman hero (d. ca. 270 B.C.), representative of incorruptibility and honesty. The ancient writers tell of the frugal way in which he lived on his farm, how he refused the rich presents offered him by the Samnite ambassadors, and how at death he left no portion for his daughters, whom the senate provided for.

Fabricius, scorner of all-conquering gold.
Thomson, Seasons (Winter).

Fabulinus. The Roman deity who presided over the speech of infants.

facile (Fr.) Easy. Hence, specifically applied to authors, writing with great ease and not always avoiding superficiality. Also in phrases like a facile pen.

facsimile. An exact copy of a document. The term is now chiefly used with the implication of photographic identity.

factotum (Lat., facere totum, "to do everything required"). One who does for his employer all sorts of services. Sometimes called a Johannes Factotum. Formerly the term meant a busybody, or much the same as our "Jack-of-all trades," and it is in this sense that Robert GREENE used it in his famous reference to Shakespeare:

There is an upstart Crow beautified with our feathers, that with his Tygers heart wrapt in a Players hide, supposes he is as well able to bumbast out a blanke verse as the best of you: but being an absolute Johannes factotum, is in his owne conceit the onely Shake-scene in a cuntry.—Groatsworth of Wit (1592).

Fadda. MAHOMET's white mule.

Fadiman, Clifton (1904-). American literary critic, conductor of "Information Please" on the radio (since 1938), receiver of the Saturday Review of Literature award (for 1940), editor of I Believe (1939) and a prose anthology, Reading I've Liked (1941). One of the literary judges of the BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB.

Fadladeen. In Moore's LALLA ROOKH, the great nazir or chamberlain of Aurlingzebe's harem. He criticizes the tales told by a young poet to Lalla Rookh on her way to Delhi, and great is his mortification to find that the poet is the young king, his master.

Fadladeen was a judge of everything, from the pencilling of a Circassian's eyelids to the deepest questions of science and literature; from the mixture of a conserve of rose leaves to the composition of an epic poem.

Faërie Queene, The. An allegorical romance of chivalry by Edmund SPENSER, originally intended to have been in 12 books, each of which was to have portrayed one of the 12 moral virtues. Only six books of twelve cantos each, and part of a seventh, were written (I to III published in 1590, IV to VI in 1596, and the remaining fragments in 1611). It details the adventures of various knights, who personify different virtues, and belong to the court of Gloriana, the Faërie Queene, who sometimes typifies Queen Elizabeth. The poem makes use of much material of ARTHURIAN ROMANCE, in tribute to Elizabeth, whose family, the Tudors, were at the time popularly celebrated as descendants of King Arthur. It also contains attacks on the Roman Catholic Church.

The first book contains the legend of the Red Cross Knight (the spirit of the Church of England), and the victory of Holiness over Error.

The second book is the legend of Sir Guyon (Temperance, or the golden mean).

The third book is the legend of Britomartis (Chastity, or love without lust).

The fourth book tells the story of Cambel and Triamond (Fidelity).

The fifth book gives the legend of Artegal (Justice).

The sixth book, the legend of Sir Calidore (Courtesy).

The fragments of the seventh book—viz. cantos VI and VII, and two stanzas of canto III—have for their subject Mutability.

Fafner. In Wagner's RING, one of the giants that built Valhalla for Wotan. He and his brother Fasolt accept Alberich's golden hoard as payment in place of Freya, the price originally agreed upon. Fafner kills Fasolt and transforms himself into a dragon to guard the hoard which is now his. He is killed by Siegfried. In the Norse sources, Fafnir (not Fafner) has no brother and is guarding Andvari's gold as a venom-breathing dragon from the start.

fag. Modern slang for a cigarette. It is said to be short for "fag-end," and the story is that it arose through street-boys asking passing cigarette-smokers to "chuck us the fag, guv'nor," meaning the end, which is dried, mixed with others, and then made into new cigarettes or smoked in a pipe.

In public schools a fag is a small boy who waits upon a bigger one. Possibly, in this sense, a contracted form of FACTOTUM. See also FAG below.

Fag. In Sheridan's comedy THE RIVALS (1775), the lying servant of Captain Absolute. He "wears his master's wit, as he does his lace, at second hand." He "scruples not to tell a lie at his master's command, but it pains his conscience to be found out."

Fagin. In Dickens' OLIVER TWIST, an old Jew, who employs a gang of thieves, chiefly boys. These boys he teaches to pick pockets and pilfer adroitly. Fagin assumes a most suave and fawning manner but is grasping, and full of cruelty. He is ultimately arrested, tried, and condemned to death.

Faguet, Émile (1847-1916). French literary critic and professor of literature at the Sorbonne. Member of the French Academy (1900). Author of an outstanding History of French Literature (1900) and a book on The Art of Reading (1912).

Fahrenheit, Gabriel Daniel (1686-1736). German physicist who did most of his work in Holland and Great Britain. He improved the thermometer by the use of mercury (1714) and introduced a scale (still in use in Britain and U.S. but not in Germany) based on an "absolute" zero (the lowest temperature encountered by Fahrenheit) and reaching the freezing point of water at 32, the boiling point at 212 degrees. The abbreviation is F. or Fahr.

fainéant (Fr., from faire, "to do," and néant, "nothing"). An idler.

In Scott's Ivanhoe Richard Lionhearted is so called le noir fainéant by spectators at the tournament which he attends in disguise.

Clovis II (d. 656) and his ten Merovingian successors on the French throne are known as les rois fainéants, "the do-nothing kings." The line came to an end in 751, when Pepin the Short usurped the crown. Louis V (d. 987), the last of the Carolingians, is also referred to as a roi fainéant.

fair. Frequent as a personal epithet, corresponding with French le Bel, la Belle.

Edwy, or Eadwig, the Fair. King of Wessex (938-98).

Charles IV, King of France, le Bel (1294, 1322-1328).

Philippe IV of France, le Bel (1268, 1285-1314).

Fair Geraldine, see GERALDINE.

the fair-haired. Harold I, King of Norway (reigned 872-930).

Fair Maid of Anjou. Lady Edith Plantagenet (fl. 1200), who married David, Prince Royal of Scotland.

Fair Maid of Brittany. Eleanor (d. 1241), granddaughter of Henry II, and, after the death of Arthur (1203), the rightful sovereign of England. Her uncle, the usurper King John, imprisoned her in Bristol Castle, where she died. Her father, Geoffrey, John's elder brother, was Count of Brittany.

Fair Maid of Kent. Joan (1328-1385), Countess of Salisbury, wife of the Black Prince, and only daughter of Edmond Plantagenet, Earl of Kent. She had been twice married before she gave her hand to the prince.

Fair Maid of Norway. Margaret (1283-1290), daughter of Eric II of Norway, and granddaughter of Alexander III of Scotland. Being recognized by the states of Scotland as successor to the throne, she set out for her kingdom, but died at sea from sea-sickness.

Fair Maid of Perth. Katie Glover, the most beautiful young woman of Perth. Heroine of Scott's novel of the same name (see below), she is supposed to have lived in the early 15th century, but is not a definite historical character, though her house is still shown at Perth.

Fair Parricide. Beatrice Cenci.

Fair Rosamond, see ROSAMOND.

Fairbanks, Charles Warren (1852-1918). U.S. Senator from Indiana (1897-1905). Vice-president of U.S. (1905-1909).

Fairbanks, Douglas (1883-1939). American actor on the stage and in moving pictures. For many years married to MARY PICKFORD. Famous for athletic, swashbuckling rôles. Father of Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. (1908-), also a moving-picture actor.

Fairchild, Henry Pratt (1880-). American social scientist. Author of Immigration (1913), Elements of Social Science (1924), General Sociology (1934), and Economics for the Millions (1940).

Fairchild Family, The History of the (1818). An old-fashioned and once extremely popular story for children by Mrs. Mary Martha Sherwood (1775-1851), which lives up to its subtitle, The Child's Manual, by never losing an opportunity for moral instruction. It was reprinted in 1889.

Fairfax, Edward (d. 1635). English author, considered one of the best of Elizabethan translators. He translated Tasso's JERUSALEM DELIVERED as Godfrey of Bulloigne, Or the Recovery of Jerusalem (1600), transforming the original into an Elizabethan work by the richness of his language and imagery, of which Ben Jonson disapproved.

Fairfax, Jane. A character in Jane Austen's EMMA.

Fairfax, Thomas (1612-1671). Commander in Chief of the Parliamentary army (1645), defeated Charles I at Naseby. Less able in civilian affairs, he became an instrument in the hands of stronger men as witnessed by his reluctant participation in the condemnation of the king (1649). He was active again in preparing the Restoration, and headed the commission dispatched to Charles II at the Hague (1660).

Fairford, Allan. In Scott's REDGAUNTLET, a young barrister, son of Saunders. He marries Lillias Redgauntlet, sister of Sir Arthur Darsie Redgauntlet, called "Darsie Latimer." Scott's biographer Lockhart says that this character is largely autobiographical.

Fair God, The. A historical novel by Lew WALLACE (1873), dealing with the Spanish conquest of Mexico in the first part of the 16th century. "The Fair God" is Quetzalcoatl, the Aztec god of the air. The Emperor Montezuma, deceived by the Spanish leader Cortez, allows his forces to come in as guests. At the head of the Aztec opposition is Guatamozin, nephew and son-in-law of Montezuma. After a series of dramatic events, the Aztecs finally compel the Spaniards to withdraw, but they themselves are left in a weakened and chaotic state.

Fair Maid of Perth, The. A novel by Sir Walter Scott (1828), of the period of Henry IV of England and Robert III of Scotland. The "Fair Maid" is Catherine Glover, daughter of a glover of Perth, who kisses Henry Smith, the armorer, in his sleep on St. Valentine's Day. Smith proposes marriage, and although Catherine refuses at first, at the end of the novel she becomes his wife. The concurrent plot is the amour of Prince James of Scotland, son of Robert III, and Louise the Glee-maiden. The novel is full of intrigue; the Prince quarrels with his father, is arrested and finally secretly murdered. The Glee-maiden then casts herself down from a high precipice.

Fair Penitent, The. A drama by Nicholas ROWE (1703). See LOTHARIO.

Fairservice, Andrew. In Sir Walter Scott's Rob Roy, a cunning Scottish gardener.

Fair-star. See CHERY AND FAIR-STAR.

fairy. The names of the principal fairies and of groups of similar sprites known to fable and legend are given throughout the Encyclopedia. See:

AFREET, ARIEL, BANSHEE, BOGEY, BROWNIE, BUG, CAULD LAD, DUENDE, DUERGAR, ELF, FATA, GENIUS, GNOME, GOBLIN, HOBGOBLIN, JINN, KELPIE, KOBOLD, LEPRACHAUN, LUTIN, MAB, MONACIELLO, NAIAD, NICKER, OBERON, OREAD, PERI, PIGWIGGEN, PIXY, PUCK, ROBIN GOODFELLOW, STROMKARL, SYLPH, TROLLS, UNDINE.

fairy darts. Flint arrow-heads.

fairy loaves or stones. Fossil sea-urchins, said to be made by the fairies.

fairy money. Found money. Said to be placed by some good fairy at the spot where it was picked up. "Fairy money" is apt to be transformed into leaves.

fairy of the mine. A malevolent GNOME supposed to live in mines, busying itself with cutting ore, turning the windlass, but effecting nothing.

No goblin, or swart fairy of the mine,
Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity.
Milton, Comus, 447.

fairy rings. Circles of rank or withered grass, often seen in lawns, meadows, and grass-plots, and popularly supposed to be produced by fairies dancing on the spot. In sober truth, these rings are simply an agaric or fungus below the surface, which has seeded circularly, as many plants do. Where the ring is brown and almost bare, the "spawn" has enveloped the roots and thus prevented their absorbing moisture; but where the grass is rank, the "spawn" itself has died, and served as manure to the young grass.

You demi-puppets, that
By moonshine do the green-sour ringlets make,
Whereof the ewe not bites.

Shakespeare, Tempest, v. 1.

fairy sparks. The phosphoric light from decaying wood, fish, and other substances. Thought at one time to be lights prepared for the fairies at their revels.

Faithful. In Bunyan's PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, a companion of Christian in his walk to the Celestial City. Both are seized at Vanity Fair, and Faithful, being burnt to death, is taken to heaven in a chariot of fire.

Faithful, Father of the. Abraham. See under FATHER.

Faithful, Jacob, see JACOB FAITHFUL.

Faithful Shepherdess, The. A pastoral drama by John FLETCHER (1610). The "faithful shepherdess" is Corin, who remains faithful to her lover although he is dead.

Faith Gartney's Girlhood. Once a widely read story for girls by Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney (Am., 1863).

Faith Healer, The. A drama by William Vaughn Moody (1909), the study of a prophet, Ulrich Michaelis, in the throes of a struggle between love and what he conceives to be his divine mission.

Faithless Nelly Grey and Faithless Sally Brown. Comic poems by Thomas Hood (1799-1845). Both are full of puns.

fakir. A Mohammedan religious beggar or mendicant. They wear coarse black or brown dresses, and a black turban over which a red handkerchief is tied, and perform menial offices connected with burials, the cleaning of mosques, and so on.

Fakredeem. A gay young emir in Disraeli's TANCRED OR THE NEW CRUSADE who "was fond of his debts; they were the source, indeed, of his only real excitement, and he was grateful to them for their stirring powers."

Fala. The White House dog, which belonged to Franklin D. Roosevelt. A scottie.

Falangist (Span. falangista, from falange, "phalanx"). A member of a Spanish fascist organization. See FASCISM; also PHALANSTERY.

Falder, William. The leading character in John Galsworthy's drama, JUSTICE.

faldstool. A folding stool or chair used by a bishop. Also a stool or small desk at which one kneels during devotions. The King of England uses a faldstool at his coronation. The word is interesting in that it comes, by way of medieval Latin faldistolium, from Old High German faldstuol, "folding chair," which was also taken over by French in which language it survives as fauteuil.

Falerno. An Italian sweet wine, grown in what the ancients called Falernus Ager, a fertile district some 20 miles north of Naples. It was celebrated by HORACE.

Faliero, Marino, see MARINO FALIERO.

Falk. A novel by Joseph CONRAD.

Falkenhayn, Erich von (1861-1922). Prussian general and chief of German general staff in World War I, blamed for failure at Verdun, succeeded by von Hindenburg.

Falkland. The principal character in Godwin's CALEB WILLIAMS.

fall.

in the fall. In the autumn, at the fall of the leaf. Though now commonly classed as an Americanism, the term was formerly in good use in England, and is found in the works of Drayton, Middleton, Raleigh, and other Elizabethans. In England it is now, except in provincial use, practically obsolete.

What crowds of patients the town doctor kills,
Or how, last fall, he raised the weekly bills.
Dryden, Juvenal.

the fall of man. The degeneracy of the human race in consequence of the disobedience of Adam. Adam fell from innocence under temptation.

the fall of the drop, in theatrical parlance, means the fall of the drop-curtain at the end of the act or play.

Fall, Albert Bacon (1861-1944). American politician. As U.S. Secretary of the Interior (1921-1923; resigned) he secretly transferred government oil lands (TEAPOT DOME) to Doheny and Sinclair, receiving $100,000 as a "loan," etc. Convicted and imprisoned (1931-1932).

Fallada, Hans. Pseudonym of Rudolf Ditzzen (1893-1947). German novelist, best known as the author of the best-selling novel Little Man, What Now? (Kleiner Mann, Was Nun?; 1933), a sympathetic account of the struggles of a commonplace young couple to make a living in Germany in the depression years of the 1920's and 1930's.

Fall of the House of Usher. A short story by Edgar Allan Poe in his Tales of the Grotesque and Arabesque (1840). The lady Madeline of the house of Usher dies, leaving a single melancholy brother. He is a prey to horrible fears that she has been buried alive, and when she appears in her shroud, he dies of terror. The House of Usher crumbles and falls into the nearby tarn.

Falls of Princes, The. A poem in Middle English by John LYDGATE, written in rhyme royal between 1430 and 1438, first printed in 1494. It depicts the rise to and decline from fame and power by great men, subject to the fluctuations of fortune (see FORTUNA), and was based on Boccaccio's De Casibus Virorum Illustrium. See also CHAUCER'S MONK'S TALE.

Fallopian, Gabriel (1523-1562). Italian anatomist. Known as the discoverer of the function of the oviducts, now called Fallopian tubes.

false (It.). The human voice in the upper or head register. Yodeling consists in sudden shifts from chest to head voice or falsetto. The word signifies "sort of false."

Falstaff, Sir John. The most famous comic character of Shakespearean drama, appearing in THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR, and in the two parts of Henry IV. In Henry V his death is described by Mrs. Quickly, hostess of an inn in Eastcheap. Sir John is represented in the comedy as making love to Mrs. Page, who "fools him to the top of her bent." In the historic plays, he is a soldier and a wit, the boon companion of "Mad-cap Hal," the Prince of Wales. In both cases, he is a mountain of fat, sensual, mendacious, boastful and fond of practical jokes. He is also the chief character in Verdi's opera Falstaff (libretto by Boito founded on The Merry Wives of Windsor) and in several less important operas and plays.

Falstaff, unimitated, inimitable Falstaff, how shall I describe thee? Thou compound of sense and vice: of sense which may be admired, but not esteemed; of vice which may be despised, but hardly detested. "Falstaff" is a character loaded with faults, and with those faults which naturally produce contempt. He is a thief and a glutton, a coward and a boaster, always ready to cheat the weak and prey upon the poor, to terrify the timorous and insult the defenceless. At once obsequious and malignant, yet the man thus corrupt, thus despicable, makes himself necessary to the prince by perpetual gaiety, and by unfailing power of exciting laughter.—Dr. Johnson.

fame.

temple of fame. A FANTHEON where monuments to the famous dead of a nation are erected and the memories honored, especially that at Paris. Hence, he will have a niche in the temple of fame, he has done something that will cause his people to honor him and keep his memory green.

The temple of fame is the shortest passage to riches and preferment.—Letters of Junius Letter lix.

Hall of Fame. The American temple of fame in New York University, devoted to the memory of famous Americans who are chosen every five years as worthy of a place there.

familiar. Bound to service by a supernatural tie, as, the familiar spirit or, simply, the familiar of a witch, generally represented as at its master's beck in the form of a small animal, a cat, mouse, poodle, etc.

Family Reunion, The. A drama in verse by T. S. ELIOT, published in 1939. It deals with the return of Harry, Lord Monchensey, to the home of his family in England, for the birthday of his mother, Amy. He is neurotic and obsessed with the knowledge that he has murdered his wife, a deed which he soon is driven to confess. In a talk with his aunt, Agatha, he learns that his father hated his mother, she having used him merely to obtain what she wanted, and feels that his own situation is in part the result of this. Harry departs in order to complete his atonement, and Amy dies of shock.

fancy. In English Romantic literary criticism, notably that of S. T. COLERIDGE, the clever, playful faculty of mind which combines sensations, observations, impressions, etc., into poems of wit, humor, or whimsy, but does not create or transform its material to produce inspired literature. See also IMAGINATION.

Fancy Day. In Hardy's UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE.

Fane, Michael and Stella. The principal characters in Compton Mackenzie's SINISTER STREET and prominent in other novels of the series. They are brother and sister.

Faneuil Hall. A market house containing an assembly hall in Boston, given in 1742 to his fellow citizens by the merchant Peter Faneuil (1700-1743). After the fire of 1761 it was rebuilt by the city, became the meeting place of American patriots during the Revolution and is now remembered as the "cradle of freedom."

fanfaron (Fr. fanfare, a flourish of trumpets). A swaggering bully; a cowardly boaster who blows his own trumpet. Scott uses the word for finery, especially for the gold lace worn by military men.

"Marry, hang thee, with thy fanfaron about thy neck!" said the falconer.—Scott, The Abbot, cxvii.

Hence, fanfaronade means swaggering, vain boasting, ostentatious display.

The bishop copied this proceeding from the fanfaronade of M. Boufflers.—Swift.

Fang. A bullying, insolent magistrate in Dickens' OLIVER TWIST, who would have sent Oliver to prison, on suspicion of theft, if Mr. Brownlow had not interposed on the boy's behalf.

The original of this ill-tempered, bullying magistrate was Mr. Laing, of Hatton Garden, removed from the bench by the home secretary.—Forster, John, Life of Dickens, III. 4.

Fanny. A satirical poem by Fitz-Greene Halleck (Am. 1819).

Fanny's First Play. A drama by George Bernard SHAW (1911), which by the device of a "play within a play" satirizes several contemporary critics.

Fanshawe. The title and hero of HAWTHORNE's first novel, anonymously published in 1826.

Fantasia. Title of a DISNEY musical film (1940), representing an attempt to exploit a non-objective color symphony as a surrealist medium of expression.

Fantastic Symphony, see SYMPHONIE FANTASTIQUE.

Fantine. One of the principal characters of Victor Hugo's LES MISÉRABLES, the mother of Little Cosette.

Fantin-Latour, Ignace Henri Joseph Théodore (1826–1904). French painter known for portrait, still-life, and genre paintings.

Faraday, Michael (1791–1867). English chemist and physicist. As a journeyman bookbinder he heard a lecture by Sir Humphry Davy who impressed him so deeply that he turned all his attention to the natural sciences. He became one of the greatest chemists of his time and a pioneer in the young science of electricity. His publications are numerous. His monograph on candles deserves to rank as a classic in popular scientific literature.

Faragoh, Francis Eduardo (1898–). Hungarian-born playwright and stage director. Managing director New Playwrights Theatre, New York City. Worked on scenarios for well-known moving pictures, among them Frankenstein, Becky Sharp, and others.

farce. A grotesque and exaggerated kind of comedy, full of ludicrous incidents and expressions. The word is the Old French farce, "stuffing" (from Lat. farcire, "to stuff"); hence, an interlude stuffed into or inserted in the main piece, such interludes always being of a racy, exaggerated comic character.

Far Country, A. A novel by Winston CHURCHILL (1915). The hero, Hugh Paret, wanders far from his early ideals, but realizes the fact before it is too late. The allusion in the title is to the New Testament story of the PRODIGAL SON who "went into a far country and there wasted his substance in riotous living."

Far East. See under EAST.

Farewell Address. The address delivered by George Washington just before his retirement from the presidency in which he summarized the ideas and principles that had guided him in his actions (Sept. 17, 1796). See FRAUNCES' TAVERN.

Farewell to Arms, A. A novel by Ernest HEMINGWAY, published in 1929. It deals with the romance of Frederic Henry, an American ambulance driver, and Catherine Barkley, an English nurse, in Italy during World War I. She becomes pregnant, and after the retreat from Caporetto with its attendant horrors, Henry deserts, joins Catherine, and escapes with her to Switzerland, where she dies in childbirth. This is one of the best-known novels depicting the tragedy and destruction of World War I. It was dramatized as a play and a motion picture. The title is from the title of a lyric poem addressed to Queen Elizabeth by the English poet George Peele (ca. 1558–ca. 1597).

Far from the Madding Crowd. A novel by Thomas HARDY (1874). Bathsheba Everdene is courted by Gabriel Oak, a young farmer who becomes bailiff of the farm she inherits, by William Boldwood, who owns the neighboring farm, and by Sergeant Troy, a handsome young adventurer. She marries Troy, who spends her money freely. Troy now accidentally meets his old love Fanny Robin and her child in pitiful condition on the way to the workhouse and the next day finds them both dead. The incident brings about a quarrel with Bathsheba and his departure; and he is swept out to sea. Bathsheba, who believes him drowned, becomes engaged to William Boldwood. When Troy reappears in blustering mood, Boldwood kills him and is sentenced to penal servitude for life. Bathsheba now marries Gabriel Oak.

Farigoule, Louis, see ROMAINS, JULES.

Farina, Salvatore (1846–1918). Italian novelist, "the Italian Dickens."

Farinata degli Uberti. A noble Florentine, leader of the Ghibelline faction, and driven from his country in 1250 by the GUELPHS. Some ten years later, by the aid of Mainfroi of Naples, he defeated the Guelphs, and took all the towns of Tuscany and Florence. Dante, in his Inferno, represents him as lying in a fiery tomb yet open, and not to be closed till the last judgment day.

Farinelli, Carlo (1705–1782). Called "il Ragazzo." Famous Italian male soprano. Grove wrote of him: "The most remarkable singer, perhaps, who has ever lived."

Farintosh, Marquis of. A conceited young nobleman in Thackeray's novel THE NEW-

COMES. Ethel Newcome refuses to marry him.

Farjeon, Eleanor (1881-). Granddaughter of the actor Joseph Jefferson (1829-1905). English writer famous for her juveniles. Her brother, Joseph Jefferson Farjeon (1883-) is a skilled English mystery story writer.

Farley, James Aloysius (1888-). American politician. Chairman, Democratic National Committee (1932-1940). U.S. postmaster general (1933-1940).

Farman, Henri (1874-). French aviation pioneer and airplane manufacturer. Made first one-kilometer flight back to base; developed the Farman biplane; etc. Holder of various records.

Farmer George. George III (b. 1738, reigned 1760-1820); so called from his farmer-like manners, taste, dress, and amusements.

A better farmer ne'er brushed dew from lawn.
Byron, Vision of Judgment.

Farnese Hercules. A statue of Hercules, originally in the Farnese Palace, now in the National Museum of Naples. It is the work of Glycon of Athens (1st century B. C.) and represents the demigod naked, with extraordinary muscular development, leaning on his club.

Farnham, Alfred. The hero of John Hay's novel, THE BREADWINNERS.

Farnol, John Jeffery (1878-). English writer of popular historical romances, such as his first, The Broad Highway (1910).

Faro. A banking game, formerly called Pharaoh, possibly because the Egyptian monarch appeared on one of the cards. Played with a "layout," that is, a representation on the center of the table of thirteen cards from the ace up to the king in regular order, and a full pack of 52 cards. The betting is done on the cards of the layout and winners are determined by the dealer who removes one card at a time from the pack.

Farquhar, George (1678-1707). Irish-born English playwright of the Restoration period, who wrote with the satire, frivolity, and sophisticated licentiousness of his contemporaries CONGREVE and WYCHERLEY, but is considered to be more moral and tending more to the sentimental than they. His most famous play is THE BEAUX' STRATAGEM (1707). Other comedies are Love and a Bottle (1698) and A Constant Couple (1699).

Farrago, Captain. Hero of Brackenridge's early American novel, MODERN CHIVALRY.

Farragut, David Glasgow (1801-1870). American admiral. Son of a Spaniard who had joined the Continental army. Famous for action in U.S. Civil War, at Mobile Bay, August 1864. Two grades, Vice-admiral and Admiral, created specially for him by Congress. In American Hall of Fame.

Farrand, Livingston (1867-1939). American anthropologist. Special study of Indian tribes of British Columbia. His brother Max Farrand (1869-1945), historian and director of research at Henry E. Huntington Library (1927).

Farrar, Geraldine (1882-). Famous American dramatic soprano. Chief rôles: Madame Butterfly, Manon, Mignon, Tosca, Juliet, Gilda, Carmen, Zaza. She also played Carmen and Joan of Arc in the silent motion-pictures.

Farrell, Aminta. Heroine of Meredith's LORD ORMONT AND HIS AMINTA.

Farrell, James Thomas (1904-). American novelist, known for his lengthy studies of lower middle-class Irish Catholic life in the South Side slum section of Chicago. They are written in the tradition of NATURALISM, combined with a modification of the STREAM-OF-CONSCIOUSNESS technique of James JOYCE, and present their characters with what is often a sociologist's objectivity in the light of their background. Poverty, religious bigotry and narrowness, economic inequality, individual frustration, sordidness, vice, and the destructive influence of environment are emphasized, with contemporary references appropriate to the period of the 1920's and 1930's. Some critics assert that the dreariness and turgidity of Farrell's style defeat the author's purpose, but others praise the powerful, cumulative effect of personal tragedy that distinguishes Farrell's most famous work, the STUDS LONIGAN trilogy. This comprises Young Lonigan (1932), The Young Manhood of Studs Lonigan (1934), and Judgment Day (1935). Another series of novels, dealing with the life of DANNY O'NEILL, includes A World I Never Made (1936), No Star Is Lost (1938), and Father and Son (1940). Among Farrell's other works are: Gas-House McGinty (1933); Calico Shoes (1934), Guillotine Party (1935), Can All This Grandeur Perish? (1937), and $1000 a Week (1942), short stories; A Note on Literary Criticism (1936), a critical essay of modified Marxist viewpoint; TOMMY GALLAGHER'S CRUSADE (1939); Ellen Rogers (1941); Bernard Clare (1946), which was banned in Canada. See also PROLETARIAN LITERATURE.

Farwell, Arthur (1872-). American musician; best-known for American Indian songs and melodies. Founder of the Wa-Wan Press at Newton Center, Mass. (1901), aiming "to promote . . . the most progressive works of American composers . . . and to present compositions based on the melodies and folklore of the American Indians." Established at Lansing, Mich., a lithographic hand-press (1936) for the reproduction of his own compositions.

fascēs. A bundle of rods, usually of birch, enclosing an axe with its blade projecting, borne by lictors before Roman magistrates as a badge of authority. The symbol and the word are at the base of the derivative "FASCISM."

Fascism. An authoritarian and totalitarian political system which considers the individual in every respect subordinate to the interests of the historical reality of the national state. Its principles were developed by Benito Mussolini (1883-1945) and his followers in the period after 1922. Since the advent of similar movements in Spain (FALANGISM) and Germany (NAZISM) the term came to be applied to any form of nationalistic statism and finally (especially since the end of World War II) signified vaguely nothing but opposition to liberalism, individualism, democracy, and other American ideals.

Fashion. A satiric comedy by Anna C. Mowatt Ritchie (Am. 1845), dealing with contemporary New York society. Mrs. Tiffany, "a lady who imagines herself fashionable," attempts to make a match between her daughter Seraphina and Count Jolimaitre, who, alas, is only a valet in disguise. Seraphina has another suitor in the person of Snobson, her father's confidential clerk. Affairs get extremely involved with Count Jolimaitre making ardent love to Gertrude, the governess, on the side, but Gertrude's grandfather, Adam Trueman, a brusque and breezy farmer from out of town, manages to straighten everything out. Several fashionable New York types, such as "a modern poet," "a drawing-room appendage," and the like, make their appearance in Mrs. Tiffany's wake.

Fashion, Sir Brilliant. In Murphy's comedy The Way to Keep Him (1760), a man of the world, who "dresses fashionably, lives fashionably, wins your money fashionably, loses his own fashionably, and does everything fashionably." His fashionable asseverations are, "Let me perish, if . . . !" "May fortune eternally frown on me, if . . . !" "May I never hold four by honors, if . . . !" "May the first woman I meet strike me with a supercilious eyebrow, if . . . !" and so on.

Fashion, Tom, or Young Fashion. In Vanbrugh's Relapse (1697) and Sheridan's adaptation called A Trip to Scarborough (1777), the younger brother of Lord Foppington. As his elder brother does not behave well to him, Tom resolves to outwit him, and to this end introduces himself to Sir Tunbelly Clumsy and his daughter, Miss Hoyden, as Lord Foppington. Between the latter and Miss Hoyden a marriage negotiation has been going on. Tom marries the heiress under his brother's name and explains matters afterward, to every one's satisfaction but his brother's.

Fasolt. In Das Rheingold, the first of the four operas of Wagner's RING DES NIBELUNGEN, one of the two chief giants opposed to the gods. See FAFNER.

Fast, Howard (1914-). American author. Principal works: Citizen Tom Paine (1943); Freedom Road (1944).

Fastolfe, Sir John. A character in Shakespeare's Henry VI. This is not "Sir John Falstaff" but the lieutenant general of the Duke of Bedford and a Knight of the Garter. Caused loss of important battle by fleeing at height of it while in the vanguard.

fata (Ital., "a fairy"). Female supernatural being introduced in Italian medieval romance, usually under the sway of DEMOGORGON. In ORLANDO INNAMORATO we meet with the "Fata Morgana" (see MORGAN LE FAY); in Boiardo, with the "Fata Silvanella," and others.

Fata Morgana. (1) A sort of mirage in which objects are reflected in the sea, and sometimes on a kind of aerial screen high above it, occasionally seen in the neighborhood of the Straits of Messina, so named from MORGAN LE FAY who was fabled by the Norman settlers in England to dwell in Calabria. Hence, any mirage or glamorous illusion.

(2) A play by Ernst Vajda, produced by the Theatre Guild (1924) with Emily Stevens.

Fatagaga (Fabrication de tableaux garantis gazométriques). One of a series of Collages collaborated upon by a Dadaist group founded by Max Ernst (1919). See DADAISM.

Fatal Curiosity. An epilogue in Cervantes' DON QUIXOTE, Pt. I. iv. 5, 6. The subject of this tale is the trial of a wife's fidelity. Anselmo, a Florentine gentleman, has married Camilla, and, wishing to rejoice over her incorruptible fidelity, induces his friend Lothario to put it to the test. The lady is not trial-proof, but elopes with Lothario. The end is that Anselmo dies of grief, Lothario is slain in battle, and Camilla dies in a convent.

Fat Boy, the. Joseph or Joe, in Dickens' PICKWICK PAPERS, a lad of astounding obesity, whose employment consists of alternate eating and sleeping. Joe is in the service of Mr. Waddle. He was once known to "burst into a horse-laugh," and to defer eating to say to Mary, "How nice you do look!"

This was said in an admiring manner, and was so far gratifying; but still there was enough of the cannibal in the young gentleman's eyes to render the compliment doubtful.—Dickens, Pickwick Papers, liv.

Fates. The Greeks and Romans supposed there were three Parcae or Fates, who arbitrarily controlled the birth, life, and death of every man. They were Clotho (who held the distaff), Lachesis (who spun the thread of life), and Atropos (who cut it off when life was ended), and are called "cruel" because they pay no regard to the wishes of anyone. Clotho is from Gr. klotho, to draw thread from a distaff; Lachesis is from lagchano, to assign by lot; and Atropos = inflexible.

father. The name is given as a title to Catholic priests, especially confessors, superiors of convents, religious teachers, etc.; also to the senior member of a body or profession, as the Father of the House of Commons, the Father of the Bench, and to the originator or first leader of some movement, school, etc., as the Father of Comedy (Aristophanes), the Father of English Song (Caedmon). In ancient Rome the title was given to the senators (see also PATRICIAN, CONSCRIPT FATHERS), and in ecclesiastical history to the early church writers and doctors.

Father Abraham. Abraham Lincoln (1809–1865), President of the United States.

Father Adam. Adam, the first man, the father of humanity.

Father Christmas. Santa Claus.

Father Nile. The Nile, personified.

Father of America. Samuel Adams (1722–1803), American statesman.

Father of Angling. Izaak Walton (1593–1683).

Father of Believers. Mahomet.

Father of Botany. Joseph Pitou de Tournefort (1656–1708), French botanist.

Father of British Inland Navigation. Francis Egerton, Duke of Bridgewater (1736–1803), who planned and financed the Bridgewater Canal system.

Father of Business Efficiency. Frederick Winslow Taylor (d. 1915).

Father of Chemistry. Arnauld de Villeneuve (1238–1314).

Father of Comedy. Aristophanes (448–385 B.C.).

Father of Dutch Poetry. Jakob Maerlant (1235–1300).

Father of Ecclesiastical (Church) History. Eusebius of Caesarea (264–349).

Father of English Botany. William Turner (1520–1568).

Father of English Cathedral Music. Thomas Tallis (1510–1585).

Father of English Poetry. Geoffrey Chaucer (1340–1400).

Father of English Printing. William Caxton (1412–1491).

Father of English Prose. (1) Wycliffe (1324–1384); (2) Roger Ascham (1515–1568).

Father of Epic Poetry. Homer (10th century B.C.).

Father of Equity. Heneage Finch, Earl of Nottingham (1621–1682), Lord Chancellor.

Father of French Drama. Etienne Jodelle (1532–1573).

Father of French History. André Duchesne (1584–1640).

Father of French Prose. Geoffroi de Villehardouin (1167–1212).

Father of French Satire. Mathurin Regnier (1573–1613).

Father of French Surgery. Ambroise Paré (1517–1590).

Father of French Tragedy. (1) Rob. Garnier (1545–1600); (2) Pierre Corneille (1606–1684).

Father of Geology. (1) Avicenna (980–1037), Arabic scientist; (2) Nicolas Steno (1631–1687), Danish-Italian geologist; (3) Wm. Smith (1769–1840).

Father of German Literature. Gotthold Ephraim Lessing (1729–1781).

Father of Good Works. The Sultan Mahomet II (1430–1481).

Father of Greek Drama. (1) Aeschylus (525–456 B.C.); (2) Thespis (fl. 535 B.C.).

Father of Greek Music. Terpander (fl. 676 B.C.).

Father of Greek Prose. Herodotus (ca. 484–424 B.C.).

Father of Greek Tragedy. Aeschylus (525–456 B.C.).

Father of his Country. Cicero was so entitled by the Roman Senate. They offered the same title to Marius, but he refused to accept it. Several of the Caesars were so called—Julius, after quelling the insurrection of Spain; Augustus, etc.

Cosimo de' Medici (1389–1464).

George Washington, the first President of the United States (1732–1799).

Andrea Doria (1468–1560). This sobriquet was inscribed on the base of his statue by his countrymen of Genoa.

Andronicus Palaeologus II assumed the title (ca. 1260–1332).

Cf. also 1 Chron. iv. 14.

Father of His People. (1) Louis XII of France (1462–1515); (2) Christian III of Denmark (1503–1559). See also FATHER OF THE PEOPLE below.

Father of Historic Painting. Polygnotos of Thasos (fl. 463–435 B.C.).

Father of History. Herodotus (484–408 B.C.), so called by Cicero.

Father of Iambic Verse. (Archilochus of Paros (fl. 700 B.C.).

Father of Inductive Philosophy. Francis Bacon, Lord Verulam (1561-1626).

Father of International Law. Hugo Grotius (1583-1645), Dutch jurist.

Father of Italian Prose. Giovanni Boccaccio (1313-1375).

Father of Jests. Joseph Miller (1684-1738), English wit.

Father of Jurisprudence. Ranulph de Glanville (d. 1190), author of Tractatus de Legibus et Consuetudinibus Angliæ (1181).

Father of Landscape Gardening. André Lenôtre (1613-1700), French architect and landscape gardener.

Father of Letters. Francis I of France (1494-1547), a patron of literature.

Father of Lies. Satan. (John viii. 44.)

Father of Medicine. (1) Aretaeos of Capadocia (fl. 70); (2) Hippocrates of Cos (460-357 B.C.).

Father of Modern Oil Painting. Jan van Eyck (1385-1440), Flemish painter.

Father of Modern Prose Fiction. Daniel Defoe (1663-1731).

Father of Modern Scepticism. Pierre Bayle (1647-1706), philosopher.

Father of Moral Philosophy. Thomas Aquinas (1227-1274), Italian scholastic theologian.

Father of Musc. Giovanni Pierluigi da Palestrina (1525-1594), Italian composer.

Father of Musicians. Jubal. (Gen. iv. 21.).

Father of Navigation. Don Henrique, Duke of Visco (1394-1460), one of the greatest of Portuguese travelers.

Father Neptune. The ocean. After Neptune, the Roman god of the seas.

Father of Ornithology. George Edwards (1693-1773).

Father of Orthodoxy. Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria (293-373).

Father of Parody. Hipponax (6th century B.C.), Greek iambic poet.

Father of Peace. Andrea Doria (1466-1560), Genoese admiral and condottiere. Title given to him by the Senate of Genoa.

Father of Philosophy. (1) Roger Bacon (1214-1294), English philosopher and scholar; (2) Albrecht von Haller (1708-1777), Swiss physiologist, anatomist, botanist and poet.

Father of Poetry. (1) Orpheus, a semi-legendary Greek poet; (2) Homer.

Father of Reform. John Cartwright (1740-1824), English radical politician and publicist.

Father of Ridicule. François Rabelais (1490-1553), French satirist.

Father of Rivers. (1) The River Apidanus in Thessaly, so called by Euripides in Hecuba (ll. 446-452); (2) the River Lydia in Macedonia, so called by Euripides in Bacchæ (ll. 571-575).

Father of Roman Philosophy. Cicero (106-43 B.C.).

Father of Roman Satire. Caius Lucilius (180-103 B.C.).

Father of Satire. Archilochus of Paros (fl. 700 B.C.).

Father of Scotch Landscape Painting. John Thomson, of Duddington (1778-1840).

Father of Swedish Eloquence. Norden-hjelm.

Father of Symphony. Francis Joseph Haydn (1732-1809).

Father of the Church. One of the writers of the Early Church, whose teachings are accepted as authoritative.

Father of the Faithful. The Patriarch Abraham. (Rom. iv.)

Father of the House of Commons. The living member who has sat there continuously for the longest period.

Father of the Human Race. Adam.

Father of the People. (1) a title assumed by the Absolutist kings of Denmark; (2) Gabriel du Pineau (1573-1644), French lawyer. See also FATHER OF HIS PEOPLE above.

Father of the Potteries. Josiah Wedgwood (1730-1795).

Father of the Spanish Drama. Lope Felix de Vega Carpio (1562-1635).

Father of the Vaudeville. Olivier Basselin (ca. 1400-1450) of Van-de-Vire, Normandy.

Father of Tragedy. (1) Aeschylus (525-456 B.C.); (2) Thespis (fl. 535 B.C.).

Father of Waters. (1) The Irrawaddy; (2) the Mississippi; (3) the Nile, so called by Samuel Johnson in Rasselas (1759).

father on a person. To impute to a person.

Father Thames. The River Thames.

Father, the Thoughtful. Nicholas Catinat (1637-1712), Marshal of France, so called by his soldiers.

Father Tiber. The River Tiber, personified.

Father Time. Time, personified; generally depicted as an old man with a scythe.

Fathers of Christian Doctrine, the Founder of the. Caesar de Bus (1544-1607).

Fathers of the Church. (1) the Apostolic Fathers, contemporaries of the Apostles, viz., Clement of Rome, Barnabas, Hermas, Ignatius and Polycarp; (2) the Primitive Fathers, who lived in the first three centuries of the Christian era, viz., Justin, Theophilus of Antioch, Irenaeus, Clement of Alexandria, Cyprian of Carthage, Origen, Gregory Thaumaturgus, Dionysius of Alexandria, Tertullian; (3) see FATHERS OF THE GREEK CHURCH below.

Fathers of the Greek Church. Eusebius, Athanasius, Basil the Great, Gregory Nazianzenus, Gregory of Nyssa, Cyril of Jerusalem, Chrysostom, Epiphanius, Cyril of Alexandria, and Ephraim of Edessa.

Fathers of the Latin Church. Origen, Tertullian, Clement of Rome, Ignatius, Justin, Irenaeus, Cyprian, Hilary of Poitiers, Ambrose, Optatus, Jerome, Augustine, Leo the Great, Prosper, Vincent of Lerins, Peter Chrysologus, Caesarius of Arles, Gregory the Great, Isidore of Seville, Bede, Peter Damian, Anselm, Bernard.

Father Goriot, see GORIOT.

Fathers and Sons. A novel by TURGENEV (1861), portraying the conflicting points of view of two generations. Turgenev coined the word "Nihilist" for the chief character, Bazarov, an iconoclastic young radical. He endeavors in vain to convert his father to his theories of a new social order, although the older man makes pathetic efforts to understand him and meet him half way. Part of the action takes place on the family estate of Bazarov's friend, Arcadi Kirsanov, a gentler, less radical "son," and here Kirsanov's father and uncle represent the older generation with whom Bazarov feels himself at war.

Father William. A famous humorous ballad by Lewis CARROLL appearing in Alice in Wonderland.

"You are old, Father William," the young man said,
"And your hair has become very white,
And yet you incessantly stand on your head—
Do you think, at your age, it is right?"

It is a parody of The Old Man's Comforts (1799), a poem by SOUTHEY.

Fathom, Ferdinand, Count. The hero of Smollett's novel, The Adventures of Ferdinand, Count Fathom (1754), a villain who robs his benefactors, pillages everyone, but is finally forgiven and reforms under an assumed name.

Fatima. (1) According to the Koran, daughter of Mahomet, and one of the four perfect women. The other three are Khadijah, the prophet's first wife; Mary, daughter of Imran; and Asia, wife of that Pharaoh who was drowned in the Red Sea.

(2) A female hermit in the Arabian Nights who was murdered by the African Magician as a part of his schemes against Aladdin.

(3) The name usually given to the last wife of BLUEBEARD.

faubourg. A suburb of a French city, now also a district within the city, any quarter of a city, chiefly, that is, a quarter that used to be a suburb, as the faubourgs St. Germain, St. Antoine, etc., of Paris. L'Accent des faubourgs is still something like a Bronx accent.

Faulconbridge, Philip. In Shakespeare's King John, the natural son of King Richard I and Lady Robert Faulconbridge. He is generous and open-hearted, but hates foreigners like a true-born islander. Referred to as "the Bastard."

Faulkland. In Sheridan's comedy THE RIVALS, the over-anxious lover of Julia Melville. He is always fretting and tormenting himself about her whims, spirit, health, etc. Every feature in the sky, every shift of the wind, is a source of anxiety to him. If she is gay, he frets that she should care too little for his absence; if she is low-spirited, he fears she is going to die; if she dances with another, he is jealous; if she doesn't, she is out of sorts.

Faulkner, William Harrison (1897–). American novelist and short-story writer, noted for his studies of decadence and subnormality in the Deep South, in the undertaking of which he was influenced to a large extent by Sherwood ANDERSON. In his style he sometimes made use of the techniques of STREAM-OF-CONSCIOUSNESS and INTERIOR MONOLOGUE. Faulkner's novels include Soldier's Pay (1926); Mosquitoes (1927); Sartoris (1929); THE SOUND AND THE FURY (1929); AS I LAY DYING (1930); SANCTUARY (1931); Idyll in the Desert (1931); Light in August (1932); Pylon (1935); Absalom, Absalom (1936); The Unvanquished (1938); The Wild Palms (1939); The Hamlet (1940). Collections of his short stories are: These Thirteen (1931); Miss Zippa Gant (1932); Dr. Martino (1934); Go Down, Moses (1942). The Marble Faun (1924), Salmagundi (1932), This Earth (1932), and A Green Bough (1933) are books of poems.

Faultless Painter, the. Andrea del Sarto (1488–1530) was so called. He is the speaker in one of Browning's dramatic monologues, called by his name. See ANDREA DEL SARTO.

faun. In Roman myth, Faunus was a king of Italy who devoted himself to promoting agriculture and religion and after his death became a rural deity. He was in many ways similar to the Greek Pan. Later there grew up the idea of a number of fauns or satyr-like beings with tails, horns, goats' legs and feet and furry pointed ears. Two festivals called Faunalia were held on February 13 and December 5.

Hawthorne wrote a novel THE MARBLE FAUN in which the hero, it is hinted, is a faun. It was suggested by the statue of a youthful faun by Praxiteles, now in the Capitoline Museum in Rome.

One of the best-known poems of Stéphane MALLARMÉ is his L'Après-midi d'un faune (Afternoon of a Faun). DEBUSSY's symphonic tone poem Prélude à l'après-midi d'un faune (1892, perf. 1894, publ. 1902) became the firm foundation of its composer's fame. One of DIAGHILEV's best-known ballets was adapted to it, with Nijinsky dancing the Faun.

Fauntleroy, Little Lord, see under LITTLE.

Faunus. In Roman mythology, a rural deity; son of Picus, grandson of Saturn and father of Acis, the suitor of Galatea, and of Latinus, the father of Lavinia. He, as well as Silvanus, came to be more and more identified with the Greek Pan, with whom he had many traits in common. His priests were the Luperci, his main festival the Lupercalia. When not viewed as an individual, he appeared in the multifariousness of the fauns, possibly under the influence of the Greek panes, satyrs, etc. in their relation with Pan.

Faure, Élie (1873-1937). French art critic and historian. In 1905 helped found the Université Populaire, a school of adult education. History of Art (1923-1930), his greatest work. Dance Over Fire and Water (1926); The Italian Renaissance (1929); The Spirit of Japan (1930).

Fauré, Gabriel Urbain (1845-1924). French composer. Director (1905-1920) Conservatory of Music, Paris. With Debussy, emancipator of modern French music from German tutelage.

Fauset, Jessie Redmon (1884?-). American Negro novelist. M.A. University of Pennsylvania. Studied at Sorbonne. Zona GALE wrote a preface to her third novel, The Chinnaberry Tree (1931). Her brother, Arthur Huff Fauset (1899-), is an American Negro educator and writer.

Faust. The hero of Marlowe's Tragicall History of Dr. Faustus (ca. 1589) and Goethe's Faust (1790-1833) originated in Dr. Johann Faust, or Faustus, a scoundrelly magician and astrologer, who was born in Wurtemberg and died about 1538. Many tales previously ascribed to other astrologers crystallized about him, he became the popular ideal "of one who sought to sound the depths of this world's knowledge and enjoyment without help from God," and in 1587 he appeared for the first time as the central figure in a book by Johann Spies (published at Frankfurt-on-Main), which immediately became popular and was soon translated into English, French, and other languages. Marlowe treated the legend as a poet, bringing out with all his power the central thought—man in the pride of knowledge turning from God. The voices of his good and evil angel in the ear of Faustus, the one bidding him repent and hope, the other bidding him despair, were, devised by Marlowe himself for the better painting of a soul within the coils of Satan.—Morley, English Writers, vol. ix. p. 255.

The basis of the legend is that, in return for twenty-four years of further life during which he is to have every pleasure and all knowledge at his command, Faust sells his soul to the Devil, and the climax is reached when, at the close of the period, the Devil claims him for his own. MEPHISTOPHELES is his evil angel, and the supplier of all his desires.

Faust early became a popular character in the German puppet shows. Marlowe, in his tragedy, follows the German legend and gives Faust as a mistress Helen of Troy, whom Mephistopheles conjures up from the other world. Goethe also follows this tradition in the second part of his Faust. In the first part, however, he introduces a distinctly new love element in the tragic story of Gretchen or MARGARET. This episode is the basis of Berlioz' opera, The Damnation of Faust (1846), Gounod's opera, Faust (1859), and Boito's opera, Mefistofele (1868). In Goethe's masterpiece the old Faust legend is given a philosophic content far beyond its original significance, and at the end of his long quest for knowledge, for pleasure, for power, Faust finds his real satisfaction in reclaiming a great swamp for humanity. The two parts of the drama are markedly different in tone, the latter being much more abstract and symbolic. Part I appeared in 1808, Part II was not finished until 1831, a year before Goethe's death.

The Faust legend is also the subject of FESTUS, a dramatic poem by P. J. Bailey (1839) and Faust by Stephen Phillips (1868-1915).

See also FUST.

Faust, Frederick, see BRAND, MAX.

Faustina, Annia Galeria. The name of two Roman empresses. Faustina the Elder married the Emperor Antonius Pius, and died 141 A. D. Faustina the Younger, her daughter, married the Emperor Marcus Aurelius, the adopted son and successor of Antonius, and died 175 A. D. Both were famous for their evil lives, though MARCUS AURELIUS professed to believe his wife the best of women. Cf. Swinburne's poem, Faustine, written with these empresses in mind.

Faust or Fust (d. 1467). German printer, for a time associate and financial backer of Gutenberg. Because of his name, he has often been confused with Dr. FAUSTUS, the magician, and appears as the central figure of a story, according to which he was one of the earliest printers of Bibles, and passed off a large number as manuscripts for sixty crowns apiece, the usual price being five hundred crowns. The uniformity of the books, their rapid supply, and their unusual cheapness excited astonishment. Information was laid against him for magic, the brilliant red ink with which his copies were adorned was declared to be his blood; he was charged with dealings with the devil, and condemned to be burnt alive. To save himself, he revealed his secret to the Paris Parlement, and his invention became the admiration of the world.

Fauvist. One of a group of French artists (Matisse, Rouault, Derain, Dufy, etc.) who revolted (ca. 1906) from current tendencies in academic art, calling themselves aggressively les Fauves, "the untamed beasts."

faux pas (Fr.). A "false step"; a breach of manners or moral conduct. The sub-standard American variant "foxpaw" is a fine example of folk etymology.

Favart, Charles Simon (1710-1792). French dramatist, author of musical comedies and husband of the singer Marie Justine Benoîte Duronceray (1727-1772).

Faversham, Rev. Michael. The hero of MICHAEL AND HIS LOST ANGEL by H. A. Jones.

Faversham, William (1868-1940). British-born American actor. Leading man in Charles Frohman's company for six years. Popular matinee idol.

Favonius. In Roman mythology, a personification of the west wind. He is a promoter of vegetation, identical with Zephyrus.

Favorita, La (The Favorite). An opera by DONIZETTI (1842). La Favorita is Leonora de Guzman, "favorite" of Alfonso XI of Castile. The time is the year 1340. Ferdinand (Ferdinando), an idealistic young officer, falls in love with her, and the king, to save himself from excommunication, sanctions the marriage. But when Ferdinand learns that Leonora is the king's mistress, he rejects the alliance with indignation and becomes a monk. Leonora becomes a novice in the same monastery, sees Ferdinand, obtains his forgiveness, and dies.

favorite son. A political candidate who has the cordial support of his own state, but is not well known or highly regarded elsewhere.

Fawcett, Edgar (1847-1904). American poet, novelist, and dramatist, who satirized New York high society.

Fawkes, Guy (1570-1606). English Catholic. Enlisted in the Spanish army in Flanders (1593). Became involved in the Gunpowder Plot (Nov. 5, 1605). Arrested, tried, and executed (Jan. 31, 1606). See also GUY; GUNPOWDER PLOT.

Fawley, Jude. The hero of Hardy's JUDE THE OBSCURE.

fay, see FAIRY.

Morgan le Fay, see MORGAN, also FATA.

Faÿ, Bernard (1893-). French historian and biographer specializing in American history. One of his outstanding books is Franklin, the Apostle of Modern Times (1929). An active collaborator with the Vichy government during World War II.

F. B. The initials and familiar nickname of Frederick BAYHAM in Thackeray's NEWCOMES.

Fearing, Kenneth (1902-). American poet of proletarian sympathies. He is noted for the jazzed satirical style of his best-known poems, published in the period of the 1930's, in which symbols from motion-pictures, tabloid newspapers, comic strips, the radio, advertising, and the like, presented in free verse in the colloquial idiom of the time, are used to mock and satirize the popularly accepted American faith in success and wealth, which was shaken by the current depression and unemployment. Fearing's books include: Angel Arms (1929); Poems (1935); Dead Reckoning (1938); Collected Poems (1940); and a novel, The Hospital (1939). Has also written clever mystery novels.

feasts. Anniversary days of joy. They are either immovable or movable. The chief immovable feasts in the Christian calendar are the four quarter-days—viz., the Annunciation or Lady Day (March 25), the Nativity of John the Baptist (June 24), Michaelmas Day (September 29), and Christmas Day (December 25). Others are the Circumcision (January 1), Epiphany (January 6), All Saints' (November 1), All Souls' (November 2), and the several Apostles' days.

The movable feasts depend upon Easter Sunday. They are—Palm Sunday: The Sunday next before Easter Sunday; Good Friday: The Friday next before Easter Sunday; Ash Wednesday: The first day of Lent; Sexagesima Sunday: Sixty days before Easter Sunday; Ascension Day or Holy Thursday: Fortieth day after Easter Sunday; Pentecost or Whit Sunday: The seventh Sunday after Easter Sunday; Trinity Sunday: The Sunday next after Pentecost.

feast of reason. Conversation on and discussion of learned and congenial subjects.

There St. John mingles with my friendly bowl
The feast of reason and the flow of soul.

Pope, Imitations of Horace, ii. 1.

See also LOVE FEAST.

feather.

the white feather. See under WHITE.

that's a feather in your cap. An honor to you. The allusion is to the very general custom in Asia and among the American Indians of adding a new feather to their head-gear for every enemy slain.

he has feathered his nest well. He has made lots of money; has married a rich woman. The allusion is to birds, which line their nests with feathers to make them soft and warm.

Featherstone, Mr. A miser in George Eliot's MIDDLEMARCH.

Feathertop: a Moralized Legend. A well known sketch or tale of Hawthorne's in his MOSSES FROM AN OLD MANSE. It treats of the bringing to life of a scarecrow who passes for a fine gentleman. The sketch gave Percy MacKaye the basis for his drama, THE SCARECROW.

Fedalma. The heroine of George Eliot's narrative poem, THE SPANISH GIPSY.

Federalist, The. A series of eighty-five papers or essays published in 1787-1788 in defense of the American Constitution. Fifty-one of the series are said to have been written by Alexander Hamilton; the others by Madison and Jay. They are considered the best expression of the political temper of the times.

Federal Reserve System. A system of banking established in the U.S. by the Federal Reserve Act (Owen-Glass) of December 23, 1913, concentrating the banking resources of the country and providing an elastic currency. There are twelve mutually independent quasi-public Federal Reserve banks, serving a corresponding number of Federal Reserve Districts, located at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Richmond, Atlanta, Dallas, Cleveland, Chicago, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Kansas City, and San Francisco. These banks are "bankers' banks." Their stock is owned by the member banks of each district. They deal almost exclusively with other banks, and their functions include the issuing of notes, the holding of reserves for their members, and the buying and selling of government securities. There is a supervisory Federal Reserve Board of eight members.

Fédora. (1) In Balzac's WILD ASS'S SKIN (Le Peau de Chagrin), a "woman without a heart" on whom Raphael wastes his love, while the magic skin shrinks away.

(2) Title and heroine of a tragedy by SARDOU (Fr., 1883), in which Sarah BERNHARDT scored great success.

Feeble. The name of a "woman's tailor," brought to Sir John Falstaff as a recruit (Shakespeare, 2 Henry IV, iii. 2). He tells Sir John "he will do his good will," and the knight replies, "Well said, courageous Feeble! Thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathful dove, or most magnanimous mouse . . . most forcible Feeble." The phrase, "most forcible Feeble," is sometimes applied to a writer whose language is very "loud," but whose ideas are very jejune.

Feenix. In Dickens' DOMBEY AND SON, nephew of the Hon. Mrs. Skewton (mother of Edith, Mr. Dombey's second wife). Feenix is a very old gentleman, patched up to look as much like a young fop as possible.

Cousin Feenix was a man about town forty years ago; but he is still so juvenile in figure and manner that strangers are amazed when they discover latent wrinkles in his lordship's face, and crows' feet in his eyes. But Cousin Feenix getting up at half-past seven, is quite another thing from Cousin Feenix got up.—Dickens, Dombey and Son, xxxi.

Feignwell, Colonel. In Mrs. CENTLIVRE's comedy, A Bold Stroke for a Wife (1718), the poseur who wins an heiress by passing himself off as SIMON PURE.

Feininger, Lyonel (1871-). German-American artist. Caricatures and political cartoons. As a painter influenced by Cubism.

Feisi or Feiyasi, Abul Feis ibn Mubarak (1547-1595). Indo-Persian poet and scholar; court poet of Emperor Akbar (1572). Translator of parts of the MAHABHARATA into Persian.

feist. U.S. dialect. A small dog. Also spelled fice, fyst, fyste, fyce, fist, fiste, fiest, fise, feice, feest, faust, fife, etc. and used in redundant combinations as fice dog, faust dog, etc. The Bench-legged Fyce is a dialect poem by Eugene FIELD. It begins:

Speakin' of dorgs, my bench-legged fyce
Hed most o' the virtues, an' nary a vice . . .

The description of the dog is:

His legs wuz so crooked, my bench-legged pup
Wuz as tall settin' down as he wuz standin' up.

Félibrige. An association of Provençal poets, founded near Avignon (1854) for the cultivation of Provençal as a literary language. Its first leader was Joseph Roumanille. Its membership included Frédéric Mistral. A Félibre is a member of the Félibrige. The origin of both terms is obscure.

Felician, Father. In Longfellow's poem EVANGELINE, the Catholic priest and schoolmaster of Grand Pré, in Acadia. He accompanies Evangeline in part of her wanderings to find Gabriel, her affianced husband.

Felix. In Longfellow's Golden Legend (1851), a monk who listens to the singing of a milk-white bird for a hundred years, which seem to him "but a single hour," so enchanted is he with the song. See also HILDESHEIM.

Felix, Antonius. A Greek freedman; procurator of Judaea (ca. 52-60 A.D.) under whom St. Paul was tried (Acts xxiii. 23, 24, xxiv). Succeeded by Festus, before whom St. Paul made his famous "appeal unto Caesar" (Acts xxv. 12).

Felix Holt, the Radical. A novel by George ELIOT (1866). The action takes place at the time of the Reform Bill, 1832-1833. The plot, which is somewhat complicated, deals primarily with the affairs of Harold TRANSOME, heir to the Transome estate. Harold horrifies his dominating and conventional-minded mother by running for Parliament as a Radical and in this connection meets Felix HOLT, a young idealist who is making a living as a watchmaker rather than live on proceeds from patent medicine. Felix becomes greatly interested in Esther Lyon, the step-daughter of a lovable, unworldly Independent minister; and although the two young people have diametrically opposite views, they fall in love. It is discovered that Esther is the real heir to the Transome estate and Harold an illegitimate son, the father being the attorney Jermyn. Harold offers to give up the estate to Esther and also proposes marriage. In the meantime Felix, in his effort to prevent riots on Election Day, has accidentally killed a man and is on trial. His trouble brings to Esther the realization that she loves Felix; she gives up her claim to the Transome estate, and after his pardon, becomes his wife.

Felixmarte. The hero of Felixmarte of Hyrcania, a Spanish romance of chivalry by Melchior de Orteza Caballero de Ubeda (1566). The curate in Don Quixote condemns this work to the flames.

Fell, Dr.

I do not like thee, Dr. Fell,
The reason why I cannot tell;
But thus I know, I know full well,
I do not like thee, Dr. Fell.

These well-known lines are by the "facetious" Tom Brown (1663-1704), and the person referred to was Dr. Fell, Dean of Christchurch (1625-1686), who expelled him, but said he would remit the sentence if he translated the thirty-third Epigram of Martial:

Non amo te, Zabidi, nec possum dicere quare;
Hoc tantum possum dicere non amo te.

The above is the translation, which is said to have been given impromptu.

fellah. Plural fellahin or fellahs. A race type in modern Egypt, descended from the ancient Egyptians, of mixed Coptic, Arabian, and Nubian stock. The fellahin are heavy of build, broad-faced, thick-lipped, with a brown-red skin.

fellow traveler. A translation of the Russian popuchiki. One who merely sympathizes with and furthers the ideals of some organized group but does not actually join it. Used mainly with reference to the Communist party. See also PINK.

felo-de-se. One who kills himself by an act legally ranking as felony. Plural felones-de-se.

Feltham, Owen (1602-1668). English prose writer, one of the CHARACTER WRITERS. He was the author of Resolves: Divine, Moral, and Political (ca. 1620), a popular series of moralistic "characters."

Felton, John (1595?-1628). English lieutenant under Sir Edward Cecil at Cadiz (1625). He assassinated the Duke of Buckingham who had refused him the command of a company (Aug. 23, 1628) and was hanged at Tyburn. He appears in The Three Musketeers by Alexandre DUMAS as a victim of Milady's intrigues.

Felton, Septimus, see SEPTIMUS FELTON.

feme. From Old French, the modern femme, "woman, wife." Occurs in several legal terms, as feme covert, "a married woman"; feme sole, "a single woman"; feme-sole trader, a married woman engaging in business on her own account.

feminine ending. An extra, unaccented syllable at the end of an iambic or anapestic line of poetry. It is very common in blank verse.

To bē | or nōt | to bē | —that is | the q̄es | tiōn.

feminine rhyme. Rhymed feminine endings, also called double rhyme. They are common in the heroic couplet.

femmes savantes. Women who go in for women's rights, science and philosophy, to the neglect of domestic duties and wifely amenities. The expression comes from Molière's comedy, Les Femmes savantes (1672), in which the "blue-stockings" are Philaminte, the mother of Henriette, who discharges one of her servants because she speaks bad grammar; Armande, sister of Henriette, who advocates platonic love and science; and Bélise, sister of Philaminte, who sides with her in all things, but imagines that everyone is in love with her. Henriette, who has no sympathy with these "lofty flights," is in love with Clitandre, but Philaminte wants her to marry Trissotin, a bel esprit. However, the father loses his property through the "savant" proclivities of his wife, Trissotin retires from the affair, and Clitandre marries Henriette, the "perfect" or thorough woman. The comedy is usually known in English translation as The Learned Ladies.

Fenella, alias Zarah. In Scott's PEVERIL OF THE PEAK, daughter of Edward Christian, a pretended deaf-and-dumb, elf-like attendant on the Countess of Derby. She has been brought up to believe that her father was Edward's murdered brother William, and that to secure vengeance is her "first great duty on earth"; hence the pretense of being a deaf-mute in order to spy upon her supposed enemies. Fenella falls in love with Julian Peveril and plays the part of Zarah, a "Moorish sorceress" to rescue him from prison. In her hopeless love as in other characteristics, she is akin to Goethe's MIGNON.

Fénelon, François de Salignac de La Mothe (1651-1715). French churchman and author, attached to the royal court and a tutor to the Dauphin until exiled for his unorthodox advocacy of the mystic doctrines of QUIETISM. He is known for his tolerance and liberalism in political ideas and educational theories. His works include De l'Éducation des filles (1687), a short treatise on education for women; Tél- émaque (see TELEMACHUS) (1699), an epic in imitation of the Aeneid and the Odyssey, giving political advice to the Dauphin and indirectly reproving Louis XIV for his policies; and Lettre à l'Académie (1714), literary criticism, in which Fénelon prefers the precepts of the classic Ancients to the precepts of the Moderns.

fêng-huang, fêng-hwang. In Chinese mythology, a gorgeous bird, phoenix or pheasantlike that appears in time of peace and prosperity.

Fenians. An anti-British secret association of disaffected Irishmen formed simultaneously in Ireland by James Stephens and in New York by John O'Mahony in 1857, with the object of overthrowing the domination of England in Ireland, and making Ireland a republic. The word is from the Old Irish Fene, a name of the ancient Irish, confused with Fianna, the semi-mythological warriors, led by Finn McCool, who defended Ireland in the time of FINN or FINGAL. Scott, in his fictitious translation from Ossian in THE ANTIQUARY (ch. xxx), uses the term in place of Macpherson's "Fingalians," i.e., the Norse followers of Fionnghal (Fingal): "Do you compare your psalms to the tales of the bare-armed Fenians?" These ancient Fenians are represented as warriors of superhuman size, strength, and courage, and became the nucleus of a large cycle of legends. See also CLAN-NA-GAEL; SINN FEIN.

Fenn, George Manville (1831-1909). English writer of boys' books.

Fenellosa, Ernest Francisco (1853-1908). American Orientalist. Convert to Buddhism. Decorated by the Mikado. Curator of Oriental Art, Boston Museum of Fine Arts (1890-1897); Professor, Imperial Normal School, Tokyo (1897-1900). Ezra POUND, his literary executor, produced three books from his notes, Cathay (1915), Certain Noble Plays of Japan (1916), Noh, or Accomplishment (1917).

Fenrir or Fenris-wolf. In Scandinavian mythology, the wolf of LOKI, typifying, perhaps, the goading of a guilty conscience. He was the brother of HELL, and when he gaped one jaw touched earth and the other heaven. This monster was expected to swallow up ODIN at the day of doom. Percy MacKaye wrote a dramatic poem entitled Fenris the Wolf (1905).

Fenton. In Shakespeare's MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR, the lover of Anne Page. Fenton is of good birth, and seeks to marry a fortune to "heal his poverty." In "sweet Anne Page," however, he soon discovers that which makes him love her for herself more than for her money.

Fenton, Robert. The hero of Howells' A WOMAN'S REASON.

Feramorz. In Moore's LALLA ROOKH, the name assumed by the Sultan in his disguise as a young Cashmerian poet who relates poetical tales to Lalla Rookh on her journey from Delhi to Lesser Bucharria.

Ferber, Edna (1887-). American novelist, short-story writer, and playwright, author of numerous best-selling novels and successful plays. Among the best-known novels are So Big (1924); Show Boat (1926); Cimarron (1929); American Beauty (1931); Come and Get It (1935); Saratoga Trunk (1941). Her plays include The Royal Family (1927), considered to be a satire on the family of BARRYMORE; Dinner at Eight (1932); and Stage Door (1936). A Peculiar Treasure (1939) is an autobiography. Emma McCHESENEY, a traveling saleswoman, is her best-known character.

Ferdinand. (1) King of Navarre in Shakespeare's comedy, LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST. He agrees with three young lords to spend three years in severe study, during which time no woman is to approach his court; but no sooner is the agreement made than he falls in love with the Princess of France.

(2) In Shakespeare's TEMPEST, son of Alonso, king of Naples. He falls in love with Miranda, daughter of Prospero, the exiled duke of Milan.

(3) The hero of Donizetti's opera LA FAVORITA, also called Fernando.

(4) A Spanish bull, famous hero of an American children's book (1936) by Munro Leaf and Robert Lawson which became a best-seller. Ferdinand preferred smelling the flowers to fighting.

Ferdinand, Count Fathom, The Adventures of. A novel by Smollett (1754). See FATHOM.

fere. A mate or companion. Cf. The Ballad of the Goodly Fere by Ezra Pound. Historically a fere is one with whom one travels (from an old verb faran, "to travel"), as a companion is one with whom one shares one's bread (from Latin panis).

Ferguson. It's all very fine, Ferguson, but you don't lodge here. A popular saying about the middle of last century. There is more than one account of its origin. One refers it to a young Scot of the name who got intoxicated at Epsom races and found it impossible to prevail on any hotelkeeper to take him in; another has it that Ferguson was a companion of the notorious Marquis of Waterford. In one of their sprees they got separated; the marquis went to bed at the house of his uncle, the Archbishop of Armagh, Charles Street, St. James' Square. A thundering knock came at the door, and the marquis threw up the window and said, "It is all very fine, Ferguson, but you don't lodge here." Cf. Notes and Queries, January 16, 1886, p. 46.

Ferguson, Elizabeth. A leading character in Margaret Deland's IRON WOMAN.

Ferguson, John, see JOHN FERGUSON.

Fergusson, Harvey (1890-). American novelist of New Mexican history and contemporary life. His sister Erna has written interesting books about the Southwest, South America, and Cuba.

Fermi, Enrico (1901-). Italian physicist. Came to United States in 1939. Professor of physics at Columbia University. Awarded Nobel Prize for physics (1938). Worked under Major General Leslie R. Groves on the atomic bomb.

Fernald, Chester Bailey (1869-1938). Though born in Boston, Fernald acquired the material for his best books in San Francisco: The Cat and the Cherub (1896) and Chinatown Stories (1899). He also wrote Under the Jack-staff (1903), stories of the sea, the Spanish-American War, etc. He traveled widely and lived in England after 1907 where he wrote for the stage. His short stories are notable for their humor.

Ferney, the Patriarch or Philosopher of. VOLTAIRE is so called, because for the last twenty years of his life he lived at Ferney, a small sequestered village near Geneva, now officially known as Ferney-Voltaire, from which obscure retreat he poured forth his invectives against the French Government, the Church, nobles, nuns, priests, and indeed all classes.

Ferothers. The guardian angels of ancient Persian mythology. They are countless in number, and their chief tasks are for the well-being of man. The winged circular symbol, supposed to represent either them or the sun-god, and found on many Mesopotamian monuments, is also known as the Feroher.

Ferracute (i.e., sharp iron). A giant in Turpin's CHRONICLE OF CHARLEMAGNE. He had the strength of forty men, and was thirty-six feet high. Though no lance could pierce his hide, ORLANDO slew him by divine interposition.

Ferragus. The giant of Portugal in VALENTINE AND ORSON. He took Bellisant under his care after she had been divorced by the Emperor of Constantinople. The great "BRAZEN HEAD," that told those who consulted it whatever they required to know, was kept in his castle.

Ferrara. A broadsword or claymore with the name Ferrara inscribed on the blade. Thought to be made by the famous sixteenth-century armorer Andrea Ferrara at Belluno, Italy. Highly esteemed in England and Scotland in the 16th and 17th centuries.

Ferrara Bible, the. See BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Ferrars, Edward. In Jane Austen's SENSE AND SENSIBILITY, the lover of Elinor Dashwood.

Ferrars, Endymion. Hero of Disraeli's political novel, Endymion (1835).

Ferrau, Ferraute, Ferracute, or Ferragus. In Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, a Saracen, son of Lanfusa. He dropped his helmet in the river, and vowed he would never wear another till he had won that worn by Orlando. Orlando slew him with a wound in the navel, his only vulnerable part.

Ferrero, Guglielmo (1871-1942). Italian historian of Jewish descent. Author of five volumes on The Greatness and Decline of Rome (1907-1909), a massive history. Also a novelist. A long list of books to his credit. Advocated Italian participation in World War I on the side of the Allies.

Ferrex and Porrex. Two sons of GORBODUC, a mythical British king, who divided his kingdom between them. Porrex drove his brother from Britain, and when Ferrex returned with an army he was slain, but Porrex was shortly after put to death by his mother. The story is told in Geoffrey of Monmouth's Historia Regum Britanniae, and it forms the basis of the first regular English tragedy, Gorboduc, or Ferrex and Porrex, written by Thomas Norton and Thomas Sackville, Earl of Dorset, and acted in 1561.

Ferris wheel. A giant power-driven steel wheel, for amusement and observation, with balanced passenger cars, the first one being erected by George Washington Gale Ferris (1859-1896), American engineer, at the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago in 1893.

Fescennine. Low, scurrilous, obscene. Applied to poetry, especially in the phrase Fescennine verses, a genre of licentious poetry of a personal character, extemporized at public meetings, originally in the Etruscan city of Fescennia but later also at Rome.

Feste. In Shakespeare's Twelfth Night, Olivia's clown.

Festus. (1) A dramatic poem by Philip J. Bailey (1839). Like FAUST the hero is conducted by a diabolical companion through the whole of human experience and more, but Lucifer, his guide, is not so much the tempter as the philosopher and theologian.

(2) In Browning's PARACELUS, a true friend of the hero. He is the husband of Michal.

(3) Porcius Festus. A Roman procurator in Palestine, successor to Antonius FELIX and responsible for St. Paul's journey to Rome.

fetish. An object with magical powers, temporary or permanent seat of a supernatural power. In psychoanalysis or psychopathology, a part of the body, as somebody's foot, or an article of clothing, as a handkerchief of the beloved person, on which erotic interest has become fixed.

Feu, Le, see UNDER FIRE.

Feuchtwanger, Lion (1884–). German novelist, author of best-selling novels dealing with historical and political subjects, especially Jews in positions of power. Among his works are The Ugly Duchess (Die Hässliche Herzogin) (1923); Jud Süß (1926), translated as Power; Two Anglo-Saxon Plays (1928), including The Oil Islands and Warren Hastings; Success (Erfolg) (1930); Der jüdische Krieg (1932), translated as Josephus; Die Geschwister Oppenheim (1933), translated as The Oppermanns; The Jew of Rome (1935); The Pretender (1937); Exil (1940), translated as Paris Gazette; Josephus and the Emperor (1942).

Feuchtwanger's writings were suppressed during World War I because of their revolutionary content, and he was among the authors forced, because of Jewish parentage and the nature of their books, to flee Germany under the repressive policies of the National Socialist government. See NAZISM.

feudalism or feudal system. The system of political organization with reference to land tenure and service and allegiance prevalent during the Middle Ages throughout Europe. In its purest form, the feudal system assigns sovereignty over all the land of the realm to the highest feudal lord, i.e., the king, who invests his vassals in exchange for military service and fealty with inheritable fiefs (or divisions of land), which they in turn and under similar conditions distribute by subinfeudation among their subtenants, and so on down the line. The feudal lords holding their fiefs from the king are tenants in capite; the subtenants are mesne lords.

In its ideal form the feudal system represents an organic hierarchy in which every member carries a balanced burden of obligations and authority. It reached its highest development in the period from the ninth to the fourteenth century. Increasingly adulterated and corrupt elements of it have survived into the nineteenth century. It has been observed that its basic principles still govern the English and American real-property law. The theory of the FÜHRER PRINCIPLE is likewise patterned on it.

Feuerbach, Paul Johann Anselm von (1775–1833). German jurist; reformer of penal legislation. His third son, Ludwig Andreas von Feuerbach (1804–1872), was a philosopher; a pupil of Hegel, he abandoned Hegelian idealism for a naturalistic materialism and attacked orthodox religion and immortality, especially in Das Wesen des Christentums (The Nature of Christianity; 1840). Anselm von Feuerbach (1829–1880), a grandson of Paul Johann Anselm by his eldest son Anselm, became a well-known historical and portrait painter, representing a sort of nostalgic and romanticizing classicism.

Feuilleton, Octave (1821–1890). French novelist and playwright. His newspaper serials were the first to be called FEUILLETON.

feuilleton. French, from feuille, "a leaf," but at the same time a pun on the name of Octave FEUILLET. The part of French newspapers devoted to tales, light literature, etc.; hence, in England a serial story in a newspaper, or the "magazine page" which contains light articles, tit-bits, and so on.

Féval, Paul (1860–). Sea-rover, writer of sailors' songs; used fictional characters of d'Artagnan and Cyrano in several books; one of the founders of the Society of French Novelists. Son of Paul Henri Corentin Féval (1817–1887), novelist and playwright; rival of SARDOU and patron of GABORIAU.

Feverel, Richard. Hero of Meredith's novel, THE ORDEAL OF RICHARD FEVEREL.

Sir Austin Feverel in the same novel is the short-sighted father of the hero.

Fezon. In VALENTINE AND ORSON, the daughter of Savary, Duke of Aquitaine, demanded in marriage by a pagan, called the Green Knight. Orson, having overthrown the pagan, was accepted by the lady instead.

Fezziwig. The name of a family of cheerful people in Dickens' A Christmas Carol. Of the mother we are told that she was "one vast substantial smile."

F. F. V's. The First Families of Virginia, descended from early settlers.

Mason wuz F.F.V., though a cheap card to win on,
But t'other was jes' New York trash to begin on.
Lowell, Biglow Papers.

fiacre. A small four-wheeled carriage for hire. The word comes from the Hôtel de St. Fiacre in Paris where the first fiacre station was established about 1650 to accommodate pilgrims on their way to St. Fiacre's shrine in Breuil. This St. Fiacre (d. ?670) had come from Ireland and is a patron saint of gardeners. His day is August 30.

Fiammetta (from Ital. fiamma, "flame"). The name under which Boccaccio celebrated MARIA D'AQUINO in his works. L'Amorosa Visione is dedicated to her by means of an acrostic of the name, and L'Amorosa Fiammetta tells her love story in the form of an autobiography, with the lady eventually deserted by her lover and left to weep alone, a reversal of the situation in the author's own life. She is also considered to have been drawn upon for the character of Criseida (in Chaucer, Criseyde, and in Shakespeare, Cressida), the heroine of Il Filostrato, Boccaccio's version of the famous story of TROILUS.

Fianna. See under FENIAN.

Fianna Fail. Literally, Fenians of Ireland. Name of a party of the Irish Free State opposed to the oath of allegiance to Great Britain. See also SINN FEIN.

Fibber McGee and Molly. A radio serial or "soap opera" given by Marian and Jim Jordan, ex-Peoria mailman, which has held first or second place on the top 50 radio programs. It is a Horatio Alger story, rags-to-riches, and became the nation's top radio program in 1941 after 17 years on the air. Given weekly, it has had 20 million or so listeners.

Fichte, Johann Gottlieb (1762-1814). German philosopher and metaphysician, the son of a poor Lusatian weaver. After the Prussian disaster at Jena (1806), he delivered in Berlin his famous patriotic Reden an die deutsche Nation (Addresses to the German Nation; 1807-1808). At the opening of the Berlin university (1810) he was given a chair of philosophy and became the second rector of that institution. His most important philosophical work, Grundlage der gesamten Wissenschaftslehre (Fundamental Principles of the Whole Theory of Science; 1794) reveals Fichte as a disciple of KANT in search for a solution of the master's fundamental dilemma, the limitation of pure reason, its inability to arrive at full knowledge of a "thing-in-itself" (the DING AN SICH) and to yield doctrines of morals and rights. Fichte's solution is solipsistic in that it deduces à priori from the Ego not only the categories of our knowledge of nature but also the doctrines of ethical and legal obligations, thus uniting Kant's two critiques (of Practical and Pure Reason) in one epistemological system.

Ficino, Marsilio (1433-1499). Italian philosopher, the earliest Platonist of the Renaissance period, who as a child was taken into the household of Cosimo de' Medici to be trained specifically as a philosopher and student of the theories of PLATO. He was a leader of the Platonic Academy established at Florence by the Medici with which PICO DELLA MIRANDOLA and Angelo POLIZIANO were also associated. Ficino made translations of works by Plato, PLOTINUS, and Dionysius the Areopagite, and wrote numerous essays and treatises in which he sought to harmonize Platonism with Christianity. His work was widely known during his time and, like most of that studied and produced by the Florentine Academy, was more in accordance with the teachings of the neo-Platonists (see NEO-PLATONISM) than with those of Plato himself.

Ficke, Arthur Davison (1883-1945). American poet, married the painter Gladys Brown. An authority on Japanese prints. Wrote some twenty books, mostly poetry, among the best-known of which is his Sonnets of a Portrait Painter (1914). Perpetrated with Witter Bynner under assumed names the literary hoax of the volume Spectra (1916), purporting to be the product of a new faction of the imagist school of poetry. Ficke was actually a classical poet of fine achievement.

Fiddler's Green. The ELYSIUM of sailors; a land flowing with rum and lime-juice, a land of perpetual music, mirth, dancing, drinking, and tobacco; a sort of Dixie Land or land of the leal.

Fidei Defensor, see DEFENDER OF THE FAITH.

Fidele. In Shakespeare's CYMBELINE, the name assumed by Imogen, when, attired in boy's clothes, she starts for Milford Haven to meet her husband, Posthumus.

Fidelio. An opera by BEETHOVEN (1805), based on Bouilly's Leonore. The hero is Don Fernando Florestan, a state prisoner in Spain, and the heroine his faithful wife LEONORA, who disguises herself as a man and under the name Fidelio becomes the jailer's servant in order to protect her husband and bring about his release.

Fidessa. In Spenser's Faerie Queene a name assumed by DUESSA.

field.

Field of Blood. ACELDAMA. The battle of Cannae is so called.

Field of the Cloth of Gold. The plain, near Guisnes, where Henry VIII had his interview with Francis I in 1520; so called from the splendor and magnificence displayed there on the occasion.

Field of the Forty Footsteps. At the back of the British Museum, once called Southampton Fields, near the extreme north-east of the present Upper Montagu Street. The tradition is that at the time of the Duke of Monmouth's rebellion two brothers fought each other here till both were killed, and for many years forty impressions of their feet remained on the field, and no grass would grow there. The scene was built upon about 1800.

Field, Cyrus West (1819-1892). American financier. Promoter of a variety of adventurous and progressive schemes, among them the first submarine telegraph cable between America and Europe (1854 to 1866) and the New York elevated railroad (from 1877). Made and lost several fortunes.

Field, Eugene (1850-1895). American poet and journalist. Best-known as poet of childhood, many of his verses in this vein being famous. With Trumpet and Drum (1892), etc.

Field, Marshall (1835-1906). American merchant. In 1881 he founded Marshall Field and Co., in Chicago, which became one of the largest department stores in the world. Gave the site of the University of Chicago, the Field Museum of Natural History in Chicago, etc.

Field, Michael. Pseudonym of Katharine Harris Bradley (1846-1914) and Edith Emma Cooper (1862-1913), English authors collaborating (from 1884) on lyric poetry and poetic dramas.

Field, Rachel Lyman (1894-1942). American novelist and writer for children. Her father was a nephew of Cyrus West FIELD. Her Hitty, the story of a doll (1929), was awarded the Newbery Medal for the most distinguished work of children's literature of the year and was a turning point in her career. In 1938 she achieved her greatest popular success with the adult novel All This, and Heaven Too, based on the life story of a great-aunt, Henriette Deluzy-Desportes, central figure of a famous cause célèbre. The same real-life plot was used by Joseph SHEARING in The Strange Case of Lucile Cléry (see CLÉRY, Lucille).

Field, Sara Bard (1882-). American poet and leader in the Woman Suffrage movement. The widow of the distinguished American poet and satirist Charles Erskine Scott Wood (1852-1944). Her Barabbas (1932) is a partially historical long dramatic poem. She is also a fine lyricist.

Fielding, Henry (1701-1754). English novelist, burlesque playwright, and journalist, known for the wit, satire, realism, and character delineation of his picaresque novels. His works include JOSEPH ANDREWS (1742), a satire on Richardson's PAMELA; JONATHAN WILD (1743); TOM JONES (1749); and AMELIA (1751). Fielding is considered to be the founder of the novel of incident and to have broadened the novel form by his development of character along with plot.

Fielding, Mrs. A character in Dickens' CRICKET ON THE HEARTH, a little querulous old lady with a peevish face, who, in consequence of once having been better off, or of laboring under the impression that she might have been if something in the indigo trade had happened differently, is very genteel and patronizing indeed.

May Fielding. Her daughter, very pretty and innocent. She was engaged to Edward Plummer, but hears that he has died in South America, and consents to marry Tackleton, the toy merchant. A few days before the day fixed for the wedding, Edward Plummer returns and May Fielding marries him. Tackleton gives them as a present the cake he ordered for his own wedding feast.

Fields, Lew, in full Lewis Maurice (1867-1941). With Joseph Weber (1867-1942), as Weber and Fields, a famous American team of comedians and theatrical managers.

Fierabras or Ferumbras, Sir. One of Charlemagne's paladins, and a leading figure in many of the romances. He was the son of BALAN, king of Spain, and for height of stature, breadth of shoulder, and hardness of muscle he never had an equal. He possessed all Babylon to the Red Sea; was seigneur of Russia, Lord of Cologne, master of Jerusalem, and even of the Holy Sepulcher. He carried away the crown of thorns, and the balsam which embalmed the body of our Lord, one drop of which would cure any sickness, or heal any wound in a moment. One of his chief exploits was to slay the "fearful huge giant that guarded the bridge Mantible," famous for its thirty arches of black marble. His pride was laid low by Olivier, he became a Christian, was accepted by Charlemagne as a paladin, and ended his days in the odor of sanctity, "meek as a lamb and humble as a chidden slave." Sir Fierabras, or Ferumbras, figures in several medieval romances, and is allegorized as Sin overcome by the Cross.

Of the famous balsam of Fierabras, DON QUIXOTE says

It is a balsam of balsams; it not only heals all wounds, but even defies death itself. If thou should'st see my body cut in two, friend Sancho, by some unlucky backstroke, you must carefully pick up that half of me which falls on the ground, and clap it upon the other half before the blood congeals, then give me a draught of the balsam of Fierabras, and you will presently see me as sound as an orange.—Cervantes, Don Quixote, I ii. 2.

Fiesole, Giovanni da. Originally Guido di Pietro. Known as Fra Angelico (1387-1455). Italian Dominican friar and painter of religious subjects. Among his most famous works are the frescoes at Orvieto (1447).

Fifteen, the. The Jacobite rebellion of 1715, when James Edward Stuart, "the Old Pretender," with the Earl of Mar, made a half-hearted and unsuccessful attempt to gain the throne.

Fifteen decisive battles. See under BATTLES OF THE WORLD, FIFTEEN DECISIVE.

fifteenner. In collectors' parlance, a book printed in the fifteenth century, i.e., an INCUNABULUM.

Fifth Avenue. A phrase synonymous with wealth and luxury, from Fifth Avenue in fifth column. Term applied during World War II to a systematic organization of spies penetrating the civilian life of the enemy country to acquire information, obstruct military preparations, alarm, confuse, and divide the populace, and assist or join the invading army. It was also applied to citizens who were enemy sympathizers. The term was first used during the Spanish Civil War (1936-1939), by General Mola who stated in a broadcast that he had four columns of soldiers advancing on Madrid and a fifth column of sympathizers within the city that would arise to attack the defenders from the rear. It was popularized by Ernest HEMINGWAY in a play of the same title dealing with the Spanish conflict, and came into wide use with the German invasion of Holland, Belgium, Luxembourg, and France in 1940, when "fifth columnists" were active. The fifth column, in fact and rhetoric, is the equivalent of the Trojan horse of the past.

New York City, a street of fashionable retail shops and expensive dwellings. "Park Avenue" is now used with the same connotation for the same reasons.

Fifth Monarchy Men. A fanatical sect of millenarians in England at the time of the Commonwealth, who maintained that the fifth monarchy, when Christ should reign on earth a thousand years, was near at hand and that they must establish it by force. They listed Assyria, Persia, Greece, and Rome as the preceding four monarchies. Their uprisings (1657 and 1661) failed.

Figaro. The rascally hero of two comedies by BEAUMARCHAIS and several operas. In Beaumarchais' Barber of Seville (Le Barbier de Séville; 1775) Figaro appears as a cunning scamp who, in connection with his duties as barber, manages time after time to thwart Rosina's guardian, Dr. Bartolo, who wishes to marry his ward, and promote her love affair with Count Almaviva. The latter appears in one scene as a drunken soldier; in another, disguised as a music master, he is shaved by Figaro in accord with the suspicious doctor's instructions. In the second comedy, The Marriage of Figaro (Le Mariage de Figaro), Count Almaviva, having won his lady-love, proves a fickle husband. Figaro, who is now in the Count's service, succeeds after much difficulty in marrying Susanna, a ward of the Countess. Several operas have been founded on these two comedies, notably Rossini's Barber of Seville (Il Barbiere di Siviglia; 1816) and Mozart's Marriage of Figaro (Le Nozze di Figaro; 1786).

Fight at Finnsburgh or Finnsburh, The. Fragment of an Anglo-Saxon epic, dealing with the story of Finn and Hildeburh sung by the minstrel in BEOWULF. It was discovered in the 18th century by the Saxon scholar George Hickes (1642-1715).

Fighting France (France Combattante). The movement of French soldiers and sympathizers, led by General Charles de Gaulle, in opposition to the Vichy government of Marshal Pétain. Organized under the name of France Libre (Free French) in 1940 when France was defeated and forced to collaborate with the Axis. The Free French fought for the liberation of Syria from Vichy in 1941. On Bastille Day (July 14) 1942, the name was changed to Fighting France. After the Allied invasion of Europe the Fighting French helped greatly to bring about the final collapse of the German army.

Fighting Prelate. Henry Spencer, bishop of Norwich, who greatly distinguished himself in the rebellion of Wat TYLER. He met the rebels in the field, with the temporal sword, then absolved them, and sent them to the gibbet.

Figuerola, Francisco de (1536?-1620). Spanish poet and soldier; master of blank verse.

Figures of Earth, A Comedy of Appearances. A satiric romance by James Branch CABELL (1921), the scene of which is medieval POICTESME. The hero is Count Manuel, who begins by following after his own thinking and his own desires but is soon diverted into doing what is expected of him, which includes the redemption and governing of Poictesme. His mother has laid on him a geas to cut a fine figure in the world, and at various stages of his career he models images or "figures of earth" but never to his own satisfaction. See SESPHRA. For his love affairs with Suskind, with Niafer who becomes his wife, with Freydis, and with Alianora of Provence, see those entries. Manuel's daughter Melicent, who appears in this book, is the heroine of DOMNEI.

Fildes, Sir Luke (1844-1927). Well-known English genre and portrait painter.

filibuster. Use of dilatory tactics in Congress (or a similar body) to prevent presentation or passage of a bill, such as speaking merely to consume time. The connection with the original sense of freebooter, buccaneer, pirate lies in the noncooperative anti-social character of the practice of filibustering. The word traveled from Dutch (vrijbouter) by way of French (fribustier, flibustier) into Spanish (filibustero) from where it was taken into American English.

Filicaia, Vincenzo da (1642-1707). Italian lyric poet and jurist. Especially remembered for his odes and sonnets.

Filioque Controversy. An argument that long disturbed the Eastern and Western Churches, and the difference of opinion concerning which still forms one of the principal barriers to their fusion. The point was: Did the Holy Ghost proceed from the Father and the Son (filio-que), or from the Father only? The Western Church maintains the former and the Eastern the latter dogma. The filio-que was recognized by the Council of Toledo, 589.

The gist of the Western argument is this: If the Son is one with the Father, whatever proceeds from the Father must proceed from the Son also. This is technically called "The Procession of the Holy Ghost."

Filippo Lippi, Fra, see FRA LIPPO LIPPI; LIPPI, Fra FILIPPO.

Fillmore, Millard (1800-1874). Thirteenth president of the U.S.A. Succeeded to presidency in 1850 on the death of President Zachary Taylor. Defeated as Whig candidate in 1852.

Fillpot, Toby. Hero of a famous English drinking song by Rev. Francis Fawkes (1721-1777), entitled The Brown Jug. Toby was a thirsty old soul, who "among jolly toppers bore off the bell." It chanced as in dog days he sat boozing in his arbor, that he died "full as big as a Dorchester butt." His body turned to clay, and out of the clay a brown jug was made, sacred to friendship, mirth, and mild ale:

His body, when long in the ground it had lain,
And time into clay had resolved it again,
A potter found out in its covert so snug,
And with part of fat Toby he formed this brown jug.
Now sacred to friendship, to mirth, and mild ale.
So here's to my lovely sweet Nan of the vale.
Rev. F. Fawkes.

Filocolo, Il, see BLANCHEFLEUR.

Filomena, St. See under SAINTS.

Filostrato, Il. A poem in ottava rima by BOCCACCIO, dealing with the TROILUS and CRESSIDA story. It was the direct source of Chaucer's famous version of the legend in his Troilus and Criseyde. See also GUIDO DELLE COLONNE.

Finality Men. A term of derision applied by antislavery men in the years 1850 to 1860 to those Northerners, who, wishing to avoid agitation of the slavery question, considered the Compromise of 1850 as a final settlement.

John Finality was a nickname given to Lord John Russell because he habitually referred to the Reform Bill of 1831 as a finality.

Financier, The. A novel by Theodore DREISER. See also COWPERWOOD, FRANK.

Finch, Anne (1666-1720), Countess of Winchelsea. Author of occasional verse. In her long Pindaric ode, The Spleen (1701), she wrote a couplet echoed in Pope's Essay on Man and Shelley's Epipsychidion. She was celebrated by Pope under the name of Ardelia.

Finch, Francis Miles (1827-1907). American poet. Author of The Blue and the Gray (1867).

Finchley, Sondra. In Theodore Dreiser's AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY, a small-town society girl with whom Clyde GRIFFITHS falls in love and for whom he contrives to rid himself of Roberta Alden.

fin de siècle (Fr., "end of the century"). Pertaining to or characteristic of the end of the 19th century. The term originated in the title of a French play by Micard and De Jouvenot (1888). There is an implication of decadence in the allusion, due to its association with the literature of the period and doubtless also because of the possibility of a poetic mistranslation as "end of the saeculum or end of the world." See also DECADENTS.

Fineman, Irving (1893-). American novelist. Served as engineer officer in Navy in World War I. Won Longmans, Green Prize (1930) with This Pure Young Man and has since devoted himself to novel-writing.

Fingal, Finn, or Fionn. The great Gaelic semi-mythological hero (see FENIAN), father of OSSIAN who was purported by MACPHERSON to have been the original author of the long epic poem Fingal (1762), which narrates the hero's adventures. He was the son of Comhal, an enormous giant, who could place his feet on two mountains, and then stoop and drink from a stream in the valley between.

Finger, Charles Joseph (1871-1941). Anglo-American writer on travel and adventure. Short stories, novels, juveniles. Thirty-two books. Won Newbery medal in 1925.

Finley, John Huston (1863-1940). American educator, editor, and poet. Editor-in-chief of the New York Times (1937-1938).

Finn. In James Joyce's FINNEGANS WAKE, Finn is one of the characters with whom the hero, H. C. EARWICKER is identified. References to Finn's legendary pursuit of Dermont and Grania (DIARMUID and GRAINNE), and to other events in which he is involved in surviving literature occur throughout the novel. According to one of the legends, Finn was to return someday to be the savior of Ireland, in a kind of "resurrection" of which Joyce takes advantage to identify the ancient hero also with Tim FINNEGAN.

Finn, Huckleberry. Titular hero of Mark Twain's novel, HUCKLEBERRY FINN.

Finn, Phineas, see PHINEAS FINN.

Finnegan, Tim. Subject of an Irish-American music-hall ballad, which was the source of the title of James Joyce's novel FINNEGANS WAKE. In the ballad, Finnegan is a stonemason who is killed in a fall but miraculously revives during the wake held to mourn him:

"Och, he revives See how he raises"
 And Timothy, jumping from the bed,
 Cried, while he lathered around like blazes,
 "Bad luck to your sows! D'ye think I'm dead?"
 Whack, Hurroo. Now dance to your partners,
 Welt the flure, your trotters shake,
 Isn't it all the truth I've told ye,
 Lots of fun at Finnegan's wake?
 Quoted by Harry Levin, James Joyce, p. 154.

Because of his return to life, Finnegan serves in the novel as a symbol of resurrection and renewal, principles of the theories of Giambattista Vico followed extensively by Joyce, and is an alter ego of H. C. EARWICKER. He is also considered to stand for the Irish hero FINN or FINGAL, because of his name (Finnegan = Finn-again), and perhaps, through his trade, for the artist as a craftsman. See DAEDALUS; DEDALUS, STEPHEN. In addition, Finnegan is on occasion synonymous with Adam, Lucifer, and Humpty-Dumpty, because they, too, had epic falls. Throughout the book references to Finnegan, his fall, and his return to life are found again and again, in various forms and various verbal disguises.

Finnegans Wake. The last and most important novel by James Joyce, regarded as his masterpiece, begun in 1922 and completed in 1939, when it was published. Most literally, it presents the dreams and nightmares of H. C. Earwicker, the keeper of a public-house called the Bristol in Dublin, Ireland, and his family (see under EARWICKER), as they lie asleep at night, the events of the day just past and their anxieties, secret thoughts, and unexpressed desires recurring in their minds. Simultaneously, it describes the topography, atmosphere, and characteristic scenes of Dublin and its vicinity, gives an account of the development of civilization and the whole history of the human race, and dramatizes the problem of original sin, the fall of man, and redemption. The title refers to both the history of mankind and the religious problem, being taken from a music-hall ballad telling of the fall and miraculous resurrection of one Tim FINNEGAN, who is a leading symbol throughout the book.

The plan and structure of the novel are based on several theories followed by various schools of thought during the author's lifetime. Among the well-known figures whose ideas are embodied in Finnegans Wake are the following: Sigmund FREUD (theories of sex, dreams, and the unconscious); Sir James G. FRAZER (studies of comparative folklore, mythology, and religion); Lévy-Bruhl (anthropology); Giambattista Vico (cyclical repetition in history and successive stages in the development of civilization); Giordano BRUNO (dualism and the universal conflict of opposites). Bruno and Vico are referred to constantly throughout the book under a variety of names, variants on the originals, the most frequent being perhaps "Nolan" and "Vicus" or "Jean Baptistier Vickar."

In order to maintain his four simultaneous levels of meaning in his novel—analogous to the four levels of meaning (literal, allegorical, anagogical, and moral) frequent in the art, literature, and Biblical exegesis of the Middle Ages and explained by Dante in a famous letter addressed to Can Grande della Scala—Joyce uses an elaborate language of his own devising. It is made up of numerous puns, portmanteau words, malapropisms, and the like, with endless philological variations, such as assimilation, dissimilation, metathesis, etc., words from foreign languages, ancient and modern; literary, historical, and philosophical allusions; snatches of church liturgy; echoes of popular songs; current slang; newspaper headlines; advertising slogans; place-names of Dublin and its vicinity; names of individuals, business firms, and government officials of Dublin; Irish heroes of the present and the near and remote past; titles of books and magazines, references to paintings and statues; references to local occurrences, private anecdotes, and neighborhood gossip; names of Joyce's friends, enemies, and literary contemporaries, Roman Catholic saints, sport celebrities, American motion-picture stars, and so on, almost actually ad infinitum. To the unprepared reader, this welter of bizarre language and unfamiliar allusion is bewildering, but it is a clever device by which the distortions and illogicality of dreams can be approximated and several ideas and associations can be conveyed at once. Among the personages most often referred to are: TRISTAN, JOHN PEEL, Finnegan, ISOLT, BRUNO, Vico, the Duke of WELLINGTON, PARNELL, St. Lawrence O'Toole, St. PATRICK, ADAM, LUCIFER, Finn, and Jonathan SWIFT.

Finnegans Wake is divided into four sections, the first three of which consist of several episodes apiece, each section taking place in a different part of Dublin. The following is an approximate summary:

Section I takes place in PHOENIX PARK.

Episode 1 is a general introduction, presenting a description of Dublin and Phoenix Park, and a dialogue between Mutt and Jute, a kind of vaudeville team.

In Episode 2, charges of an unknown crime committed in Phoenix Park are made against Humphrey Earwicker through THE BALLAD OF PERSSE O'REILLY, sung by a reveler in Earwicker's "pub."

Episode 3 continues the charges after the tavern has closed for the night.

Episode 4 presents the trial of Earwicker.

Episode 5 concerns a lost letter from another world, which, literally, is probably a gossip letter to Maggie Earwicker from a woman in Boston, Massachusetts, which appears on a dunghill but is carried away by a neighbor's hen. The "letter" may also be the profession of letters, or literature; the Biblical "handwriting on the wall," or a similar prophecy in hieroglyphics; or history itself.

Episode 6 consists of questions and answers dealing with the Earwicker family, their household, their business, twelve patrons of their tavern, Vico's theory of history, Swift's theory of love, and the theory of time and space—the latter being illustrated by the fable of the Mookse and the Gripes.

Episode 7 is an allegorical debate between Shem and Shaun in the persons of Justius and Mercius, with Shem as the villain; this leads into Episode 8—the famous Anna Livia Plurabelle episode, in which the rhythm of the river Liffey is expressed in the rhythm of the sentences, and the names of various rivers of the world are woven into the querulous, gossiping speech of washwomen at their work on the banks of the river.

Section II takes place in Chapelizod.

Episode 1 presents a play, THE MIME OF MICK, NICK, AND THE MAGGIES, with the program, cast, and credits and a synopsis announced in a sprightly manner.

In Episode 2, a thunderstorm breaks up a picnic, and the party seeks refuge in the "book of childhood."

Episode 3 deals with a voyage of discovery, with patrons of the "pub" appearing as Viking sailors, perhaps in reference to Earwicker's supposed Norse ancestry.

Episode 4 presents the romance of Tristan and Isolde (see TRISTAN), with four old men eavesdropping.

Section III takes place on the hill of Howth.

Episode 1 is the fable of the ONDR and the GRACEHOPER, told by Shaun.

In Episode 2, Shaun preaches a sermon on chastity to an audience of young girls.

Episode 3 presents a lamentation over the barrow, or primitive tomb, of the hero.

Episode 4 contains a survey of the household, its members, and appurtenances (cf. the question-and-answer inventory near the closing section of ULYSSES), as the family half-awakens. This episode supplies the best clues to the literal aspects of the novel.

Section IV presents a salute to dawn and a lyrical soliloquy by Maggie Earwicker (cf. the soliloquy by Molly Bloom, at the close of ULYSSES), or Anna Livia Plurabelle, as the river Liffey flows down to the sea, her "cold father." The final sentence is cut off in the middle and completed by the broken sentence which opens the first episode of section I, so that the structure of the whole book is circular, in keeping with the theories of Vico.

As with all of Joyce's works, opinion was sharply divided on Finnegans Wake at its publication. Some reviewers found it a hopeless tour de force or a mass of unintelligible gibberish, but serious critics who made a study of it presented interpretations which clarified the author's intention and method, expressing high praise for the book's humor and lively, robust spirit and its frequent passages of distinguished lyric quality. These critics tended to place Finnegans Wake among such works of unique personality as Dante's DIVINE COMEDY, Rabelais' GARGANTUA AND PANTAGRUEL, Browne's RELIGIO MEDICI, Burton's ANATOMY OF MELANCHOLY, and Sterne's TRISTRAM SHANDY.

During the seventeen years of its composition, Finnegans Wake was known as Work in Progress, and several parts of it were published separately as they were completed, although they were later revised for final publication. These are: Tales Told of Shem and Shaun (1929); HAVETH CHILDERS EVERYWHERE (1931); ANNA LIVIA PLURABELLE (1932); Two Tales from Shem and Shaun (1932); THE MIME OF MICK, NICK, AND THE MAGGIES (1934); STORYELLA AS SHE IS SYUNG (1938). Joyce himself made a phonograph recording of a passage from the Anna Livia Plurabelle episode.

For further entries in this Encyclopedia dealing with Finnegans Wake, see HOSTY; PHIL THE FLUTER'S BALL; PRANKQUEAN. For full analysis and interpretation, consult the appropriate chapter in The Wound and the Bow, by Edmund Wilson, and, especially, James Joyce, by Harry Levin. For the analysis of Finnegans Wake and its characters presented above and elsewhere, this Encyclopedia is indebted to Mr. Levin's study.

Finney, Charles Grandison (1905-). Outré novelist. Proofreader on the Arizona Daily Star, Tucson, Arizona. Wrote The Circus of Dr. Lao (1935); The Unholy City (1937); Past the End of the Pavement (1939). His first novel was awarded the American Bookseller's Association prize as "the most original novel" of its year.

Fion. Another form of the name Finn, or FINGAL.

Fionnuala. The daughter of Lir in old Irish legend, who was transformed into a swan, and condemned to wander over the lakes and rivers of Ireland till the introduction of Christianity into that island. Moore has a poem on the subject in his Irish Melodies.

Fiorelli, Tiberio (d. 1694). Italian actor who introduced the stock character of the Italian COMEDIA DELL'ARTE, the boastful SCARAMUCCIA as SCARAMOUCHE on the French stage (ca. 1640).

Firbank, Ronald (1886-1926). Outré English writer. Author of The Flower Beneath the Foot (1922), Prancing Nigger (1924), etc. He was a "precious" character. Converted to Catholicism in 1908.

Firbolgs. Literally, "skin-boat men." In Irish legendary history, a dark-haired people of small stature and slender limbs, probably representing the Iberian race which preceded the Celtic. According to one account, they were defeated by the Fomorians and escaped to Greece where they fell into slavery. They created the great stone forts found in Ireland.

Firdausi, Firdusi, or Firdousi. Real name, Abul Qasim Mansur or Hasan (940?-?1020). Persian epic poet. Wrote the great epic SHAH NAMA and the long poem, Yusuf and Zuleikha, based on the Koranic version of the story of Joseph and Potiphar's wife.

fire-eaters. Persons ready to quarrel for anything. The allusion is to the jugglers who "eat" flaming tow, pour melted lead down their throats, and hold red-hot metal between their teeth. Richardson, in the 17th century, Signora Josephine Girardelli (the original Salamander), in the early part of the 19th century, and Chaubert, a Frenchman, of the 20th century, were the most noted of these exhibitors.

Firestone, Harvey Samuel (1868-1938). American industrialist in rubber business. Planted 60,000 acres of rubber trees on leased land in Liberia (up to 1936).

firmament. The vault of heaven viewed as a fortress. The word is hence also used interchangeably with fastness. The Hebrew raḳia (suggesting expansion) is rendered in Greek by stereoma and in Latin by firmamentum (both suggesting solidity; cf. related words like stereotype, firm, etc.).

And God made the firmament and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament.

Gen. i, 7.

Cf. the use of the idea of a solid firmament in THE GREEN PASTURES.

Firmilian. Title of "a spasmodic tragedy" (1854) by Professor W. E. Aytoun, who parodied in it the "spasmodic school" of the poets George Gilfillan, Philip James Bailey, Alexander Smith, Sydney Thompson DOBELL, and others.

Firmin, Philip. Hero of Thackeray's novel The Adventures of Philip. His father, Dr. George Brandon Firmin, who had appeared as George Brandon in A Shabby-Genteel Story, is also a prominent character in its sequel, Philip.

First Folio. The first collected edition of Shakespeare's works, a famous and valued collector's item, published in folio in 1623. It contains fourteen comedies, ten histories, and twelve tragedies. With the addition of Pericles, another comedy, in the 1664 edition (third folio), this group forms the canon of generally accepted Shakespearean plays, 37 in number.

First Gentleman of Europe. A nickname given to George IV. Louis d'Artois was so called also.

First Grenadier of France. A title given by Napoleon to Latour d'Auvergne (1743-1800).

First Violin, The. A musical novel by Jessie Fothergill (Am., 1877). The heroine is May Wedderburn, an English girl studying music in Germany, and the hero Eugen Courvoisier, the first violin in the orchestra.

Fischer, Lisbeth. The envious heroine of Balzac's Cousin Betty (La Cousine Bette; 1846), better known as the Cousin Betty of the title. She is brought up to feel inferior to her cousin, Adeline, who marries Baron HULOT. The latter dubs Lisbeth "the Nanny Goat" because of her brusqueness and apparent hatred of men. This harsh old maid, whose employment with a firm of embroiderers gives her independence, makes a protégé of the young Polish sculptor, Wenceslas Steinbock, a poor and desperate fellow-lodger whom she finds attempting suicide; and upon him she lavishes all her interest and care. Wenceslas now falls madly in love with the charming young Hortense Hulot, Cousin Adeline's daughter. Out of pure spite and malice Lisbeth introduces both Wenceslas and Adeline's scapegrace husband, the Baron, to her friend Mme Valérie Marneffe, the worst of heartless coquettes, and untold mischief results. Lisbeth's relatives, however, remain under the delusion that she is concerned only for their welfare and is "the angel of the family."

Fischer, Louis (1896-). American journalist. European correspondent of The Nation, author of Men and Politics (1941), etc.

Fischer, Theodor. The narrator in Mark Twain's MYSTERIOUS STRANGER.

fish. The fish was used as a symbol of Christ by the early Christians because the letters of its Greek name—ichthys—formed a monogram of the words Jesus Christ, Son of God, Savior.

a fish out of water. Said of a person who is out of his usual environment and so feels awkward and in the way; also of one who is without his usual occupation and is restless in consequence.

I have other fish to fry. I am busy and cannot attend to anything else just now; I have more important matters on hand.

neither fish, flesh, nor fowl; or neither fish, flesh, nor good red herring. Suitable to no class of people; fit for neither one thing nor another. Not fish (food for the monk), not flesh (food for the people generally), nor yet red herring (food for paupers).

a pretty kettle of fish, see KETTLE.

Fish, Hamilton (1808-1893; 1849-1926; 1888-). Grandfather, father, and son. (1) American statesmen; negotiated "Alabama Claims" with Great Britain. (2) Lawyer and politician. (3) Politician; member, House of Representatives (1920-1944).

Fishback, Margaret (1904-). American author of light verse, as Out of My Head, One to a Customer, etc.

Fishbein, Morris (1889-). American physician. Editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association (from 1924). Author of books on medicine and health.

Fisher, Dorothy Canfield (1879-). American novelist, author of novels dealing largely with domestic problems. Her works include The Squirrel Cage (1912); THE BENT TWIG (1915); THE BRIMMING CUP (1921); Rough-Hewn (1922); Her Son's Wife (1926); The Deepening Stream (1930); Bonfire (1933); and Seasoned Timber (1939).

Fisher, Harrison (1877-1934). American illustrator, famous for magazine covers displaying the "typical" American girl.

Fisher, Herbert Albert Laurens (1865-1940). English historian. Member of Parliament. Author of A History of Europe (1935) in three volumes and other works.

Fisher, Irving (1867-1947). American economist and professor at Yale. Author of many books on monetary questions, including 100% Money (1935).

Fisher, Mahlon Leonard (1874-). American poet, specializing in the sonnet.

Fisher, Vardis Alvero (1895-). American author, best known for his series of novels dealing with the life of Vridar Hunter, an autobiographical hero who is carried through childhood, adolescence, and maturity and portrayed in the turmoil of sex, war, and a quest for the meaning of life. These novels are In Tragic Life (1932); Passions Spin the Plot (1934); We are Betrayed (1935); and No Villain Need Be (1936). Among other works by Fisher are Sonnets to an Imaginary Madonna (1927), poetry; Toilers of the Hills (1928); Dark Bridwell (1931); The Neurotic Nightingale (1935), essays; April: A Fable of Love (1937); Forgive Us Our Virtues (1938); Children of God (1939); and City of Illusion (1941).

Fisher Maiden, The. A novel by Björnsterne Björnson (1868). The heroine, Petra, grows up in a fishing village and later becomes an actress. The book gives a vivid picture of Norwegian village life.

Fisherman's ring. A gold signet ring which the Pope uses to attest papal briefs. It bears his name encircling a figure of Peter, the fisherman and first bishop of the Roman Church.

Fisk, James (1834-1872). American stock-market speculator and wrecker of the Erie Railroad, from which he made a fortune. Caused a country-wide depression by rigging the gold market with Daniel Drew and Jay Gould. Was shot in a quarrel over a woman, Josie Mansfield.

Fiske, Bradley Allen (1854-1942). American rear admiral (1911); inventor of naval electrical devices including a system of wireless control of moving vessels.

Fiske, John (1842-1901). American historical writer and philosopher. Successful lecturer. Many historical works and books on religion and the impact of modern knowledge on its basic tenets. His original name was Edmund Fisk Green. He had it changed legally to John Fisk (1855) and later adopted the form Fiske (ca. 1860).

Fiske, Minnie Maddern (1865-1932). Famous American actress. In collaboration with her husband, the theatrical manager Harrison Grey Fiske (1861-1944), she helped popularize Ibsen's plays in the U.S. Also excelled as a comedienne. Cf. Mrs. Fiske, by Alexander Woollcott.

fit, see FYTTE.

Fitch, Clyde William (1865-1909). American playwright, author of numerous popular works for the theater, many of which were written specifically for various outstanding actors of the time. Among his best-known plays are BEAU BRUMMEL (1890); BARBARA FRIETCHIE (1899); NATHAN HALE (1899); The Climbers (1901); Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines (1901); The Girl with the Green Eyes (1902); Her Great Match (1905); THE TRUTH (1906).

Fitch, John (1743-1798). American inventor. Launched his first steamboat on the Delaware River Aug. 22, 1787. Received U.S. patent on third boat Aug. 26, 1791. Committed suicide when the wrecking of his fourth boat discouraged financial backers. Life written by Thomas Byrd (1935).

fitchew. The pole-cat of Europe; also its fur.

To be a dog, a mule, a cat, a fitchew, a toad, . . . I would not care; but to be Menelaus, I would conspire against destiny.

Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida, v. 1.

Fitz Boodle Papers, The. A series of sketches and tales by THACKERAY. The principal character is a lazy young nobleman named George Savage Fitz Boodle, with a flair for Bohemian life.

FitzGerald, Edward (1809-1883). English man of letters, famous for his free rendition of the RUBAIYAT OF OMAR KHAYYAM.

Fitzgerald, Francis Scott Key (1896-1940). American novelist, known for his studies of youth in the JAZZ AGE, presenting its cynicism, confusion, and eventual tragedy. His works include This Side of Paradise (1920); The Beautiful and Damned (1922); THE GREAT GATSBY (1925); Tender Is the Night (1934); and several collections of short stories—Flappers and Philosophers (1920), Tales of the Jazz Age (1922), All the Sad Young Men (1926), and Taps at Reveille (1935). The Vegetable, Or From President to Postman (1923) is a satirical play. See also under FLAPPER.

Fitzmaurice-Kelly, James (1857-1923). English authority on Spanish literature. Author of authoritative works in his field and editor of The Oxford Book of Spanish Verse (1913).

Fitzsimmons, Robert Prometheus (1862-1917). English-born New Zealand pugilist. World's middle weight champion (1891), heavyweight (1897). Lost championship to James J. Jeffries at Coney Island (June 9, 1899).

Fitzurse, Lord Waldemar. In Scott's IVANHOE, a baron in the suite of Prince John of Anjou, brother of Richard Cœur de Lion.

Fiume. Seaport on the Adriatic. The name is developed from Latin Fanum Sancti Viti ad Flumen, "Church of Saint Vitus of the River." Annexed by the Hapsburgs in the fifteenth century (1471), Fiume passed to Hungary in the eighteenth (1779). After World War I, D'ANNUNZIO settled the Italo-Yugoslav dispute over the important seaport by seizing it. The treaty of Rapallo (1920) made of it a free city and D'Annunzio was ejected. In 1924 Italy and Yugoslavia reached an agreement which gave Fiume to Italy.

Five Blessings. The five beatitudes desired by the Chinese: long life, wealth, tranquillity, love of virtue, and a peaceful end.

five bloods of Ireland, the. (1) The O'Neils of Ulster; (2) the O'Connors of Connaught; (3) the O'Briens of Thomond; (4) the O'Lachlands of Meath; and (5) the M'Murroughs of Leinster. These are the five principal septs or families of Ireland, and all not belonging to one of these five septs were (even down to the reign of Elizabeth) accounted aliens or enemies, and could "neither sue nor be sued."

Five Classics. The Confucian canon of five books, comprising the I Ching (Book of Changes), the Shu Ching (Book of History), the Shih Ching (Book of Odes), the Li Chi (Book of Rites), and the Ch'un Ch'iu (Spring and Autumn Annals).

Ranking second to the Five Classics are the Four Books comprising the Lun Yu (Analects of Confucius), the Mêng Tsu (Book of Mencius), the Ta Hsüeh (a treatise on practical wisdom), and the Chung Yung (Doctrine of the Mean).

Five Dynasties. Short dynasties of China (907-960 A.D.) between the T'ang and Sung dynasties: the Later Liang (907-923), the Later T'ang (923-936), the Later Chin (936-947), the Later Han (947-950), and the Later Chou (951-960). During this period there were numerous rulers, mostly Turkish and Uigur invaders.

Five-Foot Shelf. A popular name for the HARVARD CLASSICS.

Five Nations. (1) The five confederated Indian tribes, viz., the Mohawks, Oneidas, Onondagas, Cayugas, and Senecas, known as the Iroquois Confederacy. (2) The five component parts of the British Empire, used in this sense by Rudyard KIPPLING as the title of a volume of poems, The Five Nations, published in 1903. (3) The Five Civilized Nations or Tribes are the Cherokee, Chickasaw, Choctaw, Creek, and Seminole Nations of Oklahoma in the former "Indian Territory."

Five Points. A region in the lower part of the city of New York, at the intersection of Baxter, Park, and Worth streets, formerly notorious as a center of crime, poverty, and vice.

five senses. Sight, hearing, smell, taste and touch. See also COMMON SENSE.

Five Towns, the. An industrial district in northern Staffordshire, England, noted as the scene of most of Arnold BENNETT's novels and stories, notably Anna of the Five Towns, The Old Wives' Tale, Tales of the Five Towns, etc. The district is known as the Potteries from its chief industry; Bennett calls the towns Turnhill (actually it is Tunstall), Bursley (Burslem) Hanbridge (Hanley), Knype (Stoke) and Longshaw (Longton). The Five Towns have now united with a sixth to form a single borough, Stoke-on-Trent. Bennett says of the district:

It seems to me the most English piece of England that I ever came across. With extraordinary clearness I see it as ridiculously, splendidly English! All the English characteristics are quite remarkably exaggerated in the Potteries.

five wits. The five senses; also five faculties: (1) Common wit, (2) imagination, (3) fantasy, (4) estimation, and (5) memory.

Flaccus, Quintus Horatius, see HORACE.

Flack, Marjorie (1897-). Picture stories and a pioneer in REALISM for children. The Angus books, Ask Mr. Bear (1932), The Story About Ping (1933), Walter the Lazy Mouse (1937), The Restless Robin (1937), The Boats on the River (1946). In private life Mrs. William Rose BENÉT.

flag. For the colors of national flags, see COLORS, NATIONAL.

On the railways, a white flag denotes that the line is clear and the driver can go ahead, the red is the danger signal and means "no advance," and the green signifies "go slow."

White is all right; Red is all wrong;
Green is go cautiously bowling along.
Mnemonic Rhyme for Signalmen.

a black flag is the emblem of piracy or of no quarter. See BLACK.

a red flag. To display a red flag is to defy or dare to battle. Red is the signal of "danger ahead," the emblem of blood and of revolution. A red flag is therefore commonly used by rebels and revolutionists, and The Red Flag is the battle song of advanced socialists.

a white flag is the flag of truce or surrender; hence, to hang out the white flag is to sue for quarter, to give in.

a yellow flag signals contagious disease on board ship, and all vessels in quarantine or having contagious disease aboard are obliged to fly it.

to hang the flag half-mast high is in token of mourning or distress.

to lower one's flag. To eat humble pie; to eat the leek; to confess oneself in the wrong; to eat one's own words.

Flag Day. June 14, celebrated in America as the anniversary of the formal adoption of the Stars and Stripes in 1777.

Flagellants. Members of religious associations who hold that the wrath of God can only be appeased by self-flagellation. The first wave of this heresy spread over Europe, starting from Italy, about the year 1260. Scenes of public processions with the exhibition of bloody self-castigation were repeated on a larger scale at the time of the plague called the "black death" (about 1348). Religious groups with similar tenets continue to exist.

Flagstad, Kirsten (1895-). Norwegian operatic soprano. Member of Metropolitan Opera Company, New York. Wagnerian rôles. Went to Norway in 1940 to join her husband, a Nazi sympathizer, and returned after the war to find herself the center of a controversy the Misses Flamborough. Daughters of the farmer. Their homeliness contrasts well with the flashy pretenders to fashion introduced by Squire Thornhill.

Flamborough, Solomon. In Goldsmith's VICAR OF WAKEFIELD, a farmer, a talkative neighbor of Dr. Primrose, vicar of Wakefield. Moses Primrose marries one of his daughters.

Flame of Life, The (Il Fuoco). A novel by Gabriele D'ANNUNZIO (1899) dealing with the love affair of La Foscarina, a great tragic actress in her prime, and Stelio, a young poet. It is said to be, to some extent, the story of the author and Eleonora DUSE.

Flanagan, Betty. A humorous Irish-woman in Cooper's novel, THE SPY, one of Cooper's few well-drawn women. Maria Edgeworth said of her that no Irish author could draw her better. She appears in THE PIONEERS as the wife of the innkeeper Sergeant Hollister.

Flanders, Moll, see MOLL FLANDERS.

Flandrau, Charles Macomb (1871-1938). American writer, especially remembered for The Diary of a Freshman (1901) and Viva Mexico (1908). His sister-in-law, Grace C. (Hodgson) Flandrau is a well-known novelist.

flapper. Slang term applied to the typical young woman of the JAZZ AGE in the U.S., who wore short skirts, bobbed her hair, painted her face, smoked cigarettes, danced the CHARLESTON or BLACK BOTTOM, and in general defied the conventions upheld by her parents. The novelist F. SCOTT FITZGERALD and the illustrator John HELD, Jr. portrayed the flapper most effectively in their work. This meaning of the word is doubtless derived from the flapper which is a young bird when first trying its wings, especially a young duck. When Theodore Roosevelt, Hunting Trips (p. 54), wrote, "A good bag can be made at [the flappers] in the fall," he meant ducks.

Flash, Sandy. A highwayman in Bayard TAYLOR's Story of Kennett. The real name of this outlaw, notorious in Chester County, Pennsylvania, was Fitzpatrick.

flashback. Strictly, a short cutback, but usually used in lieu of the older term. In a story or moving picture, the device of interrupting the course of the topical action by interpolating an account of previous events, as scenes of a person's childhood related as part of the account of his death.

Flaubert, Gustave (1821-1880). French novelist, associated with, although not representative of, the movement of NATURALISM and known as one of the greatest Realists of 19th-century France. Beset by ill-health, personal misfortune, and a frustration of what many critics consider his naturally Romantic tendencies, he devoted his life to long hours and heavy toil over literature. See also BALZAC, DAUDET, GONCOURT BROTHERS. His work is marked by exactness and accuracy of observation, extreme impersonality and objectivity of treatment, and precision and expressiveness in style, or the principle of the MOT JUSTE. His works are The Temptation of St. Anthony (Tentation de Saint-Antoine) (see under SAINT) (1849 and 1874); MADAME BOVARY (1857), his most famous novel; SALAMMBO (1862); SENTIMENTAL EDUCATION (L'Éducation sentimentale) (1869); Trois contes (Three Stories) (1877); and the unfinished Bouvard et Pécuchet (1881), a novel dealing with two retired clerks engaged in hobbies unsuited to them. Flaubert was one of the most distinguished and influential writers of his time.

Flavian Amphitheater. The Colosseum in Rome. So called after the Flavian Emperors or CAESARS, Vespasian (69-79) and his sons Titus (79-81) and Domitian (81-96) who belonged to the house of Flavius and, although they had little else in common, made of the period known as Flavian an architectural landmark in the history of Rome. The Colosseum, the Arch of Titus, the Amphitheater at Verona are all Flavian works.

Flavin, Martin (1883-). American dramatist and novelist.

Flavius. (1) In TIMON OF ATHENS, attributed to Shakespeare, the faithful, honest steward of Timon the misanthrope.

(2) See under FLAVIAN.

Flaxman, John (1755-1826). English sculptor and draftsman. Drawings for Iliad, Odyssey, and Divine Comedy. Statues of Burns and Kemble in Westminster Abbey. CANOVA wrote of him:

You come to Rome, and admire my works, while you possess, in your own country, in Flaxman, an artist whose designs excel in classical grace all that I am acquainted with in modern art.

Fleance. In Shakespeare's MACBETH the son of Banquo. After the assassination of his father, he escapes to Wales. From him, according to legend, proceeded in a direct line the Stuarts of Scotland, a royal line which gave James VI of Scotland and I of England.

Flecker, James Elroy (1884-1915). English poet and dramatist, known for his iconoclastic manner, his interest in Greece and the Orient, and the pictorial richness of his writing. His works include The Bridge of Fire (1908), The Golden Journey to Samarkand (1913), The Burial in England (1915), and Collected Poems (1916), books of poetry; The King of Alsander (1914), a novel; and Hassan (1922) and Don Juan (1925), the former of which was widely celebrated on its posthu-mous production in the theater. Flecker was called by some "the last of the PARNASSIANS."

Flecknoe, Richard. An Irish priest who printed a host of poems, letters, and travels, and died about 1678. As a poet, his name, like the names of Maevius and Bavius among the Romans, is proverbial for vileness. Dryden says he—

Reigned without dispute
Through all the realms of nonsense absolute.
Dryden, MacFlecknoe.

Fleece, Golden, see GOLDEN FLEECE.

Fleet-book evidence. No evidence at all. The books of the old Fleet prison, where prior to 1753 clandestine marriages were concluded, are not admissible as evidence in British courts.

Fleet marriages. Clandestine marriages, at one time performed without banns or license by needy chaplains, in Fleet Prison, London. As many as thirty marriages a day were sometimes celebrated in this manner; Malcolm tells us that 2,954 were registered in the four months ending February 12, 1705. This practice was suppressed and declared null and void in 1774. The Chaplain of the Fleet, by Besant and Rice, contains a good account of the evils connected with Fleet marriages.

Fleet Street (London). Now synonymous with journalism and newspaperdom, Fleet Street was a famous thoroughfare centuries before the first newspaper was published there at the close of the 18th century. It takes its name from the old Fleet River.

Fleetwood, Lord. One of the partners to "the amazing marriage" in Meredith's novel of that name. See AMAZING MARRIAGE.

Fleming, Henry. The hero of Stephen Crane's RED BADGE OF COURAGE.

Fleming, Rhoda. Titular heroine of Meredith's novel RHODA FLEMING. Dahlia Fleming is an important character in the same novel.

Flemish account. A sum less than that expected. In Antwerp accounts were kept in livres, sols, and pence; but the livre or pound was only 12s.; hence, an account of 100 livres Flemish was worth £60 only, instead of £100, to the English creditor.

Fleshly School, The. In the Contemporary Review for October, 1871, Robert Buchanan published a violent attack on the poetry and literary methods of the Pre-Raphaelites (see PRE-RAPHAELITE BROTHERHOOD), including Swinburne, Rossetti, Morris, O'Shaughnessy, John Payne, and one or two others under the heading The Fleshly School of Poetry, and over the signature "Thomas Maitland." The incident created a literary sensation. Buchanan at first denied the authorship but was soon obliged to admit it, and some years later was reconciled to Rossetti, his chief victim. Swin-burne's very trenchant reply is to be found in his Under the Microscope (1872).

Flestrin, Quinbus, see QUINBUS FLESTRIN.

Fletcher, Giles. Called the younger (ca. 1588–1623). English poet, son of Giles Fletcher, the elder (1549?–1611), an early writer of sonnet-sequences (ca. 1593). Giles, the younger, is best known for Christ's Victory over and after Death (1610), a religious poem modeled on the work of duBARTAS and SPENSER, which is considered to have had a great influence on Milton's Paradise Regained. See under PARADISE LOST.

Fletcher, John (1579–1625). English dramatist. See BEAUMONT AND FLETCHER.

Fletcher, John Gould (1886–). American poet, first associated with the Imagist movement (see IMAGISM) and later (after 1933) with the AGRARIANS. His poetry includes: Irradiations (1915); Goblins and Pagodas (1916); Breakers and Granite (1921); Branches of Adam (1926); The Black Rock (1928); XXIV Elegies (1935); The Epic of Arkansas (1936); Selected Poems (1938). In prose he has written Paul Gauguin (1921); John Smith—Also Pocahontas (1928); The Two Frontiers (1930), dealing with the U.S. and the U.S.S.R.; The Crisis of the Film (1929); and Life Is My Song (1937), an autobiography.

Fletcher, Joseph Smith (1863–1935). English antiquarian and writer of mystery and detective fiction. The Middle Temple Murder (1918), etc. His output is exceeded only by that of Edgar Wallace.

Fletcher, Phineas (1582–1650). Brother of Giles FLETCHER, the younger, and also a follower and imitator of SPENSER. He is best known for The Purple Island (1633), an allegorical poem on man in terms of the topography and settlement of an island. Among his other works are: Locustae (1627), an anti-Jesuit poem in Latin, with a paraphrase in English called The Apollyonists; Britain's Idea (1627), a mythological poem in the manner of Spenser and first published as the work of Spenser; Piscatory Eclogues and Other Poetical Miscellanies (1633). Milton's LUCIFER is believed to have been suggested by The Apollyonists.

Fletcher, Phineas. An important character in Craik's JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN.

Fletcherize. To chew one's food long and carefully. The term was popularized in the early years of the 20th century by the lectures of the American nutritionist Horace Fletcher (1849–1919), who maintained that such a habit would do away with any dyspeptic tendency, go far toward insuring perfect health, and reduce the world's needs of foodstuffs to a fraction.

fleur-de-lis (Fr.) Half-translated as flower-de-lis or flower-de-luce. Literally, flower of the lily. The iris. In heraldry, a conventionalized flower, possibly suggested by the iris, possibly also by the head of a lance, of unknown origin and familiar through its representation in the coat of arms of ancient France (since 1179). England bore the lilies of France from 1340 to 1801.

Fleurs du mal, Les (Flowers of Evil). A book of poems by Charles BAUDELAIRE published in 1857. The poems deal with Catholic mysticism, debauchery, and imaginative descriptions of horrors, perverse sensations, and the fantastic creations of the author's mind. In form, his poetry is Classical, with striking images and epithets.

Flexner, Simon (1863–1946). American pathologist. His brother Abraham Flexner (1866–), educator, director of Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton (1930). Abraham's wife Anne Crawford is a well-known playwright.

Flibbertigibbet. One of the five fiends that possess "poor Tom" in KING LEAR. Shakespeare got the name from Harsnet's Declaration of Egregious Popish Impostures (1603), where we are told of forty fiends which the Jesuits cast out, and among the number was "Fliberdigibet," a name which had previously been used by Latimer and others for a mischievous gossip. Shakespeare says he "is the fiend of mopping and mowing, who possesses chambermaids and waiting women" (Lear, iv); and, again, that he "begins at curfew and walks till the first cock," where he seems to identify him with the will o' the wisp, giving men pins and needles, squint eyes, harelips, and so on (Lear, iii. 4). Elsewhere the name is apparently a synonym for Puck.

flight. See under COVEY.

Flint, F[rancis] S[tuart] (1885–). British imagist poet and translator. A remarkable linguist. At one time held an important position in the Ministry of Labor.

Flint, Trueman. In M. S. Cummins' LAMPLIGHTER, the old lamplighter who brought up the heroine as his daughter.

Flirt, The. A novel by Booth TARKINGTON (1913) analyzing the schemes and maneuvers of the titular heroine, Cora Madison, and their ruinous effect on her gentle lovable sister and on the entire family.

flitch of Dunmow, see DUNMOW FLITCH.

Flite, Miss. In Dickens' Bleak House, a pathetic little old woman; demented because of the delay of her suit in chancery.

flock. See under COVEY.

Flodden, Battle of. A bloody battle in Northumberland (Sept. 9, 1513), in which James IV of Scotland was defeated and killed by the forces of the Earl of Surrey, who was in charge of the action in the absence of Henry VIII. The English were 32,000, the Scots 30,000 strong. The losses are variously given as 3,000 to 4,000 for the English, 5,000 to 12,000 for the Scots.

Flora. In Greek mythology, goddess of flowers. Hence, in natural history all the flowers and vegetable productions of a country or locality are called its flora.

Flora's dial. A fanciful or imaginary dial supposed to be formed by flowers which open or close at stated hours.

I. Dial of flowers which open at approximately the time given—

(a) The first twelve hours.

- a.m.*
1. (Scandinavian Sowthistle closes.)
 2. Yellow Goat's-beard
 3. Common Ox-tongue
 4. Hawkweed: Late-flowering Dandelion; and Wild Succory.
 5. White Water-lily: Naked-stalked Poppy; and Smooth Sowthistle.
 6. Shrubby Hawkweed and Spotted Cat's-ears.
 7. White Water-lily: Garden Lettuce: and African Marigold.
 8. Scarlet Pimpernel: Mouse-ear Hawkweed: and Proliferous Pink.
 9. Field Marigold.
 10. Red Sandwort.
 11. Star of Bethlehem.
- Noon. Ice Plant.

(b) The second twelve hours.

- p.m.*
1. Common Purslane.
 2. (Purple Sandwort closes.)
 3. (Dandelion closes.)
 4. (White Spiderwort closes)
 5. Julap.
 6. Dark Crane's-bill
 7. (Naked-stalked Poppy closes.)
 8. (Orange Day-lily closes.)
 9. Cactus Opuntia.
 10. Purple Bindweed.
 11. Night-blooming Catch-fly.
- Midnight. (Late-flowering Dandelion closes.)

II. Dial of flowers that close at the approximate hours.

(a) The first twelve hours.

- a.m.*
1. Scandinavian Sowthistle.
 2. (Yellow Goat's-beard opens.)
 3. (Common Ox-tongue opens.)
 4. (Wild Succory opens.)
 5. (Several Sowthistles open.)
 6. (Spotted Cat's-ear opens.)
 7. Night-flowering Catch-fly.
 8. Evening Primrose.
 9. Purple Bindweed.
 10. Yellow Goat's-beard.
 11. Bethlehem Star (la dame d'onze heures).
- Noon. Field Sowthistle.

(b) The second twelve hours.

- p.m.*
1. Red or Proliferous Pink.
 2. Purple Sandwort.
 3. Dandelion or Field Marigold.
 4. White Spadewort and Field Bindwort.
 5. Common Cat's-ears.
 6. White Water-lily.
 7. Naked-stalked Poppy.
 8. Orange Day-lily and Wild Succory.

9. Convolvulus Linnaeus and Chickweed.
 10. Common Nipple-wort.
 11. Smooth Sowthistle.
- Midnight. Creeping Mallow and Late Dandelion

Florac, Comte de. In Thackeray's novel THE NEWCOMES, a French emigrant, courteous, extravagant, light-hearted and vain. He is the son of a gentle Catholic lady with whom Colonel Newcome once was in love.

Flore, Flores or Floris. See under BLANCHE-FLORE.

Florent or Florentius. In Gower's CONFESSION AMANTIS, a knight who promises to wed a hag if she will teach him to expound a riddle, and thus save his life. See also WIFE OF BATH'S TALE.

Be she foul as was Florentius' lover.—Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew, Act. i. 2.

Florestan, Don Fernando. The hero of Beethoven's opera, FIDELIO.

Florestan, Prince. A character in DISRAELI'S political novel Endymion, said to be meant for Napoleon III.

Florian, St. Patron saint of Poland. See under SAINTS.

Florimel. A character in Spenser's FAERIE QUEENE said to typify the complete charm of womanhood. She is fair and chaste and bears the name of Florimel the Fair. Although she is courted by Sir Satyrane, Sir Peridure, and Sir Calidore, her love for Marinel is not returned until after much tribulation and her seizure by Proteus and imprisonment in a submarine cell. One day, Marinel and his mother go to a banquet given by Proteus to the sea-gods, and as Marinel is loitering about, he hears the captive bemoaning her hard fate, and all "for love of Marinel." His heart is touched; he resolves to release the prisoner, and obtains from his mother a warrant of release, signed by Neptune himself. Proteus does not dare to disobey, so the lady is released, and becomes the happy bride of her liberator. She is the possessor of the Cæstrus of Venus, the prize of a tournament in which Sir Salgrane and several others take part, which can be worn only by the chaste, and when the False Florimel (who has been made out of wax by a witch to simulate the true one) tries to put it on, she melts away.

Florinda. In Southey's RODERICK, THE LAST OF THE GOTHs, daughter of Count Julian, one of the high lords in the Gothic court of Spain. She is violated by King Roderick, and the count, in his indignation, renounces the Christian religion and calls over the Moors, who come to Spain in large numbers and drive Roderick from the throne. Florinda appears in other literary versions of the story.

Florio, John (1553?-1625). English lexicographer. Son of an Italian Protestant refugee. Compiled an Italian-English dictionary, A Worlde of Words (1598), revised as Queen Ann's New World of Words (1611). Also translated MONTAIGNE's Essays (1603).

Floris. See under BLANCHEFLOR.

Florisel of Nicca. A knight whose exploits and adventures form a supplemental part of the Spanish version of AMADIS OF GAUL.

Florismart. One of Charlemagne's paladins, and the bosom friend of ROLAND.

Florizel. Son of Polixenes, king of Bohemia in Shakespeare's WINTER'S TALE. In a hunting expedition, he sees Perdita, the supposed daughter of a shepherd, falls in love with her, and courts her under the assumed name of Doricles. Afterwards he learns she is a king's daughter, and the pair are happily married.

Flosshilda. In Wagner's Ring (not in actual mythology), one of the three Rhine-daughters guarding the Nibelungen Hoard.

Flotow, Friedrich von (1812-1883). German composer of light opera. Famous for MARTHA (1847). Also ballets and songs.

Flower and the Leaf, The. A late Middle English allegorical poem in RHYME ROYAL, of unknown authorship, once attributed to Chaucer.

Flowering of New England, The. A book of literary history by Van Wyck Brooks, published in 1936. It gives an impressionistic account of places, personalities, and writings in New England in the first half of the 19th century, seeking to present a picture of the period rather than a study of literary development.

Flower of Chivalry. (1) Sir William Douglas, knight of Liddesdale (1300?-1353); (2) Sir Philip Sidney, statesman, poet, and soldier (1554-1586); (3) The Chevalier de Bayard, le Chevalier sans Peur et sans Reproche (1476-1524).

Flowery Kingdom, the. China. The Chinese called their kingdom Hwa Kwoh, which means "The Flowery Kingdom."

Flowery State. Florida.

Fluellen. A Welsh captain and great pedant in Shakespeare's HENRY V, who, among other learned quiddities, attempts to draw a parallel between Henry V and Alexander the Great, but when he has said that one was born at Monmouth and the other at Macedon, both beginning with the same letter, and that there is a river in both cities, he has exhausted his parallelisms.

His parallel is, in all essential circumstances, as incorrect as that which Fluellen drew between Macedon and Monmouth.—Lord Macaulay.

Flute. In Shakespeare's MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM, the bellows-mender, who in the travesty of Pyramus and Thisbe is assigned to take the part of Thisbe.

Flute: What is Thisbe? a wandering knight?

Quince. It is the lady Pyramus must love.

Flute: Nay, faith, let not me play a woman; I have a beard coming.—Act 1. sc. 1 fly. It is said that no fly was ever seen in Solomon's temple; and according to Mohammedan legend, all flies shall perish except one, and that is the bee-fly.

Flute, The Magic, see MAGIC FLUTE.

the god or lord of flies. In the temple of Actium the Greeks used annually to sacrifice an ox to Zeus, who, in this capacity, was surnamed Apomyios, the averter of flies. Pliny tells us that at Rome sacrifice was offered to flies in the temple of Hercules Victor, and the Syrians offered sacrifice to the same tiny tormentors.

flies in amber. Insects, small leaves, etc. are often preserved in amber; hence, such phrases as "preserved for all time in the imperishable amber of his genius."

Pretty! in amber, to observe the forms

Of hairs, or straws, or dirt, or grubs or worms,

The things, we know, are neither rich nor rare,

But wonder how the devil they got there.

Pope, Ep. to Arbuthnot, 169-72.

the fly in the ointment. The trifling cause that spoils everything; a Biblical phrase.

Dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savour; so doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom and honour.—Eccles. x. 1.

the fly on the coach-wheel. One who fancies himself of mighty importance, but who is in reality of none at all. The allusion is to Aesop's fable of a fly sitting on a chariot-wheel and saying, "See what a dust I make!" Cf. also La Fontaine's Fables, vii. 9 there are no flies on him. He's all right; he's very alert.

fly-by-night. One who defrauds his creditors by decamping at night-time; also the early name of a sedan-chair, and later a horsed vehicle (hence fly, a cab) designed in 1809 for speed.

Flying Dutchman. A legendary spectral ship, supposed to be seen in stormy weather off the Cape of Good Hope, and considered ominous of ill-luck. Scott, in his note to ROKBY, ii. 11, says she was originally a vessel laden with precious metal, but a horrible murder having been committed aboard, the plague broke out among the crew, and no port would allow the vessel to enter. The ill-fated ship still wanders about like a ghost, doomed to be sea-tossed, but never more to enjoy rest. Captain Marryat's novel The Phantom Ship (1839) tells of Philip Vanderdecken's successful but disastrous search for his father, the captain of the Flying Dutchman. WAGNER has an opera called The Flying Dutchman (Der Fliegende Holländer; 1843). According to the legend it embodies, the old Dutch captain, in the midst of a struggle with the elements, had sworn an impious oath to round the Cape even if it took an eternity to do it. The curse which is laid on him for centuries will be lifted if he finds a wife willing to sacrifice everything for his sake; and the opera deals with the lifting of the curse by the Norwegian maiden, Senta.

Flying Island. See LAPUTA.

Flying Tigers. See under CHENNAULT.

Flynn, John Thomas (1882-). American journalist. "One of the best-known living pathologists of capital." Conducted a column called "Other People's Money" for the New Republic. Wrote in God's Gold (1932) a searching biography of John D. Rockefeller, Sr.

Flynt, Josiah. Pseudonym of Josiah Flynt Willard.

Foch, Ferdinand (1851-1929). Marshal of France and supreme commander of all Allied Armies (1918). Had planned the strategy by which Joffre defeated the Germans on the Marne (1914). Carried the 1918 offensive to triumphant conclusion.

fo'c'sle, see FORECASTLE.

Foerster, Norman (1887-). American critic and educator. Professor of English, University of Iowa (1930). In accord with the HUMANISM of Irving BABBITT. Modern Language Association. Editor of many textbooks.

Fogarty, Phil. Hero of a burlesque of Lever's military novels by Thackeray, entitled Phil Fogarty, a Tale of the Onety-Oneth.

Fogazzaro, Antonio (1842-1911). Italian novelist representative of liberal Catholicism. His Il Santo (1905) was called heretical by the censors of the Index. He attempted to reconcile the traditional Church dogma with modern science. See also MAIRONI, PIERO.

Fogg. In Dickens' Pickwick Papers. See DODSON AND FOGG.

Fogg, Phileas. Hero of Jules Verne's AROUND THE WORLD IN EIGHTY DAYS.

Fo-hi. A hero of ancient Chinese legend. His mother, Moyē, was walking one day along a river bank, when she became suddenly encircled by a rainbow, and at the end of twelve years gave birth to Fo-hi. During gestation she dreamed that she was pregnant with a white elephant; hence, according to some accounts, the honors paid to this beast throughout the East.

Foix, Gaston de (1489-1512). Duc de Nemours. Called "the Thunderbolt of Italy"; French soldier, nephew of Louis XII; commanded French army in Italy; noted for the rapidity of his maneuvers. Killed at Ravenna. His sister was Queen of Aragon and Naples.

Foker, Henry. In Thackeray's PENDENNIS, the son of Lady Foker. He marries Blanche AMORY.

Fokine, Michel (1880-1942). Russian choreographer. Created modern ballet. Influenced by Isadora DUNCAN. Became an American citizen in 1932. His wife, Vera Fokina, well-known dancer and choreographer.

Fokker, Anthony Herman Gerard (1890-1939). Dutch designer and builder of aircraft. Born in Java. First factory in Johannesburg, Germany. Came to America (1922) where he established the Fokker Aircraft Corporation of America. Naturalized. His planes were used by the Germans in both World Wars.

Földes, Jolán, Anglicized as Yolanda (1903-). Hungarian novelist, permanently established in London. The Street of The Fishing Cat was awarded the All-Nations Novel prize in 1936.

folio. A book made of sheets each folded only once (four pages to a sheet). Hence, a book of a large size, fixed by the American Library Association at more than 30 cm in height. The size of a folio (in the original sense) depends of course on the size of the sheets used. The variants formerly in current were (with sizes of untrimmed leaves): pott folio (7½ x 12½ inches), foolscap folio (8 x 12½), flat-cap folio (8½ x 14), crown or post folio (9½ x 15), demy folio (10½ x 16); medium folio (12 x 19), royal folio (12½ x 20), superroyal folio (14 x 22), imperial folio (16 x 22), elephant folio (14 x 23), atlas folio (16½ x 26), columbier folio (17½ x 24), double-elephant folio (20 x 27), antiquarian folio (26½ x 31). In printers' language the term folio also stands for page number.

folk etymology. A term adapted in linguistics from German Volksetymologie. The changing of an unfamiliar word into one of satisfactorily clear component parts, frequent in the language of uneducated but imaginative speakers. Instances listed in Wentworth's American Dialect Dictionary include ally waiter (elevator), brown kitties (bronchitis), peculiar or curious ointment (mercurial ointment), our beauties (arbutus), high-bred (hybrid), penny ciders (appendicitis), summer stop (thermostat), very coarse veins (varicose veins), glow shoes (goloshes), lie bill (libel), Queen Ann (quinine), red heater (radiator), sparrowgrass (asparagus), etc.

Follett, Wilson (1887-). American writer and editor. Author of The Modern Novel (1918), etc.

Follies. See under ZIEGFELD.

Folsom point. A stone point of the kind found near Folsom, N. Mex., in 1925. Believed to have been used as a javelin and the like by Stone Age people (called Folsom men) of North America. Cf. Frank C. Hibben, The Lost Americans.

Fomorians. In Celtic mythology, a race of sea robbers raiding ancient Ireland to keep her under tribute. It has been suggested that they were originally gods representing the powers of evil.

Fontck, René (1894–). French aviator in World War I, credited with the destruction of seventy-five enemy planes.

fons Bandusiae. The spring at Bandusia, near the birthplace of Horace, celebrated by him in one of his Odes (III, xiii), "O Fons Bandusiae." Hence, a source of inspiration.

Fontaine, Jean de La, see LA FONTAINE, JEAN DE.

Fontainebleau. A town in the department of Seine-et-Marne, 37 miles southeast of Paris. Its palace was from the Middle Ages a favorite residence of the royal families of France. Among the treaties signed there is the Peace of Fontainebleau (Nov. 8, 1785) between the emperor and the Dutch. The forest of Fontainebleau is considered the most beautiful in France. It was the resort of the BARBIZON school of painters, also known as the Fontainebleau or Fontainebleau-Barbizon school.

Fontanne, Lynn (1887?–). British-American actress, married Alfred LUNT (1922). Co-starred with her husband in many plays.

Fontenelle, Bernard de (1657–1757). French author, conversationalist, and popularizer of science. His works include Dialogues des morts (1683), a series of imaginary witty dialogues between historical figures on philosophical subjects; Entretiens sur la pluralité des mondes (1686), the best-known of Fontenelle's writings, discussing the solar system in terms easily understood by a lay audience, particularly one composed of aristocratic ladies; Histoire des oracles (1686), subtly attacking religious orthodoxy and blind obedience to authority while ostensibly disproving the pagan belief in oracles and upholding the scientific method; and Digressions sur les anciens et les modernes (1688), in which he takes the side of the Moderns in the quarrel between the Ancients and Moderns and predicts unlimited progress in both arts and sciences.

fool.

a fool's paradise. To be in a fool's paradise is to be in a state of contentment or happiness that rests only on unreal, fanciful foundations; to believe and behave as though one were in better circumstances than one is. See also LIMBUS FATUORUM.

the Feast of Fools. A kind of Saturnalia, popular in the Middle Ages. Its chief object was to honor the ass on which our Lord made His triumphant entry into Jerusalem. This blasphemous mummary was held on the Feast of the Circumcision (Jan. 1). The office of the day was chanted in travesty, then a procession was formed and all sorts of foolery was indulged in. An ass was an essential feature, and from time to time the whole procession imitated braying, especially in the place of "Amen."

The wisest fool in Christendom. James I was so called by Henri IV of France, who learned the phrase of Sully.

court fools. From medieval times till the 17th century licensed fools or jesters were commonly kept at court, and frequently in the retinue of wealthy nobles. Thus we are told that the regent Morton had a fool, Patrick Bonny; Holbein painted Sir Thomas More's jester, Patison, in his picture of the chancellor; and as late as 1728 Swift wrote an epitaph on Dickie Pearce, the fool of the Earl of Suffolk, who died at the age of 63 and is buried in Berkeley Churchyard, Gloucestershire. Daggonet, the fool of King Arthur, is also remembered.

Among the most celebrated court fools are: Rayère, of Henry I; Scogan, of Edward IV; Thomas Killigrew, called "King Charles' jester" (1611–1682); Archie Armstrong (d. 1672), and Thomas Derrie, jesters in the court of James I, James Geddes, to Mary Queen of Scots; his predecessor was Jenny Colquhoun; Patch, the court fool of Elizabeth, wife of Henry VII; Will Somers (d. 1560), Henry VIII's jester, and Patche, presented to that monarch by Cardinal Wolsey; and Robert Grene, jester in the court of Queen Elizabeth.

The fools of Charles V of France were Mitton and Thévenin de St. Léger; Haincelin Coq belonged to Charles VI, and Guillaume Louel to Charles VII. Triboulet was the jester of Louis XII and Francis I (1487–1536); Brusquet, of whom Brantôme says "he never had his equal in repartee," of Henri II; Sibilot and Chicot, of Henri III and IV; and l'Angély, of Louis XIII.

The guild "fools" of medieval times played an important part in the spread of literature and education. They formed a branch of the Troubadour organization—a force which permeated Europe.

foot. In prosody, a division in verse consisting of a certain number of syllables or pauses, one of which is stressed. The term, which comes from Greece, refers to beating time with the foot. The most common varieties of poetic foot are IAMBUS, ANAPEST, TROCHEE, DACTYL and SPONDEE. See also SCANSTON.

Foote, Mary Hallock (1847-1938). American writer. Her novels, illustrated by herself, were laid in the Far West. Among them are The Led-Horse Claim; John Bodewyn's Testimony; etc.

Foppington, Lord. An empty coxcomb in Vanbrugh's Relapse (1677), of which Sheridan's Trip to Scarborough (1777) is a modified version. He appears also in Cibber's Careless Husband (1704).

The shoemaker in the Relapse tells Lord Foppington that his lordship is mistaken in supposing that his shoe pinches.—Lord Macaulay Forain, Jean Louis (1852-1931). French painter and illustrator. Noted for his deeply ironic drawings. On the staffs of many Paris journals.

Forbes, Esther (1894?-). American novelist. Her biographical study Paul Revere and the World He Lived In (1942) is much acclaimed and was awarded the Pulitzer prize. Other works include O Genteel Lady! (1926); A Mirror for Witches (1928); Paradise (1937), which reconstructs a Colonial town; The General's Lady (1938), based on the case of Bathsheba Spooner, the murderess. The Running of the Tide (1948), another historical novel, won the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer prize of $150,000.

Forbes-Robertson, Sir Johnston (1853-1937). English actor. Member of leading English companies. Achieved success in Othello and Hamlet. One of his daughters, Jean Forbes-Robertson (1905-), made her debut on the London stage in 1925. Another, Diana Forbes-Robertson, married Vincent SHEEAN (now divorced).

Forbidden City. The city of Lhasa in Tibet, so called because of the hostility of the lamas to visitors other than pilgrims. Also the section of Peiping (Peking) with the Imperial palace which was formerly closed to the general public.

forbidden fruit. Figuratively, unlawful indulgence, from the fruit eaten by Adam and Eve in disobedience of God's commands. According to Mohammedan tradition the forbidden fruit partaken of by Eve and Adam was the banana or Indian fig, because fig-leaves were employed to cover the disobedient pair when they felt shame as the result of sin.

forbidden land. Tibet, which still excludes foreigners. See also FORBIDDEN CITY.

Ford. In Shakespeare's MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR, a gentleman of fortune living at Windsor. FALSTAFF makes love to his wife, but is the dupe of the situation.

Mrs. Ford. Wife of Mr. Ford. Sir John Falstaff pays court to her, and she pretends to accept his protestations of love, in order to expose and punish him. Her husband assumes for the nonce the name of Brook, and Sir John tell him from time to time the progress of his suit, and how he succeeds in duping her fool of a husband.

Ford, Ford Madox. Original surname Hueffer (1873-1939). English novelist, editor, and literary critic, grandson of Ford Madox BROWN, the Pre-Raphaelite painter, and nephew of William Rossetti. He edited the English Review, beginning in 1908, and the Transatlantic Review (ca. 1924), to both of which a number of well-known 20th-century English authors contributed, including Joseph CONRAD, Thomas HARDY, W. H. HUDSON, and John GALSWORTHY. Ford was also among the first to recognize the talents of James JOYCE and D. H. LAWRENCE. His works include The Inheritors (1901) and Romance (1903), novels written in collaboration with Joseph Conrad; Some Do Not (1924); No More Parades (1925); A Man Could Stand Up (1926); The Last Post (1928); No Enemy (1929), an autobiographical volume; When the Wicked Man (1931); Return to Yesterday (1932), memoirs; It Was the Nightingale (1933), autobiographical; The Rash Act (1933); Henry for Hugh (1934); Mightier than the Sword (1938), critical essays.

Ford, Henry (1863-1947). American automobile manufacturer; founder and president of the Ford Motor Co. (1903). Largest automobile manufacturer in the world. During World War I Ford organized the unsuccessful mission of his Peace Ship, and has been known for other peculiarities. Introduced a profit-sharing plan in the Ford Motor Company (1914) but managed by no means to solve the problems of labor-management relations more successfully than his competitors. Built a hospital and a museum. His program to build cheap automobiles within the reach of practically everyone caught the American imagination. He and his early Model T became virtually elements of American folklore. No other automobile is known by more nicknames in American slang than the Ford: Baby Lincoln, bouncing Betty, dehorn, flivver, Henrietta, Henry's go-cart, Michigan Mistake, perpetual pest, Spirit of Detroit, Model T-pot, tin Lizzie, tin lizzard, etc.

Ford, John (fl. 1602-1638). English playwright of the Elizabethan period, known for his portrayals of sorrow and despair. His works include The Witch of Edmonton (1621), written in collaboration with DEKKER and ROWLEY; Lover's Melancholy (1629); Love's Sacrifice (1633); 'Tis Pity She's a Whore (1633); The Broken Heart (1633); Perkin Warbeck (1634); The Ladies' Trial (1638).

Ford, John. Real name Sean O'Feeney (1895-). American moving-picture director. Did Arrowsmith, The Informer, Grapes of Wrath, Tobacco Road, etc.

Ford, Leslie. Pseudonym of Zenith Jones BROWN.

Ford, Paul Leicester (1865-1902). American novelist and historian; brother of Worthington Chauncey FORD; best known for THE HONORABLE PETER STIRLING (1894) and JANICE MEREDITH (1899). He also compiled editions of Americana, including The Writings of Thomas Jefferson (1892-1894) and The True George Washington (1896).

Ford, Worthington Chauncey (1858-1941). American bibliographer, historian, statistician; brother of Paul Leicester FORD. Library of Congress (1902-1909). Collected, just before the outbreak of World War II, foreign manuscripts for deposit in Library of Congress.

Fordney-McCumber Tariff. The tariff law of September 21, 1922, sponsored by U.S. Representative Joseph Warren Fordney (1853-1932) and U.S. Senator Porter James McCumber (1858-1933). It increased the duties on many articles; in it was introduced for the first time the principle of the flexible tariff which authorized the President to raise or lower rates within definite limits.

A protective tariff is a rate of duty imposed on imports with the sole purpose of raising their price for the consumer to a level which makes it impossible for them to compete with domestic products. Justified at times by the necessity of encouraging young industries or of maintaining employment, wages, standard of living, etc. Harmful when carried to extremes which interfere with international trade. After World War I, U.S. tariff walls were very high. See FORDNEY-McCUMBER TARIFF; HAWLEY-SMOOT TARIFF. Opponents of protective tariffs point out that only a policy of FREE TRADE would have enabled foreign debtors of the U.S. to meet their obligations without disturbing the balance of international trade and bringing about the worldwide post-war depression. Great Britain broke with a tradition of eighty years by the adoption (in 1932) of a system of protective tariffs.

Ford's Theater. The theater in Washington, D.C., where John Wilkes Booth assassinated President Lincoln (Apr. 14, 1865). It was used later on to house the record division of the War Department. In June, 1893, it collapsed and again several lives were lost.

forecastle. A short upper deck forward in a vessel, or that forward part of the vessel where the sailors live. In agreement with sailors' pronunciation often spelled fo'c'sle.

Foregone Conclusion, A. A novel by W. D. HOWELLS' (1875). The scene is laid in Venice. The "foregone conclusion" is a tragic end to the love of the Venetian priest-inventor Don Ippolito for the young American girl, Florida Vervain, to whom he acts for a time as tutor. Ippolito is tormented by a scepticism and by his love for this reserved and haughty girl who can at times give way to violent emotion. The priest's confidant is Ferris, the United States consul, a man of honor, but himself secretly in love with Florida.

foreign word. A word from one language used without adaptation in another, as French chic, chiclé, etc. in English. Distinguished from LOAN WORD.

Forel, Auguste Henri (1848-1931). Swiss psychiatrist, noted for work on the anatomy of the brain; also an authority on insects, specializing in the study of the behavior and psychology of ants, and a pioneer in sex hygiene.

Forest City. Cleveland. See under CITY.

Forester, Cecil Scott (1899-). English novelist, whose first novel, the murder story Payment Deferred (1924), was a success in its later adaptation for stage and screen. His stories of Captain Horatio Hornblower (later Commodore and Lord Hornblower) won prizes and were extremely popular.

Forest Lovers, The. A romance by Maurice HEWLETT (1898). The hero, Prosper le Gai, marries out of pity a waif who turns out to be Countess Isoult of Morgraunt.

forgotten man. A term popularly used to refer to the typical man of low economic status, especially if unemployed, during the depression period in the U.S. in the early 1930's. It was popularized in 1932 by Franklin D. ROOSEVELT during a campaign speech when he was running for the presidency, and thereafter became a national catchword. Its origin seems to go back to William Graham Sumner's (1840-1910) posthumous volume The Forgotten Man and Other Essays (1919).

forlorn hope. Not "a lost hope" but "a lost heap," that is a body of soldiers selected for some desperate or very dangerous enterprise. An adaptation of Dutch verloren hoop, rendered in French as enfants perdus, "lost children," in German as verlorene Posten, "lost post or assignment."

Forman, Harry Buxton (1842-1917). British critic and editor. Held high position in postal service. Responsible for painstaking editions of Keats and Shelley, and associated with the literary forger Thomas James Wise.

Forrest, Nathan Bedford (1821-1877). Confederate general; famous for his cavalry raids in the U.S. Civil War. Surrendered May 9, 1865. His slogan, perhaps apocryphal, was "to get tar fustest with the mostest men."

Forrestal, James Vincent (1892-1949). U.S. Undersecretary of the Navy (1940) and Secretary of the Navy in the cabinet of President Truman (1945). Appointed Secretary of Defense (1947).

Forsaken Merman, The. A poem by Matthew ARNOLD, relating the story of a merman whose human wife, Margaret, leaves him and her children to go back to pray in church and never returns.

Fors Clavigera. Literally, Fortune the club-bearer. A phrase coined by John RUSKIN as the title of a serial work, published at irregular intervals, consisting of 96 open letters to British workmen on remedies for poverty and destitution (1871-1884).

Forster, Edward Morgan (1879-). English novelist, known for the quiet irony of his writing and his satirical studies of the English middle class. His best-known and most highly praised novel is A Passage to India (1924). Other works include Where Angels Fear to Tread (1905); The Longest Journey (1907); A Room with a View (1908); Howards End (1910). Aspects of the Novel (1927) is a book of literary criticism.

Förster-Nietzsche, Elisabeth (1846-1935). Sister of Friedrich NIETZSCHE; married to Bernhard Forster, after whose death (1889) she dedicated her entire life to the service of her brother. She wrote a number of books on him, among them a biography.

Forsyte Saga, The. Two series of novels by John GALSWORTHY, dealing with the fortunes of the Forsytes, a family of the English upper middle-class. The five books in the first group appeared separately but were later published in one volume (1922). These are The Man of Property (1906), In Chancery (1920) and To Let (1921), with two "interludes," The Indian Summer of a Forsyte (1920) and The Awakening (1921).

The "man of property" and the chief character of the entire Saga is Soames Forsyte, the son of James, one of six Forsyte brothers who are prosperously settled about the London parks. Soames plans to build himself a suitable house and employs Philip Bosinney, a brilliant young architect who is engaged to June Forsyte, the daughter of Soames' cousin, who is always spoken of in family circles as "Young Jolyon." Desperate at being considered, like everything else in Soames' life, as his "property" to do with as he will, his young wife Irene falls in love with Bosinney. When the two fall in love, Soames' rage over his thwarted sense of ownership knows no bounds, and he employs all the means that money and power can give to punish them. Bosinney is killed. Years later, Irene marries Young Jolyon, the only one of the Forsytes who shows any real understanding of other attitudes toward life than that assumed by the Forsytes.

The Indian Summer of a Forsyte is an episode in the life of Old Jolyon, then a very old man; and The Awakening presents a simple story of the childhood of one of the new generation of Forsytes. To Let also is a story of the younger generation. Soames has married a French woman and his latter life is taken up with his devotion to his engaging young daughter, Fleur. To his utter horror, Fleur falls in love with her cousin Jon, the son of Young Jolyon and Irene. Both young people have been kept in ignorance of the past, and when the truth comes out, Jon chooses to give Fleur up and remain loyal to his mother.

Perhaps the best expression of the Forsyte attitude toward life is given by Young Jolyon when he ironically warns the artistic young Bosinney of the new world he is about to enter when he plans to marry June:

Art, literature, religion survive by virtue of the few cranks who really believe in such things and the many Forsytes who make a commercial use of them. The Forsytes are the middlemen, the commercials, the pillars of society, the corner-stones of convention, everything that is admirable . . . My people are not very extreme, and they have their own private peculiarities like every other family, but they possess in a remarkable degree those two qualities which are the real tests of a Forsyte—the power of never being able to give yourself up to anything soul and body, and the "sense of propriety."

Of Soames, Galsworthy says in his Preface to The Forsyte Saga:

He, too [the author] pities Soames, the tragedy of whose life is the very simple, uncontrollable tragedy of being unlovable without quite a thick enough skin to be thoroughly unconscious of the fact.

A second series of novels dealing with the Forsytes began with The White Monkey (1924) and includes The Silver Spoon (1926); Swan Song (1928); On Forsyte 'Change (1930); and Forsytes, Pendycyes, and Others (1935). The two "interludes" in this series are The Silent Wooing (1925) and Passersby (1927).

Fort, Charles Hoy (1874-1932). American critic of science; held bizarre but documented theories on scientific phenomena, expressed in an apocalyptic prose. The Fortean Society, founded by Tiffany THAYER (1931), was joined by men like Booth TARKINGTON, Theodore DREISER, Alexander WOOLLCOTT. Fort's books, The Book of the Damned (1919), New Lands (1923), Lo! (1931), Wild Talents (1932), were reissued in one volume (1941).

Fort, Paul (1872-). Distinguished French poet, "prince des poètes." More than thirty volumes of charmingly popular Bal- lades françaises. Produced unexpected effects by printing verses of classical perfection in normal prose style: "Je me tenais debout entre les genêts d'or, dans le soir où Dieu jette un grand cri de lumière, et je levais tremblant la palme de mon corps vers cette grande voix qui rythme l'Univers." Founder of the Théâtre des Arts (1890) and editor of the magazine Vers et Prose (1905-1914).

Fortinbras. Prince of Norway in Shakespeare's HAMLET.

Fort Sumter. A fort in Charleston Harbor, S.C. On April 12-13, 1861, the Confederates bombarded it. This was the first engagement of the U.S. Civil War. When Major Anderson surrendered on April 13, no casualties had occurred on either side. The fort was held by the Confederates until February 17, 1865.

Fortuna. In classic mythology, the goddess of good fortune or chance. She was blind and was depicted with a wheel. The wheel of Fortune was a widely used symbol in medieval art and literature, forming the concept on which Lydgate's FALLS OF PRINCES, Chaucer's MONK'S TALE, and THE MIRROR FOR MAGISTRATES were based.

Fortunate Islands. Also Islands of the Blessed or the Happy Islands. Originally, imaginary islands in the western ocean where the souls of the good lived in eternal bliss. Later applied to Canary and Madeira Islands.

Fortunatus. A hero of medieval legend from Eastern sources who possessed an inexhaustible purse, a wishing cap, etc. He appears as a man on the brink of starvation, on whom Fortune offers to bestow either wisdom, strength, riches, health, beauty, or long life. He chooses riches, and she gives him an inexhaustible purse, but his gifts prove the ruin, both of himself and his sons. He appears in a German Volksbuch of 1509, Hans Sachs dramatized the story in 1553, and at Christmas, 1599, Dekker's Pleasant Comedy of Old Fortunatus was played before Queen Elizabeth. See also PETER SCHLEMIL.

you have found Fortunatus' purse. You are in luck's way.

Fortune. A monthly magazine, founded in 1930, dealing with business, industry, and finance in a "glamorizing" fashion, and featuring detailed articles, photography, and maps, with an appeal similar to that of LIFE and TIME magazines published by the same organization, Time, Inc. See also LUCE, HENRY R.

Fortunes of Nigel, The. A novel by Sir Walter Scott (1822), a story of the period of James I, introducing King James himself. The hero is Lord Nigel Olifaunt, a young man whose estates are very heavily mortgaged.

James I gives his sign-manual for their release, but when Nigel strikes Lord Dalgarno for insulting him and is forced to flee to ALSATIA, the sign-manual is stolen. Nigel is arrested and sent to the Tower for treason, but eventually the mortgage is paid for him by Moniplies, a quondam serving-man of his who has gained possession of the treasures of the old miser who stole the sign-manual. Nigel is set free and marries Margaret Ramsay, a watchmaker's daughter, with whom he has been in love.

Fortuny y Carbó, Mariano (1838-1874). Spanish genre painter and aquafortist; known chiefly for his rococo paintings.

forty. A number of frequent occurrence in Scripture, and hence formerly treated as, in a manner, sacrosanct. Moses was forty days in the mount; Elijah was forty days fed by ravens; the rain of the flood fell forty days, and another forty days expired before Noah opened the window of the ark; forty days was the period of embalming; Nineveh had forty days to repent; our Lord fasted forty days; He was seen forty days after His resurrection, etc.

St. Swithin betokens forty days' rain or dry weather; a quarantine extends to forty days; forty days, in the Old English law, was the limit for the payment of the fine for manslaughter; the privilege of sanctuary was for forty days; the widow was allowed to remain in her husband's house for forty days after his decease; a knight enjoined forty days' service of his tenant; a stranger, at the expiration of forty days, was compelled to be enrolled in some tithing; Members of Parliament were protected from arrest forty days after the prorogation of the House, and forty days before the House was convened; a new-made burgess had to forfeit forty pence unless he built a house within forty days, etc., etc.

The ancient physicians ascribe many strange changes to the period of forty; the alchemists looked on forty days as the charmed period when the philosopher's stone and elixir of life were to appear.

forty stripes save one. The Jews were forbidden by the Mosaic law to inflict more than forty stripes on an offender, and for fear of breaking the law they stopped short of the number. If the scourge contained three lashes, thirteen strokes would equal "forty save one." The Thirty-nine Articles of the Anglican Church used sometimes to be called "the forty stripes save one" by irreverent young theological students.

forty winks. A short nap.

the Forty. A name given to the Venetian Senate.

the Forty Immortals or simply the Forty. The members of the French Academy, who number forty; sometimes applied also to the members of the English Royal Academy.

the hungry 'forties. The period just before and about the middle of the 19th century, when, largely owing to the high import duties on corn, bread and food generally were very dear.

the roaring forties. The Atlantic Ocean between 40° and 50° north latitude; well known for its rough and stormy character.

Forty Days Court. In English history, the "woodmote," i.e., forest court of attachments, which, as stipulated in the Charta Forestae or Charter of the Forests (1217), was to be held every forty days to deal with trespasses in the forests.

forty-eightmo. A book composed of sheets so folded that each sheet yields 48 leaves or 96 pages, the page being usually about 2¼ x 4 inches. Also 48mo.

forty-five, or '45, the. The second JACOBITE rebellion which occurred in 1745. See also the FIFTEEN.

forty-niners. A name popularly given to the Easterners rushing to California to mine gold in the period immediately following the discovery of gold in California in 1849.

42nd Parallel, The. A novel by John Dos PASSOS, published in 1930, the first of the author's famous trilogy U.S.A. It serves to introduce several of the characters who appear in all three novels, and presents a picture of the U.S. on the eve of its entrance into World War I. Short biographies of Eugene Debs, Luther Burbank, William Jennings Bryan, Andrew Carnegie, Edison, Steinmetz, La Follette, and others are included.

Forty-seven Ronin, see RONIN.

47 Workshop or Harvard 47, see HARVARD WORKSHOP.

Forty Thieves, see ALI BABA AND THE FORTY THIEVES.

Forty-two Line Bible, see BIBLE, SPECIALLY NAMED.

Forwards, Marshal. The Prussian field marshal Blücher (1742-1819) was called Marschall Vorwärts, from his constant exhortation to his soldiers in the campaigns preceding the great battle of Waterloo, "Vorwärts!"

For Whom the Bell Tolls. A best-selling novel by Ernest HEMINGWAY, published in 1940, which deals with an incident in the Spanish Civil War (1936-1939). Robert Jordan, an idealistic college instructor, has come to Spain to fight with the Republican army and has been assigned to join a band of guerrillas led by Pilar, a powerful peasant woman, and blow up a bridge of strategic importance. He falls in love with MARIA, a young Spanish girl who has been raped by the Fascists, and during the three days they are together they try to forget the impending event in their passion for each other. There is jealousy and distrust among the peasant members of the guerrilla company, several are killed, and the inefficiency and jealousies of the Communist leaders are revealed, but Jordan carries out his mission. He blows up the bridge successfully, but is wounded and left on the hillside to die.

The title of the novel refers to a quotation from one of the Devotions, Number XVII, of John DONNE:

No man is an Iland, intire of it selfe; . . . any man's death diminishes me, because I am involved in Mankinde; and therefore never send to know for whom the bell tolls; It tolls for thee.

Forza del Destino, La (The Force of Destiny). An opera by Giuseppe VERDI (1862), based on the drama, Don Alvaro, by the Duke of Rivas. Don Alvaro, the valiant lover of Leonora, accidentally kills her father, the Marquis of Calatrava, when the latter attempts to prevent the pair from eloping. Leonora's brother, Don Carlos di Vargas, vows vengeance; and although the two dons swear fast friendship when they meet as strangers in the same army, Don Carlos eventually learns the truth and twice attacks Don Alvaro. Don Carlos is mortally wounded, but kills his sister before he dies. In one version Alvaro leaps from a precipice.

Foscarina, La. The actress heroine of D'Annunzio's FLAME OF LIFE (Il Fuoco).

Fosco, Count. A villainous Italian in Wilkie Collins' WOMAN IN WHITE.

Fosdick, Harry Emerson (1878-). American clergyman. Author of many religious books including A Guide to Understanding the Bible (1938). Pastor, Riverside Church, New York City (now retired). See also MODERNISTS AND FUNDAMENTALISTS.

Foss, Sam Walter (1858-1911). American editor and humorist. Wrote homely light verse.

Foster, Mrs. Laurence (1907?-). Pseudonym Rumer Godden. English novelist. Black Narcissus (1939), Breakfast with the Nikolides (1941).

Foster, Stephen Collins (1826-1864). American song writer and popular composer. Several of his best-known songs are My Old Kentucky Home; Massa's in the Cold, Cold Ground; Old Folks at Home; Nelly was a Lady; Old Black Joe; etc. His Oh! Susanna appeared in 1848 and, becoming extremely popular with the gold-rush "forty-niners," established his success. Many of his songs were used by the Negro minstrel troupes popular at the time and have become genuine American folk-songs. Foster died, almost destitute, in the charity ward of Bellevue Hospital in New York. On June 2, 1937, the Stephen Foster Memorial hall was dedicated at the University of Pittsburgh. It houses the collection of Fosteriana owned by Josiah Kirby Lilly.

Fothergill. In Trollope's Parliamentary novels, the managing man of the Duke of Omnium.

Fotheringay. The site of the English Castle where Mary Queen of Scots was imprisoned, tried, and executed. Her son, James I of England, had the castle demolished.

Fotheringay, Miss. In Thackeray's PENNENNIS, an actress whose real name is Costigan.

Fouché, Joseph (1763-1820). French statesman; past-master of political intrigue; renowned for his spy systems. In turn minister of police, senator, minister of the interior, and again minister of police. Napoleon made him duke of Otranto. Exiled from France in 1816. Cf. Stefan ZWEIF's biographical study, Joseph Fouché (1930).

Fountain, Lucy. Heroine of Charles Reade's Love Me Little, Love Me Long (1859). She marries David Dodd.

Fountain of Life. ALEXANDER OF HALES, "the Irrefragible Doctor" (d. ca. 1245), was so called.

Fountain of Youth. In popular folk tales, a fountain supposed to possess the power of restoring youth. Expeditions were fitted out in search of it, and at one time it was supposed to be in one of the Bahama Islands. See also PONCE DE LEÓN.

Fouqué. See LA MOTTE-FOUQUÉ.

Fouquet or Fouquet, Nicolas (1615-1680). French official under Cardinal Mazarin; superintendent of finance (1653); arrested by order of Louis XIV (1661) and tried and convicted for peculation. Died in prison at Pignerol, Piedmont. Identified by some as the MAN IN THE IRON MASK. His grandson was the Charles Louis Auguste Fouquet, duc de Belle-Isle (1684-1761), Marshal of France.

Fouquier-Tinville, Antoine Quentin (1746-1795). French revolutionist; public accuser before Revolutionary Tribunal (March 1793-July 1794). Guillotined (May 7, 1795). Author of articles of accusation against Marie Antoinette and Robespierre, once his benefactor.

Four Aryan Truths. See BUDDHISM.

Fourberies de Scapin, les. A comedy by Molière (1671). See under SCAPIN.

Four Books. See under FIVE CLASSICS.

Four Elements, Four Constitutions, Four Ages of Man, Four Seasons and Four Monarchies. The titles of the pretentious poems published by Anne BRADSTREET in her Tenth

Muse Lately Sprung up in America (London, 1650), the first volume of American poetry. They were, as is indicated by the titles, all-inclusive in their scope, covering the whole of history, geography, and so on. The volume also included a Dialogue between Old England and New.

Four Freedoms. The chief objectives of American and United Nations' policy, as proposed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt in his message to Congress (January 6, 1941) with the stipulation that they should prevail "everywhere in the world." 1. Freedom of speech and expression; 2. freedom of every person to worship God in his own way; 3. freedom from want, economic understandings, which will secure to every nation a healthy peace-time life for its inhabitants; 4. freedom from fear, world-wide reduction of armaments. etc. A popular series of paintings by Norman ROCKWELL illustrated these.

Four Georges, The. A study of England's four Hanoverian Kings by W. M. THACKERAY (1855).

Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, the. Conquest, Slaughter, Famine and Death who appear in the Apocalypse (Revelation) on white, red, black and pale horses respectively. They typify the evils of war. The Spanish novelist VICENTE BLASCO IBÁÑEZ wrote a novel of World War I, entitled The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (Los cuatro jinetes del apocalipsis; 1916). It was made into a successful American motion picture.

Four Hundred. The inner circle of New York society; the élite. The term originated in 1892, when only 400 guests could be invited to a party given by Mrs. William Astor since her ballroom had space for only that number.

Four Hymns to Love and Beauty. A set of poems by Edmund SPENSER, published in 1596. The first two, A Hymn in Honor of Love and A Hymn in Honor of Beauty, which show evidence of influence by Platonic and neo-Platonic doctrines, were written in the author's youth, as he announces in an introductory note. The second two, A Hymn of Heavenly Love and A Hymn of Heavenly Beauty, more pious in tone, were written later in an effort to correct the impression of the others.

Fourierism. A Communistic system (see COMMUNISM), so called from François Marie Charles Fourier (1772-1837), of Besançon. All the world was to be grouped into "phalansteries," consisting each of 400 families or 1,800 individuals, who were to live in a common edifice, furnished with workshops, studios, and all sources of amusement. The several groups were at the same time to be associated together under a unitary government like the cantons of Switzerland or the United States. Only one language was to be admitted; all profits were to go to the common purse; talent and industry were to be rewarded; and no one was to be suffered to remain indigent, or without the enjoyment of certain luxuries and public amusement.

Four Kings, The History of the (Livre des quatre rois). A pack of cards. In a French pack the four kings are Charlemagne, David, Alexander, and Caesar, representatives of the Franco-German, Jewish or Christian, Macedonian and Roman monarchies.

Four Masters, The Annals of the. The name usually given to a collection of old Irish chronicles published in 1632-1636 as Annals of the Kingdom of Ireland. The Four Masters (authors or compilers) were Michael O'Clery (1575-1643), Conaire, his brother, his cousin Cucoigriche O'Clery (d. 1664), and Fearfeasa O'Mulconry.

Four Million, The. A volume of short stories by O. Henry (1906). The title refers to the population of New York City. See also FOUR HUNDRED.

Four P's, The. A play by John Heywood (1569). It is a contention as to which of the four can tell the greatest lie, and the Palmer, who asserts that he never saw a woman out of temper, wins the prize. The other three P's are the Pardoner, the Poticary, and the Pedlar.

fourragère. A French military decoration (a braided cord worn around the left shoulder-seam) presented to all the men of a unit to be honored for distinguished service or gallantry in action.

Four Saints in Three Acts. An opera by Gertrude STEIN, with music by Virgil THOMSON, produced in the U.S. in 1934. In it, a libretto uses words for their effects of sound and suggestion, in the author's usual manner, instead of for conventional meaning. ("Pigeons in the grass alas," etc.) In its presentation on the stage, the opera was sung by a cast of Negroes in vivid costumes, portraying Saints Ignatius, Chavez, Vincent, Gallo, Therese, and others. Some critics found it delightful, but others called it ridiculous. The text has been published.

four senses. The four varieties of Scriptural interpretation: 1. historical or literal, 2. allegorical, 3. moral, 4. anagogical. "Jerusalem is literally a city in Palestine, allegorically the Church, morally the believing soul, anagogically the heavenly Jerusalem."

Four Sons of Aymon. See under AYMON.

fourteener. In prosody, an iambic line of fourteen syllables or seven feet, also called "poulter's measure" as in

And every guard allowed Fifty stout men, by whom their horse ate oats and hard white corn,
And all | did wish | fully | expect | the sil | ver-
thron | ed morn.

Chapman, Translation of Homer's Iliad

It was widely used in English poetry about the middle of the 16th century.

fourteen hundred. The cry raised on the London Stock Exchange to give notice that a stranger has entered the "House." The term is said to have been in use in Defoe's time, and to have originated at a time when, for a considerable period, the number of members had remained stationary at 1399.

Fourteen Points or Fourteen Peace Points. A famous statement of Allied war aims during World War I made by Woodrow WILSON, president of the United States, in an address to Congress on Jan. 8, 1918. Briefly, abridged from the address, the fourteen points are as follows:

- (1) Open covenants of peace, openly arrived at.
- (2) Freedom of navigation upon the seas, except by international action.
- (3) Removal of economic barriers; establishment of equality of trade conditions.
- (4) Adequate guarantees of reduction of national armaments to the lowest point consistent with domestic safety.
- (5) An impartial adjustment of all colonial claims with fair consideration for the interests of populations and governments concerned.
- (6) Full cooperation in obtaining for Russia an unhampered opportunity for the independent determination of her own political development.
- (7) The evacuation of Belgium.
- (8) The restoration of Alsace-Lorraine to France.
- (9) The readjustment of Italian frontiers on clearly recognized lines of nationality.
- (10) Autonomous development for the peoples of Austria-Hungary.
- (11) The relations of the Balkan States to be determined along historically established lines of allegiance and nationality.
- (12) Autonomous development for other nationalities under Turkish rule; freedom of the Dardanelles.
- (13) The establishment of an independent Polish state.
- (14) The establishment of a general association of nations for the purpose of affording mutual guarantees of political and territorial integrity to great and small alike.

An attempt was made to put the provisions of the Fourteen Points into effect during the framing of the Treaty of Versailles in 1919, especially in the drawing of boundaries according to ethnological lines, but dissatisfactions and injustices were not removed and the outbreak of World War II in 1939 could not be prevented.

fourth dimension. The three dimensions of space universally recognized by mathematicians are length, breadth, and thickness. A line has only one dimension, length; a surface has two, length and breadth; a solid, and space generally, three, length, breadth, and thickness. The so-called "fourth dimension" is an extension hypothesized by mathematicians with the object of explaining equations of the fourth degree in analytical geometry. The term was adopted by many psychical investigators to explain certain apparently supernormal phenomena otherwise inexplicable, and achieved a semi-popular inaccurate usage thereby. The relationship of the fourth to the other three dimensions is assumed to be analogous to that borne by any one of these to the other two, i.e., it is a property that is to volume what volume is to area.

When time is considered the fourth dimension, the object is no longer space as such but rather the so-called time-space continuum in which every point can be fixed by four co-ordinates.

fourth estate of the realm. The daily Press, reputed to be the most powerful of all, the others (see ESTATES) being the Lords Spiritual, the Lords Temporal, and the Commons. Edmund BURKE, referring to the Reporters' Gallery, is credited with having said, "Yonder sits the fourth estate, more important than them all," but it does not appear in his published works.

Fourth of July. An American national holiday celebrating the signing of the Declaration of Independence, July 4, 1776, which declared the thirteen colonies free and independent and absolved from all allegiance to Great Britain. It is also called Independence Day.

Fowler, Gene (1890-). American novelist, biographer, playwright, and scenarist. The Great Magoo (1931; play, with Ben Hecht); Timberline (biography; 1933); Mighty Barnum (with Ben Meredyth; 1935); Good Night, Sweet Prince (biography of John Barrymore) (1944) etc. Cf. H. A. Smith, Low Man on a Totem Pole.

Fowler, Henry Watson (1858-1933). English lexicographer. Co-author with his brother, F. G. Fowler (1870-1918) of The King's English (1906). Compiled a number of dictionaries based on the great Oxford English Dictionary, and A Dictionary of Modern English Usage (1926). This latter work is remarkably useful and has served as the model for H. W.

Horwill's Dictionary of Modern American Usage (1935).

Fownes, Charles. Hero of P. L. Ford's JANICE MEREDITH.

Fox, Charles James (1749-1806). Celebrated English statesman and orator. Tory member of Parliament at the age of twenty (1768); junior Lord of the Admiralty under Lord North; removed at the insistence of King George III who disliked him for personal reasons and on account of the dissoluteness of his life; led opposition to North's coercive measures against the American colonies; foreign secretary (1782-1783) in Rockingham's and Portland's coalition ministry, which latter was defeated by the king's intervention against Fox's India reform bill; kept out of office by the king till 1806 when Pitt died and he again held the portfolio of foreign secretary in the All-Talents ministry during the last year before his own death. Fox once gave a toast, "Our Sovereign, the people." He urged abolition of slavery. He favored the French revolution and objected to the French wars.

Fox, George (1624-1691). Son of a weaver, itinerant lay preacher, and founder of the Society of Friends (ca. 1650). See QUAKER. Missionary journeys to Scotland (1657), Ireland (1669), West Indies and North America (1671-1672), etc.

Fox, John William. Normally called John Fox, Jr. (1863-1919). American novelist; roughrider and war correspondent in Spanish-American war (1898); married Fritz SCHEFF. Wrote Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come (1903); The Trail of the Lonesome Pine (1908); etc.

Fox, Ralph Winston (1900-1937). Promising Anglo-Canadian novelist and political writer, killed in action with the Spanish Loyalists. Wrote on Lenin, British Colonial policy, the class struggle in Britain, communism, etc. Also The Novel and the People (1937).

Fox and the Wolf, The. A Middle English beast-epic (see REYNARD), written between 1250 and 1275. It tells of a hungry fox who is caught in a well and by a trick escapes and imprisons his equally hungry friend the wolf in his place. Chaucer's Nun's Priest's Tale (see CHANTICLEER) is the only other beast-epic in Middle English.

Foxe, John (1516-1587). English martyr-ologist. His Latin history of religious persecution and the Reformers in England, translated by himself, appeared in English as Actes and Monuments (1563) and is popularly known as The Book of Martyrs.

Fra Angelico, see GIOVANNI DA FIESOLE.

Fracasse, Captain, see CAPTAIN FRACASSE.

Fra Diavolo (It., Brother Devil). Auber's opera of this name (1830) is founded on the exploits of Michele Pezza (1771?-1806), a celebrated brigand and renegade monk, who evaded pursuit for many years amidst the mountains of Calabria. The libretto is by Scribe.

Fradubio (the Doubter). In Spenser's FAËRIE QUEENE (I. ii. 28 ff.), the lover of Fraelissa (Frailty). DUESSA turns his mistress into a tree and bewitches him into loving her; but when he accidentally discovers the foul deformities of the hag, and shows by his manner that he has done so, she turns him into a tree also.

Fra Elbertus, see Elbert HUBBARD.

Fragonard, Jean Honoré (1732-1806). French painter and engraver. Decorated a pavilion for Mme du Barry, a series of paintings now known as Romance of Love and Youth. His rococo style is reflected in the names of his canvases: Longed-for Moment; Pastoral Hour; Oath of Love, etc.

Fra Lippo Lippi. (1) See under LIPPI.

(2) The title of a dramatic monologue by Robert BROWNING (1855), in which the painter, speaking to the street guards of Florence who have come upon him in the midst of a night adventure, gives his biography and his ideas on life and art.

frame of reference. In physics, a set of axes with reference to which the position or movement of a body is described. The term has been taken over into the terminology of literary criticism where it signifies the axiomatic tenets or the viewpoint by which an argument or a judgment is justified.

Framley Parsonage, The. A novel by Anthony TROLLOPE, one of his Chronicles of Barsetshire. See BARSETSHIRE.

France, Anatole. Real name Jacques Anatole François Thibault (1844-1924). French novelist, known for his taste for the classics, his early fondness for legends and fairy-tales, and his later wit and irony. His works include: THE CRIME OF SYLVESTRE BONNARD (1881); THAÏS (1890); L'Étui de Nacre (1892), tales and legends; At the Sign of the Reine Pédauque (La Rôtisserie de la Reine Pédauque; 1893). See under REINE PÉDAUQUE. Les Opinions de M. Jérôme Coignard (1893). See COIGNARD. THE RED LILY (Le Lys Rouge; 1894); Le Jardin d'Épicure (1894), essays; Histoire Contemporaine (see BERGERET, MONSIEUR) (1897-1900); La Vie de Jeanne D'Arc (1908); PENGUIN ISLAND (L'Île des Pingouins; 1908); THE GODS ARE ATHIRST (Les Dieux Ont Soif; 1912); THE REVOLT OF THE ANGELS (La Révolte des Anges; 1914); LITTLE PIERRE (Le Petit Pierre; 1918); and La Vie en Fleur (1922). France was a strong DREYFUSARD and held Socialist sympathies. He is considered to have contributed largely to the character of Bergotte in Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST.

Francesca da Rimini. Daughter of Guido da Polenta, Lord of Ravenna. Her story is told in Dante's INFERNO (canto v). She was married to Giovanni Malatesta, lord of Rimini, but her guilty love for his younger brother, Paolo, was discovered, and both were put to death by him about 1289. Leigh Hunt has a poem on the subject, entitled The Story of Rimini (1816); and Gabriele d'ANNUNZIO's tragedy, Francesca da Rimini (1901), and Stephen Phillips' Paola and Francesca (Eng., 1897), in addition to the less well known tragedies by G. H. Boker (Am., 1855) and Marion Crawford (Am., 1902), are based on the story of the unhappy lovers.

Franceschini, Guido. See RING AND THE BOOK.

Francia, José Gaspar Rodríguez. Known as Dr. Francia (1761?-1840). Paraguayan lawyer and statesman. Dictator for three years in 1814, for life in 1817. Governed with absolute power over the life and death of his subjects and carried his isolationism to the extreme of virtually surrounding his country with a Chinese wall. He avoided all foreign entanglements and during his entire rule Paraguay was at peace.

Francis I (1494-1547). King of France (1515-1547). Conquered Milan by his victory at Marignano (1515). Was unsuccessful as candidate for the imperial dignity (1519). Waged four wars against his victorious rival Charles V, who advanced claims to the French duchy of Burgundy and also to Milan. The first war (1521-1525) came to an end when Francis was defeated and taken prisoner at Pavia. In the second war (1527-1529) he lost his hold on Italy by the peace of Cambrai, concluded for him by his mother Louise of Savoy and known as the Paix des Dames. The third war (1536-1538) led to a truce. The fourth war (1542-1544) was terminated with the peace of Crespy which left Francis in possession of Burgundy while Charles retained Milan. Francis' reign is marked by the Renaissance in France. He himself was a patron of the arts. His sister was the celebrated Margaret of Navarre.

Francis, St., see under SAINTS.

Franciscans. A religious order consisting of friars, novices, and lay brothers founded by St. Francis of Assisi (see under SAINTS) in 1206 and confirmed by Innocent III in 1210. By their rules they are bound to poverty, but the Conventual Franciscans (which branched off in 1230 and wear a black habit instead of grey) are allowed to possess revenues. The Franciscans are known as Minors or Minorites in token of their humility, and as the Greyfriars from the original color of their habit.

Francis Ferdinand (1863-1914). Nephew of Emperor Francis Joseph; Archduke of Austria. Assassinated with his wife (June 28, 1914) at Sarajevo, Bosnia, by the Serbian student Gavrilo Princip (1893-1918). Through the death of Crown Prince RUDOLF (1889) and of his own father (1896), Francis Ferdinand had become heir apparent of the crown and his assassination precipitated the first World War.

Francis Joseph I. German form Franz Josef (1830-1916). Emperor of Austria (1848-1916). A great "imperial civil servant," uninspired and stubbornly devoted, the last symbolic embodiment of the principle of a non-national empire by the grace of God. Condemned to witness during his long reign the slow dissolution of the great Danubian monarchy. Succeeded to the throne after the abdication of his uncle Ferdinand I during the "year of revolutions" 1848; forced to abandon Lombardy to a French-Sardinian coalition; assisted Prussia against Denmark (1864) but in the ensuing wrangle over the spoils was defeated by the Prussians at Sadowa (1866) and Austria was expelled from the German Confederation; had to accept the Hungarian Ausgleich (1867) which reconstituted the monarchy on a dualistic basis; entered with Russia and Germany into the Dreikaiserbund (1872) but lost the good will of the Czars and concluded the Triple Alliance with Germany and Italy (1883). His only son RUDOLF committed suicide (1889). The assassination of the heir apparent, Archduke FRANCIS FERDINAND (1914) precipitated the first World War which brought about the collapse of Francis Joseph's realm. He died before the end.

Franck, César Auguste (1822-1890). Belgian-French organist and composer of great influence on modern French instrumental music. Among his students were Vidal, Chappuis, Marty, Guilmant, d'Indy, Bordes, etc. The last three founded the Schola Cantorum (1894) to perpetuate the master's influence and methods. His works include oratorios, symphonic poems, symphonies, etc.

Franck, Harry Alverson (1881-). American travel author. A Vagabond in Sovietland (1935), etc.

Francke, Kuno (1855-1930). German-born American historian and educator, founder and curator of the Germanic Museum at Harvard. Author of A German-American's Confession of Faith, etc.

Franco, Francisco (1892-). Dictator of Spain. Chief of staff of the Spanish army at the beginning of the Civil War (1936-1939), Franco became the leader of the insurgents after the death of generals José Sanjurjo and Goded. With the help of Germany and Italy, favored by British and American "non-intervention," he consolidated his position and assumed dictatorial powers shortly after the fall of Madrid (March 28, 1939).

François, The Adventures of. A historical novel by S. Weir MITCHELL (1898) dealing with the period of the French Revolution. The hero, François, who tells his own story, is a happy-go-lucky stray who lives most of his life on the streets. He was a real person and, according to the subtitle of the novel was Foundling, Thief, Juggler and Fencing Master during the French Revolution.

Françoise. In Marcel Proust's REMEMBRANCE OF THINGS PAST, the cook in the family home of Marcel, the narrator. She is a simple, shrewd peasant woman, whose idiosyncrasies of speech, reasoning, and behavior are minutely portrayed by the author throughout the novel.

franc-tireur. Literally, "free-shooter." A French partisan soldier. Franc-tireurs were first organized in 1792 and played an important part in the war of 1870-1871. Also a guerrilla or sniper. The French speak of franc-tireurs of journalism, "free-lance journalists."

Frank, Bruno (1887-1945). German novelist. Close friend of FEUCHTWANGER. His historical novels are extremely accurate in detail. The Theater Guild has produced several of his plays. A Man Called Cervantes (1934), etc.

Frank, Florence Kiper (1886?-). American poet and playwright. Three Plays for a Children's Theater (1926).

Frank, Leonhard (1882-). German novelist, short story writer, playwright. His novelette, Carl and Anna (1926; English translation, 1929), caused his election to the German Academy of Letters.

Frank, Waldo David (1889-). American novelist and critic, whose work combines mysticism and political liberalism, sometimes tending toward Marxism, written in a poetic style. Among his novels are The Unwelcome Man (1917); The Dark Mother (1920); Rahab (1922); City Block (1922); Holiday (1923); Chalk Face (1924); The Death and Birth of David Markand (1934), describing the spiritual regeneration of a commonplace American businessman; The Bridegroom Cometh (1939), dealing with the religious satisfaction found by a worker for social reform. Other works—essays, sociological studies, travel sketches, and the like—include Our America (1919); Salvos (1924); Virgin Spain (1926); The Rediscovery of America (1928); America Hispana (1931); Dawn in Russia (1932); In the American Jungle (1937); Chart for Rough Water (1940), a proposal for American world leadership toward an idealistic goal.

Frank was one of the founders of the magazine THE SEVEN ARTS.

Frankau, Gilbert (1884–). English novelist. World Without End (1943). His daughter, Pamela Frankau (1908–) is also a novelist and short-story writer.

Franken, Rose, maiden name Lewin (1895–). American playwright and novelist. Produces a serial every year. Her plays, Another Language (1934) and Claudia (1941), have been popular.

Frankenstein. The young student in Mrs. SHELLEY's romance of that name (1818). He makes a soulless monster out of corpses from churchyards and dissecting-rooms, and embues it with life by galvanism. The tale shows how the creature longs for sympathy, but is shunned by everyone. It is only animal life, a parody on the creature man, bent on evil, and later the instrument of dreadful retribution to the student who usurped the prerogative of the Creator. Several moving pictures have been based on the novel.

Mrs. Shelley gave no name to the monster, and therefore he is not infrequently called "Frankenstein" when alluded to. This, of course, is an error.

I believe it would be impossible to control the Frankenstein we should have ourselves created.—Lord Avebury, (Speech, 1886).

Frankfurter, Felix (1882–). Austrian-born American jurist; Associate Justice of U.S. Supreme Court (from 1939).

Frankie and Johnny. Popular old American ballad with numerous versions and verses. It tells how the girl Frankie shot unfaithful Johnny "with a forty-four gun." The refrain is, "He was her man, but he done her wrong."

Franklin, Benjamin (1706–1790). American statesman, author of an Autobiography that is a classic in its field, also of POOR RICHARD'S ALMANACK. Irving BACHELLER introduced him into a novel entitled In the Days of Poor Richard (1922). He is said to have been "more universal than Newton or Voltaire," to have "invented the Hoax, the Lightning-Rod, and the Republic," to say nothing of bi-focal spectacles. Cf. Carl Van Doren, Benjamin Franklin (1938).

Franklin, Fabian (1853–1939). American mathematician and writer. Author of People and Problems (1908); Plain Talks on Economics (1924); etc.

Franklin's or Frankeleyns Tale. One of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales. See DORIGEN.

Frank Mildmay, or The Naval Officer. A novel of the sea by Captain MARRYAT (1829). It is said that Frank Mildmay represents the author himself.

Fraser, James Earle (1876–). American sculptor. Portrait busts of Ulysses Grant, Theodore Roosevelt, etc. Designed U.S. five-cent piece with Indian head and buffalo (1913); also Victory Medal (1919).

Fratelli della Misericordia. Members of the CONFRATERNITÀ DELLA MISERICORDIA.

Frateretto. In Shakespeare's KING LEAR, a fiend, who told Edgar that Nero was an angler in the Lake of Darkness.

Fraternity. A novel by John GALSWORTHY (1909). An old professor, Sylvanus Stone, is lost in writing a masterpiece to be known as the "Book of Brotherhood," but the modern young people in whose house he lives, his artist daughter Bianca, her husband, Hillary Dallison, and Bianca's model, Ivy Barton, who types the professor's manuscript, are meantime enacting a drama that throws into ironic contrast the theories of the benevolent old man.

Fraunces' Tavern. Ancient building in lower New York City (at Broadway and Pearl Street) in which George Washington delivered his FAREWELL ADDRESS to his officers (Dec. 4, 1783).

Fraunhofer lines. The dark lines in the solar spectrum, named after their first observer, the Bavarian physicist Joseph von Fraunhofer (1787–1826).

Frau Sorge, see DAME CARE.

fravashi. In Persian religion, a spiritual protector or guardian angel of each individual, especially of the believer. It is the pre-existing archetype of every man in the presence of ORMUZD and corresponds to the Roman GENIUS.

Frazer, Sir James George (1854–1941). English scholar and anthropologist, best known for his famous work THE GOLDEN BOUGH (1890–1915), which is noted for its important contributions to the study of folklore and anthropology. Other works include Totemism (1887); Pausanias and Other Greek Sketches (1900); Letters of William Cowper (1912); and a translation of the Fasts of Ovid (1929).

Fredegund. French Frédégonde (d. 597 A.D.). Queen of the Franks. She married Chilperic I of Neustria, having caused his wife Galeswintha to be killed. Later caused death of Galeswintha's sons and probably of Chilperic himself.

Frederic, Harold (1856–1898). American novelist, known for his attempts at realistic depictions of American small-town and rural life. His best-known work is THE DAMNATION OF THERON WARE (1896). Others include: Seth's Brother's Wife (1887); The Lawton Girl (1890); The Return of the O'Mahoney (1892); The Copperhead (1893).

Frederick. In Shakespeare's AS YOU LIKE IT, the usurping Duke, father of Celia and uncle of Rosalind. He is about to make war upon his banished brother when he encounters a hermit and is so completely changed that he not only restores his brother to his dukedom, but retires to a religious house, to pass the rest of his life in penitence and acts of devotion.

Frederick II. Known as Frederick the Great (1712-1786). King of Prussia (1740-1786). Son of King Frederick William I and Sophia Dorothea (daughter of George I of England and sister of George II). Started Prussia on its rise to German leadership; enlarged its territory and withstood the combined forces of Austria, Russia and Saxony in the Seven Years War. Joined Russia in first partition of Poland (1772). Notable patron of literature, music, and art. Built the palace of Sans Souci near Potsdam (1745-1747) and invited Voltaire to live at his court. Voluminous writer, almost exclusively in French. His early rebellion against his father (trial, condemnation, pardon) and later acceptance of the idea of unconditional devotion to the state, even at the expense of personal unhappiness, have become favorite motives in literature. He countered Louis XIV of France's motto, I am the State, by the principle, "The prince is the first servant of the State." His personal isolation made of him a legendary figure. As der alte Fritz he is the protagonist of innumerable stories and anecdotes. See the MILLER OF SANS SOUCI.

Fredericksburg. Town in Spotsylvania County, Va. Scene of a battle in the U.S. Civil War (Dec. 13, 1862), in which the Confederates under General Lee defeated the Federals under Burnside. Cf. the sonnet Fredericksburg by Thomas Bailey Aldrich.

freebooter. A pirate. See also FILIBUSTER.

freedom of the press. The right to publish without governmental censorship.

freedom of the seas. The right of every nation to navigate the seas beyond a certain limit, usually three miles from the coast, free from control or molestation by any other nation, upheld as a traditional doctrine by the U.S. from colonial times. It was the violation of the freedom of the seas by Germany that caused the United States to enter World War I.

Free French. See under FIGHTING FRANCE.

Free Kirk. The church organized by those who, in 1843, left the national Church of Scotland (thereafter often referred to as the Auld Kirk), in order to be free from state control in spiritual matters. In 1929 the United Free Church of Scotland was reunited with the established Church of Scotland thus bringing together the large majority of all Scottish Presbyterians.

free lance. One who acts on his own judgment, and not from party motives; a journalist or writer who is not definitely attached to, or on the salaried staff of, any one paper or publishing house. The reference is to the Free Companies of the Middle Ages, called in Italy condottieri, and in France compagnies grandes, which were free and willing to sell themselves to any master and any cause, good or bad.

free love. The doctrine of the rightfulness of free choice in sexual matters without recourse to religious or legal sanction. The doctrine is old. The term, however, was introduced in America.

Freeman, Douglas Southall (1886-). American historian. Monumental life of Robert E. Lee in four volumes won Pulitzer prize in biography (1934).

Freeman, Harold Webber (1899-). English regional novelist. Joseph and His Brethren (1928).

Freeman, John (1880-1929). English poet and critic. Collected Poems (1928).

Freeman, Joseph (1897-). Russian-born American poet, editor, critic, Bohemian and revolutionary. Among the founders of the magazine New Masses (1926). His books include The Soviet Worker (1932); An American Testament (1936); etc.

Freeman, Mary Eleanor Wilkins (1852-1930). American novelist and short-story writer of the local-color school, who dealt chiefly with New England. She is known for her use of dialect and her character studies of the frustrated and decadent descendants of the Puritans. Among the collections of her short stories, which are considered to be her best work, are A Humble Romance (1887); A NEW ENGLAND NUN (1891); The Wind in the Rose Bush (ghost stories) (1903). Her novels include: Jane Field (1893); Pembroke (1894); Jerome, A Poor Man (1897); The Heart's Highway (1900); The Portion of Labor (1901).

Freeman, Richard Austin (1862-1943). English scientific detective-story writer, creator of Dr. Thorndyke. Physician by profession.

Freeman, The. A literary and political weekly published in New York City (1920-1924). Editors: Francis Neilson and Albert Jay Nock. One of the associate editors was Van Wyck Brooks.

Freemasons. It is only in the realm of fable, not even in that of tradition, that modern Freemasonry can be traced to Hiram of Tyre and the Temple of Solomon; the modern secret fraternity had its origin in England in the 17th century, and its connection with masons—the workers in stone—arises from the fact that the founders adopted many of the practices of the old masonic guilds as being most suitable to their purpose. These medieval guilds consisted of workmen who, by the nature of their calling, had to move from place to place, and their secret passwords, ritual, etc., were adopted so that when on their travels they could prove without difficulty that they were actually “Free and Accepted Masons,” and so obtain the comradeship of their brother masons as well as get employment. In each district where cathedrals and churches were being built “lodges” were created, much as a branch of a trade union would be today, and these had their masters, wardens, and other officials.

the Lady Freemason. Women are not admitted into freemasonry, but there is a story that a lady was initiated in the early 18th century. She was the Hon. Elizabeth St. Leger, daughter of Lord Doneraile, who hid herself in an empty clock-case when the lodge was held in her father's house, and witnessed the proceedings. She was discovered, and compelled to submit to initiation as a member of the craft. The story is fairly well authenticated.

Freeport, Sir Andrew. A London merchant, industrious, generous, and of sound good sense, one of the members of the hypothetical club under whose auspices the SPECTATOR was launched.

Free-Soil party. An American political party opposed to slavery. It became a part of the Republican party in 1854.

Freestone State. Connecticut. See under STATES.

free trade. Interchange of commodities between countries politically independent, without obstacles specifically intended to restrict their free flow. The theory of free traders is that all taxes on imports have ultimately an adverse effect on exports. Adam Smith in his Wealth of Nations (1775) influenced England's free trade policy of trading in articles that could not be produced at home. This policy was initiated by the repeal of the Corn Laws in 1846. A basic British policy for more than eighty years, it was abrogated by the reintroduction of PROTECTIVE TARIFFS after World War I.

The term free trader signified “smuggler” in the time of Sir Walter Scott. Cf., e.g., Guy Mannering.

free verse (Fr. vers libre). Poetry that does not follow a conventional pattern of meter and rhyme but depends upon other devices, such as assonance, alliteration, and cadence, for its rhythmic effects. It was first officially employed by French poets of the Symbolist movement (see SYMBOLISM), but unofficially it is as ancient as Anglo-Saxon verse and that of other early European languages. Walt WHITMAN was a prominent user of free verse in the 19th century, his work serving to influence later poets. Under the influence of Whitman and the Symbolists, free verse became the prevailing poetic form of the period of the 1920's and 1930's, especially in the U.S., although during the 1930's it began to be replaced by more formal verse making use of a modified system of rhyme, meter, and stanza, appropriate to the new subject matter of intellectual rather than wholly sensuous appeal.

Poets whose work outstandingly makes use of free verse and is most representative of the form at its height of popularity are: Amy LOWELL and the other Imagists (see IMAGISM), Carl SANDBURG, and Edgar Lee MASTERS. The following is a typical free-verse poem:

Out of me unworthy and unknown
The vibrations of deathless music
“With malice toward none, with charity for all,”
Out of me the forgiveness of millions toward millions
And the beneficent face of a nation
Shining with justice and truth.
I am Anne Rutledge who sleep beneath these weeds,
Beloved in life of Abraham Lincoln,
Wedded to him, not through union,
But through separation,
Bloom forever, O Republic,
From the dust of my bosom.
Edgar Lee Masters, Anne Rutledge from The Spoon River Anthology.

Freischütz (Ger., literally, the free-shooter). A legendary German marksman in league with the Devil, who gave him seven balls, six of which were to hit infallibly whatever the marksman aimed at, and the seventh was to be directed as the Devil wished. F. Kind wrote the libretto of, and Carl Maria von WEBER set to music, the opera based on the legend called Der Freischütz (1820). In the opera the ranger, Max, makes his bargain with the Devil in order to win a sharp-shooting contest and with it the hand of his sweetheart Agnes. His seventh bullet, aimed at a dove, wounds his bride, but a wreath blessed by a hermit has turned the bullet aside, so that he finds her still alive.

Freki and Geri. The two wolves of ODIN.
Frémont, John Charles (1813-1890). American explorer and general, called the “pathfinder.” Governor of California territory and senator when it became a state (1850). Ascended highest peak of the Wind River Mountains, now called Fremont's Peak. His wife Jessie Frémont (1824-1902) made a name for herself as a writer and succeeded in saving her husband from complete poverty when he had lost his fortune in railroad ventures (1870).

Fremstad, Olive (1870?-). Dramatic soprano; born in Stockholm, Sweden. Interpreter of Wagnerian rôles for the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York City. Original of Thea Kronborg in Willa Cather's novel, The Song of the Lark (1915).

French, Alice. See THANET, OCTAVE.

French, Daniel Chester (1850-1931). American sculptor. The Minute Man of Concord, at Concord (see MINUTE MAN); John Harvard, Harvard University yard; Statue of the Republic, Chicago Exposition of 1893; bronze doors for Boston Public Library; groups before the New York Customs House.

French, Mary. In Dos Passos' U.S.A., a character who is prominent in the last volume, THE BIG MONEY. She is a Vassar student, daughter of a doctor in Colorado, who develops in college an interest in social reform and comes to take part in trade union organizational work. For awhile she is the mistress of G. H. BARROW and of an ardent Communist, Ben COMPTON, but is disillusioned in all her love affairs.

French and Indian War (1754-1763). The last, most decisive conflict in the 150 years' struggle between France and England for the possession of the North American continent. It was the American phase of the SEVEN YEARS WAR and ended with the cession of Canada to Great Britain.

French leave. The expression "to take French leave" has its origin in the eighteenth-century convention in French society to leave a party without taking leave from host or hostess. It is translated into French as "filer à l'anglaise."

French Revolution, The. A history in three parts, by Thomas CARLYLE (1837), one of his most famous works.

Freneau, Philip Morin (1752-1832). American poet, one of the first to achieve renown for his verse in the U.S., employed variously as teacher, clerk, shipmaster, and editor. He is best known for his political poems, most of which were written at the time of the American Revolution. Among these are: The Rising Glory of America (1771), which he wrote in collaboration with Hugh Henry BRACKENRIDGE on their graduation from Princeton; General Gage's Soliloquy (1775); General Gage's Confession (1775); and The British Prison Ship (1781), an account of his experiences as a British prisoner of war after capture at sea near the West Indies. He also wrote poems on nature, animals and insects, and the American Indian, including: The Wild Honey-suckle (1786); The Indian Burying Ground (1788); On a Honey-Bee Drinking from a Glass of Wine (1809).

Freneau was anti-Federalist in his opinions and edited the National Gazette from 1791 to 1793, especially attacking Alexander HAMILTON. He was admired by Jefferson.

Frenssen, Gustav (1863-). German writer of novels and stories of peasant life in north Germany, the epic poem Bismarck (1914), and plays.

Frere, John Hookham (1769-1846). English diplomat and one of the founders of the QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Fresh the American. A comedy (1881) by Archibald C. Gunter, (Eng.-Am., 1847-1907), presenting the European adventures of F. N. Fresh, a self-made American millionaire who is not a whit in awe of anything European, and in spite of his crudities, manages to play a hero's part.

Freuchen, Peter (1886-). Danish explorer, autobiographer and travel writer. Began writing when an accident forced him to abandon his home in the Arctic and return to Denmark.

Freud, Sigmund (1856-1939). Austrian psycho-analyst, regarded as the founder of the science of psycho-analysis, which grew out of his experiences in treating sufferers from hysteria and neurosis. He is famous for his therapeutic methods and his revolutionary theories of sex, many of which show the influence of German romantic philosophy and make use of literary and classical allusions. The leading principles of these theories are: the primacy of sex as a motivating factor in human psychology and social behavior; the existence of elements of strong sexuality among children and of abnormality and inversion in normal sexual psychology; the repressive influence of social and individual inhibitions on sex, resulting in neuroses and "complexes" (see COMPLEX); the rôle of the unconscious as the repository of repressed sexual desires, tendencies, memories, anxieties, and the like; the embodiment of sexual repressions in symbolic form in dreams, art, literature, wit and humor, and religion and folk-lore. The typical psycho-analytical treatment was to release the inhibition by persuading the patient to talk to the physician with absolute freedom and frankness, and by the analysis of the patient's dreams. Freud's most important works include Three Contributions to the Theory of Sex (1910); The Interpretation of Dreams (Die Traumdeutung; 1909); The Psycho-pathology of Everyday Life (1914); Wit and Its Relation to the Unconscious (1916); Leonardo da Vinci: A Psycho- sexual Study of an Infantile Reminiscence (1916); Totem and Taboo (1918); Beyond the Pleasure Principle (1922); The Ego and the Id (1927); Civilization and Its Discontents (1930); Moses and Monotheism (1939).

Freud's theories achieved wide notoriety in Europe and the U.S. during the years immediately preceding and immediately following World War I, and psycho-analysis was extremely popular during the 1920's, particularly among the wealthy. His system was violently attacked by conservative elements and the clergy and seriously criticized by his fellow scientists, including his own early disciples (see ADLER; JUNG), but in its social, intellectual, and literary and artistic influence it is among the most important developments of 20th-century thought. Freudian theories were adopted by the movement of SURREALISM and are outstandingly embodied in the novels of Thomas MANN and in FINNEGANS WAKE by James Joyce. For a study of Freud from a literary standpoint, cf. Thomas Mann's Freud, Goethe, and Wagner.

In 1938, when the German National Socialist government (see NAZISM) seized power in Austria, Freud was among the eminent authors, scholars, and scientists forced to flee because of Jewish parentage. He died in exile in London.

Frey or Freyr. Son of NÍRD, originally one of the Vanir, but received among the Aesir after the war between the two. He was the Scandinavian god of fertility and peace, the dispenser of rain, and the patron god of Sweden and Iceland. His wife was GERDA, and among his treasures were: Blodighofi (Bloody-hoof), his horse; a golden helmet with the crest of a wild-boar, Gullinbursti (i.e. with gold bristles); and the magic ship Skithblathnir, which could be folded up like a tent.

Freya. In Scandinavian mythology, the sister of Frey and wife of Odin, who deserted her for FRIGGA because she loved finery better than her husband. (See Brisingamen.) She is the fairest of the goddesses, goddess of youth and love and also of the dead. One account says that she flies through the air with the wings of a falcon, another that she rides in a chariot drawn by two cats. She is also known as Frea, Frija, Frigg, Frige, etc., and it is from her that our Friday is named. In Teutonic mythology Freya and Frigga are the same goddess.

The chief legends concerning Freya have to do with the efforts of the giants to carry her off. In one instance, THOR dressed as a veiled bride, impersonates Freya in order to recover his hammer from the giant Thrym. In Wagner's NIBELUNGEN RING, Freya is given to the giants as payment for their construction of Valhalla, and her return involves the transfer of the magic ring.

Freyberg, Bernard Cyril (1890–). New Zealand army officer; in World War II, major general in command of the 2nd New Zealand Expeditionary Force. Veteran of World War I.

Freydis. In Cabell's FIGURES OF EARTH, the dread high Queen of Audela who becomes a human woman for love of Manuel, and by her magic gives life to his images, among them SESPHRA.

Freytag, Gustav (1816–1895). German novelist, playwright, and critic. His historical panorama in six volumes, Die Ahnen (The Ancestors), added to his popular fame and brought him the accusation of being an author of PROFESSORENROMAN.

friar (Lat. frater, "brother"). A monk, especially one belonging to one of the four great mendicant orders, i.e., FRANCISCANS, DOMINICANS, AUGUSTINIANS, and CARMELITES.

In printer's slang a friar is a part of the sheet which has failed to receive the ink properly, and is therefore paler than the rest. As William CAXTON set up his press in Westminster Abbey, it is but natural that monks and friars should give foundation to some of the printer's slang.

For friars famed in fable and story, see under each respective name or pseudonym.

Friar Lawrence. A Franciscan who marries the lovers in Shakespeare's ROMEO AND JULIET.

Friar Rush. Ger. Bruder Rausch. A late medieval mythical personage originating in German popular legend; a devil disguised as a friar, corrupting monks and friars by all sorts of devious and generally amusing devices. Several English tales and plays were written about him.

Friars Major (Lat. fratres maiores). The Dominicans.

Friars Minor (Lat. fratres minores). The Franciscans.

Friar's or Freres Tale. In the CANTERBURY TALES (1388), a tale throwing discredit on summoners. CHAUCER obtained it from the Latin collection Promptuarium Exemplorum. It tells how a rascally "sumpnour" or summoner meets the Devil disguised as a yeoman, swears eternal friendship, and agrees to share whatever they may get. They meet a carter in difficulties, crying, "The Devil take it, both horse and cart and hay!" When the summoner urges his companion to obey, the Devil refuses, because it is clear that the wish is not intended literally. Later, the summoner declares that he will squeeze twelve pence out of a poor old woman for a crime that she never committed. She pleads poverty and implores mercy, and finally, her entreaties being in vain, consigns him to the Devil. The seeming yeoman questions her and, finding that she was completely in earnest, seizes the summoner and carries him off.

Friar Tuck. A fat and jovial vagabond friar; the father-confessor to ROBIN HOOD in the Robin Hood ballads and legends. He appears in Sir Walter Scott's Ivanhoe as the "holy clerk of Copmanhurst."

Fribble. In David GARRICK's Miss in Her Teens (1747), a mollicoddle, troubled with weak nerves. He "speaks like a lady for all the world, and never swears. . . . He wears nice white gloves, and tells his lady-love what ribbons become her complexion, where to stick her patches" and all such matters. There had been a Fribble in Shadwell's comedy, Epsom Wells, before Garrick's day.

Frick, Henry Clay (1849-1919). American industrialist. Chairman, Carnegie Steel Co. (1889-1900). His home in New York, 1 East 70th Street, housing a remarkable art collection, was given by him to the public and endowed as the Frick Collection.

Fricka. In Wagner's NIBELUNGEN RING, the goddess of marriage. See also under FRIGGA.

Fricker, Sara. A "milliner of Bath" who became the wife of S. T. COLERIDGE, to whom she was ill-matched. Her sister, Edith, married the poet SOUTHEY. In DON JUAN (canto ii) Byron makes fun of these marriages.

Friday. The sixth day of the week named for the goddess FREYA. In the Romance languages it is named for the corresponding Roman goddess Venus. Friday is considered the day when Adam was created, when he was expelled from paradise, when he repented, when he died, when Christ was crucified, when the dead will rise for the last judgment. In many Christian churches Friday is a fast day. To spill salt on Friday is a bad omen. It used to be the day for the execution of capital punishment and is often called hangman's day.

Good Friday, see GOOD FRIDAY.

Man Friday. In Defoe's ROBINSON CRUSOE, the young savage found by Crusoe on a Friday, and kept as his servant and companion on the desert island; hence, a faithful and willing attendant, ready to turn his hand to anything.

Frideswide, Saint. An English abbess of the early eighth century, patroness of the city and university of Oxford. According to legend, she was a royal princess who fled from the importunities of her lover to Oxford where she founded a monastery which became Christ Church College.

Fried, George (1877-). Captain of the "President Roosevelt," widely known for his rescue of the crew of the British steamer "Antinoo" in an Atlantic storm (Jan. 1926) and subsequent sea rescues. Cf. the narrative poem by E. J. Pratt, "The Roosevelt and the Antinoo."

Friend. A QUAKER, i.e., a member of the Society of Friends; also, one's second in a duel, as "Name your friend," "Captain B. acted as his friend."

Friendship Village. A small town which is the scene of numerous short stories by Zona GALE, notably those of Friendship Village (1908) and Peace in Friendship Village (1919).

Frietchie, Barbara, see BARBARA FRIETCHIE.

Friganza, Trixie. Real name Delia O'Callahan (1870-). American actress and singer.

Frigga or Frigg. In Scandinavian mythology, the supreme goddess, wife of ODIN. She presides over marriages, and may be called the Juno of Asgard. In Teutonic mythology she is identified with FREYA.

Frithiof. A hero of Icelandic myth who married Ingeborg, daughter of a petty king of Norway, and widow of Hring, to whose dominions he succeeded. His adventures are recorded in the saga which bears his name, and which was written about the close of the 13th century. The name signifies "the peacemaker."

Fritz. A nickname for a German soldier. unser Fritz (Ger., "our Fritz"). The German Emperor Frederick III (1831-1888) when he was crown prince of Prussia.

der alte Fritz. See under FREDERICK THE GREAT.

The term Fritz was also applied to certain kinds of German shells and battle-planes during World War I.

Frobisher, Sir Martin (1535?-1594). English navigator; commanded expedition in search of Northwest Passage (1576) and discovered Frobisher Bay. One of his sailors having found a piece of ore which seemed to contain gold, Frobisher was sent out on two further (but futile) expeditions in search of gold. Vice-Admiral under Drake in West Indian expedition (1586). Fought with distinction against the Spanish Armada. Knighted (1588).

Fröding, Gustaf (1860-1911). Swedish poet of lyric and religious verse.

Froebel system. A system of kindergarten or elementary education introduced by the German educator Froebel (1782-1852).

the Italian Froebel. Antonio Rosmini-Serbati (1797-1855).

frog. A frog and mouse agreed to settle by single combat their claims to a marsh; but, while they fought, a kite carried them both off. (Aesop, Fables, clxviii.) See also Battle of the Frogs and Mice under BATTLE.

Old Aesop's fable, where he told What fate unto the mouse and frog befel.
Cary, Dante, cxxiii.

In Ovid's Metamorphoses (vi. 4) we are told that the Lycian shepherds were changed into frogs for mocking Latona.

As when those hinds that were transformed to frogs Railed at Latona's twin-born progeny.
Milton, Sonnet, xii.

Frog, Nic. A Dutchman. In Arbuthnot's JOHN BULL Nic Frog is a Dutchman; and frogs are called "Dutch Nightingales." As the French have the reputation of feeding on frogs, the word has sometimes also been transferred to them. See also BIDDY, NICKNAMES OF NATIONALITIES.

Frogs, The. A satiric comedy by ARISTOPHANES (405 B.C.). The principal scene is laid in Hades where Aeschylus and Euripides compete for the honor of accompanying Dionysus back to Athens as the chief tragic poet.

Frohman, Charles (1860-1915). American theatrical manager. Nicknamed "the Napoleon of the Drama." In 1895 he took charge of the Empire Theater, New York City, and two years later organized his famous and influential theatrical company. He presented John Drew, Maude Adams, Julia Marlowe, and was one of the first American managers to produce American plays in London. He lost his life on the torpedoed Lusitania. His brother, Daniel Frohman (1851-1940), managed Fifth Avenue Theater, Madison Square Theater, and Lyceum Theater.

